THE ROTUNDA

VOL. LVIII | LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1982 | NO. 1

Welcome Freshmen!

"I would like for us to graduate the kind of student who does not feel that the only thing to do after you finish work is go home, eat and watch television — the well rounded student; conscious of the world he lives in" said Dr. Greenwood recently in an interview with the Rotunda.

Her stress for this year along with her previous theme of "Joining Together" with the surrounding community, is the "Pursuit of excellence." She wants Longwood to be the place "where things are happening" — exciting things. Apparently so do a substantial number of previous students who have volunteered their services as colleagues, orientation leaders, and student assistants.

These students have decided that the pursuit of excellence would also be the best theme for this years Freshmen orientation program. Perhaps they didn't want to pursue excellence so much as demonstrate it, for this program, in the words of Karen Kelsey, student director of Orientation "is going to be one of the greatest ever."

Orientation for Freshmen begins Friday, August 20, 1982. It is initiated by the most substantial of needs being provided for — namely food, in the form of donuts and coffee, courtesy of the Pan Hellenic Council. Later, as the day wears on, social events are highlighted, as Dave Jones and Karen Kelsey talk with the day students and Dr. Greenwood and Charles Sydnor, from the governor's office, speak with the parents of incoming Freshmen. General Orientation and the Presidents Assembly lead up the evening as Dr. Greenwood welcomes the Freshmen to their new home.

Day two of orientation, ironically began with a quote from Cervantes, creator of the most impractical man who ever rode a mule, is a picture of pragmatism. Dr. Michael Haltzel, newly appointed vice-president of the Academic Affairs will introduce representatives from different Longwood College Organizations who will speak with the Freshmen, giving them a brief overview of the organizations they represent. Next on the Agenda for those Freshmen who have declared a major, is to go to their respective departments for advisement and schedule formation. For those undeclared Freshmen, Dr. Peale of the English, Foreign Language and Philosophy department will be holding a discussion session in the Lankford Gold room. After lunch, the all important registration and equally imporant campus tour will be conducted. Phyllis L. Maple, vice president for student affairs, taking into consideration the proverbial statement "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" will be sponsoring the Reptile Rhythm Section to provide entertainment Saturday night starting at 9:00 p.m. in Lankford Building. Bring your drivers license if you want to buy beer.

As the sabbath was the day of rest for God, so it shall be for Freshmen. Day three of orientation is basic R and R. Rev. Michael Edwards will hold an Inter-Religious council at Lankford building in the morning for all interested freshmen. Later, the interest fair at library mall will give Longwood's student organizations a chance to strut their stuff while Freshmen get a chance to soak up some sun. For those physical fitness bugs Lancer Hall and Iler will be open. Remember to bring name tags to use as collateral for any equipment you may want to use. After the afternoon activities a colleague picnic in Wheeler Mall and Assembly in Jarman will wind up the day.

Monday will be back to serious work again for the Freshmen with Academic Advising for those who didn't get a chance on Saturday and registration. (Section 1 groups 1-28 must be advised on Saturday because they have to register Saturday afternoon.)

Honor code signing will be held Monday night with Dr. Geoffrey Orth presiding in Jarman Auditorium.

Tuesday, the 24th, last day before classes and final day of orientation, Freshmen will hear a speech in Jarman Auditorium, then will go on to complete the ACE questionnaire.Later, in the Lankford Gold room Edna Allen Bledsoe will meet with minority students and other interested parties. At 1:00 o'clock all Freshmen will meet with their orientation leaders in the areas designated by the schedule below. Bring a pencil. There will be bookstore gift certificates given to freshmen and orientation leaders who score highest on a "Trivia" test about Longwood, and who have participated the most. Also a one day trip to Washington is planned for the most active orientation groups and leaders.

Convocation is Tuesday evening. Seniors and faculty in full academic regalia will hear from Dr. Haltzel in Jarman Auditorium. Finally the finale' — dinner and music at the Presidents' home in the dell. The Good Guys from Richmond will be the featured musicians.

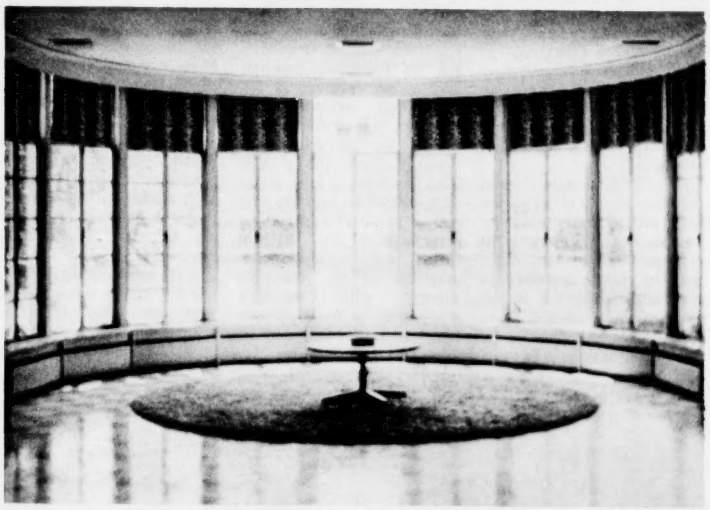
Longwood Gets Face Lift

"A Blue ceiling in the dining room!? Come on! Dorms without grafitti!? Doors without holes and padlocks!? New furniture!? Floors that shine like they were out of a pledge commercial!? What has happened to Longwood?" We are still finding out.

Along with new staff members, new policies in orientation and other welcomed improvements, students were delighted to discover a great deal of physical improvements to Longwood's campus and facilities. None of us realized what a nicely waxed floor and clean painted walls can do for a room.

"This has been the busiest summer we've had since I've been here and I've been here five years", physical plant director, Roy Hill commented. Examples of what kept Hill's staff busy are evident everywhere. The dining hall with its blue ceiling, live plants and tile entrance-way, is a main accomplishment along with other extensive painting in the dorms. The improvements range from such accomplishments as adding a sidewalk leading to Par-Bil's, a brick walk from the entrance of Main Cunningham to South Cunningham, replacing seventy doors in Cox to detailed work such as new light fixtures and exit lights.



New paint job to the Dining Hall adds atmosphere to appetite.

Rotunda takes on an added brightness due to recent wax job.

Four New Vice-Presidents Join Longwood's Administration

Four nationally prominent educators will join the Longwood College administration this summer if approved by the college's Board of Visitors on July 16.

Longwood president Janet D. Greenwood said "this team will make the cutting-edge difference for Longwood in the next decade." She said that their background and expertise make possible the achievement of the goals she outlined in her inaugural address in April.

The new appointees are:

— Dr. Verna L. Armstrong of Cincinnati and Farmville, vice president for business affairs. She currently is interim vice president for academic affairs at Longwood and is on leave from a faculty position at the University of Cincinnati.

— Dr. Michael H. Haltzel of Glenmont, N.Y., vice president for academic affairs. He formerly was with Russell Reynolds Associates, the Lehrman Institute, the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies, and New York University.

— Phyllis L. Mable of Richmond, vice president for student affairs. She is dean of student affairs at Virginia Commonwealth University and a recent president of the major national professional association in student affairs, the American College Personnel Association.

— and John R. Rothermel, Jr., of Needham, Mass., executive assistant to the president. He currently is executive vice president at Boston State College.

Two other members of the new administration were appointed last January. They are Donald L. Lemish, vice president for institutional advancement, who came from East Carolina University; and H. Donald Winkler, director of public affairs, who was with the East-West Center in Honolulu, HI.

All members of the new administration share strong academic backgrounds and national recognition. Two — Haltzel and Winkler — also have had international experience. Two — Haltzel and Rothermel — are Harvard graduates.

Academic enchancement, including a greater international thrust, were emphasized by President Greenwood in her inaugural address, in which she cited new educational goals for students. The 13 goals, designed to prepare students "for living fully in the 21st century," range from saleable work skills enabling students to be "more than competitive in a variety of career fields" to family-life skills and a "global ethic" or "world consciousness."

Editor's Turn

In the beginning there was ape. (Creationist mellow-out for a bit). Then there was person. Person being man-woman. Then there were beers and bongs and Miltons and thongs and Jacuzzis and Alpine and swingers and old wine, there were Reagans and Stockman and Nixon and Pac-Man, Begins and Bagels, star trek and lasers, hang glides, hot rides, stacked out broads and magna cum laudes — there was college, eeeh! College!! The Ivory tower institute of higher learning — musty books and dusty nooks? And what's a cute person like you doing in a place like this...huh?

You never wanted to go to college, all your life you dreamed of a log cabin in the woods — catfish for supper by a quaint crystal water pond, chewing chigger weed and occasionally taking a refreshing dip. You were going to sell the T.V., get away with a backpack and Harley-Davidson L.T.D., along the blue ridge — live were you land — crash — aaah, that's the life. Then your parents (the dastardly buggers) kept feeding you this crap about education. Education!! college. College!!

"But Mom, I don't need any education...look I can get a job right now. Pizza Hut. O.K. so Pizza Huts not Wall Street, so what. Do I have to live up to your expectations. I'm 18 for godsakes. I'm old enough to make my own decisions. If I want to rub crust off of Pizza pans for a living that's my own business."

So you decided to go to college...huh? Make something of yourself? But what? Ohoh another decision. You want to turn the world upside down with your discerning diagnosis. A fresh logical viewpoint on this muddle those adults (ugh) have made of this earth. But how? Another decision. They do seem to stack up. Have you picked a major? A minor? What classes are you ready for? Who to take to the party Friday night? Will he ask me out? Will you ask him out? and who cares? Why you care of course. Stuck in what Satre would call the absurdity of decision. Hamlet's bee buzzing around in your bonnet. Buzz-Buzzing through for the rest of your life. The quaint pond doesn't sound so bad now. But of course that is another decision — to advance or retreat. Is there no way out? Sorry, nope. You blew it at conception.

Consider college an armament for the future, a decisive excalibur to slash through all those murky questions and carve your own answers. Decisions must always me made. Hopefully a high education will give you the equipment to do it in accordance with what you want and what the world needs.

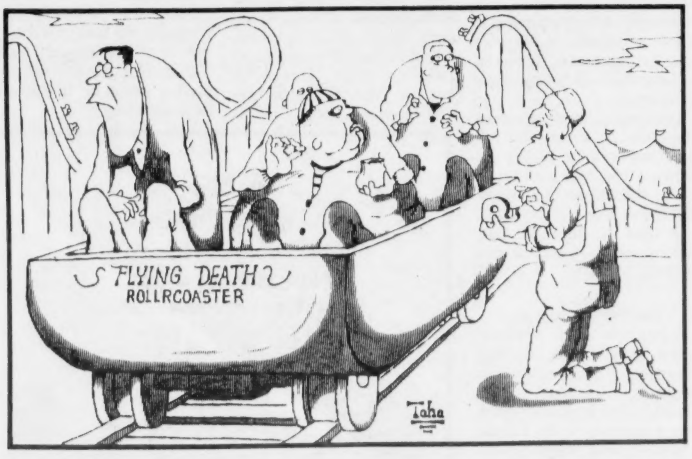
A special exhibition and sale of original American and European prints will be presented on Tuesday, September 14, 1982 at Longwood College Art Department, Bedford Building from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Marson Graphics of Baltimore, Maryland specializes in exhibiting a distinguished collection of original etchings, woodcuts, lithographs and serigraphs. A representative will be present to answer questions about the works.



Freshman Stats

The Longwood class of 1986 is up in population from the class of '85 by about 100. Guy to girl ratio is about 1 to 3 (give or take a girl) and the preferred major seems to be business.

According to a recent study done at the St. Louis University, the students of the class of '86 are commonly extroverted, intuitive, feeling and perceptive. Congratulations.

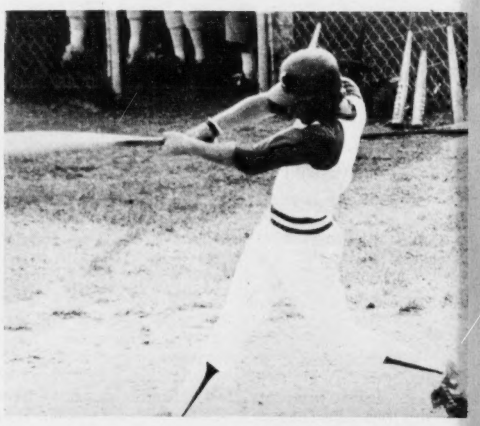
Lancer Baseball Goes Division II Series

Back before the 1982 season began, Longwood baseball coach Buddy Bolding allowed as how this team could turn out to be his best ever. How right you were, coach! In only its fifth year, the Longwood baseball team rang up a sparkling 31-10-1 record, won the South Atlantic Region Tournament and qualified for the NCAA Division II World Series in Riverside, California.

The Lancers, who ended up ranked fifth in Division II by Collegiate Baseball, were eliminated by eventual national champ Riverside 6-1 and national runner-up Florida Southern 11-0 in the World Series May 22-25. While disappointed with the games in California, Coach Bolding pointed with pride to his team's accomplishments.

"Looking in perspective," the coach noted, "I'm as pleased as I can be. Our big ambition was to gain a Division II bid, but we went way beyond it. We didn't even remotely hope for this."

What Longwood did was journey to Valdosta, Georgia and knock off regional kingpin Valdosta State in two out of three games and trounce ranked West Georgia 12-2 to win the regional title and advance to the World Series. Bolding's team shocked the favored Blazers and their fans by taking the title game 3-1 on May 15.



"It was the experience of a lifetime," said the coach, referring to the regional title and trip to the world series. "And, I'm real proud of the team. They spread the name of Longwood College and Farmville from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean. We're looking forward to going out there again some day."

A POWER AGAIN?

"Some day" could turn out to be next season. Bolding will have the heart of his team back again next season including All-American shortstop Dwayne Kingery (.390), season baseman David Rumburg (.397), catcher Doug Toombs (.397), left fielder Sonny Bolton (.379) and third baseman John Sullivan (.375). Standout pitcher Richard Vaught (6-3) also returns.

SEASON OF SUPERLATIVES

Longwood's 1982 edition broke virtually every team record on the books while compiling a team batting average of .338 and averaging 9.2 runs to its opponents' 4.3. Season highlights included wins over Shippensburg State 4-3, Lynchburg 9-7, and William and Mary 11-6. The Lancers rang up a 28-7-1 mark in the regular season to qualify for their first postseason bid ever.

The Lancers, nobody's pick to win the South Atlantic regional, beat West Georgia 12-2 on May 13, Valdosta State 19-17 in 11 innings on May 14, and came back after a 6-4 loss to the homestanding Blazers on May 15, to win the title game 3-1 that night.

Hero of the championship game was freshman pitcher John Dipierdomenico (Di-PEAR-Domenico) (Hampton Bays, NY), who shut-out Valdosta State over the last five innings in his first tournament appearance.

LANCERS DOMINATE ALL-TOURNAMENT TEAM

Longwood, which got 55 hits in 164 at bats in the tournament (.335 avg.), placed six players on the All-South Atlantic Region Tournament team. Shortstop Dwayne Kingery (Roanoke), who hit .381 with a homer, two doubles and six RBI's, was named the tournament MVP. Other Lancers named included: catcher Doug Toombs (Chase City), .529, a homer, 2 doubles and six RBI's; center-fielder Bruce Morgan (Dillwyn), .429, 5 runs, 23 put-outs; third baseman John Sullivan (E. Quogue, NY), .450, two doubles, six RBI's; left-fielder Sonny Bolton (Chesterfield), .308, a homer, a double, four RBI's and pitcher Richard Vaught (Blue Ridge), who pitched a complete game in Longwood's opening 12-2 win over West Georgia.

Recruiting News

Men's Basketball

Three outstanding basketball prospects have signed to attend Longwood College in the fall and play basketball for the Lancers, according to head coach Cal Luther.

Frank Tennyson, a 5-8 point guard from Highland Springs High School (Richmond), Girado Smith, a 6-3 shooting guard from District Heights, MD by way of Sheridan Wyoming Community College, and John Rusevlyan, a 6-3 leaper from Yorktown High School (Arlington), have cast their lot with Longwood's NCAA Division II program.

Women's Basketball

Longwood women's basketball coach Jane Miller has announced that Kim McConnell, a 5-5 point guard from Frederick Community College in Frederick, MD, and Amy Cook, a 5-4 point guard from Verona, VA, have been awarded athletic performance scholarships to attend Longwood College and play basketball for the Lady Lancers.

Gymnastics

Standout high school gymnasts from Virginia Beach and Sterling have been awarded athletic performance scholarships to attend Longwood College and compete for the Lancer gymnastics team.

Longwood coach Ruth Budd said that Tracey Roberts (Virginia Beach) of Green Run High School, and Lisa Zuraw (Sterling) of Park View High School, have signed to attend Longwood in the fall.

Undefeated in all-around since 1980 in regular season, district and regional competition, Roberts has claimed Beach District titles in beam the past three years, vaulting two years, and bars one year.

In the State AAA meet, Roberts has been runner-up in all-around, bars and beam twice. The Outstanding Gymnast on her high school team, she has also competed for Gymstrada.

AA State Champ

A high school teammate of Longwood standout Monica Chandler, Lisa Zuraw was the State AA champ in bars this past season. As a sophomore, she was first in bars and second all-around in the Park View Invitational. In her junior year she was first in all-around and all four individual events in district competition and placed second all-around in the regional.

This season Zuraw was first in all-around, floor exercise, bars and vaulting in regional competition and won first in bars and fourth all-around in the state meet.

Soccer

Longwood coach Rich Posipanko, who guided the Lancers to an 11-4-3 record in 1981, has announced that 9 talented soccer recruits from Maryland, Virginia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York have signed to attend Longwood in the fall and play for the Lancer booters.

Heading up the list of new players for Longwood's NCAA Divsion II program are Brian Allmendinger of West Babylon, NY, and Clay Mullican of Middletown, MD.

Allmendinger, a graduate of West Babylon High School, is a forward who had 10 goals and 12 assists as captain of his prep team this past season. He was an All-League and All-County booter for two years.

A midfielder, Mullican earned All-League, All-County and All-State honors while leading his team to a three-year record of 37-9. The Middletown High School squad were state champs in 1980 and state finalists in 1981. Mullican had 19 goals and nine assists in his career.

Two Virginia Recruits

Among the seven additional soccer recruits, two are from Virginia. Mark Duston, an incoming freshman from Chantilly High School in Fairfax, was a member of the Virginia State 17 and under team. Woodbridge native Shawn Carson, of Garfield High School, had three goals and five assists as a midfielder.

From Pennsylvania, Dan Bubnis is a back from Roslyn who attended Abington High School and made All-Suburban.

New Jersey recruits include Mark McArdle of Neptune and Jerry Carroll and Al Delmonte, both of Forked River and Lacey Township High School. A forward, McArdle made All-Conference and All-Shore in 1981 while totaling seven goals and 11 assists.

Both Carroll and Delmonte made All-Conference, All-County and All-State group 1 teams. Carroll had 12 assists while Delmonte tallied 22 goals with seven assists.

Posipanko predicts that Longwood will have its best team ever in the coming fall season with a strong group of returning players joined by the talented incoming group.

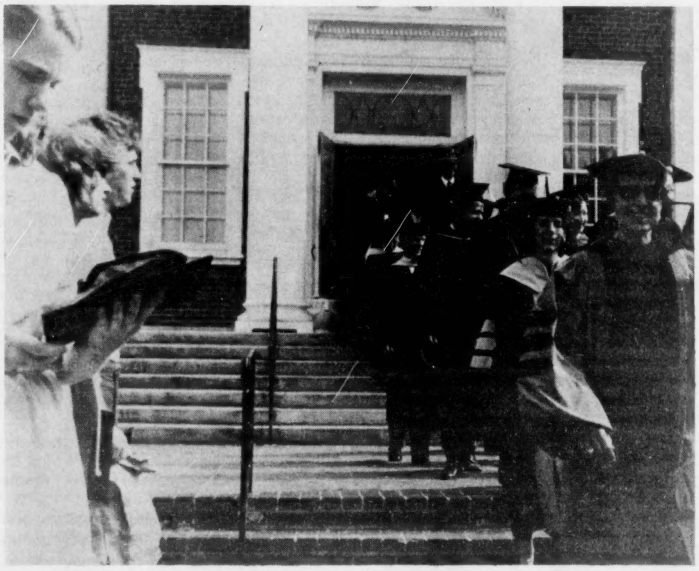
Convocation
"The Pursuit of Excellence"

By CINDY CORELL

The 1982 Academic year at Longwood College was introduced formally and traditionally Tuesday afternoon at 4:30 in Jarman Auditorium when Convocation and Senior Capping ceremonies were held. Following the procession of the faculty members, all donned in their academic robes and in order of their rank, and the seniors accompanied by little brothers and sisters, the Military Science Honor Guard presented the colors and the ceremony began.

President Janet D. Greenwood presided over the event and welcomed Longwood back. Senior Class president, Stephen R. Myers introduced the speaker for the event, Dr. Michael H. Haltzel, the new Vice-President for Academic Affairs. Dr. Haltzel received his Bachelors degree from Yale University, his Master's and his Doctorate from Harvard University. He has previously been employed by Hamilton College in New York. His speech Tuesday was on the Pursuit of Excellence.



He began the speech by noting that the topic, seemingly quite self-evident, has merit of further discussion. "...the pursuit of excellence has not always and everywhere been a dominent societal value and even when it has, it can wither and decay with decidedly unfortunate results." An example of this is a United States railroad passenger system, once second to none, now reduced to a joke due to decrease in quality.

Dr. Haltzel quoted "...one of America's most perceptive public servants" John Gardner, warning of public attitudes in pride of one's labor: "A society in which people would rather be poor philosophers than good plumbers will have neither good philosophers or good plumbers." Along with societies, businesses, and individuals, colleges must also be careful not to let their standards slip, nor their striving for excellence to relax or they must face up to the consequences.

An encouraging note on this topic, though is that- "...excellence is the universal highest common denominator...if you do something well, you will find colleagues of like interests and achievement and be recognized as a member of a worthy group." But aside from all social attributes of the pursuit of excellence, the individual glory is perhaps the most important reason for it. "The satisfaction of running faster than you've ever run before, or of figuring out a difficult equation, or of successfully finishing a piece of research...all of these accomplishments give you the feeling of 'I can do it. I have done it.' "

Despite the "moralistic, visionary" quality of this idea, Dr. Haltzel defended it as being eminently practical. Habits which come through striving for excellence, such as diligence, curiosity, self-discipline, and pride are all very useful in our lives of continual learning.

We as people sometimes expect only philosophers and other academic professionals to strive for excellence, but on a personal level, we all want the best. We want the pilot of the airplane we just boarded to be the best in his field. None of us wants to know that the surgeon standing above us in the operating room skipped classes in Medical school. Therefore, should we not do our best in all we attempt, if not for ourselves, than for others?

Faculty in full regalia proceed to convocation ceremony as students watch.

Dr. Haltzel admitted to the burden and sometimes pain of this pursuit, "...but it's worth it!" Every member of the college community must sacrifice something, mostly time with family and friends, to be the best that they possibly can be.

Although the pursuit of excellence is just a justifiable ambition, the speaker devoted time to warn of "excellence without ethics..." which "... is sterile at best and evil at worst." For example, the Berlin Wall is a technically fabulous achievement, used solely to keep human beings from escaping tyranny. Excellence was pursued. Immorality was achieved. achieved.

Bringing his speech home to the Longwood audience, Dr. Haltzel summarized the goal, and how to prevent ideals from being sacrificed. Two main points were mentioned to carry this out. 1) Consciously cultivate the spirit of excellence and remove all possible institutional barriers to achieving it, and 2) Develop habits of discipline and tenacity of purpose.

"Students — take pride in your work; burn the midnight oil if you need to; proof-read that paper, revise it if necessary; take that difficult course — they're the ones you will remember, not the easy ones; run that extra mile. Set your goals high!

"Professors — spend that extra time with students; keep up your

Freshmen Orientation

Getting settled in on Friday and starting to take advantage of college life, the class of 1986 prepared for their four years of college ahead with a week of orientation.

It kicked off with a math placement test which was followed throughout the next five days by several assemblies. Advising was on Saturday and registration began. Advising and registration seemed to be the most feared. However, all seemed to survive without too much worry — the biggest being whether or not they would get the additional classes they wanted.

The interest fair was held on Library Mall on Sunday afternoon. That evening on Wheeler Mall there was the colleague picnic.

Registration continued on Monday, and the Honor Code signing was that evening. Afterwards, there was a Freshman Ceremony, where the colleagues gave their group members gifts.

Tuesday, the last day of orientation, started off with the last assembly, which included the Ace Questionnaire. The day was concluded at Convocation and a picnic at the Longwood House with the Good Guys playing for the crowd.

The Good Guys performed for a passive crowd in the dell, Wednesday.

Heroes. You see them with broad-rimmed leather hats walking into sunsets and one-strap backpacks over their shoulders and sometimes you see them street-tough with crew cuts. Swift kicks. Efficient. Fending off bad guys. But you rarely see them in Frazer dorm shifted into a corner with a gray Longwood T-shirt and gym shorts, caged in blinds-stripped light. Farmville's hero? She giggled shyly, covered her face with her hands, and said she didn't think so. Cindy Watson is the National Amateur Athletes Union Champion in Karate.

Why Karate? "I like the fightin." But it wasn't always that way. In a small town like Farmville there wasn't much for an introverted yet athletic ten-year old to do, so she turned to Karate — it became Cindy's catalyst. Before, she was painfully shy and when she began Karate class under Ed Smith, she huddled into a corner afraid to speak to anyone. And how has she changed? "I can talk to you." Above all, Karate gave Cindy self-confidence. Unlike the martial-arts masters image, Cindy is still shy. Only in the ring does she become aggressive and on the offensive — most of her competitors wait for attack and remain on the defensive.

Women in Karate — especially women with black belts — are branded as rough and tough and a lot less than feminine. And yet a Karate routine is much like the routine of a gymnast with concentration upon skill, approach, form, and technique. "To see someone perform who is good at Karate is really beautiful." According to Cindy, in many ways Karate is much like any other sport, involving warm-ups, exercise and practice. Besides the beauty of the sport, and Karate's obvious self-defense training, it builds enormous concentration, control, agility and speed.

On September 18th, Cindy will head for New Jersey for the World Championship Trials, and if she does well there it's on to Taiwan as a member of the United States Team for the World Championship. Although the U.S. doesn't have a Karate Olympic team yet, the AAU serves as the possible threshold to the Olympics.

Cindy coaches and judges Karate competitions throughout the state, and as a Physical Education major eventually hopes to open a Karate Studio of her own. She enjoys working with children. "Their concentration is unbelievable and some of those kids are just dynamite." Many times at a tournament, kids come up to her and ask about the technique of a particular kick or routine. It's very important to Cindy to help them in any way she can "because that's what a true athlete is."

There are ten degrees to a black belt and Cindy is at the first. She works out daily and is now being coached by Sam Justice in Richmond, scheduling Karate training around her classes here at Longwood. She tries to make it to Richmond two or three times a week. Will she make it to the tenth degree of her black belt? "Damn, I reckon a person would have arthritis by then."

Cindy Watson demonstrates karate skills.

New Nukes

By GWEN STEPHENSON

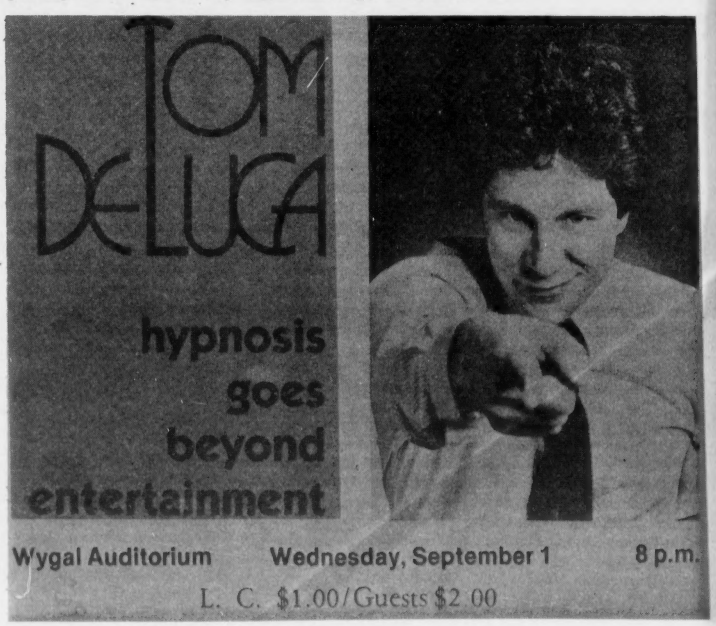
July 16, 1945. The first atomic bomb was detonated at Alamogordo, New Mexico. The device was assembled 200 miles away, at Los Alamos National Laboratory.

August 6, 1945. An atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, Japan. 100,000 people died as a result; 70,000 of them instantly. Three days later, the city of Nagasaki suffered the same fate.

August 27, 1982. Today I talked to Dr. L.R. Fawcett, Jr., an associate professor at Longwood College, who teaches pre-engineering and physics courses. Dr. Fawcett spent this summer and the one before working at Los Alamos, New Mexico in the National Laboratory. He is working on a particular physics problem, investigating the transport (or passage) of neutrons through Li D (abbreviation for lithium deuteride). He is working to predict the amount of tritium produced as a function of the number of neutrons traveling through the Li D.

The importance of this experiment is in the tritium produced. Tritium can be used as a fuel in both nuclear weapons design and in fusion power reactors. Also, both tritium and deuterium have the same chemical properties as hydrogen. It is possible that both fuels will be used in fusion power reactors in the future.

For those of us who are not science buffs, Dr. Fawcett explained the difference between nuclear fission and nuclear fusion. Fission, the process used in atomic reactors of today, is the act of splitting an atom. This cleavage causes radioactive particles to be produced in reactor fuel rods. The used fuel rods must then be disposed of properly, so that life forms will not be exposed to the harmful radiation.



Fusion, on the other hand, is the process by which atoms are fused, or joined together. When atoms are fused together, in a controlled atmosphere, a small amount of harmful radiation is produced. Dr. Fawcett and his colleagues are experimenting with various aspects of nuclear fusion. The importance of the fusion process is that so much less radiation is produced. Thus, much less radiation must be safely contained. The experiments with fusion research are being carried on at various private industries and national labs throughout the nation. The Lawrence Livermore Laboratory, the Sandia National Lab in Albequerque, the Oak Ridge National Lab in Tennessee and the Argon National Lab in Chicago are all working on controlling nuclear fusion for the development of electrical power.

Some of these national and privately funded labs are working with solar power, geothermal power, hydro electric power, wind power and power from biomass in addition to fusion power. Biomass is anything which can be grown and used for energy (corn in gasahol).

Dr. Fawcett stated that we cannot afford to wreck our environment with the use of large quantities of coal. We must find and use alternative, cleaner sources of energy.

In the doctor's opinion, solar power is practical for heating individual homes, but not for providing electrical power to large establishments and towns. The vast amounts of land needed for large solar collectors would cause difficulties. He also says hydroelectric power will probably not be used to any greater extent, because large land masses would have to be flooded.

Dr. Fawcett is hopeful that the national budget cuts will not bring too much pressure on national laboratories. He feels that the brilliant minds assembled in the government funded labs might be forced to different, competing, private industries and so lose their collective advantage. He hopes that nuclear fusion, combined with alternative sources of energy will provide a new reputation for Los Alamos National Lab; a safer name; than that which it gained on July 16, 1945.

Editor's Turn

Students for Peace and Security started at Tuft University last fall and has spread to at least five other schools this year. The organization is devoted to "favoring a strong national defense vis-a-vis the Soviet Union."

A gay student group at Texas A and M University says it will appeal a district court ruling that upheld the University's right to deny the group campus recognition.

There have been at least fifteen incidents of direct confrontation between Zionists and Pro-Palestinian groups on campuses across the country — Yale, Harvard and Ohio State to name a few. Even a number of marijuana protests took place at the Universities of Wisconsin, Illinois and Virginia this spring.

So what has been happening at Longwood. Well apparently the no-banners-in-the-dining-hall is causing quite a storm of student activism. At least one anonymous author, outraged at the prospect of not seeing the usual "Happy Birthday Jane Dopie" paper scroll, hung 10 feet x 5 feet, from the dining hall balcony, wrote in rage "we need that space for banners displaying information and notices for it is the only (underlined of course) place on campus with enough room . . . to spread information." Quite controversial, I'm sure. Unfortunately being the conservative editor I am, I will not print the letter.

Can you imagine. . . the Red 'N' Whites with the fury and scourge of tradition behind them will host a rally staged in Wheeler Mall. They will wear only banners and will refuse to move unless this infringement of students' rights is lifted. Meanwhile, the Green 'N' Whites fresh with inspiration and willing to throw out the baby and the bath water will call up the Campus Police and inform them of the protest. The Campus Police will load their revolvers and tear gas canisters. They will call up Police Chief Neil Smith.

"Listen Neil . . . we got a hot one . . . might want to call in reinforcements . . . yeh, two hundred Red 'N' Whites with nothing but banners on. Greenwood is petrified. . . use nothing but rubber bullets. . .sure, no one gets hurt . . . right."

The Campus police leave headquarters and can hear the chants from Wheeler Mall—

"WE WANT BANNERS!" "WE WANT BANNERS!"

"Remember Tom" (Tom is the old cop, with steady hands and hawk eyes) "nobody gets hurt."

"Sure, Rick."

But Rick isn't so sure. Just as they enter the mall a herd of Green 'N' Whites wearing nothing at all, flow out of Jarman, brandishing baseball bats and hocky sticks.

"FREE THE BANNERS!" "FREE THE BANNERS!"

A Red 'N' White goes down in the scuffle. Tom gets into position. Rick reaches for his shoulder.

BANG!!!

Longwood. . . the Kent State of banners. No . . . I could not print that letter.

Your Turn

An Earned Thank You

Dear Students:

It was my privilege to meet you and work with you for the 1982 Orientation. The success of this year's program depended on your cooperation, your willingness to work, and your interest in helping the new students. Each of you should feel proud and satisfied with a job well done. Your cheerfulness in accepting tasks made Orientation a happy time for the entire College. Your attitude gave us the assurance that you were there which is essential to any community effort, that is, generosity of spirit.

Please accept the congratulations and the thanks which you earned so well.

Sincerely,
Elisabeth L. Flynn

High Priest

By CHRIS YOUNG

Judas Priest is the letter perfect heavy-metal band. All the way from their leather and chains to the fact that after 7 or so albums (who counts anymore?), they have only one album worth listening to. That's their live one, Unleashed in the East (Recorded in Japan). Priest is the typical A verse (vocals, chorus), B verse (lead guitar), and back to A verse band. Once in a while they will venture into C, and sometimes even D!! But unless you are a certified headbanger, Judas Priest is nothing more than a substitute for Nytol.

Surprise! Surprise! Screaming for Vengeance on Columbia Records unleashes the new Judas Priest. Don't get me wrong, metal fans, Priest still dresses in the same Hell's Angels leftovers, and can still help you get that beautiful "sting" that only metal can give. The only difference is that the sting is now a burn!

Screaming for Vengeance is a killer. From the time I heard the first cut "Electric Eye," I knew this was going to be a good album.

Guitarists K. K. Downing and Glenn Tipton have finally learned some new chords. And their lead? These guys have obviously been up late studying their "Starlicks" tapes, and for the most part, they get an A on the Randy Rhoads (former guitarist for Ozzy Osbourne) crash course of lead guitar. It's evident from the first cut on Side A until the end of Side B that these two have finally given up their generic style guitar licks, and are going through the ever popular "I want to be Eddie Van Halen" phase.

The guitar playing, and the overall production of this album are very slick. As for the lyrics, I can't really tell you if they're any good, because as usual you can't understand them. It's probably for the better, though.

To sum it all up, The Chris Young Metal Institute gives these guys an A for effort, A for guitar playing, A for production, an Incomplete for lyrics, and a hardy pat on their leather clad backs. Good going, guys. It's about time!

standards and don't unwittingly slide into an artificial grade inflation; develop that new course, and be assured that this administration will support your striving for excellence in every possible way.

"And administrators — stay in touch with all facets of college life; maintain accessibility to faculty members; don't take "the easy way out" or be afraid to "rock the boat" on crucial decisions that are vital for the future of the college. Represent Longwood forcefully and proudly throughout Virginia and beyond."

A general observation and valuable to all of us: "constantly be self-critical!" We are all the best judges of what we ourselves can do; we must simply be honest enough with ourselves to know it and carry it through.

Longwood College is starting anew. A new look and a new feel, and Longwood has new challenges for us all. Face those challenges, says Dr. Haltzel, and pursuing excellence will be second-nature to you.

News Briefs

By MIKE LYNCH

Helped by the fact that he was obviously backing the right cause this time, President Reagan managed to get a 98.3 billion dollar tax bill passed by Congress, keeping his string of political victories alive. Mostly composed of tax loophole closings and not a great deal of personal tax increases, the bill marked a policy turnaround for Reagan, who before this, would not have dreamed of an increase.

But while Reagan made the big switch, none of the hard liners in Congress from each side really did. His side just won the soft ones over, with political favors if necessary, as usual. New allies such as Tip O'Neill and Ted Kennedy appeared as well as new enemies like Jack Kemp. But after all the shuffling the bill still passed 226-207.

On August 17th the New York Stock Exchange had its busiest day in history, experiencing immense trading volume and the most spectacular price rise ever. The Dow Jones Industrial Average had its most successful day and week on record as it finished up at 869.29 shares for the week, up 81.24 points for the week. The big day was August 17th when 132.69 shares were traded and the bar stayed open an hour late.

Major causes of the rush were slowly declining interest rates and words of wisdom from two highly revered economic forecasters, Albert Woljiner of the First Boston investment firm and Henry Kaufman of Salomon Brothers. Normally having nothing but nasty things to say about the economy, they suddenly came out with bright outlooks, encouraging many of their followers to go at it the following week. But what really spurred the action on was the passage of Reagan's tax bill, allowing investors a little more faith in responsible handling of the economy.

There was a losers' party in Syria last week as the soldiers of the Palestine Liberation Organization arrived there and in other Arab countries. Having resided in Lebanon for the past 12 years, the P.L.O. will now be located in Syria, Tunisia, South Yemen, North Yemen, Jordan and Iraq. As the first 450 men left for a stopover in Cyprus, their comrades raised their weapons in the air and fired in salute as they must have done quite a bit during the war to get themselves in the fix they were in.

Evacuations will continue until September 4 if all goes as planned while a force of 800 Americans, 800 French, and 400 Italians will keep an eye on things until September 22. Yassar Arafat plans to be the last to leave with 1000 of his Al Fatah commandos for Tunisia. Credit Philip Habib for much of the success. As President Reagan said of the special envoy, "Phil never lost hope and in the end his spirit and determination carried the day."

School Becomes Institute

The children have gone without a glance back; shiffled out the door. But the door has not closed. At least not according to George Stonikinis, the head of Longwood's social work department, who will assume added responsibility as Director of Special Projects and will oversee the "Institute for Advanced Studies and Regional Resources", the new name for Longwood's one time John P. Wynne Campus School.

The whole idea behind the facility, said Mr. Stonikinis, is to provide a place, opportunity and physical setting for faculty, administrative and student projects." Dr. Robert H. Lehman, head of the Office of Continuing Studies will also move in to the former campus school.

The facility will hold conferences and workshops for both faculty and state agencies. They will be as diverse as a 3 day welfare training session to a Boy Scout Merit Badge Conference. Farmville's own acting troupe, the Waterworks Players, has already presented The Drunkard in the facility.

Mr. Stonikinis is optimistic about the capabilities of such a center. "If faculty members along with community members want to start a research project on, say, rural policy, this place would be the perfect meeting ground. 300-400 people can be accommodated here comfortably. There is a cafeteria and library, (one of the largest children's libraries in the state) classrooms and a gymnasium. It's a good place to bring influential people."

Office space will be available for various faculty members who are engaged in interdisciplinary curriculum development or research projects and in the area of community services, there are plans for family life education, and public school resource development and support. Also plans are in the works to take the former kindergarten room and adapt it for use as a child care center — "the physical layout is great."We need a wholistic Attitude, a wholistic approach...we need to get out of our individual disciplines and talk to each other. There is a real need for more human interaction like the kind seen and felt in the '60's", said Mr. Stonikinis.

The audiovisual equipment located in various classrooms will be used for reviewing several meetings going on at the same time; or even by local high schools for forensic meets..."the possibilities are endless."

Mr. Stonikinis wants the center to have an educational thrust in view of its previous function, "I don't have any doubt at all that the best use of this facility is as an educational center...it's sad that the Campus School closed...as it winds up, nobody gets it at all — it belongs to everybody."

Research Needs Two Aides

By LINDA LeSUEUR

Through a research grant from the Longwood Foundation, a sociology professor from Longwood, Dr. Chester C. Ballard, has planned to organize a study to determine the effects of federal budget cutbacks on the Farmville area. The studies will focus not only on how cutbacks affect students, but also how they affect the community, in all aspects of life, including social services, businesses, recreation, family life, and religion. Most studies focus one individual program on year-long project. Overall, the project will be a community project of what the cutbacks mean. His final goal is to make people realize how serious these cuts are, and to make people see what is actually taking place in Farmville.

Dr. Ballard is not taking on the experiment by himself, however. He has two positions available, in which students can earn three credits while they go through a learning process at the same time under Ballard's supervision.

The first position available is one for a research assistant. In this position, the learning activity teaches one how to conduct a social research program. The responsibilities include conducting interviews, assisting in data collection and analysis, and general project organizational tasks. This position is worth three credits.

The second position being offered is for a student with working knowledge of the college computer system. Directed study application of computer techniques for social research is the learning activity for this position. The student will work on a research project to be conducted in the community from its initial start in September, through its conclusion in early December.

Anyone desiring more information should contact Dr. Ballard by calling 392-9277. Anyone interested in applying for a position should see Dr. Ballard in his office. 207-C Hiner Hall.

Not Just Special Effects

Summer Movie Reviews

By DAVID S. AREFORD

If you were able to break yourself away from the sun and were able to dig up some money this summer, you had the chance to see a variety of movies. There was a long list of films and more than the average provided good entertainment. The ranged from Conan to Annie but the three standouts were E.T., The World According to Garp, and An Officer and a Gentleman.

Of course, the moneymaker of the summer was E.T. It was also the summer's best movie. If thre is such a thing as a "well-rounded" movie this is it. In all aspects this movie shines. It contains exceptional acting, story, effects, cinematography and music.

Unlike other "blockbusters," Steven Spielberg has created a movie in which the special effects play second to the compassion, humor, and friendship of a small boy named Elliot and his extra-terrestrial friend. The effects are constantly there in the form of "E.T." but the screen is filled not with this technical achievement but with an emotional one.

Spielberg mixes fantasy with middle class life. He can present amazing effects and at the same time fill his story with a record of current life — problems of divorce, Star Wars paraphernalia, video games, suburbia. It is interesting to note that the neighborhood in E.T. is similar, if not the same, as the one in Poltergeist, Spielberg's other movie of the summer. Spielberg brings his movies home to his audience by saying that an amazing event can occur next door. The movie presents such a current picture of life that we can automatically connect. At one point, one of Elliot's friends asks, referring to "E.T.," "Can't he just beam-up?" Elliot replies, "This is reality." The movie makes a comment about itself.

Spielberg has a wonderful appreciation for his youth and for children. He realizes the importance of the child and the way he views the world. In a classroom scene in E.T. the teacher's body is cut off from the waist up. As in the "Peanuts" cartoons on television where the adults are never seen and talk in a warble, Spielberg enters the child's world where adults are distant as well as taller. The child is not yet affected by the world and is open to unbiased feeling.

E.T. is a combination of scenes polished to perfection. For instance: the scene in which Elliot leads a class of students in releasing the frogs in a science lab. Movement is choreographed with music and enhanced with editing. Hands reach out of windows in unison and release frogs as we hear children chant, "Back to the Woods . . ." The scene is a small masterpiece in itself. These scenes, like the feeling, aching, and other fine details within them, are like small gems set into a remarkable crown — which is E.T.

The World According to Garp tells the stroy of T.S. Garp, a writer who tries his hardest in a strange world which is ours. It is a great achievement for Robin Williams who had to put aside his improvisational skills for a straight role. It seems as if the part was made for him. Along with Williams, the rest of the cast is also suberb. The characters become completely real and three-dimensional thanks to these acros: Mary Beth Hurt as Garp's wife, Glenn Close as Jenny Fields, his mother, and John Lithgow as Roberta Muldoon.

Along with its acting achievement, the movie also reaches a refreshing level of compassion towards its characters. Roberta Muldoon, for example, the transsexual who was tightend for the Philadelphia Eagles. At first, we snicker at Roberta but as the movie progresses we get to know her and sympathize with her feelings. We accept her as Garp accepts her.

Garp is the kind of man we don't see in the movies anymore. He is a family man. He loves his wife and his children. He is sentimental and not afraid to cry. He is affected by the unpredictability of this world — a dog bites his ear off when he is a child, an airplane crashes through his house, his mother is assassinated, his son is killed in a tragic car accident — but Garp moves on. He relies on the important things in life — the people around him: his mother, wife and children. His feelings for his dead father thread the movie. As a child, he imagines his father as a great pilot and as Garp dies in a helicopter carrying him to a hospital, he tells his wife that he is finally flying (like his father). The humanity of his character is a wonderful accomplishment by Robin Williams and his original creator, novelist John Irving.

An Officer and a Gentleman deals with Zack Mayo who enrolls in Naval Aviation Officer Candidate School. He is at first a selfish, self-reliant loner but he matures, falls in love and discovers the people around him and his responsibility to them.

The movie is at times sentimental, romantic, corny, but those things don't matter in the shadow of its characters and their progression. From the female Officer Candidate who struggles through the obstacle course to Zack's best friend who struggels with a relationshiip with a girl and with his decision to become a pilot, the audience is treated to the confusion, defeat and triumph of human beings.

The main story concerns Zack and his relationship with a local girl named Paula, played by Debra Winger. Their relationship lacks definition. There is no stated commitment. But as Zack matures so does his relationship.

Gere, who did a fine job in American Gigola has a better

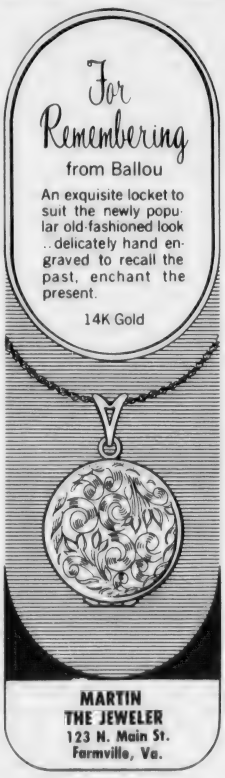
Placement Office

By MELINDA DAY



The Office of Career Planning and Placement, located on second floor South Ruffner, is now open for all students who are seeking career information, job opportunities, and assistance in goals.

Niki Fallis, Director, and Joyce Trent, Secretary, will be happy to cooperate with all students. The service provided by this office are voluntary, so all students should feel free to use them.

One such service provided by the office, is that of career seminars. These seminars are open to all students and may be requested. Two seminars to keep in mind are: Career Night in Business, November 8 — 7-8:30 p.m., located in Grainger Hall, and Meal Manners and Proper Attire, November 16 — 5:00 p.m. — Virginia Room — Dinner Meeting. The seminars are sponsored by Miss Fallis, who encourages all students to take part. Students should always feel free to request these seminars.

The Placement Office is also available to students who are seeking information about scholarships, fellowships, and internships. Miss Fallis is always eager to help students in filling out these applications and finding out answers to questions the student may have.

The office hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Come by the office or set up an appointment wtih Miss Fallis to discuss your interests. All students are encouraged to utilize this service in order to have a more rewarding and successful year.

G.E.L. Workshop

The Art Department of Longwood College will be sponsoring a Virginia Museum exhibition of prints from California's Gemini G.E.L. workshop from August twenty-fifth through September tenth. The exhibition is aimed at showing the impact of technology on printmaking. These prints are varied in styles and imagery, and range anywhere from studies in geometric form to studies in realism and abstraction. The exhibition includes twenty-two prints by six prominent American artists: Ronald Davis, Sam Francis, Roy Lichtenstein, Ken Price, Edward Ruscha and Frank Stella. Prints from this workshop will be on view daily from 9-12 noon, 1-5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 2-6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday in the Bedford Gallery.

Choral Department News

By CINDY CORELL

The first week of college, known for being one of the busiest of the semester, has been especially busy in Wygal, the Music Building. Aside from the normal activities, such as adding classes and getting overrides for registration, many students of all majors were found deciding what choral group to join and auditioning for those that they chose.

For only two semesters now, there has been a choice of three choirs to join. Aside from the requirement to audition, though, the three choirs are completely different and the variety will provide entertainment for virtually everyone as well as an opportunity to perform for those interested in singing.

The Concert Choir, directed by Mrs. Pauline Haga, is a group of eighty to one hundred women singers. They are featured in a concert Oktoberfest weekend, performing about forty-five minutes of popular music.

The Camerata Singers are a more select group of about forty, directed by Dr. Louard Egbert. This choir, which includes soprano, alto, tenor and bass, will be touring for a week in October, and they will perform in the Renaissance dinner put on by the Music Department every December. More tenors and basses are needed; anyone interested should contact Dr. Egbert in the Music Building before the last day to add a class.

The newest choir at Longwood, The Lancer Edition, debuted this past April at the reception for the Inauguration of President Janet D. Greenwood. The choir, also directed by Dr. Egbert, consists of fifteen singer-dancers and a small ensemble accompaniment. They will be performing on and off campus and possibly at the State Convention for the Music Educators National Conference in Richmond, VA.

El Greco Exhibit

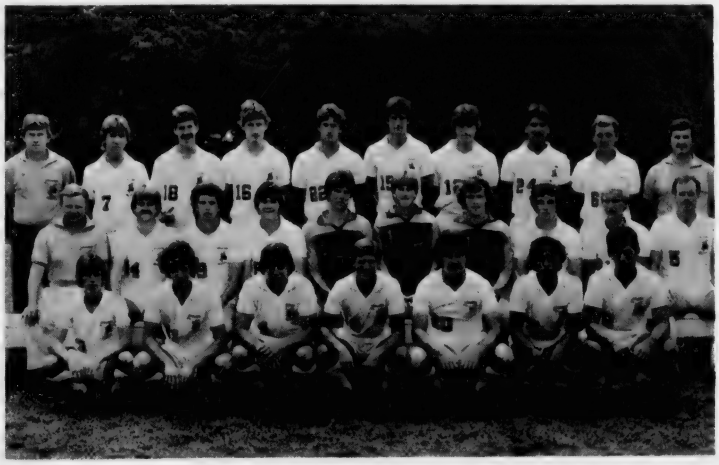
The Art Department is sponsoring a trip to see the El Greco exhibit at National Gallery in Washington, D. C., on Saturday, September 4, 1982. The Longwood bus will leave at 6 a.m. from Bedford Building parking lot and will return by 9 p.m. that evening. Reservations must be made by Thursday, September 2, 1982. All interested students should see Mrs. Lane in the Art Department Office to make their reservations and pay an $8.75 transportation cost.

SPORTS

Soccer Outlook

Longwood's 1982 soccer team will likely have more talent and experience than any squad in history, but the Lancers may not be able to duplicate last season's 11-4-3 record because of a beefed-up schedule which includes five Division I foes and eight teams which were ranked in their region last season.

Among the new faces on the Lancer schedule are College Division State Champ Radford and Division I State Runner-up William & Mary. Longwood will also face Virginia Tech, Randolph-Macon and Mt. St. Mary's. Participants for this year's third Longwood Invitational are Virginia Commonwealth, Richmond and UNC-Charlotte.



"This will be the best team ever at Longwood in terms of talent and experience, but it will be hard to duplicate last year's record-setting season," says fourth year head coach Rich Posipanko. "The key to the season could be how our new players fit in at midfield."

Nine starters return from the team which averaged 3.4 goals per game in 1981. The forward line should be strong again with starters Gus Leal, Tim Brennan and Steve Kern returning. Kern and Leal are seniors while Brennan is a junior. The trio accounted for 34 goals last season.

Newcomers Brian Allmendinger and Clay Mullican must join with All-State performer Bill Foster (9 goals) to give Longwood effective play at midfield. All-American Darryl Case, seniors Joe Parker and Steve McGurl and sophomores Scott Thoden and Randy Niemeyer started last year at back, but could be pushed by newcomers Dan Bubnis, Jerry Carroll and Omar Fakhoury.

In goal, freshman Al Delmonte will challenge veterans Brian Sprinkle and D.J. Walters, who did an excellent job last season. The Lancers will have depth at all positions.

Posipanko says his team has three goals for 1982: (1) To win the Longwood Invitational, (2) To allow opponents one goal or less per game and (3) To get a bid to the NCAA Division II South Regional Tournament. This year there will be three berths open for South Region teams. The Longwood coach feels his team is capable of earning one of those berths.

Longwood-Southside Tennis Classic

Approximately 60 men and women from a 10-county area in Southside Virginia will take part in the second Longwood-Southside Tennis Classic Thursday-Sunday at Longwood College. This year's tournament field is 50 per cent larger than a year ago when 40 competitors took part.

Number of entries for the five divisions are as follows: men's singles — 23, men's doubles — 15 teams, mixed doubles — 12 teams, junior vet singles — 8, and women's doubles — 8 teams.

Play begins at 6:00 Thursday night with men's singles and junior vet singles on tap. Men's singles action continues Friday night with doubles matches starting Saturday morning in all divisions. Finals in the five divisions are slated for Sunday afternoon.

Champions Return

Defending champs from last year's inaugural tourney are back to defend their titles. In men's singles, champ Murrie Bates and runner-up Jerry Cole are back. In men's doubles half of the 1981 title team returns as John Todd of Longwood is back with new partner Bryan Kersey. Todd teamed with Beck Haviland last year.

Angie Coppedge and Joan Tipton are back to defend their crown in women's doubles while Mrs. Tipton and husband John are the returning champs in mixed doubles.

Because of lack of entries the women's singles and junior vet doubles divisions will not be played.

School has begun and so has the intramural program. New Intramural Calendar Handbooks are available in Lancer Hall by the Intramural Athletic Association (IAA).

There have been a few changes in our program this year. Tennis singles and track and field have been replaced by co-ed Anything-Goes-Relays: The relays will be for T-shirts so get your teams together and come have some fun. Also this year there will be a $5.00 forfeit fee. This means if your team has an uniformed forfeit, to participate in the next team sport you will have to pay $5.00. Flag football this year is going to be Carolina-style. Each team will have four downs to score, there is a moving line of scrimmage, no punting, and there will be three officials. If you are interested in being an official, applications are due August 31 and there is a meeting in Iler classroom at 6:30 on September 1.

IAA meetings are held every Thursday night at 6:30 in the IAA room in Lankford. Everyone is invited to attend.

"Open Rec." this year will be as follows:

Spring Sports Wrap-Up

Lady Golfers Third in Nation

By KAY SCHMIDT

Longwood's women's golf team placed third at the AIAW Division II National Golf Tournament May 25-28. The Lady Lancers scored 1329 behind former Division I schools Weber State (1260) and Troy State (1275). Defending National champs, William & Mary (1337) placed fourth.

Sophomore Pam Othen tied for 10th (324) among individuals in the tourney held at U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado.

For the second year in a row, Junior Robin Andrews was named AIAW Division II All-American. Her 13th place finish (327) and solid play throughout the season contributed to her selection.

Baseball Team — Region Champs

After compiling a 28-7-1 regular season mark, Longwood's baseball team received its first ever post season bid and went on to win the South Atlantic Region Tournament, May 13-15. The Lancers beat West Georgia 12-2, Valdosta State 19-17, lost to Valdosta State 6-4 and came back with a 3-1 win over Valdosta State in the title game.

The region champs then earned a trip to the NCAA Division II World Series in Riverside, California May 22-25. There Longwood lost to eventual national champ Riverside 6-1 and national runner-up Florida Southern 11-0.

Shortstop Dwayne Kingery was named All-American and South Atlantic Region Tournament Most Valuable Player. Other Lancers named to the All-Region team were: Doug Toombs, Bruce Morgan, John Sullivan, Sonny Bolton and Richard Vaught.

Riding

By BETH WILEY

The Longwood Riding Team is starting off the show season this year with a young but experienced team. Returning members are juniors: Bryan Farrar, Beth Wiley, Carol Turner and Amy Schaffner and sophomores: Mary Brockwell, Betsy Chalmers, and Amy Jo Poor.

There are several positions open on the team and Coach Mary Whitlock urges everyone interested to come to tryouts this week. Riders are needed at all levels from beginner up to open. Those trying out should meet in Bristow parking lot at 3:30 Tuesday, August 31, or Thursday, September 2.

Last year the riding team sent eight out of 10 members to regionals and two went on to nationals. We hope to have another successful year!

Nationally Ranked Baseball Team Gets New Recruits

Longwood ranks among national leaders in four categories in the 1982 NCAA Division II baseball statistics, which was released this July in The NCAA News. The Lancers, 31-10-1 and ranked fifth in Division II, rate high in team scoring, team batting and team fielding. In addition, left fielder Sonny Bolton ranks high in doubles.

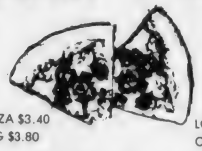
Coach Buddy Bolding's club ranked third in team scoring with an average of 9.2 runs per game. In team batting the Lancers rated 11th with a .338 team average and in fielding Longwood ranked 15th among Division II schools with a .954 fielding percentage.

Sophomore Sonny Bolton, a graduate of Clover Hill High School, ranks 13th among individuals in doubles. The Lancers leftfielder ripped 15 doubles in 40 games.

The NCAA Division II baseball statistics were compiled only once in 1982 after the end of regular season and postseason play.

Coach Buddy Bolding has announced that eight standout prep athletes, including two All-State performers, have cast their lot with the Lancers' NCAA Division II baseball program.

"This group of young men should prove to be the most outstanding freshman class of baseball talent in Longwood history," said Bolding. "I am extremely pleased with our recruiting."



Including in the group are two All-State performers, catcher Billy Catron of Roanoke-Northside and first baseman Chris Wilburn of Richmond-Clover Hill. First team All-Metro designated hitter Russ Abernathy of Richmond-Lee Davis is also among the group of signees. Of the eight recruits, six are from the Richmond area.

Catron batted .440 at Northside and played in the recent East-West High School All-Star game, as did Wilburn, who hit .471 with 20 RBI's. Wilburn also made first team All-Metro. Abernathy batted .382 for Lee Davis, but Bolding plans to make use of his pitching talents as well.

The other five signees include: Tommy Walsh, shortstop from Lee Davis High School who made second team All-Metro; Glenn Mitchell, pitcher-outfielder from Lee Davis who made honorable mention All-Metro and All-District; Todd Thompson, shortstop from Fork Union Military Academy (ex-Lee Davis) who hit .468 this past season; Stanley Jones from Clarksville-Bluestone, who hit .467 while making All-District and All-Regional and Scott Mills, a pitcher from Richmond-Hermitage, who received honorable mention on the All-Metro team.

With six regular starters and four pitchers returning from last year's 31-10-1 squad, Longwood could field its best team ever in 1983.

ROTC News

By CINDY CORELL

When Longwood College ended classes in May, many students went out to find summer jobs, summer loves and summer fun. A few Longwood students, however, found the summer more than ordinary, as they attended the various programs and camps of the United States Army. These were students in several levels of the Reserved Officers Training Corps (R.O.T.C.) here at Longwood.

Five students were chosen from Longwood's R.O.T.C. program to attend the Army's Airborne School. This is a program to instruct paratrooping held at Fort Benning, Ga. The students Mike Moon, Dave Dodd, Joe Bass, Derek Wolfe and Todd Hunt, were selected for this three week program on how well they did on their physical training tests and on demonstration of excellence in Military Science courses.

Each cadet in this program made five jumps from the airplane and successful completion of the course awarded them the Army Paratrooper Badge.

Seventeen students completed Advanced Camp, held in Fort Bragg, N.C., for six weeks. This camp is for R.O.T.C. cadets who have finished their first year of Advanced Military Science Program.

One of the purposes of this camp is to help the cadet make up his or her mind about that branch of the Army he or she is interested in going into. There are thirteen different branches, sub-grouped into three main headings: 1) Combat-actual battle work, such as Infantry and Tank crew. This is obviously the most important, but groups 2) Combat Support and 3) Combat Service Support are needed to provide background aid to those soldiers in battle. These groups include doctors, helicopter pilots, and even Accountants. The cadets learned more about weapons firing, hand navigation, and map and compass reading.

Probably the most exciting day in Advanced Camp was Recondo Day. This day was filled with confidence testing experiences such as rappelling off of a fifty foot tower, climbing out on a rope forty foot over a river and dropping into it, and completing a very thorough obstacle course. A favorite event, though, was encouragingly called the Slide for Life. It consisted of a seventy foot tower and a cable pulley attached across a river. The cadet climbed the tower, held onto the pulley, slid down the cable for about one hundred and fifty feet, and dropped into the river.

Advanced Camp is required training for those students in the advanced Military Science program. It provided an excellent opportunity for students to meet other cadets, as over 130 colleges from Maine to Puerto Rico were represented. There were over 4000 cadets there grouped into seventy-five platoons and no two Longwood students were put in the same platoon. The students representing Longwood were: Joe Bass, Dave Dodd, Chris Corbey, Tawnya Gallop, Sherry Gallop, Mike Moon, Nick Ciucci, Jeff Helmick, Todd Hunt, Donna Dixx, Darrell Jenkins, Reggie Glasby, Doug Wood, Dan Erricson, John Johnson, Ron Orr, and Kurt Slocum.

All of the students beyond sophomore year who are interested in the Military Science benefits went to Basic Camp this summer to catch them up on the Military Science courses they missed. This camp was held at Fort Knox, Ky., for six weeks. These cadets learned such things as Marksmanship and drilling. The students were: Ann Burruss, Beth Wiley, Heidi Wilkerson, Amy Shaffner, Steve Ewell, Richard Durham, Mike Roff, Carl Ellis, Buzz Hackett, Ross Conner and Valerie Turner. Of two cadets to receive scholarships at Basic Camp, Valerie Burner received a two year scholarship for outstanding performance, high grades and high evaluation.

Some other Longwood students received scholarships through National Competition: Tom Reynolds, Ann Burruss, Steve Ewell, and Amy Shaffner received two year scholarships. Eddie Fetzner and Phil Harover received three year scholarships.

Longwood's R.O.T.C. program is at its largest enrollment ever. There are more than two hundred students enrolled in Military Science classes now, compared to less than fifty when the program began. Some of the activities for this year include canoeing, rappelling off of Willis Mountain, and off of a forty foot tower at University of Richmond. There will also be weekend trips to Fort Pickett for commando training and reserve Green Beret training.

According to Capt. Tom Stanford, students have many misconceptions of the R.O.T.C. program. "These activities are optional for those just enrolled in a Military Science class. Students seem to think that if you enroll in a course you have to join the Army and cut your hair." On the contrary, these classes just offer an opportunity to learn, explore, build confidence, and decide on a career, all of two hours of credit. Should the student decide that the Army is his or her way of life, he or she can earn to up $100.00 a month in the Advanced program.

Probably the most significant event of Longwood's R.O.T.C. program, though, came in May. Capt's Tom Stanford and Roger McHenry and S.F.C. Roy Thomas all received the Army Achievement Commendation for the vast improvement and excellence of Military Science program at Longwood.

Movie Reviews

vehicle to show off his talents. He is very much a physical actor, which is required in this film. In a memorable scene where Drill Instructor Sgt. Foley is punishing Zack by trying to break him phusically, Zack is doing leg-lifts and the pain on Gere's face is real, Foley asks him to give up and leave the school and Gere's cries of "No!" are powerful and moving. Gere creates a moving portrait and the changes in Zack are real and complete.

David Keith also does a good job as Zack's best friend. He has had supporting roles in many films such as Brubaker and The Great Santini. In all of them he has done great acting. He portrays, in this movie, a naive Oklahoma boy who gets involved with a deceiving girl friend of Paula's. Hopefully Keith will have the chance to prove himself in a more major role in the future.

Louis Gusset, Jr., as Drill Instructor Sgt. Foley is marvelous and true in his portrayal. The "Drill Instructor" is an old movie character, often exaggerated and made fun of but Foley is a man with a job and also concern for the people he trains. Human responsibility breaks through the required toughness when Foley dives into a pool to save a trainee during an exercise. It is a moment of human caring.

The movie has also accomplished a real and noncritical picture of the military. The military means something to the characters. It means reaching a goal and achieving discipline in a mental and physical way.

There is a similarity between these three movies. Some would call it "corny stuff." It is the humor, compassion, and relationships of being a human or in "E.T.'s" case. being extra-terrestrial. The popularity of these films proves that the public still enjoys movies filled with feeling and cerebral effects, not just special effects.

Hall Council Funds Cause Misconceptions

By JOE JOHNSON

Confusion and chaos generally reign supreme during check-in and registration to the dorms. This year was no exception. However, outside of normal room condition reports, pick-up of keys and so on there was an item which seems to have caused exceptional confusion — a $5.00 dollar donation to the hall council fund.

The fund was established this year so that hall council, an elected body of students from each dorm would have a budget to work with. The budget would be used to finance dorm activities for the students who have paid the fee. The activities would range from guest speakers to canoe trips to pizza breaks during exams.

Kathy Wilcox, one of the advisors to hall council, explained the reasons for establishing the organization. "Students are in the residence hall more than they are in the classroom. A lot of growth can take place. The hall council will sponsor activities that can be recreational, social and educational."

During a meeting with the R.A.s held the Wednesday before classes, Kathy explained hall council and "informed (the R.A.s) that the hall council fund was strictly voluntary." Unfortunately, during check in and registration, many students seemed to have missed the point. Kevin Laser from Frazer dormitory said "They just told me I had to pay $5.00. I didn't know what it was for."

Renee Ginader, who wrote a letter to The Rotunda concerning the incident said "After I went through the check in process, they told me there was a $5.00 activities fee. I asked if I could pay later because I didn't have my purse with me. I was told I could pay later and I'd have to pick up my keys later. So I walked to the car and picked up my purse. I didn't know what was going on, since I was a transfer. I just wanted to pay and get the keys and go on."

The confusion in that incident was not isolated. According to Paige Tihlman, "Jim Scott (resident supervisor for Frazer dormitory) said I could not leave the office with my key until I paid my five dollars. I told him my wallet was in my car. He (Jim Scott) said to get it" Darrell Turney of Frazer also thought the money was for a key deposit. "In order to get our key, we had to pay five dollars." Gary Lunsford of Frazer said "They told me it was for a key deposit. They didn't say anything about dorm dues. I paid the five dollars."

A number of students, although informed that the five dollars was for dorm activities were given the impression that it was mandatory, not voluntary. Mike Atkins of Frazer said "When I walked in they said I had to pay a $5.00 dorm due...They told me it was mandatory, nobody told me it was voluntary." Vicky Hale also of Frazer said "When I checked in, Jim Scott told me that it was a mandatory fee. So I paid it. The next day I talked to a girl in Curry and she said it was optional."

Jim Scott denied the accusations saying "I never said it was mandatory and I never said it was for key deposit." Elise Moore, Resident Supervisor for North and Main Cunningham added "I think everybody in all the buildings said pretty much the same thing. We asked the people to pay a $5.00 hall fee and we told them it was for social, recreational, and educational programs for the dorms. Most people seemed really receptive. Nobody was told they had to pay. However, we did not say it was voluntary unless they asked. It's something to benefit the students. It's the way it was done at James Madison, and I believe U.V.A. and V.P.I. The students were not meant to think it was mandatory."

Gary Gillis, an R.A. for Frazer explained how someone could have been mislead "there were two of us at the desk. The students came in and signed a key receipt form. I picked it up, checked their names and got room condition reports. I would then have the key in my hand and say that we had a $5.00 dorm dues."

Amy Campell, another R.A. for Frazer said "When students came in they had to fill registration cards, residence hall cards and a damage deposit sheet. After they filled it out they walked into the office. Then I said to the students 'we are collecting a $5.00 dorm dues fee,' Nobody asked where the money was going. I never told them it was voluntary." When asked if other R.A.s also gave out keys while collecting the $5.00 she replied in the affirmative.

Because of the misconceptions, many students (largely concentrated in Frazer dormitory) have been asking about refunds. But Kathy Wilcox and Phyliss Mable, Vice-President of Student Affairs feel that a refund would not be in the student's best interest. Phyliss Mable said "My opinion is that the fee is in their behalf, if we start giving it back, it defeats the purpose." A no-refund policy has been established except for those students moving off campus or transferring to Stubbs dormitories (which does not have a Hall Council fee).

One student in Frazer, however, has received a refund on grounds other than leaving the residence hall. Johnel Brown explained what happened "Before the dorm meeting, about a week after school, I found out that the $5.00 dorm dues was strictly voluntary, and I went down to talk to Jim Scott about getting a refund. I said 'Jim, this is the way I feel...my tuition just went up, I'm rarely here on weekends, I didn't know the fee was strictly voluntary and I feel that I've paid dues enough...I want my $5.00 back'...And I got it."

Jim Scott said "The very day that she (Johnel) paid it, she requested the refund and she received it." When asked why she received the refund in light of the no-refund policy Jim Scott answered "I don't remember now, what it was...I honestly don't remember." He added that "no refunds are given out to students who just thought the fee was mandatory...as a rule of thumb, no-refunds unless it is an extreme situation."

Bookstore Gets New Owners

Along with the price of albums, steak dinners and grass, student books have escalated into the double digits. But Kathy Orth and Joyce Queensberry, new owners of the Longwood bookstore, remain undeterred. In fact, they seem pleased with their new found business, which, although hit with inflation, has a certain appeal for Longwood students.

"When you come in you see something good," said the owners. "Something that represents Longwood . . . clothes, stuffed animals (Longwood teddy and the campus rat), glass ware (Longwood shotglasses — the old emblem with the dove) or Longwood mugs. "People don't have to ask for it. They can walk right in and see it."

The outlay of the new Longwood bookstore is generally on that scheme — a high visibility for the little extras and in the back well, in the back are the books, arranged according to class number and teacher. The object is convenience and an easier traffic flow for the students.

When a student opens a textbook for $20.95 the general impression is one of outrageous profits for somebody. But apparently the somebody is not the bookstore owners. "You really can't make money off of textbooks . . . the publisher prices the book . . . we get a little discount. To break even, we've got to have a 25 per cent discount . . . we never get a 25 per cent discount."

Of course that's assuming that every textbook in the store is bought, which is rarely the case. The unsold books are returned to the publishers who can give from 0 per cent to 100 per cent credit. on the original price of the books. "Usually, when the publishers take them back, we lose about 5 percent to 10 percent on the original price."

"Giftware is how we make our money, selling textbooks is more

By MIKE LYNCH

After months of dismal prospects and gloomy predictions for the stock market, people have started saying nice things about the future in reaction to the record setting buying spree of recent days. The peak day was August 26th when 138 million shares were traded in the midst of a four day surge of at least 100 million shares a day. Never before this time has the NYSE experienced a day of over 100 million shares. Only the existence of modern computers, which have sped up the transaction process considerably, made such enormous figures possible.

The question, now, is since the market has definitely gone bull will it continue to behave bullishly or is this all a bunch of B.S.? Outside the terminals and telephones of Wall Street the real world would seem to indicate the latter. Auto sales reports are embarrasing and unemployment is still above 9 percent. But at least from somewhere outside the White House, optimism has appeared.

The Palestine Liberation Organization is finally out of Beirut, but several problems remain. The Israelis and the Syrians are still at each others teeth and warfare between the two, should Syria be dumb enough to attempt it, seems iminent. Neither side shows any signs of leaving, which complicates matters further. Also unwilling to leave their present places of residence are 5,000 P.L.O. troops in Tripoli, which is Syrian controlled.

Add to this the threat of civil war between the Lebanese themselves, the possibility of harm to 800 nice American Marines, the fact that all parties concerned, especially Israel and Syria, are getting quite surley about the whole thing and you get a nice mess that only the U.S. government would get involved in.

And what's worse is that due to everybody having something to say whenever possible, the real problam is hardly discussed; that is, what to do with the Palestinians. Realistically, that problem should take years and until it's solved, the Israelis will probably just keep crunching whoever is stupid enough to go up against them.

Warlord. Power-Hungry. Puppet. How would you like it if people said things like that about you. Well, that is the kind of harrasment Bashir Gemayal, 34, leader of the Christian Militias and Phalongist Party in Lebanon, has been getting in the aftermath of his election to the presidency of that nation. Having won the election by a Parliamentary vote of 57-0 (nobody else ran), he will take power in late September from former President Elias Sorhis.

The main worries among Gemayals opponents have to do with the violent tactics that he might carry over to the government from his days of running a reputedly vicious military organization. When Bashir says "heads will roll" is he just using a figure of speech? How he won the election seems to be an indication that he will not change. When not enough deputies were present for the vote, the needed amount were searched out and "convinced" that their attendance of the election would be beneficial.

His opponents are mostly Muslim and although they have taken no outright stand against him, they do believe that he is an Israeli puppet and their policy, presently, is to wait and see what he does.

If you thought your room mate was a mooch, consider the case of Mexico. In no more than ten years, due to carelessness by both the Mexicans and the banks that lent to them the country is now $80 billion in the hole with virtually no way to pay the debt or the interest off in the near future. Believing that they could cash in on the oil boom but ultimately entering the market at its lousiest, Mexico's debt doubled in the last three years as American and other banks kept shoveling it out.

Mexico is not the only country in this kind of situation, though. Argentina is in so much debt that it would take every bit of their export profits to repay. Other nations in similar situations include Brazil, Venezuela, South Korea, Poland, Chile and the Philippines. In total, over $845 billion has been lent out by banks to countries that will have a good deal of trouble repaying them at least. As a result, many banks both here and abroad could go under although a general banking collapse seems unlikely.

Another witness against Labor Secretary Raymond Donavan was murdered while driving his car through the Bronx. The victim, Nat Masseli, 31, was shot once in the head by an assasin who escaped in a following car. It was not he who was so dangerous to Donovan that he had to be shot, but rather his father, William (Billy the Butcher) Masselli who is serving time in jail for hijacking and is thus safely out of the mobs reach.

In a re-opened probe accusing Donovan of having made deals with organized crime when he was part owner of the Schiavone Construction Company, Masselli offered damaging evidence to Special Federal Prosecutor Leon Silverman, having to do with getting a $20,000 kickback on a $200,000 loan. Investigators think that the younger Mosselli was killed in order to assure silence from the elder Masselli, who is to appear before a grand jury soon, in accordance with the case.

Campus Capsules

From On Campus Report

The typical college student owns three pairs of athletic shoes, watches television infrequently, and relies on newspapers and magazines for information.

Those are some of the results of a national study of students at 25 campuses conducted by Belden Associates for CASS Student Advertising, a national ad representative for college newspapers. The purpose of the scientifically conducted study was to evaluate the college market, the student newspaper audience and the buying habits of college students. The majority (77 per cent) of those surveyed fell into the traditional college age group, 18-24.

Eighty-three percent said they read a college newspaper, while 64 percent read a daily city paper. Time captured 41 percent of the survey audience, while Newsweek claimed 30 percent in readership. Favorite monthly magazines included Playboy (24 percent), Cosmopolitan (23 percent) Glamour (20 percent) and Rolling Stone (19 percent). Thirty-six percent said they hadn't watched any television the previous day, while 38 percent had viewed one to three hours of television. Radio was a popular activity — only 11 percent hadn't listened to any radio the previous day — but 78 percent said radio-listening serves as background activity.

College students may be in a hurry, but most take time to snip coupons. Seventy-four percent had purchased an item with a coupon in the past year, and 36 percent had mailed in rebate offers. Aside from junk food and alcoholic beverages, students listed milk, cheese, orange juice, soft drinks, canned soups, breakfast cereals, peanut butter and yogurt as prime purchases.

An amazing 98 percent of students surveyed own athletic shoes, and the average number of pairs owned was three. Moving up on the transportation scale, 59 percent own a car, and 13 percent plan to buy a car within the next year. Photography is a popular hobby: Forty-nine percent are serious enough about it to own 35mm cameras. Seventy percent of students own stereos and 98 percent attend movies.

For almost half of those surveyed, the money used to make these purchases came from their own pockets. Forty-seven percent said their discretionary funds came from their own job or other income, and not from parents. Almost 90 percent had checking accounts, 64 percent had savings accounts and 19 percent had a Visa credit card.

(Further information about the report is available from CASS Student Advertising 1633 Central St., Evanston, IL 60201. Phone: (312) 475-8800).

Although not at the pace that he had predicted, Oaklands Rickey Henderson broke Lou Broch's seemingly impossible stolen base record with his 119th in Milwaukee. Consequently, he has also broken Ty Cobb's 67 year-old record of getting caught 38 times.

Editor's Turn

"Another Person"

I met another person this summer. Not the only other person I met, but one of them. He looked amazingly like one of the Doors; almost like Jim Morrison. He had long hair — shoulder length — which he informed me had just recently been cut. His favorite attire was a faded blue T-shirt, faded Levis, cowboy boots and sun glasses — always sun glasses.

The day I talked to him he was wearing that outfit, cleaning his Harley-Davidson Sportster. Apparently the in colors were red and black. "All my friends have red and black bikes this summer, blue used to be in...but it got boring."

His friends look like him too. Some wear T-shirts that say something — Master-Slave — I'm his — I'm hers, etc. The only other similarity, besides superficial resemblence, is that they all worked in a machine shop.

"The MX missile systems is big business...We can take near worthless scraps of metal and when they come out of our plant, they're worth up to $25,000 apiece."

He turned on the hose to rinse his bike. "Don't you ever worry about the arms build-up?" "I guess so...I don't know. I used to be really into the peace movement thing...Vietnam, all that, I was out there with the crowds, hooting and really raising hell about it."

"Doesn't it bother you that what you're doing could end in holocaust?"

"No, not really. Look, they'll never use what I'm making, it's just a show of muscle...sure it's a little like playing with the dragon's tail, but it's got to be done, somebodies going to do it if I don't"

"And the pay?"

"The pay is great."

Your Turn

It has always been my opinion that one of the jobs of the head resident and other members of the residence hall staff is to establish an atmosphere of honesty and trust and cooperation between themselves and the members of the residence hall. Trust is also, as I understand it, an integral part of Longwood's Honor Code. Therefore, when I am lied to by a member of the residence hall staff, it does cast a cynical light on his system of trust we here at Longwood are supposed to be living under.

Of what incident am I speaking?

As a resident of Frazer Hall, when I was checking in, I was informed that I was to pay a $5.00 activity fee. I was also informed that this fee was mandatory and if I did not pay it I would not be given my room key.

Since that day I have been informed that the fee was not mandatory but optional and I can only assume that the threat about the keys was a form of blackmail that was thought effective by the Frazer residence hall staff, which, indeed it was.Now I agree that five dollars is not a lot of money but the money is not the issue here. The issue is that I was lied to and that I was denied my freedom of choice in this case. This bothers me since being over 18 years of age I believe I have the mental capacity to make a decision of this kind.

I also think that being over 18 I should have the right to decide what to do with my own money. Thirdly I am an honest person and I do not think it is too much to expect honesty in my dealings with others.

I know for a fact that this letter expresses not only my opinion but the opinion of numerous others in Frazer Hall.

So get your act together Frazer

Elections Committee

To The Class of '86:

On Monday, September 13, elections will be held for your class officers. Voting is to take place from 11:00-4:30 in the new smoker.

This is the time when you can not only vote, but be a part of that voting. Your class will need capable and responsible leaders if you want to see anything accomplished this year. Think about running for an office. Petitions can be picked up in front of the information office. They must be completed and returned by 12:00 noon on Friday, Sept. 10, to Lisa Swackhammer, Box 834, or to South Cunningham main desk.

Four officers will be elected — a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer. Attend your class meeting this week to find out more about these duties and about future activities your class can be involved in.

Face Off

Coppola And Capital Punishment

So Coppola is dead, a martyr and a murderer — does it matter which? He made the books by being executed in the state of Virginia. And the living have some questions to answer. Was it worth his life? Does the state, any state have such a right?

Practically and ideally capital punishment is a mistake. Practically speaking, capital punishment is supposed to act as a deterrent, but the facts in other states prove different.

In the Gregg vs. Georgia decision (July, 1976) the United States Supreme Court opened the door to the death chambers which furman vs. Georgia (June 1972) had closed. As it affirmed the constitutionality of some executions, the high court conceded also that there was no conclusive evidence that the use of capital punishment caused any net reductions in murder.

Since 1924, Georgia has legally executed more people than any other state. Year after year it has also had the most murders. 17.4 per its 100,000 population, a percentage persistently mounting. When five years of litigation ended in 1972, with the threat of the death penalty being definitely removed, many people predicted that Georgia's unmatched rate of criminal homicides would rise faster.

It didn't. In fact, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation's uniform crime reports, from 1973 to 1977 the rate dropped from 17.4 per 100,000 to 11.7 per 100,000 or more than 30 percent.

In Florida when capital punishment was banned, the same type of results were evident. From 1973 to 1977 there was a one-third (approximately 33 percent) drop in the homicidal rate.

Capital punishment does not and never will act as a deterrent, in fact, it seems to act as a spark to the homicidal rate. The answer to this irony may be found in Socrate's analogy of the state as parent. If we, as willing members of the state condone execution, we are more or less like parents, setting an example for children — one can kill. Before, without the death penalty there is a mental barrier to murder — it simply isn't done. Period. No questions asked. With capital punishment we proclaim "Murder is wrong, except...when we do it."

Frank Coppola has become a household word and through oblique reports and melodramatic appeals to our sense of humanity, a sort of hero or martyr has emerged. There have been pictures of the electric chair and detailed explanations of how an execution is carried out. There have even been accounts of Coppola's donation of his eyes to science because he held such compassion for mankind. Might I remind you that this man is a convicted murderer?

Does anybody remember the name Muriel Hatchell? (Who?!!) Just for the record, she was one of those people Coppola cared about so selflessly. It was her home that Coppola and three Cohorts broke into. She was the woman who Coppola tied up and whose head was smashed on the floor. She was the woman whose five teeth were found where they'd been knocked out of her mouth. Muriel Hatchell was the woman who went into convulsions and drowned in her own vomit.

Somehow identities have been shifted and because of psychologically schemed coverage, people began to sympathize with the criminal, and oddly enough he is staged as the victim.

Once again capital punishment is the issue and Virginia is divided. Opponents of capital punishment insist that the proponents are barbaric and lack concern for human life.Au contraire. It is appropriate to point out that it is the lives of the victims and the would-be victims that the proponents of capital punishment are concerned with. Everyone is united in the cause to find the infallible deterrent to crime. Opponents of capital punishment insist that prison is the answer. Prison-term sentencing has become a farce in itself, since life in prison 50 years and 25 means 10, maybe less if a criminal opts to bargain with justice. And even if prisoners were required to serve the entire term as sentenced, it is important to consider the 72 percent recidivism rate. Seventy-two percent — that is 72 percent of incarcerated criminals released to the prison for similar or even worse violations. And as far as convicted criminals guilty of brutal, vile murders, what then do the opponents suggest? Life in prison? Or is that 25 years? And how does 25 years — that's 9125 weeks — even remotely justify the massacre of another innocent human life. Even the quick death of the electric chair can never be punishment enough for the merciless butcherings that take place.

Then there's famous but quite worn cliche "two wrongs don't make a right." I suppose then that releasing a criminal with

Welcome, Lancer Edition

By Cindy Corell

Following the footsteps and beyond of such celebrated college show choirs as The New Virginians and The Madisonians, Longwood's own Lancer Edition is picking up where it left off in May and moving still forward.

The Music Department's youngest performance company finally came to be last semester into an area of music still being pioneered across America. Though primarily titled a show choir, Lancer Edition is a combination of show choir and vocal jazz ensemble. A show choir performs contemporary music in a Broadway chorus line setting; a vocal jazz ensemble performs much more difficult music with simpler choreography. Lancer Edition performs popular music such as a Fame medley and "Jubilation", with eye-catching choreography and costume plus more creative vocal jazz numbers, such as those by Phil Mattson and Kirby Shaw, which require more talent and discipline from the members than would the format of an ordinary show choir.

Unlike the other Longwood choirs, Lancer Edition will be doing a complete variety of pop, blues, gospel and jazz styles of music plus choreography. Though at this time in the semester they are developing a routine which includes all of the above styles of music plus dance, they are neither a group of singers who dance, nor are they a dance company who just happen to sing. Instead they are a group of performers who do both arts justice.

Basically the way the choir works, according to director Lee Egbert, is that the students learn to sing the music, and then student choreographers take over to finish the show. Their rehearsals are at regular classtimes, late Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. They will also be working with several experienced choreographers from the Virginia Beach area to insure variety in dancing styles.

Their performances this semester include an Oktoberfest concert and they are now awaiting confirmation of an invitation to play at the State Convention of the Virginia Music Educators Association (VMEA) this November in Richmond. Brand new show choirs from Old Dominion University and Roanoke College will also be performing there.

For this performance, Lancer Edition will be backed by the Longwood Jazz Ensemble directed by Mr. Allen Butler. The choir hopes to gradually grow into building their own instrumental combo with the help of Mr. Butler. Their accompaniment now consists of pianist, guitarist, two percussionists, and they are looking for competent bass players to audition. They also need more mens' voices to audition.

The group, in auditions, take all majors and though some dance and a little sightreading is required of all singer-dancers, singing is the primary ability tested. The roster of the 1982 fall semester Lancer Edition is as follows: Soprano. Sabra Seneff, Lisa Bowers, Louise Rizzo, Sonja Held and Joanne Mosca; Alto; Brenda Davis, Amy Thomas, Kathy Hartung, and Kim Kenworthy; Tenor: John Scott, Jeff Thomas, Mike Pentall, and Mike Berry; and bass: Gordon Parr, Horace Scruggs, and Mike Foster. Jeanne Drewer is pianist, David Pool, guitarist, and percussionists are Arthur Johnson and Ricky Allen.

Hypnotize Me, Please

By GWEN STEPHENSON

"Hypnotize me, please."

"God, what a wierd business !" That's what Tom Deluca had to say about his job; comedian and hypnotist on the United States college circuit.

Mr. Deluca was here at Longwood last Wednesday night. He performed for 2½ hours in Wygal Avditorium to a full house.

And the audience participation was unusual. You see Tom hypnotized eleven of our own student body. He called the process somnambulism, and claimed that one hour under his spell would produce an effect similar to eight hours of untroubled sleep. He made the students believe they were extremely hot, and then very cold. He took them out on the Caribbean; fishing. Some of the girls in the group squealed at having to bait a hook. They cast their lines; and the ones in the deepest trances had to be physically restrained from falling out of their chairs. Each person caught a huge fish, and reeled it in as fast as they could.

Mr. Deluca then passed around an imaginary joint, and told the students they could partake if they wished. Approximately nine of the eleven did so, and promptly became "high" on some of the finest Columbian ever. Tom suggested that each person had an incredible case of the munchies and gave them thirty seconds to eat as much as they could of their favorite food (which was sitting on the floor in front of them, of course).

The master of hypnosis concluded his show by regressing each of his subjects to the age of five. Two of the girls proceeded to draw flowers and houses on the blackboard (very childlike flowers and houses), and one of the male subjects drew an incredible picture of a nuclear holocaust (complete with a needle-nosed bomber). He asked each "child" what they wanted to be when they grew up, and got various familiar and uncommon answers, such as stewardess, doctor, and archeologist!

Before Deluca let the subjects wake up and return to their seats he put various hypnotic suggestions into their heads. One poor male kept insisting that his name really was Mary Jane. The rest of the audience enjoyed this thoroughly. One girl could not remember her name at all, and three others could speak normally until they were asked their names — then their tongues seemed stuck to the roofs of their mouths. Mr. Deluca ended spectacularly by having four of his subjects turn into famous exotic dancers at the mention of the word, "Chicago".

In addition to his hypnotic exhibition, Tom Deluca also did a fantastic and funny comic parody on ESP. His particular brand was called BSP (Figure that one out yourselves). He included a slide show satire on how he became influenced by extraterestrials in his youth, and thus became an expert in BSP. Tom promised his audience that if they linked arms he could make 60-70 percent of them think the same thought at the same time.

"One; close your eyes. Two; everyone think of somethins you like to do a lot!" Need I say more?

Talking to Tom after the show was over, I could tell he was exhausted but happy. The students at Longwood had received him very well, but he told me that did not happen at every school. His job has definite highs and lows.

I discovered that Tom has a Masters degree in psychology, and started his work in hypnosis working with overweight people and chain smokers. He still teaches an occasional seminar on self-hypnosis. He also writes comedy material for the artists of the Second City Workshop in Chicago.

Tom Deluca said he is comparably one of the best hypnotists in the business. I think the Longwood students who saw him would agree.

Archeology Field School Begins New Excavations

By GEREE LYELL

"It's near disbelieve that Longwood College students could be lured into a situation where they would be performing the most ardous and exhausting forms of physical labor, while at the same time being expected to exercise their intellectual abilities, and all of this in one hundred degree, temperatures with hordes of mosquitoes buzzing around their ears" . . . said Dr. James William Jordan, director of the Longwood Summer Field School. But the students came for over 10 weeks forming their own "miniature city."

Now in its fourth year of existence, the Longwood Summer Field School in Archeology has grown from a group of 13 students who worked five weeks during the summer of 1980 at an archeological site located in the Cumberland State Forest to a crew of 125 who worked during this summer at a site located near the Longwood campus. Thirty-three of the 125-member crew were Longwood students; 48 were Governor's School students, high school juniors selected for their outstanding academic record in Virginia schools; and 44 were participants in the Elderhostel Program, persons ranging in age from 65 years to 86 years who were attending summer school at Longwood.

In the field both sessions of summer school, Dr. Jordan began excavation at the Smith-Taylor Mound site. The site, located approximately 1½ miles from the Longwood campus on the Appomattox River, is believed to have been an agricultural village used by Indians living in this area 1000 years ago, and has been registered with the Virginia Research Center for Archaeology at Williamsburg as Site Number 44PE26. The existence of the mound site was first brought to Dr. Jordan's attention by Robert E. Taylor, a Farmville businessman and close friend of the landowner, Robert A. Smith. Mr. Smith entered into an agreement with Longwood College and Dr. Jordan, giving the Field School permission to begin excavation of the mound. He developed a keen intereste in the preparations for the "dig" and as time drew near for the excavation to begin, became more enthusiastic. An ironic and tragic aspect of this part of the story is that Mr. Smith died June 3, just two days after work at his archeological site began.

During their work this summer at the Smith-Taylor Mound Site, participants found nine types of projectile points, ranging in age from 8000 years before the present to as recently as 300 years ago. The most valuable find was a Dalton projectile point, 8000 years old, and the only one found in this area — Piedmont archeological region of Virginia. In addition, many other stone blades and tools were found along with 600 sherds (pieces) of pottery. The Archeology Field School was assisted this summer by members of Longwood College's first Summer Field School in Biology, directed by Dr. David A. Breil. The Biology Field

Notes
Zepped

By CHRIS YOUNG

On September 25, 1980, drummer John "Bonzo" Bonham was found dead at guitarist Jimmy Page's home after an all night drinking spree.

Shortly afterwards, the remaining members of the band sent a telegram to the press. It stated:

"We wish it to be known that the loss of our dear friend and the deep respect we have for his family, together with the sense of undivided harmony felt by ourselves and our manager, have led us to decide that we could not continue as we were." (Parade Magazine)

With this news, the phenomenon known as Led Zeppelin was now a memory.

Since the death of Bonham, everyone has been keeping an eye on the boys hoping that they might regroup. Rumor had it that Zepp members Page and singer Robert Plant were to join with X-Yes members Alan White and Chris Squire to form XYZ. (X-Yes and Zepplin members, I guess) That rumor never materialized into anything substantial.

Recently however. there has been some stirring in Zeppeland. Jimmy Page has written and produced the sound track for Death Wish II. And more notably, vocalist Robert Plant has just released a solo album called Pictures at Eleven on the Swan Song label.

By now most of you have probably heard several cuts from this album. For those of you who haven't Plant is stunning as usual. New guitarist Robbie Blunt is good, but he's no Jimmy Page. The biggest difference you'll notice (or should notice) is the drumming. This album has two great drummers, Phil Collins (Genesis) and Cozey Powell (Rainbow, Michael Schenker Band), but only the cuts with Powell have that vintage Bonham "thump." Pictures is still a must for any Zeppemaniac.

Except for a recent live appearance by Page and Plant with, believe it or not, Foreigner, it doesn't look like the Zepp boys have been doing anything to revive Led Zeppelin. And it doesn't look like they want to either.

As Jimmy Page said in a recent interview "It would be silly to even think about going on with Zeppelin; It would have been an insult to John."

Pianist Recital

Pianist Claudia Stevens will be featured in a Visiting Artist Recital at Longwood College on Sunday, September 12, at 4 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

The public is cordially invited to attend the recital at no charge.

Stevens, who currently teaches piano at the College of William and Mary, has achieved national acclaim for her performance of 20th century American music and her interpretations of Schumann. Her recent concert in Washington, D.C., honoring Aaron Coplans, was attended by Copland and Broadcast on National Public Radio.

She has given premiere performances of works by such leading American composers as Samuel Adler, David Diamond, Vivian Fine, Andrew Imbrie, and Hugo Weisgall. A number of these works were written for her.

Recent recital appearances have included the National Gallery in Washington, Jordan Hall in Boston, and colleges and universities throughout the country. In 1983, she will present a concert honoring Elliott Carter in his 75th year, for which she has received a grant from the Virginia Arts Commission.

A summa cum laude graduate of Vassar College, Stevens received the M.A. from the University of California at Berkeley and the Doctor of Music from Boston University. Booters Open With Longwood Invitational

Longwood opens its 1982 soccer season Saturday (Sept. 11) when it hosts Divison I Richmond, Virginia Commonwealth and North Carolina-Charlotte in the third Longwood Invitational Tournament. The tournament will mark the beginning of what Lancer Coach Rich Posipanko hopes will be Longwood's finest season ever.

Defending Longwood Invitational champ VCU faces UNCC Saturday at 12:00 in the tournament opener while the Lancers take on Richmond at 2:30 in first round action at First Avenue Field. Sunday at 11:00 the losers will play a consolation contest while the winners meet for the title at 1:30.

Rams Favored

VCU defeated Longwood in last year's tourney finale 2-0 and the Rams are the odds-on favorite to take this year's title. After a 12-5-3 mark last season, VCU has nine starters back including forwards Tedmore Henry (14 goals, 5 assists) and Ben Kim (14 goals, 3 assists).

"VCU has to be the favorite," said Longwood coach Rich Posipanko. "They've got a lot of people back and they're the defending champs. We feel like our chances are pretty good, too. We have played well in the past against Richmond and VCU."

The UNCC 49ers were 6-12-0 last season, but return eight starters. North Carolina will be making its first appearance in the Longwood Invitational. Richmond, 2-15 last season, fell 5-4 to Longwood in last year's Invitational. The Spiders were a young team last season and figure to be improved in '82.

Posipanko has great expectations for his 1982 edition. With several impressive showings in preseason scrimmages, the Lancers have convinced their coach that this could be "the year."

Longwood will have more talent and experience than any squad in history, but still might have difficult time matching last year's 11-4-3 record because of a beefed-up scheudle. Among the 1982 opponents are five Divison I teams and eight foes which were ranked in their region last year.

Among the new faces on the Lancer schedule are College Division State Champ Radford and Division I State Runner-up Williams & Mary. Longwood will also face Virginia Tech, Randolph-Macon, Maryland Baltimore County and Mt. St. Mary's.

Nine starters return from the team which averaged 3.4 goals per game in 1981. The forward line should be strong again with starters Gus Leal and Tim Brennan back in action. Leal, All-South in 1981, scored 22 goals and has 40 in his career. Brennan scored eight goals last season. Freshman Brian Allmendinger or sophomore Chris Wilkerson will also start at forward.

At midfield, veterans Steve Kern and Bill Foster will be joined by either freshman Clay Mullican or soph Rich Schmidgall.Foster, a long range kicker, had nine goals last season.

Starting at back will be veterans Darryl Case, Joe Parker and Scott Thoden along with freshman Dan Bubnis. Parker is co-captain of the team along with Foster while Case was All-South and second team Division II All-American last season.

In goal, freshman Al Del Monte appears to have the edge on talented veterans Brian Sprinkle and D. J. Walters.

Longwood will be out to capture one of three South Regional tourney berths available in the NCAA Division II tournament. Posipanko feels his team is capable of making the playoffs.

Todd Captures Two Tennis Titles

Longwood senior John Todd, a member of the men's tennis team the past two years, was the lone double winner in the second Longwood-Southside Tennis Classic held at Longwood Thursday through Sunday. None of the defending champions who won last September were able to repeat.

Todd took a hard-fought, three set win over Jerry Cole to win the men's singles title Sunday afternoon 3-6, 6-3, 7-5 and then teamed with Longwood doubles partner Bryan Kersey to win the men's doubles over Cole and Dozer Watkins 6-4, 7-5. Todd won doubles last year with a different partner.

In winning the doubles Todd and Kersey battled back in the second set after being down 5-2. They won five straight games to take the match.

In women's doubles Fran Arehart and Nan O'Connor, both of Farmville, pulled off something of a surprise by topping the defending champs Angie Coppedge and Joan Tipton 6-3, 6-2. Tipton and Coppedge had been seeded number one.

Mrs. Tipton, however, added another title when she teamed with Dean Vassar to defeat Longwood students Carl Schwab and Tammy Schmelter 6-3, 1-6, 6-3 in the mixed doubles finals.

In junior vet men's (35 and over) singles Jerry Yospin topped Howard Estes 6-2, 6-1 to take the crown.

Tournament Director Carrol Bruce noted that over 60 participants took part in the tournament as compared to 40 last year.

Field Hockey

By SHERYL TAYLOR

The 1982 Longwood Field Hockey Team will be starting its season on September 15, against William and Mary. This year's team consists of the largest group of returning seniors ever (9): Mindy Allman, Betty Jo Casey, Lorrie Garber, Mary Holup, Janet Long, Cherie Stevens, Chris Mayer, Mary Milne, and Jeannie Wakelyn. Other veterans include three juniors: Terry Chumley, Jaudon Conkwright, and Rala Heinen; and six sophomores: Shirley Campbell, Pamela Ellsworth, Mary Garrison, Ann Holland, Lisa Seivold, and Colleen Stiles.

According to Coach Bette Harris, "This is the strongest group of freshmen to come during my four years of coaching at Longwood."

Freshmen players are: Sharon Bruce, Debbie Dameron, Mary Dey, Karen Garrett, Susan Groff, Lorraine Hall, Karen Kewer, Tamara Marshall, Janet Pauley and Lesley Rapoza.

The Lady Lancers have dropped from Division I to Division II but their schedule will still primarily consist of Division I schools. In their opening game the hockey team will be facing the tough Division I William & Mary Indians. The Lancers lost to the Indians in regular season play last year but redeemed themselves in the state tournament by beating William & Mary. It was the first Longwood win against William and Mary in seven years.

Longwood's field hockey team has a lot of experience and leadership this year and looks forward to a very successful season.

Lady Golfers Host Tournament

Longwood opens its 1982 fall women's golf season Friday (Sept. 10), hosting the 6th annual Longwood Invitational Tournament, an event which annually attracts the top field of collegiate women golfers of any tournament in Virginia.

Three-time defending champ Marshall will join with Longwood, James Madison, William & Mary, Meredith and North Carolina-Wilmington for the three-day, 54-hole tournament at Longwood Golf Course, a 6,042 yard layout which plays to a par 73.

While Marshall has won the tournament the past three years, the defending champs will be missing top golfer Tammie Green, runner-up the last 2 years to medalist Mary Wilkinson of William & Mary. Both Green and Wilkinson have graduated.

Marshall should be considered the favorite once again, according to Longwood coach Barbara Smith, but any of the tournament competitors appears capable of challenging for the title.

Leading the way for Longwood for the 4th year in a row will be senior Robin Andrews. A two-time AIAW Division II All-American, Andrews helped Longwood finish second and third in the nation in Division II the past two years. Over the summer she finished as runner-up behind Jane Mack of Richmond in the Virginia State Amateur Tournament.

Also back from last season are junior Sue Morgan and sophomores Donna Turner and Lanie Gerken. Morgan made the top four most of last season while Gerken performed well early last fall before being knocked out by an injury. She appears healthy after sitting out spring semester.

Coach Smith, who has led Longwood to six state titles over the past 12 years, is counting on freshman Holli Hudson to fill one of the top four positions. Hudson had a standout high school career at Brandon High, which has one of the top prep golf programs in Florida.

Other newcomers to the team include: freshmen Mary Semones and Margaret Melone and sophomore Carol Rhoades.

Concerning Longwood's prospects for the coming season, Dr. Smith pointed to a tough schedule which includes mostly Division I opponents.

"We're facing a Division I schedule," she said. "There just aren't many Division II teams nearby for us to play."

Now in NCAA Division II, Longwood will not have a national Division II Tournament to shoot for as was the case in AIAW. The NCAA plans to hold a Division I Tournament only in women's golf with several spots open to individual qualifiers in Divisions II and III.

"I'm enjoying working with the team," said the coach. "They are willing to learn and want to improve. This seems to be a very coachable group and I feel we'll improve as the season progresses."

Tennis Coach Named

Beatrice White, special education teacher and boys' tennis coach at Prince Edward County High School, will be interim coach of Longwood College's women's tennis team for the fall season, Longwood Athletic Director Carolyn Hodges announced today.

A native of Farmville and a graduate of Prince Edward County High School, White takes over the coaching duties from Carrol Bruce who is taking a one semester leave of absence. Bruce will resume her duties as tennis coach for the spring, 1983 season.

BEATRICE WHITE

Since coming to Prince Edward High in 1980, White has led her teams to a pair of outstanding seasons. The Eagles were runner-ups in the Regional Championships last year and in 1981 one of her netters won the State Class A singles crown.

White is a graduate of Virginia State University where she received a B.S. in Special Education. While at Virginia State, she played number one on the women's tennis team two years. She participated in basketball and softball at Prince Edward. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. White, Sr. of Farmville.

"We're fortunate to have someone of Ms. White's ability to coach our women's tennis team during the fall season," said Hodges. "She is certainly well-qualified for the position."

Ernest Neal New Assistant Basketball Coach

Ernest L. Neal, assistant basketball coach at Gaithersburg (MD) High School and a former assistant at Austin-Peary State University, has been hired as assistant men's basketball coach and health education instructor at Longwood College, Athletic Director Carolyn Hodges announced today.

Neal, 31, is a graduate of Maryland Eastern Shore and Indiana University. He received his B.S. in Physical Education from Eastern Shore in 1974 and his M.A. from Indiana in 1976 with a double major in Health and Safety Education and Physical Education with a coaching option.

A member of the MES basketball team four years, he served as captain two years and played on three championship teams. He tried out with the Washington Bullets as a free agent in 1974.

Assistant Coach at Gaithersburg the past three years, Neal was assistant at Austin-Peay 1977-79 and was a member of the Partners of the American Exchange Program with South America in 1979. He helped put on the first ever basketball clinic by American coaches in Manaus, Amazonas Brazill.

"We're very pleased to have a young man with Ernest's background and experience on our staff at Longwood," said head coach Cal Luther. "With his knowledge and experience in this area of the country he should really enhance our program. He comes to us very highly recommended."

Riding

By BETH WILEY

The riding team had a fairly large number of interested riders at tryouts last week. Twelve people competed for one of the four positions available on the team. Longwood can expect to see some talented new riders at up-coming shows based on the performance of these 12 people. Coach Whitlock has not made a final decision and is extending tryouts another day to do so. Good luck to you all.

Longwood will co-host the first show at Mary Washington September 26.

Sponsored by the Department of Art and Student Union, "Showcase Gallery" opened its first exhibit of the year with Jennifer Hughlett's display which will run until September 10. Questions concerning "Showcase Gallery" should be directed to Michael Lewandowski, Student Director of the Gallery, 1982-83.

Archeology

School carried out a dating process called dendrochronology, the dating of wood in an archeological site by the analysis of the annual growth rings.

Commenting on this summer's excavation, Dr. Jordan said "While the amount of work accomplished by the crew was staggering, their efforts during these first ten weeks were dwarfed by the tremendous size of the site. The site covers an area of 100,800 square feet and this first summer 4,125 feet were excavated, or about 4 percent of the site. At that rate, it would take 25 more summer sessions to complete excavation of the mound!" Dr. Jordan has secured permission from Mrs. Robert A. Smith, the property owner, to continue work on the mound next summer. "I anticipate a rather good summer for the Field School during 1983," Jordan said.

In addition to the Smith-Taylor Mound Site, other archeological excavations were carried out this summer. Bob Flippen, a George Washington University student and Dr. Jordan's assistant this summer, conducted two excavations of his own as part of his archeological internship. Using a number of the Field School students, Flippen excavated what is believed to be a 200-year-old ice house on the Hampden-Sydney College campus and an isolated grave located at the Rose Bower Vineyards in Hampden-Sydney, Virginia. Dr. Jordan is of the opinion that sites in this area are numerous and stated that "we have literally and figuratively just scratched the surface!"

During both sessions of the Field School, a field trip to Clarksville to view collections of artifacts was made. These trips were arranged by Mr. and Mrs. Jesse R. Overstreet, Jr., and coordinated with Dr. Jordan. Mrs. Overstreet is a member of the Board of Visitors of Longwood College.

Among the 211 visitors at the Smith-Taylor Mound was the entire Board of Visitors of Longwood and Robert E. Taylor, who was a frequent visitor. On one particular day there were 71 people working on the mound. Dr. Jordan was heard to remark "I believe this is the largest group of people to have been on this mound since 1000 years ago when prehistoric Indians were here."

Student Financial Aides

By EDWARD M. ELMENDORF
Deputy Assistant Secretary for Student Financial Assistance

Newspaper, radio, and television reports of substantial cuts in Federal financial aid to college students have triggered a barrage of phone calls to the U. S. Department of Education in Washington, D. C.

Callers, both students and parents, are often confused by misleading or incomplete information. Many have expressed fear that the government has let them down; that college is no longer affordable.

It is true that student financial assistance programs have undergone considerable change in the past two years. There have been some reductions. Most of the changes, however, reflect an effort to return the aid programs to their original purpose, which was to help students cover the cost of a college education — not to carry the whole burden. A successful return to original intent will help ensure the survival of these aid programs for future students.

Federal financial assistance is divided into three categories. "Grants" are awards of money that do not have to be paid back. "Loans" are borrowed money which a student must repay with interest. "Work-Study" provides the chance to work and earn money to offset college costs while attending classes.

The Pell Grant Program is one of the best known of the Federal student aid programs. Formerly called the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant, Pell is often the first source of aid in a package which may be composed of other Federal and non-Federal sources. In the 1982-83 school year, 2.55 million students hare $2,279,040,000 in Pell Grants.

The U. S. Department of Education uses a standard formula to determine who qualifies for Pell Grants. Students should contact the college financial aid administrator to apply on the free "Application for Federal Student Aid." This is the form used for all Federal student aid programs. The Department guarantees that each participating school will receive the money it needs to pay Pell Grants to eligible students.

The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant provides another mechanism for making awards to students. SEOG is different from the Pell Grant in that it is managed by the financial aid administrator of each participating college. Each school receives a set amount of money from the Department and when that money is gone, there are no more SEOG funds for the year.

In 1982-83 the Department of Education will provide 440,000 students with $278,400,000 in Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants. Students will get up to $2,000 a year under this program.

Grant programs are designed to help the most needy students get a college education. The Pell Grant, in particular, is targeted to help those students whose families earn less than $12,000 per year. Grant aid is not meant to cover all college costs but is expected to be combined with a reasonable contribution from the student's family and individual self help generally in the form of loans, private scholarships, and work.

Another type of student financial assistance is the College Work-Study Program. Designed to provide on-or off-campus jobs for undergraduate and graduate students who need financial assistance, Work-Study is usually managed by the college financial aid administrator. Some 950,000 students will receive $528 million under this program in 1982-83.

A great deal of publicity has been generated lately on Federal student loans, particularly the National Direct Student Loan Program. Although all colleges do not participate in the NDSL program, 3,340 of them do. This program makes available low interest (5 percent loans that students must begin repaying six months after completing school (either by graduating, leaving, or dropping below half-time status). Up to 10 years is allowed to repay the loan. Application is made to a school's financial aid administrator who manages the loan fund. The fund is a revolving account, designed to allow a school to continually make new loans as existing loans are reapid. About 800,000 students will receive NDSLs in 1982-83; 10,000 more than in 1981-82.

Recently, Secretary of Education T. H. Bell signed a regulation which provides incentives for an institution to reduce the default rate of its NDSL program fund. A college which has a default rate over 25 per cent is asked to turn responsibility for collecting the debt over to the Federal government. If an institution is not prepared to do this, and the default rate remains 25 per cent or more, the Federal government will cut off NDSL funding.

The Guaranteed Student Loan

Freshmen learn to live tripled in Cox.

Rub-A-Dub-Dub

Steve Heinzman had one word for the situation — "sucks".That word seems to sum up what quite a few Longwood students feel about the three to a room, or tripling policy which is currently being forced on over 100 freshmen residing in the dormitories.

Although this is not the first time tripling has occurred at Longwood, it is the first time tripling has ocurred to such a large extent. Normally, tripling occurs only in a few rooms, but this year the situation has doubled even tripled in degree (pardon the pun). The reasons for this are manifold.

The first and foremost — Dr. Greenwood instructed admissions to continue admitting even after full capacity had been reached. A number (3 dozen) of summer school students who took courses to see if they could attend Longwood regularly (conditional on grade outcome) passed and entered the dormitories at the last minute. And then, of course, the late comers who would normally have been turned away were allowed in.

Why did Dr. Greenwood allow students to continue filling already packed dorms? Apparently a lot of it has to do with the 5 percent budget cut. As the price of housing the student soars and tuition hikes; one method of keeping down housing expenses (presumably for everyone involved a' la trickle dorm economics) is to pack the rooms and not expand the already inflated student rental income (about 540 dollars per semester). Another reason involves the fact that Longwood is a state institution. Because the expenses have gotten so high in private institutions, Dr. Greenwood feels a certain obligation to allow those students to come to the state run institutions at a lesser expense.

The outlook for the student is one of bearing the burden of the budget — which they seem to be doing — although in some cases none too happily. "There's not enough privacy...it's really difficult in the morning taking a shower — especially when we all have morning classes." The problems of privacy become even more complicated when 2 closets and 2 desks per three person room is consideres. "It makes you appreciate the library a lot more, at least there it's private and you have room to work".

Although technical problems of space and bathroom use are a serious threshold, the largest hump to cross is personality conflicts. "Two people tend to gang up on a third member — there are always the buddies and then the outsider"..."If you don't watch yourself you can be at sombody's throat." On the other side of the spectrum "if you don't like one, you always have another to choose from."

The dining hall seems to be coping with the overrun of students alright. Mr. Pronesti said "The first two weeks was bad, because registration was in the lower dining, but now it's O.K. — breakfast, lunch and dinner go smooth as usual."

Something of a compensation is being offered to the students. After the first 6 weeks, if the students are still tripled, they will receive a 10 percent refund on their housing fee, or about $54.00 said Mr. Thomas Nanzig.

To cope with the tripling problems students are advised to talk with each other and work out any hassles among themselves.

NEWS BRIEFS

By MIKE LYNCH

In his finest foreign policy speech to date, President Reagan pledged full U.S. and personal support to lasting peace in the Middle East, hopefully acquired through the future renewal of talks on Palestinian autonomy. The President outlined several proposals towards the fullfillment of these objectives which basically call of Israel to five the Palestinians land while everyone else promises to make nice with Israel.

Specifically, Reagan has asked Israel to freeze their settlemtnts in occupied territories and not to annex them, presumably in preparation for turning them over to the Palestinians. The West Bank and the Gaza Strip are targeted as future Palestine governed sited although the question of whether or not these lands will be considered Palestinian homelands or not was basically avoided. Jordan's King Hussein was requested by Reagan to be present at the proposed talks and probably will be if his fellow Arabs approve.

The only thing Israel liked was the proposal for talks. Giving land to people who had better be nice to them whether they have any land or not just didn't make too much sense to Begin and his buddies so they rejected the whole deal. The Arabs, especially the P.L.O., would just love to have some land, so although the plan did not give them everything that they wanted, they were generally optimistic about it.

Solidarity celebrated its second and possibly its last birthday, last week, as 65,000 protesters, a relatively small number, had it out with police in cities all over the country. The police made it clear that this time, they were not screwing around as they fired tear gas, water cannons and percussion grenades at groups of as few as ten protesters.

In Gdansk, crowds behind barriers lasted more than ten hours against the police, with a civilian death resulting, while in Lubin the militia opened fire on a crowd in response to being assailed by bricks and gas bombs. They got two of 'em.

But while violence was accomplished, little else was. The huge crowds that had been expected to show unified support for the union and consequently scare the police in to leaving them alone, were not there. People are starting to think about their health instead of the union's and as a result, Solidarity is crumbling.

President Reagan's stiff tactics with dissenters to his ideas finally brought him embarrassment, last week, as he had to reverse a decision to get tough on companies that allowed American technological devices to be used on the Soviet gas pipeline. Last month as a result of two French companies shipping American compressors to Russia, Reagan banned the export of anything at all to the guilty parties from the U.S. This action caused outrage in Europe where several countries were already committed to do the same thing the French ones had done. And since European countries, unlike air-traffic controllers, do not just go away, Reagan had to soften up on his punishments when a British corporation sent American turbine parts to the Russians.

This time, the ban will be just for oil and gas equipment, which has already made the Europeans a lot happier, but they still want the bans dropped altogether.

WUTA Awake!

The walls start to close in. Jimi Hendrix whines over the monitors. A loud thump in your ear. Thump. Thumpthump. You watch the telephone. It never rings. Brick walls. The clock goes slower, another album. Stevie Nicks. Still no calls. "Alright, this is WUTA 90.1 F.M. on your radio dial. We're located attop Jarman auditorium, hitting you with 10 big watts . . . now for a little Stevie Nicks off her Belladonna LP . . ." The album starts. The clock moves. Slower. The thump continues.

WUTA has already started nightly programming and is eagerly awaiting the FCC decision as to whether they can increase their wattage or install a signal splitter. Meanwhile, the crew is working to purchase a new turntable, monitor speakers and other equipment. "We're thinking about increasing operation hours. It's like our second infancy with the new equipment," says Brad Schwartz, a WUTA disc jockey.

WUTA needs disc jockeys for weekends and for news and sports casting. The disc jockeys are willing to train the potential DJ's — with 10 hours of air time. "We're young and we want people to listen to us, get people involved. It's great if you know people are listening and calling you up. Otherwise, it's like sitting in a box playing records," according to Brad.

People interested in becoming involved with campus station should attend the meeting Thursday night at 6:00 in Jarman. Any requests for programming should be sent to Nick Ciucci, care of WUTA, Campus Radio Station. The station provides universal appeal, playing Rick James, Jimi Hendrix or Conway Twitty. "We want people that will come and play good music for the students."

Notes Still Alive

By CHRIS YOUNG

To put it bluntly, the Rolling Stones are the Cheryl Tiegs of Rock and Roll.

"What??" you say!

"Cheryl Tiegs??" you say!

"Hey, that young guy must be crazy!"

But I'm totally serious.

"CHERYL TIEGS??!?"

'fraid so. You see, there's like this girl named Cheryl Tiegs, and like whatever she puts her name on sells a million, and like do you get my drift? The Stones are blessed with what is called King Midasness. It means: Whatever you touch shall turneth into gold (or even platinum!)

So basically what you do is get a couple a guys together, strick up a band, and stick around for about, say 20 years, and you get the Midas touch.

What I've been trying to say is this: The Stones are incredible, and have such a following that they could release an album containing The All Sports Band's Greatest Hits, and it would go platinum. It's very simple. When you're the greatest, you can do anything, and it's great. And along with Led Zeppelin and the Beatles, The Stones are the greatest.

So their new live album Still Life is great, whether it's great or not.

The Stones start out by playing a recording of Duke Ellington's "I'm Beginning to See the Light" and "Take the A Train." Then they come on stage and break into Under My Thumb. This album has some other oldies like Time Is On My Side, Let's Spend the Night Together, Shattered, and Satisfaction. The later two sound kind of sick.

There are also some new cuts like Start Me Up (from Tatto You) and their new single Going to a Go Go. It's kind of hard to describe this album. Some of it's bad, and some of it's great. It's just so incredible to think that one band can be so big, and so incredible, and so old!

So to sum Still Life up, I'd have to say it's great. What else can I say — except, The Stones are definately here to stay.

Piano Recital

The Longwood College department of music will present seniors Jane Elder, Michael Gould, and Sandra Walls in a recital of piano music on Sunday afternoon, September 19, at 4 o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

Jane Elder's part of the program includes Noncture in C minor by Chopin and compositions by Bach and Schubert. Michael Gould will play The Engulfed Cathedral by Debussy, two preludes by Chopin, and Impromptu in E-flat major by Schubert. Sandra Walls will play Prelude and Fugue in D major by Bach, Variations, K. 352 by Mozart, and two waltzes by Brahms.

The public is cordially invited to attend the recital and the reception following it in the Green Room of Wygal Building.

All three pianists are students of Dr. Robert Blasch, professor of music at Longwood. Jane Elder, of Fredericksburg, is an active member of the college's Concert Choir. Gould, from Jamaica Plain, Massachusetts, is beginning his fourth year as a member of the Camerata Singers. Sandra Walls, of Richmond, is president of the Longwood chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota music honor society.

Editor's Turn

There I was, on top of Lankford balcony, a Chi banner with "Good Luck" written on it flapping overhead. The columns rose vertically on each side — waist high. Before me lay the throngs of people waiting for the moment . . . waiting, waiting.

The crowd sparkled in the dying sun. Alpha Sigma Alphas, Alpha Sigma Taus, Kappa Deltas . . . clanking coffee cans, pot lids, frisbees flew by, and in the back the girls in white waited for the moment . . . waited, waited.

Niki Fallis began her speech, "These women have been working very hard for this special night," her pink Izod expanded with pride. A cheer went up. The girls stood before the door, below the balcony. "Working with you has been a real pleasure." You could feel the tension, it soaked through the skin, the twilight tingled . . . waited, waited.

Rush chairman, Stephanie Ibenez, took the microphone and climbed upon a steel wicker chair. The crowd went wild. Bang clank, clank, Zeta Tau Alpha, yeah, Sigma clank clank Sigma, Sigma, yeh, rah, yeah!!! Flashes went off, speckling the already kaleidoscopic scene, the yelling slowed and finally hushed, girls milled nervously back and forth among their own sororities. The first name was read.

She walked out from below the balcony with a dignified poise, like Miss America trying to impress Bob Barker. You could almost hear the play by play.

Kathy Engelbertievica, a young girl from Petty, Tennessee, has been remarkable at the parties, hasn't she Don — a real drinker I understand.

Yes, apparently, the quarter s champion for Zonkered High, has really laid away the girls at the invitational parties. Her technique is simple — start slow but steady — it's really killer, Howard.

And here she is again demonstrating that steadfast certainty which makes her the champ she is. Notice her eyes — straight ahead, no one knows what's going on in her mind.

Wait. She's beginning to make her move now ladies and gentlemen. Kappa Delta is starting to justle and turn, she's eyeing them, now breaking into a slow trot. What a feign to the left!

The crowd is going wild. Phi Mu is beginning to cheer. Look at that straight 25-yard dash Don! What speed! Yes — it's going to be a definite Phi Mu — ladies and gentleman!!

The Kazoos could be heard as the last "walk" entered Stubbs. I kicked an old balloon across Stubbs mall and picked up a discarded beer can. They began taking down the Good Luck banner. Everybody had left except one girl sitting in a steel wickered chair in front of Lankford. She had a red sorority dress on. "Why aren't you in Stubbs partying," I asked. "I'm waiting" she said.

"For what?"

"I'm waiting to be left alone."

Tri-Mates

This year at Longwood many freshmen are experiencing the Tri-Mate syndrome. What is the Tri-Mate syndrome? It's not a fraternity or a sorority but it does deal with sharing partying, and friendship. Tri-Mate was established by the director of housing and its basic concept is the stuffing of three people into a box like room meant for two. Yes, Tri-Mate is short for triple rooming.

The Tri-Mate syndrome has had many different effects on freshmen. Living on a freshman hall full of triples I've seen and heard the laughter and tears coming from the various rooms. The majority of the triples get along with no problems. The guys have the least problems due to the fact that they are rarely in their rooms and when they are there they are usually asleep. The girls however, are a different case, they have problems with gentlemen visitors, drinking and smoking. These problems are rare but they do exist. The problems usually are about where to put the numerous hair dryers and hot curlers, sharing the mirror in the bathroom, and who gets the single bed instead of the bunks. Some girls do have other problems. For example, getting up in the morning only to find all her underwear has been frozen or waking up after a nap to find herself and her bed wrapped in plastic wrap. These problems are all in fun of course.

The freshmen that are now experiencing the Tri-Mate syndrome are all in agreement about one thing. This one thing can be summed up by a statement made by one of the Tri-Mates, "we all get along pretty well, good, but come mid-term we better get that 10 percent refund.

Replies on Capital Punishment

Most murder victims never know that they are going to be killed. On the other hand, most men (and in a few cases, women) who are sentenced to death in this country, do know that they will die, usually on what day, at what time. And if a stay of execution is granted, they have more time to wait, in tiny cubicles on Death Row.

Caryl Chessman was arrested in California in January, 1948, for kidnapping, a crime he repeatedly insisted he did not commit. He spent 12 years in San Quentin's Death Row, writing his own appeals and three best selling books on the American prison system as a dehumanizing school of crime, and against capital punishment.

On the day he was executed in May 1960, he wrote lawyer George T. Davis this letter:

Dear George,

Now my long struggle is over. Yours isn't. This barbarous senseless practice of capital punishment, will continue. In our society other men will go on taking that last walk to death until . . . when? Until the citizens of this state and this land are made aware of its futility. Until they realize that retributive justice is not justice at all.

I die with the burning hope that my case and my death will contribute to this awareness, this realization. I know that you will personally do all in your power, as citizen and lawyer, to convince your fellows that justice is not served, but conpounded, by vengence and executioners.

Good Luck.

Capital punishment might be a solution to our overcrowded prisons if, as the writer in the last issue puts it "Used uniformly, with extensive regulation and consideration . . ."

The trouble is, our courts don't have time to give each case extensive consideration, and prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Therefore we will go on executing men, possibly without cause, because we are human and humans are fallible. Perhaps we should leave Judgement Day to God.

America has a major crime problem. In 1980 there were 23,000 murders and 82,000 women forceably raped. Violent crime rose eleven percent from 1979 to 1980. There is a murder every twenty-three minutes and a forceable rape every six minutes.

Americans spend twenty-six billion dollars each year to support prisoners in state and federal prisons.

The issue of capital punishment has been side-tracked on the basis of morality, but it must be viewed from a practical standpoint. Recently there was an article printed in THE ROTUNDA concerning the idea that "practically and ideally capital punishment is a mistake." Ideally, all citizens of a society would be willing to abide by its laws and thus remove the need for any forms of punishment. Unfortunately it doesn't work that way.

The article was written from the standpoint that capital punishment does not deter crime. The reason that capital punishment does not appear to deter others from committing capital crimes is because criminals run only a slight risk of being punished and they know it. If capital punishment were to become a very real possibility, then it would act as a form of deterrent.

There are several very sound reasons to uphold capital punishment. One, which has already been noted is the economics of the situation. Americans cannot afford to maintain the number of criminals which already fill our institutions. If capital punishment were to become a very real part of the system and put into practice it would cut the cost of maintaining a criminal for the duration of his life.

Secondly, if capital punishment were to be used it would cut the tragic percentage of seventy percent of those who are released from prison (often due to overcrowding) who commit the same or new crimes.

Finally, there is this thought; "we cheapen the value of human life if an innocent victim dies while his convicted murderer lives."

Financial Aid

Program, much in the news lately, makes available low inerest loans to students, with the Federal government paying the interest while a student is in school. These loans are made by a lender (such as a bank, credit union, or savings and loan association) and insured by either the Federal government or a State Guarantee Agency. This, the largest student aid program, will make available over $9.5 billion in loans during the 1982-83 school year.

Undergraduate students can borrow up to $2,500 a year and graduate students can borrow up to $5,000 under GSL. The total debt an undergraduate can carry is $12,500. For graduate or professional study this figure is $25,000. A student borrower whose family income is less than $30,000 automatically qualifies for an interest-subsidized loan.

'Dandy Don' and His Snakes

By DAVID S. AREFORD

Gripping his favorite putter, the golfer concentrates on the hole about six feet away. Sweat drips down his back and along his forehead. It's been a hard day. He takes the putter back and then taps the ball, but he has heard a noise and the ball is moving too fast, stopping just beyond the hole. Mumbling, he walks toward the ball, eyeing his partner, but his friend gives no impression of causing the noise or even of having heard it. He taps the three-incher in and bends down grabbing the ball angrily. He looks across the adjacent road where the swamp begins, but sees and hears nothign unusual. He walks away. It's been a hard day. But he gives a last look. There is something lurking in the swamp. He sees a human arm, a flash of silver. He is frightened. He quickly walks away. The Legend spreads. That night at the bar, over his bourbon, he tells of the thing in the swamp.

If he had looked more closely, he would have found something unusual but not strange: A man looking for snakes with his silver clasper. (Could it be Marlin Perkins? But Mutual of Omaha's "Wild Kingdom" was canceled, wasn't it?) To Longwood College he is known as Dr. Donald Merkle or "Dandy Don" as his students sometimes fondly refer to him, assistant professor of biology. But why is this man in this golf-ridden swamp near the Newport News Park Golf Course?

For two years, Dr. Merkle has been researching and gathering samples of the Cottonmouth Water Moccasin. Along with samples from the park in Newport News along the James, he has also gathered samples of this poisonous snake from Seashore State Park, Gum Swamp on the North Landing River, Northwest River, and Hopewell along the Appomattox River. Hopewell is the closest area to Farmville where the cottonmouth exists. The amphibious snakes in our area are non-poisonous and simply called "water snakes." Merkle also explored other rivers and areas in the Coastal Plain.

Dr. Merkle is interested in biogeographic barriers to animal population, or what happens to the genetic make-up of a population of animals when they are isolated. Some isolated populations of animals and also plants can change so much as to become a totally different species. This can often be seen, but sometimes two animals can look exactly the same and have a completely different genetic make-up within.

In August, Dr. Merkle presented a paper at the joint meetings of the Society for the Study of Amphibians and Reptiles (SSAR) and the Herpetologists' League, held in Raleigh, N. C. The paper was entitled "Genetic variation in the Cottonmouth Water Moccasin Agkistrodon Piscivorous at the northern edge of its distrubition." The "northern edge" being the James River.

Merkle found that there is relatively little genetic variation between Virginia populations of this snake, but the variation that was discovered helps to explain the origin of populations found in the Peninsula between the James and York Rivers.

It seems that the populations of the cottonmouth north of the James River are derived from ancestors that crossed the narrow stretches of the river near Hopewell rather than across the approximately 6 mile stretch of the James downstream near Newport News. The assumption had been that since they were amphibious they had simply crossed near Newport News but this was incorrect. Dr. Merkle also concluded that the snakes used to live all over the coastal plain but had been wiped out by climatic and other natural changes as well as changes brought about by man.

Merkle collected over fifty samples and then began the tedious work of laboratory research. This involved taking samples of organs, isolating enzymes, and electrophoresis which is the separation of proteins based on charge. From this last process, the exact genetic make-up of each snake was found. Then the populations from the five areas mentioned above were compared by genetic make-up. Merkle, at present, is preparing his paper for publication. Computer data will back up his findings.

During Merkle's two years of research for this paper, his trips to swamps and rivers were numerous. They usually began at sunrise and ended at sunset. Not all those days yielded samples of snakes, though. A few times, Merkle returned "bare-bagged." He often went on these excursions alone. On hearing this, this reporter couldn't help but compare Merkle's situation to the many literary symbols of modern man's existential condition: Alone and fighting for survival. Merkle smiled, chuckling inside as if saying silently, "You are a young man" or "Talking about the Unknown is different than walking in it." Merkle faced some bleak moments in his research. Even though the commercial leads you to believe otherwise, Merkle summed up his situation when he said, "Off in a swamp with mosquitoes lasts about seven minutes."

An experience of Merkle's may make his position of risk clearer: While canoeing in the canal through Gum Swamp, Merkle spied a baby spotted turtle on a log (it is rare to find them when young) and reached for it having to use both arms. Suddenly the canoe overturned sending Merkle and his equipment below. He resurfaced but was unable to turn the boat right-side up without pulling it under, thus the last resort was to swim pulling the canoe behind with the tow line in his mouth. Reaching a solid bank (the canal's walls are composed of mud), Merkle climbed out of the water only in time to watch his wedding ring slide off his finger into the depths of muck. Earlier, when the boat overturned, he also lost his watch. On an earlier research trip, he also lost his college ring in the North River that flows into the Mississippi.

Of course, the significance is not his loss of jewelry but his near loss of life. But the researcher is often alone — in the field, in the lab. You can picture a man over his microscope along in the middle of the night. It is often one man's cause or vision.

After my conversation with Dr. Merkle, I helped him carry the canoe, which he used for his trips, outside behind Jeffers Auditorium. He had borrowed it from the P.E. Department and had to clean it out and return it. Giving him a hand, I realized he often carried it alone. Yes, he told me, he carried it over his head. It was filled with twigs and sand. I left him alone as he hosed out the debris of his trips to the rivers and swamps.

The golfer is putting again, on another day, on the same green. He has a new partner who wonders why he keeps glancing into the swamp . . .

"Art Work— Art Play"

Farmville, Va. — "Art Work-Art Play," an exhibition of 39 works by nine Ohio artists, will be on view in Farmville beginning September 15. The show is touring selected Virginia communities under the auspices of the Virginia Museum, and is sponsored locally by the Art Dept., Longwood College. It will be on view at Bedford Gallery through October 8.

"Art Work-Art Play" was organized by the Ohio Foundation on the Arts under a reciprocal agreement with Virginia. Virginia has organized three exhibitions to tour within its own borders and one for each of two other states, Utah and Ohio.

"Implicit in the exhibition's title is the notion that work and play can be synonymous in the eyes of both artist and audience," says Dr. Ruth K. Meyer, Executive Director of the Ohio Foundation.

To say that something is a work of art immediately confers dignity and quality on the object," she says. "But within the context of contemporary art criticism such judgments occasionally appear to be too hastily made, too forced by the circumstances of self-justification."

Instead, suppose there were a new category called "a play of art," she suggests. "Thus we could acknowledge that the artist has been 'playing around' with an idea, and that while that idea may be worthy of quite serious consideration, the creative attitude may have been extremely capricious."

Some of the works in the exhibition are overtly comic, some ironic and some deadpan. Humor was not the goal, Dr. Meyer says. "Rather, we sought expressions of a playful attitude encompassing a range of artistic intentions."

Each of the nine artists has received an Ohio Arts Council fellowship under Ohio's Aid to Individual Artists program, the second largest in the nation.

The Ohio exhibition is one of more than 90 offered by the Virginia Museum's TEAMS department to a wide range of nonprofit organizations throughout the Commonwealth.

The exhibition will be on view in Bedford Gallery Sept. 15-Oct. 8; 9-12, 1-5 p.m. M-F and 2-6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For additional information, telephone 392-9359.

Lift the Ban on Banners

In response to the "Ban of Banners:"

First, I would like to say that the Dining Hall looks good. The paint is tasteful and the flowers have added a nice touch.

Now that everyone has settled down into the school routine and Add-Drop is almost over; organizations, meetings and other extra-curricular events have gotten underway. Well, who knows about them? The alternative to the "No banners in the Dining Hall' has been to put them in the "New Smoker." This is impractical as well as non functional.

First the banners were effective in the Dining Hall because while sitting down and eating dinner you could look around and take time to read them. However, in the new smoker, considered a passageway more than a room, students pass by them and do not take the time to stop and read, but at most to just glance, missing the majority of announcements. There is not the adequate space for all the announcements in the new smoker that there is in the Dining Hall.

Secondly where are Longwood's priorities? As I understand it, the banners were banned from the Dining Hall because it looks better without them, therefore improving the outside appearance of the college and hopefully allowing for some State funds as a result of the impression. However, the functional side of Longwood is being taken for granted. The purpose of this institution of higher education and achievement is to get students involved and active — right? I also don't believe that the banners were an eyesore, instead they showed activity and let people know what was going on in their college in the near future.

Dr. Merkle taking a rest from the hunt.

Faculty Colloquium to be Presented by Dr. Young

The Longwood College Faculty Colloquium Lecture Series will begin its 10th year with a presentation by Dr. Douglas M. Young on the status of women as portrayed in outstanding social comedies of 17th Century England.

Dr. Young's lecture, entitled "The Virtuous Women in the Restoration Play-World: The Concept of Marriage and the Social Status of Women in the Comedies of Etherege, Wycherley, and Congreve," is scheduled for Wednesday evening, September 15, at 7:30 in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

The lecture is open to the public at no charge.

The re-defining of the role of women in society is a topic of great interest in the modern world. "Surprisingly, this was also a topic of lively discussion in some of the social comedies of the English Restoration drama," Dr. Young said.

The leading female characters in the plays of Sir George Etherege, William Wycherley, and William Congreve are examples of "women of independent mind and spirit" at a time when law and custom dictated that women be the subservient sex.

These beautiful and lively ladies of the Restoration play-world are intriguing subjects for study as they seek and attain equality in their social relationships with their male counterparts," Dr. Young said.

Dr. Young holds the Ph.D. in theatre from Florida State - University. A member of the Longwood faculty since 1970, he has directed many productions by the Longwood Players and the department of speech and dramatic arts. He is the author of several plays, including "Miss Doris Anderson" which was produced by the Back Alley Theatre in Washington, D. C. in 1977.

The Longwood College Faculty Colloquium, established in 1973, is a forum wherein faculty member share with colleagues, students and the public topics of research which are separate from, but related to, their regular teaching studies. Other topics to be discussed in this year's - Colloquium series are the environment of the planet Earth 350 million years ago, the inner workings of a computer, and the "harmonic language" of a major composition by Arnold Schoenberg.

"Artificial Intelligence"

"Artificial Intelligence" will be the subject of the next Francis Butler Simkins Lecture at Longwood College.

The lecture will be given by Dr. David L. Waltz, professor of electrical engineering at the University of Illinois, on Thursday, September 16, at 7 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building. The public is cordially invited to attend the lecture at no charge.

Throughout his career, Dr. Waltz has been researching, designing and building touch, vision, and language systems for computers. In the early 1970's, while working at the Artificial Intelligence Lab at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, he designed a touch-sensing system for robot hands.

At the University of Illinois, his group designed and constructed an experimental English language question-answering system called PLANES that served as a front end for a large data base of Navy aircraft flight and maintenance information.

Most recently, Dr. Waltz has been attempting to build systems that combine his two central interests — language and perception.

He has been a consultant for Hughes Aircraft Company, Machine Intelligence Corporation, Comtex Scientific Corporation and others, has published numerous professional papers and articles, and has lectured at major universities in this country and abroad.

National Conference on Artificial Intelligence, and for three years

Last month, he served as program chairman for the he was chairman of the Association for Computing Machinery's Special Interest Group on Artificial Intelligence.

The Francis Butler Simkins Lecture Series honors the memory of an eminent scholar and beloved teacher at Longwood from 1928 until his death in 1966. Dr. Simkins was nationally known for his writings on the history of the South.

Ask Gertie

"I hate Hamsters"

Dear Gertie:

I hate Hampden Sydney guys! I was told before I came to Longwood (I am a freshman) that the place to be at was on the walls in front of the "Cunninghams" scopin' out all the Longwood chicks.

For the first few evenings things went fine. Last Thursday, however, I whistled at a Longwood Chick who turned out to be a Hampsterette. Her boyfriend was right there behind her and he heard me whistle. Well, this hampster was out for blood — mine. I write this letter with a black eye, a broken arm and a bruised rib.

Gertie, what should I do — gang up on the Hampster? Quit scoping? Will this give me an inferiority complex? Will I be paranoid now every time I whistle? Help me Gertie, what should I do?

Black, Blue and Horny

Dear Black & Blue,

As a college freshman, you should know that anyone with tact doesn't whistle at females. That kind of action is left for 60 year old truck drivers and construction workers. A black eye and broken rib is just about what you should have expected. As for your revenge, I wouldn't exactly gang up on someone who beat you up once, just take it with a grain of salt and keep your whistling down to a tune.

Search For The Real Arc

Joan of Arc who led the French army to victory into the city of Reims, was burned at the stake in Rouen on May 30, 1431. Her ashes were thrown into the River Seine. That was the end of Joan until 1920 when the Catholic Church declared her a Saint and when Longwood declared her the patron saint for the college.

Things should have ended there. But they haven't. Like the Arc of the Covenant Joanie has remained a perpetual mystery. Was she witch or saint? hereitc or zealot? And now perhaps an even more perplexing question arises — was she male of female?

Robert Greenblatt, a Georgia endoctrinologist, thinks Joan may (like Longwood) look all female to a passing observer but if you look really close, inside there lurks a male.

Robert Greenblatt is convinced according to historical records dating from the time of her trial that Joan had a rare syndrome known as testicular feminization. According to Omni magazine, the "syndrome is caused by an enzyme deficiency which prevents cells from receiving tes-

LC Second In Soccer Tournament

By HOKE CURRIE

Visiting North Carolina-Charlotte got two goals in the second overtime period to break a 2-2 deadlock and hand host Longwood a 4-2 setback in the Longwood Invitational Tournament championship contest Sunday afternoon on First Ave. Field.

Longwood, now 1-1, takes off until Friday when Maryville visits for a 2:00 tilt. Saturday, Longwood journeys to North Carolina to play Wingate College with a trip to Catawba slated for Sunday afternoon.

The Division I 49ers, now 3-1-1, beat Virginia Commonwealth, the defending champ, 4-2 Saturday to reach the finals. Longwood blanked Richmond 3-0 in first round action as Chris Wilkerson had two goals and Scott Piche one.

After VCU beat Richmond 3-0 in the consolation game, the Lancers and 49ers squared off in a rugged, physical battle. First half goals by freshman Brian Allmendinger and senior Gus Leal enabled Longwood to tie UNCC 2-2 at the half. Goals by Arto Van Grondelle and Robert Edwards in the second overtime period gave Coach Bob Warming's team the win.

UNCC, which had tied South Carolina 1-1 and lost to powerful North Carolina State, placed four players on the all-tournament team while grabbing two MVP selections. Longwood had three players chosen all-tournament while VCU and Richmond had two choices each.

Tournament MVP was 49er Tureh Doh, a senior forward from Liberia, while teammate Pierre Imar was Most Valuable Forward. Imar scored a tournament record four goals, including three in the win over VCU. Longwood All-American Darryl Case was Most Valuable Defender for the second year in a row.

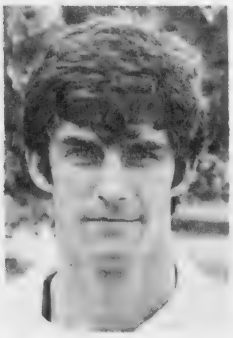
The all-tournament team consisted of Doh, Imar and Case plus David Higgins and Robbie Hofstetter of UNCC, Bill Foster and Dan Dubnis of Longwood, Thor Hockett and Sean McGarigal of VCU and John Maliff and Peter Schauf of Richmond.

When senior Gus Leal scored his first goal of the season Sunday afternoon the score marked his 41st career goal. Each time Leal scores he will break his own school record for career goals.

Longwood freshman Mark McArdle went down with a knee injury in Sunday's loss to UNCC. The 5-2, 105 pound freshman was a solid performer for the Lancers in the tournament with numerous passes which set-up teammates for shots on goal. The extent of his injury was unknown.

In all, six freshmen saw significant action for Longwood in the tournament. In addition to McArdle, Bubnis and Allmendinger, Clay Mullican, goalie Al Del Monte and Scott Piche played well for the Lancers.

Longwood coach Rich Posipanko remains confident that his team can have an outstanding season, despite the loss.



"We're disappointed," said the coach, "but we lost to a talented Division I team. I feel we played well in the tournament and we should improve as the season progresses. Our freshmen made a big contribution. I was pleased with their play."

Lady Golfers Place Fourth

By HOKE CURRIE

Perennial power Marshall University held off a challenge from fast rising James Madison to win its fourth straight Longwood Invitational Tournament title Sunday afternoon at Longwood Golf Course. Longwood finished fourth in a six-team field, but played surprisingly well considering its youth and inexperience.

Senior Robin Andrews was Longwood's top performer with an 80-77-81-238. The two-time All-American finished in a three-way tie for seventh place out of 30 golfers.

Top individual in the tourney was James Madison's Allison Groat who set a Longwood Invitational record for three rounds with a 75-75-71-221. Groat broke the old record of 223 set by ex-champ Mary Wilkinson of William & Mary.

Longwood soph Lanie Gerken carded a hole-in-one in Friday's first round when she aced the 152-yard, par-3 no. 12 hole with an 8-iron. Gerken had rounds of 81-78-83-243 while Sue Morgan had a consistent 81-81-81-243. The play of Andrews, Gerken and Morgan helped Longwood card rounds of 324-325-323 for a 972 total, 25 strokes better than last year's invitational score.

Freshman Holli Hudson and sophomore transfer Carol Rhoades played well in spots in their first tournament action at Longwood. Hudson had an 82-88-83-253, while Rhoades finished up with a 78 after shooting 91 and 96 the first two days.

Playing as individuals, Longwood's Margaret Melone 87-85-84-256, Donna Turner 93-85-86-264 and Mary Semones 86-86-84-256 showed that they may be capable of challenging for a spot in the top five. Melone and Semones are freshmen while Turner is a sophomore.

"I was very pleased with the way we played," said Longwood coach Barbara Smith. "We're about 10 strokes ahead of last year's average already. I was particularly pleased with Sue Morgan's consistency and the performances of our new players."

Longwood's next action will be in the Appalachian State Invitational September 20-21.

Volleyball

Longwood's volleyball team will open its season September 23 when they travel to meet Sweet Briar. Returning players for the Lady Lancers are: Kathy Gunning (co-captain), Bonnie Lipscomb, Becky Norris, Elaine Olay (co-captain) and April Poleski. Newcomers include Winona Bayne, Brenda Bowman, Shelvia Braxton, Beth Harrover and Karen Moye.

"I'm pleased with the team this year," said second year coach Joyce Philips, who had 16 women try out for the ten member team. "We're looking forward to a successful season." KMS

Field Hockey Team Hosts Wm & Mary

By HOKE CURRIE

Longwood's field hockey team begins its season with high hopes Wednesday afternoon when the Lady Lancers host national power William & Mary on Barlow Field at 3:00.

The Indians, coached by Jean Stettler, have compiled a record of 92-28-17 over the past eight years with four regional championships. After a down year last season (6-7-4), William & Mary expects to field another strong club with veterans slated to start at every position but goalie. Last year the two teams split games with W&M winning 5-1 in the regular season and Longwood taking a 1-0 decision in the state tournament.

With seven experienced seniors leading the way, Longwood could have one of its strongest teams in recent years. Four seniors have been lost from last year's 7-11-1 squad, but the 1982 edition will have experience and talent from a strong returning group as well as some promising freshmen.

"If all goes well we should have a pretty good club," says Coach Bette Harris. "We have a group of seven seniors who have played together for three years. This should be the year they put it together.

Dr. Harris, in her fourth year at Longwood, says the class of 1983 is probably the strongest in her tenure here.

The Lady Lancers, after competing in AIAW Division I the past three seasons, are moving to NCAA Division II. The 1982 schedule, however, will not reflect this change in divisional status.

Of 12 regular season contests, seven will be against Division I foes, including always tough Virginia and William & Mary.

"This is our first year in Division II, but we're playing the same teams we played in the past," says Dr. Harris.

Facing tough competition will not be a new experience for Longwood's seniors. Defender Mary Milne has been a starter for three years while returning All-State defenders Mindy Allman and Janet Long have started consistently for two years. Leading the attack will be seniors Cherie Stevens and Chris Mayer, who was slowed by an injury in 1981. Betty Jo Casey is back at center field (link), while Lorrie Garber is the veteran goalie.

Dr. Harris is looking for big improvement from sophomores Colleen Stiles, Mary Garrison on attack and Ann Holland and Lisa Seivold on defense. Freshmen Susan Groff on defense, Mary Dey on attack and transfer Pam Esworthy on attack will also likely contribute.

"We definitely want to improve our offensive production and score more," said the coach. "We must boost our offense to be a more successful team."

Longwood will be one of 42 teams competing for six berths in the Division II National Tournament November 12-13. With the experience and depth on this year's squad, Dr. Harris feels the Lady Lancers could be a contender for national honors.

"We're going to have good leadership and depth at all positions," she said. "If we expect to reach our potential, however, we'll have to eliminate the inconsistency which hurt us last season."

In addition to 12 regular season contests, Longwood will play in the Appalachian State Invitational Tournament October 1-2 and the Battlefield Invitational at Mary Washington October 30. Division I opponents include Virginia, Virginia Tech, William & Mary, Duke, James Madison, Richmond and Virginia Commonwealth.

Women's Tennis

By GARY THORNHILL

Longwood's women's tennis team, under the direction of first-year coach Beatrice White, is out to improve on last year's 1-9 fall record. The season gets underway Tuesday on the road against Randolph-Macon Woman's College and Friday the lady netters entertain VCU at 3:00.

Only four members from last year's team return this season: junior Lisa Barnes, junior Bland Hotchkiss, senior Jenny Fisher and sophomore Tammy Schmelter.

The other members of the team who will be trying for starting positions are senior Angie Coppedge, sophomore Whitney Phillips and freshmen Kyleen Curfman, Penny Powell and Cathy Morris.

Even though the starting positions have not been established, last year's No. 1 player Barnes should be among the top netters. Schmelter, who reached the consolation finals in the State Division III Tournament at No. 4 singles last spring season, could also challenge for one of the top positions. She was team MVP in the spring with a 4-3 singles record.

With a team composed mostly of first year players, Coach White said, "This season will be a learning experience that will enhance their abilities for the spring season and for next year."

Men's Golf Team Opens With Victory

By GARY THORNHILL

Longwood's men golfers were victorious in their season opener Friday at Shannon Green Country Club in Fredericksburg.

The Lancers took top honors with a team total of 307, followed by Newport News 309, Christopher Newport 314 and Mary Washington 331.

Stan Edwards paced Longwood, shooting an even par 72, which earned him medalist honors. Also turning in a strong performance was Todd Atkinson with a two-over par 74. Other Longwood scores included: David Pittman 80, Richard Miller 81 and Tommy Spencer 82.

Longwood will next compete in the VMI and Washington & Lee Invitational September 24-25.

Looking forward to another successful fall season, the 1982 Collegiate Division State Champs are out to prove that last year's 12-2 performance was no fluke.

Playing this year without the services of All-American Tim White, the team's No. 1 player for four years, Coach Nelson is looking for solid play from the No. 1 contenders Atkinson and David Moore.

Atkinson, a junior, who was the No. 2 player in the 1981 spring season is returning to the team after a year's lay-off. "Todd is playing the best since he has been at Longwood," said Coach Nelson. Moore, a senior, played No. 2 and No. 3 much of the last two seasons. According to Coach Nelson, "David has the capabilities of playing extremely well this season."

GOLFER STAN EDWARDS

With returning veterans Miller and Edwards, newcomer Pittman; plus the addition of four freshmen: Spencer, Richard Woody, Ty Bordner and Punkaj Racid, the Lancers are expecting more overall team balance.

"Spencer is the most promising newcomer. He has a solid game and could challenge for the No. 3 position," said Coach Nelson. With four of the top seven players from last season no longer with the team, coach Nelson is looking for major contributions from the newcomers.

With only one match and three tournaments scheduled for the fall season, Coach Nelson is using this time to develop his golfers. "We are playing a limited fall schedule to give the younger players an opportunity to get acclimated to collegiate competition and to allow the veteran players more time to strive for consistency in their games," he said.

Cheerleading

"We're looking forward to increasing spirit at Longwood", said coach Joyce Philips of her 1982 Cheerleading squad. This year's ten member team includes six varsity women, two varsity men and two alternate women. Back from last year's team are Donna Crews, Tammy Fields (alternate) Robyn Grinnel, Christy Higgins, Dale Hightower, Sarah Petty (alternate) and Elen Spencer. First year members are Chris Koman. Joan Weidmann and Tami Whitley. KMS

Movie Review
"Annie" Go Home

By JOE JOHNSON

Little Orphan Annie the comic strip was given birth to in the Roaring Twenties by Harold Gray. According to Gray, Annie has a simple philosophy — a child with an adult mind — "Annie knows life is no comic strip."

"She had to be hard to survive, and she meant to survive...Annie must never deviate from the straight course of the poor little orphan girl with a heart of gold, but a wicked left. Annie will continue to sell the idea that life is a battle victory for the brave and strong hearted."

The key words are heart of gold and wicked left. In fact, in the musical comedy, "Annie" they are the only words applicable to Annie's character. She is a two fisted smile, from the opening scene when she sings in the orphanage window, "Maybe far away, or maybe real nearby, betcha they're smart, betcha they're good, why shouldn't they be, their only mistake was giving up me" to the very next scene (not 30 seconds later) when she's breaking up a fight in the orphanage to another scene when (ditto) she comforts a teary-eyed (albeit big brown eyed) orphan girl, Annie never moves out of her dual character. A big smile and a "tough cookie".

It's hard to believe a nationwide search (2000 children waited at Plaza Hotel, just in N.Y. to try out for this part) came up with Aileen Quinn. Superficially perhaps she is good for the role but that's an awful long way to stretch a cute smile and dazzling red hair. But apparently, John Huston thought he could get away with it. He didn't.

Not that Aileen Quinn was the only thing wrong with this movie, the plot and dialogue could have been a bit more plausible and if not more plausible, at least interesting.

The plot based on the award-winning Broadway musical written by Thomas McEhan with music by Charles Strouse follows the adventures of the 10 year old as she tries to escape from an asylum run by the wicked gin soaked Miss Hannigan (Carol Burnette), in hopes of finding her real parents.

When billionnaire "Daddy" Warbucks adopts her for a week to improve his image, Annie discovers the warmhearted man beneath the gilt-edged exterior. Together they confront an assassination attempt by a bomb throwing Bolshevik, a dastardly plot by Hannigan and her cohorts "Rooster" and his girlfriend (Bernadette Peters) a musical visit to Franklin Deleanor Roosevelt, a tuneful discovery of Radio City Music Hall — (complete with Rockettes) and a hairbreath chase through mid Manhattan (filmed on location).

The movie nearly breaks its back with cockeyed optimism and at least a dozen dance scenes (all except one or two, unnecessary and totally unrelated to the story). This in itself is forgivable since it is a musical and one comes to expect such things. However, the forced optimism of Annie and nearly all of the characters (except the villians who manage to give the audience a breath of humor and human failings — particularly Burnette) and the mechanical rigors of the dance. (They never really look as happy as their bodies say they are) leaves the audience with precious little except Annie's cute smile and a mild case of nausea.

Perhaps since the movie was set for the 1930's the producers thought they would try to appeal to a 1930's audience. Hence, the trivia about the greatness of capitalism, the work ethic and how it can be complementary to love — the love which "develops between "Daddy" Warbucks and Little Orphan Annie to be exact In that case, maybe "tomorrow" the hit song, would have been better sung yesterday. "Yesterday, all my troubles seemed so far away. We left Orphan Annie in the grave. Oh, I believe in yesterday."

Financial Aid

Students whose family income exceeds $30,000 may still be eligible for GSL interest benefits if the college's financial aid administrator determines that the student has demonstrated financial need.

A new loan program started in 1981, called the Auxiliary Loan (or PLUS) Program, allows parents, independent students, and graduate students to borrow up to $3,000 a year. There is no income cut off for eligibility. The interest on PLUS loans will be lowered from 14 to 12 percent some time in October as a result of lower average U. S. Treasury bill interest rates.

tosterone, the principal male hormone."

"People with this condition look and think like females, but genetically they are males," Greenblatt explained. "Their testicles are up in the abdomen, just where the ovaries would be in a female. There is a normal vagina but no uterus. The excellent breast development, the failure to menstruate, and the absence of pubic hair are classic signs of testicular feminization."

Student Highlight Soon

Senior Spotlight used to be a regular column in the Rotunda, featuring a senior and their accomplishments, contributions to the school and goals. After many student requests for the return of Senior Spotlight, a new column will be started called Student Highlight, which will focus on particular students with exceptional or unusual accomplishments. To nominate a student for highlight, submit a letter, 50 words or more explaining why the Rotunda should feature the student in the paper. Include your name, and the nominees name, dorm address and box number. Submit nominations to Student Highlight, care of Johnel Brown, Box 3F.

They're Not Just Parolees

By LIZ D'SURNEY

"This is one place I won't look back to for a Long time," replied Robert shaking his head back and forth and staring at the ground. He was confident, sincere. There was no doubt to what he just said...Robert is on probation for the next 20 years for armed robbery.

"I'll tell you what I did," he said sitting up straight in an old clanky chair, "I ain't afraid to admit it to anyone. I know I've done wrong." There was a pause as he looked up and said. "I learned from it, you know...learned the hard way."

Robert is one of the eleven clients working with Project Breakthrough. Project Breakthrough is an agency which exists to rehabilitate law breakers through alternatives other than jail. Its main objective is to help their clients realize the mistake they have made, yet still be able to go on living normal lives. The agency works with Longwood College to help find these men jobs.

As of right now, these clients of the project are involved in various areas of work on Longwood Campus. Each client works here for twelve weeks at a time, then goes on to a different job. Some may be asked to work full time for the college. When asked the tasks they are responsible for carrying out, one parolee stated, "We do things like picking up trash, trimming bushes, painting and plumbing, and carpentry." "It's hard work at certain times," replied another man.

Melvin Moore who works in the Physical Plant and helps hire these workers said, "They have done an excellent job and have really helped out." Mr. Moore feels that this system has been running smoothly so far. "It's a great way of rehabilitation and helps the men benefit in a number of ways, mostly by learning a trade for later use.

The work day for these men is like that of any other job. The daily schedule is: 8:00-12:00 work, 12:00-1:00 lunch, and 1:00-5:00 back to work. Lunchtime the men are free to go wherever they please. Their salary is minimum wage and their hours are calculated by a time card. They are paid directly from the federal government. If they fail to show up for work their pay is cut for that day and they report to Melvin Moore who then decides what to do. If it happens frequently, they may report back to the agency and no effort may be made to keep them.

An easy-going, friendly relationship has been established between the regular staff and the Project Breakthrough clients. One parolee, Sylvester, when speaking of this relationship said "I get crazy with them and blend in with them." He leaned back in the chair, stretched his legs out in front of him and placed his hands behind his neck. He continued, "I get along with everyone as long as they treat me right. So far it's been real good."

Passing each other, the men exchanged a friendly slap on the back or punch in the shoulder. Some stopped to engage in conversation, others go on their way. A young man approaches dressed in faded blue jeans splotched with paint and raveled at the bottom. His blue shirt, like that of a gas station attendant, is partially open, from lack of buttons.

His name is Sylvester. Sylvester, who was caught breaking and entering, at 20 years of age, has already spent one year at the Farmville jail, the next year at the State Penn, and remains on parole for another whole year. He got involved with Project Breakthrough from his probation officer who works with the agency. Other probation officers are assigned to clients from the agency or have some type of connection with it.

Sylvester feels he has benefited greatly from this system. He folds his arm across his chest, takes a deep breath and says. "Three days after I was locked

Living on Innertube and a Smile

By DORA ANN DANIEL

For Longwood instructor Toby Thompson, what began as a quick meal at McDonald's turned into an encounter with one of life's "real people."

Thompson met Bob Teuber, a twenty-three year-old native of Illinois, taking a break from bicycling cross-country from Portland, Oregon to Portland, Maine.

Teuber began his trip one week before Memorial Day on the Bikecentennial Bike Trail, a bike trail formed through the United States from Oregon to Yorktown, Virginia in 1976. Bikecentennial is a nonprofit organization which sets up bike trails throughout the United States.

Teuber, a tall lean man with sandy brown hair and glasses, looked much older than his twenty-three years. He was eager to talk to the group of Journalism students before him. "I had wanted to bicycle cross-country since high school," Teuber said. "It had been in the back of my mind for a long time but I never really thought about it. So, when January came I sorta decided it was now or never." Teuber at that time began to prepare for his trip by running and lifting weights. The essential piece of equipment in this quest, the bicycle, is spectacular indeed. The bike is a special touring model, worth seven-hundred fifty dollars. It has eighteen speeds, which enables Teuber to travel hill as well as dale, and holds between forty and fifty pounds of gear.

During his four months on the road, Teuber had seen many places including Colorado and Wyoming and met many interesting people. "I met a couple on the trail who had visited New Zealand," Teuber says. "They were really nice people." Also during that time, a Kansas family befriended Teuber and provided lodging for him for five days. "I got caught up in a Little League game," says Teuber, "and I wanted to see the championship playoffs." Teuber also took the time to visit his parents in Illinois during his excursion. Although he has been many places during his trip, Teuber had no real place of residence. His usual lodgings for the night are his sleeping bag at an available campground. However, while in Farmville, Teuber slept in a house — the first time in months.

Teuber, a business management major, graduated from Dekelb University this May. This bike trip was his way of doing something adventuresome before responsibility set in. Teuber's next stop is Connecticut to visit some friends before he bicycles to Williamsburg, Virginia, his final stop. He plans to be home by October 15, by bike or possibly train. When asked what he would do when he returned home, Teuber replied, "I don't know, maybe work."

Paris in the Fall Greenwood's Off To Europe

"If I could just get one hour at the Louvre, it would be worth it . . said Longwood President Janet D. Greenwood, one of only 12 U.S. college and university presidents who will participate in a "Mission to France" to meet with French educators.

The mission, sponsored by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU), begins Saturday and runs until October 7. Dr. Greenwood, the only college president selected from Virginia, also will travel to Holland and Spain before returning to this country on October 10.

Dr. Greenwood will be representing the United States, higher education and Longwood College. She will visit four universities in the cities of Paris, Lyon and Grenoble. "Longwood is indeed honored to be represented," she said.

The trip is intended to "re-emphasize the relationship between the United States and France in higher education," noted Dr. Greenwood. Possible exchanges of faculty and students will be discussed when the presidents consult with the French counterparts.

"We have hopes — no promises, but hopes — that we might work out some exchanges for our students and faculty," the Longwood president explained. In addition to those possible exchanges, she said, Longwood will benefit from the mission through "immediate national and international attention...It says something about the quality of the College."

Dr. Greenwood will confer with representatives of two universities in Paris — Paris-Dauphine and Paris-Nanterre — and with Claude Bernard

NEWS BRIEFS

The Arab League met in Fez, Morocco, with its main intention being to come up with its own position on the subject of Palestinian autonomy. After considering, but not adopting President Reagan's plan, they came up with their own eight point plan, modeled on an earlier version by Saudi Arabia's King Faud. The plan was harsh to Israel on many points but that was not unexpected.

The main demands of the plan were for Israeli evacuation of all land taken since 1967, creation of a Palestinian State with a capital in East Jerusalem and a United Nations Security Council guarantee that all states in the Middle East live in peace. The latter demand, point seven of the plan, although not an outright acceptance of Israel's right to exist, could be interpreted as a step in the right direction. And if that is the fact, as Secretary of State George Schultz put it, "that's a breakthrough, a genuine breakthrough."

But the biggest visible achievement of the meeting was the amiability displayed between moderate and radical Arabs who earlier were of no appreciation for each other at all. The last conference in Fez broke down after just after five hours, due to the split in opinions. But then, when your biggest enemy strolls halfway through one of your counties and kicks one of your buddies out as if he had been picking on the girls, it tends to convince you to be much nicer about things.

President Reagan's string of economic victories was broken when Congress overrode his veto of a 14.2 billion dollar supplemental spending bill. The House tally was 301-117, 22 votes more than needed to pass the bill, while the Senate had exactly the amount of votes needed, 60-30.

It was a fairly predictable loss, though, and the Reagan Administration did not take it too hard; especially since the bill was not extremely important. Giving the reasons for having vetoed the bill in the first place, Reagan stated earlier that "This bill would bust the budget by nearly a billion dollars." Supporters of the bill did not fall for that logic at all seeing that the bill was actually 2 billion under the original Reagan proposal and having no solid reason to believe that the bill would be over budget.

The two billion dollars cut naturally came from defense, for the most part and the increases shored up many programs, such as jobs for the elderly, aid to the handicapped and student loans that our humane leader somehow did not manage to give enough money in the first place. Although beaten this time, Reagan vowed that he would veto again, should similar circumstances arrive.

In a change from his normal attention to economic and international issues, President Reagan suffered another setback as a liberal filibuster of an anti-abortion issue was extended after proponents of the bill tried to cut it off, falling 19 votes short of the needed amount for cloture. The bill would permanently deny all federal funding for abortions and require the Supreme Court to reconsider the legality of the practice. Reagan has also vowed to push forward a controversial school prayer issue in the near future, although many White House aides and Constitution experts question the constitutionality of both bills.

The Polish embassy in Switzerland was occupied recently by terrorists claiming themselves to be the "Independent Home Army," the "Front of the National Liberation", and the "Army of Insurgent Patriots" at alternate times. They held 14 embassy officials and workers captive, claimed to have 55 pounds of dynamite and presented much simpler demands than their identities; lift martial law in Poland and free all political prisoners.

After the Polish government laughed that one off, they told the Swiss that they could go ahead and re-take the embassy, offering the help of Warsaw's anti-terrorist "Intervention Group." The Swiss politely refused this offer and a similar one from the British, choosing to deploy their own "Star Group" anti-terrorist unit.

The leader of the terrorist group, calling himself "Colonel Wyscocki" after a 19th century Polish hero, let his demands slip as far as 1.4 million and safe conduct to Albania or China, largely due to communication with a Swiss Dominican priest, 80 years old, Father Joseph Bochenski. But the Swiss figured that enough time had expired and they now stormed the building after sneaking in a remote-control stun bomb, disguised as a food package. An explosion, a few minutes, several tear gas canisters but no gunshots later, the terrorists had been captured and the hostages freed.

Although the takeover was clearly amateur, the result was a blow to Solidarity's image as the Polish government promptly blamed them for the takeover. Solidarity officials bluntly denied responsibility for the incident, claiming that they had been framed and it is interesting to note that "Colonel Wyscocki" who turned out to be Florian Kruszuk, a fairly common hood, was once a spy for the Polish government.

Starting in January, one of the more painful forms of literary deprivation will occur as Garry Trudeau, artisan of the Pulitzer Prize winning comit strip, "Doonesbury," plans to take as many as 20 months off to pursue other projects and update his characters into the 80's. The switch, as Trudeau puts it, will go "from draft beer and mixers to cocaine and herpes."

The Lankford Gold Room came alive Saturday night at 9 p.m. as the Juniors hosted a semi-formal dance to celebrate the arrival of their school rings. Approximately one-hundred people — freshmen through seniors, Longwood and non-Longwood students — came out to enjoy the music, food and fellowship. D.J. Randy Johnson provided tunes to boogie by, which ranged anywhere from rhythm and blues to new wave.

This year's Ring Committee broke away from the traditional Lower Dining Hall location for the dance and moved it to the Gold Room.

Archeology Ace

By CINDY CORELL
(First Article of a Two-Part Series)

As a child, Bob Flippen loved to play in the dirt. Specifically, he liked to dig in the dirt and find things. He still enjoys this, but now it's on a much larger scale, and very far from child's play.

When, in the second grade, Bob Flippen told everyone he wanted to become an archeologist, I'm sure no one was surprised, nor are they surprised now that Bob is on his way to becoming a well known archeologist of present time.

Bob Flippen is a student from George Washington University in Washington, D. C., studying anthropology. He is enrolled in Longwood for this semester as an Anthropology Intern, doing a project at Hampden-Sydney. He is from Meherrin, Va., and although he was born in West Germany, he considers himself a native of the area.

I spent about an hour this week in the Snack Bar talking to Bob about his various experiences in archeology. He gets a boyish, yet almost reverent expression on his face when he talks about his work. He speaks patiently and is very anxious that whoever he's talking to understands what he means. His enthusiasm spreads, and soon I was as excited about digging in the dirt as he was.

The first story Bob related was of this past summer. It involved a site on Rose Bower Vineyard, about five miles west of Hampden-Sydney. Tom O'Grady, the owner of the land, was digging a lake on the property. In the process of building the dam, bulldozers ran over two slabs of rock, like grave markers, sticking out of the ground about five feet apart in an East-West fashion. This is very typical of a religious burial. Mr. O'Grady called Bob in and he and an archeology crew planned to disinter the body, send it to William and Mary College to find out its sex, age, race, etc., and reinter the body somewhere else on the farm. They checked with state authorities and found that this was legal, as long as it was an unmarked grave. They set to work.

Bob planned to have one crew help for a few days and then use a fresh group of people. The first group, however, decided that no matter how hard the work was, they wanted to be the ones to finish the job, as well as start it.

The crew, Nuvit Rodop, Whit Privat, Mary Ball, Margaret Hill, and Bob began to work the site. Contrary to popular belief, archeologists don't find something interesting every few shovelfuls. Instead, it is hot, sweaty and often discouraging work.

This time, however, they soon found ample motivation. They discovered by digging all around the area of the stone that there was a vein of rock running crosswise through the stone markers. But, when they dug in between the markers, they met no resistance. Therefore, the vein of rock had been cut into and this proved that there was once a large hole there about six feet deep.

By the time they finished the dig, they had found remnants of wood that had managed to be preserved, spread around in an unusual manner, twenty-four metal nails, three machine made lead cap screws on an ivory milk glass button.

There were no bones.

Through dating the era when ivory buttons were normally worn (about 1920) and when lead cap screws began to be made by machine (1850), Bob concludes that the grave was dug and a body was buried between these years.

Bob has several theories about why the bones are no longer there: First, it could have been an infant, whose body would have already decayed. But, a more reasonable theory is that the body was hastily buried and friends or family came back and got the body. This would explain why the remnants of wood were so spread out and why only three cap screws were found.

The dig was concluded and the students felt they should leave something of their own behind, maybe in exchange for what they learned. What they left was a time capsule. Being a collector of and an expert on old bottles, Bob left a bottle from the 1800's filled with such things as the legal document for the dig, a 1982 penny, a dining hall spoon and Par Bil's matches, among other things for future archeologists to find.

Next week: An article on Bob Flippen's experiences at three different sites at Hampden-Sydney College.

To The Editor:

This is my Farewell letter to Longwood College. Very soon I will no longer be at Longwood. Sure, I will finish out this semester, the next, and return again next fall, but where will I be? I will be in a nice little town called Farmville, attending a relatively small, co-educational institution for higher education. Is that institution Longwood? Maybe now it is, but at the rate events are happening around here, by next fall it will be called "The University of Greenwood via Mable, Haltzel, Rothermill, Ogrosky, and Lemish."

All of these people recruited by our President, Dr. Janet D. Greenwood, brought with them a truck load of enthusiasm and creative ideas to help the image and money problems they say Longwood has. After talking to a few of these Administrators I can see where they have the knowledge and experience to help this school out, if indeed it needs helping. Fine, but where does that leave us? What about the students who hold this college and the things it stands for very high on their list? We are feeling left out, put down, and most of all kicked in the ass.

It is not that the school image should not change if it needs to, because bad reputations can hurt. But with those changes are changes in traditions. This school has gone through many changes before. This school use to be only for females. Before that it was not even called Longwood, it was called State Female Normal School. But through it all, CHI, Blue-N-White, and pride in Spirit Activities lasted. They were started before anyone in this Administration was even born. But what do they do? They want to change things around. First came the banners — we have all heard about that issue. Now Geist cannot even decorate the dining hall for Oktoberfest. Not one streamer. Not one damn balloon. Big deal, you say. But a lot of faculty and Administrators think Oktoberfest is childish, and want to do away with it — especially the skits. The skits are childish? Then why were the one-thousand-plus seats full for both nights last year?

Call me a Ra Ra Joe, I know you are not much for Blue-N-White and the color class activities. That's cool because I don't care for journalism much either. But the point is this — where is this Administration going to stop? The members of this Administration came to Longwood, already a well-established school. But what they are trying to do is make Longwood a part of them instead of becoming a part of Longwood and perpetuating its spirit. They want to put their stamp on everything that crosses their desks. You can see this from Ms. Mable's office because there is always some piece of paper shooting out of there announcing something or another with her name scribbled on the bottom like she was asked to sign an autograph.

A very good example of this attitude that the Administration has can be seen in the school colors. They want to change the colors — catch this — to Green and Gold-Yellow-whatever. Alice Martin who works in the Office for Institutional Advancement under Don Lemish, said that Blue-White was old and boring. At East Carolina they have Purple and Orange (Whatever and whatever) . . . she said. I am so happy for East Carolina. Longwood happens to be a little bit north of there though and it does not need such a ridiculous color change. You don't go changing things around just for the hell of it, folks. I am sure a move like that is going to go over big with the Alumni — a very important group when it comes to the $$.

I love this school and want to perpetuate the traditions and activities. I want to enhance the educational and social opportunities here, that is why I joined the Ambassador program. But let me tell you, when it comes to the Telefund that the Ambassadors run, I don't want to even have my name linked with this Administration and I would not blame any Alumni if they hang up on me when I call for donations.

Maybe you think you need to be here, Jan, Michael, Phyllis, Ray, Wendal, and Don, but I certainly don't want you here.

Sincerely Longwood's
Colin Shanahan

Editor's Note:

Thank you so much for informing the student body that the administration is planning to do away with Oktoberfest — skits, clowns, balloons and all. It's hard to believe any administration would attempt such a coup. Congratulations, Dr. Greenwood and cronies.

By the way Alice Martin has informed me that she never said any of the things you said she said and she happens to like blue and white.

One last engmatic thought from William Blake's The Marriage of Heaven and Hell — "Expect poison from standing water."

"A Bite Too Much?"

The expenditures for dining hall services perlex me. When a student has a meal in the dining hall and the main topic of discussion among the people at the table is excess spending for meals, it whould be presented before the dining hall management with proposals for reformation that will be receptive to the student.

Optional meal plans offer an alternative worthy of consideration.

Of the three meals provided by the dining hall, many students miss breakfast. I, for one, have never eaten breakfast since school began this fall. Some students protest that breakfast is served too early. They say they don't have morning classes and that it would be foolish to rise early in the morning just to eat breakfast and then return to their room and catch up on more sleep. They suggest that if breakfast hours were extended they wouldn't complain. Then, there is also left for consideration the student who just doesn't eat breakfast. The supervisors of ARA should take these facts into consideration for improvement. Could this unused portion of students' monies be the reason why we have carnations placed on the dining tables weekly? Could this also be why the dining hall doesn't serve fried shrimp on Fridays anymore?

The cost of campus living risen drastically, and though there have been economical amendments made throughout the school, it seems the dining hall has been overlooked. The administration says they are trying their hardest to comply with students' needs without charging any more than is absolutely necessary, but the dining hall has yet to make front page headlines.

It would be worthy of ARA to provide meal tickets for students. This could be optional for those students who seldom eat in the dining hall along with day students.

Another alternative would be the two meal plan — lunch and dinner. The student who wishes to remain with the option to three meals a day could be identified with the regular ID card, whereas the student preferring the two meal plan could use a different color card. Perhaps this could be implemented as early as the second semester.

George Hughes

up, I knew I made a mistake." He relaxes, looks around, then back at me. "This has really helped me get going. I think it's helped everyone who's in it."

Explaining his reason for breaking and entering, Sylvester said "I didn't have any money." His voice raised a bit as if to get his point across..."Now I do. I have money in my pocket...I couldn't find a job...there were no jobs...now at least I have a job." Now, at 20 years of age, with two years of jail behind him, he felt he was headed in the right direction, though he "had to learn the hard way."

One client when speaking of jobs replied, "This is really nice to have. I can get out, have a job. There are no jobs, no places to go. I want to get out of Virginia. There's no money around here. This way I have a place to go and food."

Another statement: "They (Project Breakthrough) will help you if you have no money. They find you a place to live and pay the first months rent and grocery bill. After that, you're on your own.

Robert, another client working at Longwood says, "It's good to be able to walk around on weekends with money in your pocket." He wants to keep working and save money to settle down in the next few years. He plans to keep away from trouble or he will have to go to the State Penn for 20 years.

Asking Robert why he attempted armed robbery, he got quiet. He looked down at his hands cupped in his lap and replied, "Me and my friends got drunk one night and just weren't thinking... I think now though."

Maryann Greenwell from the Project Breakthrough office says, "We teach them how to be self supported. If they're not living at home, we'll find them a boarding house. We may help them out at first, but from there, they're on their own. They buy their own clothes, food and do their cooking and laundry."

When these men are first brought to the Project Breakthrough office, they are screened carefully and if accapted, are required to go to two weeks of classes from 8:30 to 1:00 every day. These classes involve the goals to be achieved and discuss values. Other classes are held which involve close counseling, job readiness training, personal management skills and employment counseling, individual needs, job development and placement, referral occupational training, medical and health assistance, food assistance, transitional housing and transportation, and a number of other programs.

Education classes are held because it is often found some of the clients only have the equivalent of a 6th grade education. For those more advanced, they are given the opportunity to get their GED. A skill center is also open for job readiness and job searching and interviewing.

Grateful Dead Live!

By JEFF ABERNATHY

"Is this 1969 or what?" University of Virginia students were asking this question last week when the Grateful Dead played to a capacity crowd at University Hall in Charlottesville.

It has been sixteen years since the Grateful Dead produced their first album, entitled "The Grateful Dead". Seventeen albums and literally thousands of boot-legged cassettes and albums later, the Dead were on tour through Virginia and Maryland at UVA Sept. 14 and at the Capital Centre in Landover, Maryland September 15. The UVA show was the band's second Virginia sell-out in 1982 (April 3 — Norfolk Scope) in as many appearances.

The group's intermittent popularity in those sixteen years has survived a 1967 drug bust in New Orleans, the bad publicity of the Stone's Gimme Shelter and the Monterey Pop Festival, as well as numerous reported break-ups. In his book, The Dead, Hank Harrison calls the Dead "the single most popular unknown rock group in the world—a group known to everyone who broke the law but to almost no one on the straight side." Bill Graham, the San Francisco rock promoter who booked the Dead and nineteen other groups at the Labor Day weekend US Festival in San Bernardino, California, said the Grateful Dead is not "the best at what they do; they're the only ones who do what they do."

The UVA concert opened late with "Jack Straw" from the Europe '72 album. The first set included "Lazy Lightnin' " and "Deal." "Peggy-O" featured a strong solo by Brent Mydland on keyboards. While the individual songs were all performed well, the first set never really flowed. Each song was followed by a thirty to forty second break while Bob Weir, rhythm guitarist, adjusted the equipment and Jerry Garcia, lead guitarist, huffed down a Camel

It wasn't until the second set that the spontaneity which is so characteristic of the Dead began to hit home. Opening with "China Cat Sunflower," the band made an excellent transition into "I know you Rider." Weir's "Estimated Prophet" (California . . .) got a good crowd response. The drum solo by both Dead drummers, Billy Kreutzman and Mickey Hart, was fairly short, about ten minutes, but showed the perfect timing which the pair has acquired over the years. The other members walked out on stage to incite screams from the audience, after which they led into "Iko Iko". Deviating from his usual laid-back silence, the band's bass player, Phil Lesh, really got into this one, dancing back and forth with the crowd as Garcia sang. The encore for the show, "Johnny B. Goode" is the Dead's version, and a good re-make, of the 1954 pop hit.

It is a unique experience to watch Bob Weir and Jerry Garcia on stage. The two seem to contrast each other sharply, yet they complement each other successfully, leading the band through the songs.

Wearing typical jeans and an Izod, Weir was the most visible member of the band. He was flamboyant; walking out to the crowd on his solos. He joked with the crowd when an amplifier blew in the second set. He threw his arm down at the guitar on strong notes and spoke for the group when they left the stage. Weir's vocal leads were at his best in "CC Rider," and "Jack Straw."

Conversely, Garcia, who turned forty in August, was relatively quiet during the two and a half hour concert. Often he played with his back turned partially to the audience, and he looked out at the audience only occasionally. He did joke with the drummers once or twice, but didn't say anything to the crowd. His concentration seemed overpowering, particularly on his solos in "Big Railroad Blues" and "China Cat." Garcia's "Bird Song" and "Deal," both written with Robert Hunter, were great, and, along with Lesh, he seemed to enjoy the crowd's response to "Iko Iko."

So much of a Dead show is the people, everybody seems to be in harmony, just enjoying the music in one way or another. As I was leaving the UVA show I noticed a friend of mine sitting on the floor in front of the stage. I asked him if he enjoyed the show. Sweat was streaming down his face and he was breathing hard. "Nothin' like a Dead show," he said, "just ain't nothin' like it." "Yep," I had to agree, "Absolutely."

Trible to Speak

Paul Trible, Republican candidate for U. S. Senate, will be in the Gold Room on Saturday, September 25, 1982, from 4:30-5:30 p.m. He is being sponsored by the Prince Edward County Republican Party. All students are invited to attend and to hear Mr. Trible's views on current issues and to ask questions of concern to young people.

Film Series

"This has been a very popular event here in the past few years; there are always people standing at the back because the auditorium fills so fast," said Dr. James W. Jordan of the 1982-83 Anthropology film series beginning tomorrow night in Bedford Auditorium.

The first film in the Series, which will be shown Wednesday at 7:30, is entitled Rivers of Sand, a study of the Hamer people who live in the Southern part of Ethiopia, a country in Eastern Africa.

The theme of the film is the exploitation and subjugation of women in the Hamer culture. The men, through the culture of the years, look down on women, give women all the undignified, dirty work, and handle the prestigious jobs themselves, such as looking after the cattle, animals of great dignity in the Hamer community. Ironically, however, the men are also placed in a limited social world due to their own unsocial attitudes toward women; they can only associate with other men for their recreation and intellectual ideas.

The film was directed, photographed, and narrated by the world famous anthropological film maker, Robert Gardner.

All films in the Anthropology Film Series are free. A brief introduction to the film and the Hamer people will be given by Dr. Jordan, Head of the Anthropology Dept. All students, faculty, and general public are invited to attend.

Other films to be shown throughout the semester are Holy Ghost People and Floating in the Air, October 20. The first film is a record of religious fervor in a West Virginia religious cult, compared to the second film, a recording of the Hindu Festival of Thaipusam, in which Hindu holy men enter entranced states.

The Hunters, will be shown November 17; a film recording of ten days in the life of a band of King Bushmen of the Kalahari Desert as the King hunters treck and kill a giraffe.

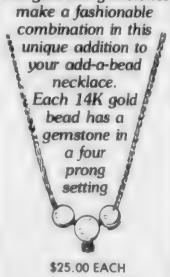
Five County Fling

By DEBBIE RIPPY

Paul and Beth were strolling through the fairgrounds at 9:30 p.m. admiring the sights of the lighted rides in motion. All of a sudden, Beth was jerked backwards only to find that Paul had stopped. Why did he stop so suddenly? Why, to watch the outside 'girl shows,' of course; which entices all male viewers to come inside for more.

However, this was not the case this year. The Five County Fair wanted to be a family fair, a place where anyone could walk through the fairgrounds and find something to amuse themselves, without having to avoid the back corner.

Along with the girl shows not being a part of this year's fair, there was not the usual deformed animals show, the show of incredible feats and the haunted house. I wonder if part of the reason these shows were not here this year is due to the coverage that Little Richard's received from the show 20-20.



Even though a lot of the gimmicks were shown on 20-20 about the carnival games and your chances to win, there were still many people willing to spend their money trying to win the prizes.

So what happened to Paul and Beth this year? Paul probably stayed home since there were no girl shows, and Beth probably went with a friend or took her little brother or sister.

State of the Artificial Intelligence

There is a red block underneath a green block — the object is to pick up the red block, so . . .

"Why did you pick up the green block?"

"To get rid of it."

"Why did you do that?"

"So I could pick up the red block."

"Why did you do that?"

"Because you told me to."

A "smart answer" to say the least, and smartness would seem to aptly summarize what was the subject for the first Francis Butler Simkins Lecture of this year.

Held at Molnar Recital Hall in Wygal Building, Longwood, last Thursday, September 16, the subject for the lecture was Artificial Intelligence. The above conversation according to lecturer Dr. David L. Waltz, professor of electrical engineering at the University of Illinois, was between a programmer and a computer — the computer is the one that said "Because you told me to"

Simply defined, Artificial Intelligence or AI is "the endeavor to get computers to do tasks which would be said to require intelligence if people did them." Not so simply put into practice, Artificial Intelligence has so far been used in GM Assembly lines (literally picking out defective products), as a diagnostic tool for doctors (generally used as second opinion), as an aid in finding the correct route on street maps, and developing solutions to problems (such as in a chess game), which were previously thought unsolvable.

It may well bring about what Dr. Waltz likes to think of as a second industrial revolution. Some of the areas he feels AI has, or will affect are: 1) Assembly; 2) Mining; 3) Automotive Design; 4) Agriculture; 5) Teaching; 6)Planning and Inventory Control; 7) Household Robots; 8) Space Exploration and Development; 9) War Application — "electronic battlefields," "smart" bombs; 10) Possible Aids to the Handicapped; 11) "Cognitive Science — understanding our own minds or "understanding understanding."

"These computers could become our libraries of the future . . . providing access to all human knowledge. They may answer questions which can't be answered now."

Of course there are drawbacks — such as a possible "Big Brother" scenario or extensive use of AI in military technology. But Dr. Waltz remains optimistic, stressing the adaptability of humans and choosing to think that computers (as in Isaac Asminov's "I, Robot") will provide a far less dangerous and physically less harsh environment for humans — "A soft, friendly environment, where the machine watches out for us."

But then one can never be too sure with AI, which although opening the door to a new Age of Enlightenment, may also be opening a Pandora's box, as Dr. Waltz himself put it, "I don't think any of us know what we're getting into."

Dr. Waltz has been a consultant for Hughes Aircraft Company, Machine Intelligence Corporation, Comtex Scientific Corporation and others, has published numerous professional papers and articles, and has lectured at major universities in this country and abroad.

Last month, he served as program chairman for the National Conference on Artificial Intelligence, and for three years he was chairman of the Association for Computing Machinery's Special Interest Group on Artificial Intelligence.

At the University of Illinois, his group designed and constructed an experimental English language question-answering system called PLANES that served as a front end for a large data base of Navy aircraft flight and maintenance information.

Most recently, Dr. Waltz has been attempting to build systems that combine his two central interests — language and perception.

Casual Sex: It Beats Farmville's Movies

It was senior Dean Driskill who replied that casual sex "is better than most of the movies in Farmville."

Tuesday night at the Personal Life Seminar.

Nancy had a hush hush view on casual sex, "Most girls don't talk about it, they usually don't mention it."

She was quickly rebutted by a female member of the audience who matter of factly stated "I think it is important to girls, they do talk about it."

Dean Driskill agreed "I have heard girls talk graphically about casual sex. I've heard girls say things like 'I really knocked that guy out last night.' "

So began a series of five lectures mainly designed as orientation programs for freshmen but open to everyone.

The first in this series was conducted in Bedford Auditorium and dealt with intimate relationships. Dr. Jay Cox, director of counseling services, introduced the program and followed his introduction by a short dissertation on relationships and the initial establishment of them He also challenged the audience to deal with anger. He suggested talking openly about your anger and getting the problem clearly defined so that it can be abolished. According to Dr. Cox, "If you can deal with anger, and you can clarify expectations...you can make your relationship work."

After his mini-lecture Dr. Cox turned the program to Dr. Ann Barlow and her group of five experts (previously selected for the program) that served as a panel to answer questions about relationships.

University in Lyon and the University of Grenoble II. She noted that France, which has a large number of foreign students, is increasing its aid to higher education at a time when this country is decreasing its funding.

The presidents will be together at the beginning before splitting up into groups of two or three, said Dr. Maurice Harari, AASCU's vice president for international programs and coordinator for the American Institute for Foreign Study.

From Tuesday until she leaves for Paris on the 25th, Dr. Greenwood will be a guest of Clemens and Neeltje van der Vens, who live in Holland near Amsterdam. The van der Ven's who own and have restored Snowden, a James River plantation in Goochland County, have developed a "substantial interest" in Longwood, Dr. Greenwood said. Owners of an extensive collection of procelain vases, the van der Vens have given the College two vases that are kept in the front hallway at Longwood House, the president's residence.

"We want to pursue discussions on ways they can help the College," she explained.

After the mission ends, Dr.

A Tribute

By CHRIS YOUNG

Twelve years ago last Sunday, James Marshall Hendrix died at the age of 27. He died by inhaling his own vomit. It is still unclear whether it was suicide, or an accidential overdose of sleeping pills.

What is clear is the fact that Jimi Hendrix, to put it bluntly, was the best guitarist ever. His technique and raw talent were overwhelming. Not only an ambidextrous guitarist, he could also play with his teeth. (Listen to "Johnny B. Goode from Soundtrack Experience, Volume I).

Jimi Hendrix is also noted for his extensive use of feedback and distortion. Although groups like the Who and the Yardbirds had used distortion, Hendrix was the only one who could harness it as a lethal weapon. His overwhelming guitar playing often overshadowed his songwriting ability. Although he did a lot of cover versions of other people's songs (i.e. "Wild Thing," "Johnny B. Goode" and even the "Star Spangled Banner"), he wrote a number of songs that are now classics. ("Purple Haze," "Little Wing," "All Along the Watch Tower").

Jimi Hendrix was discovered by former Animals' bass, Chas Chandler, who saw Hendrix playing at a club in Grenwich Village, and knew he had struck gold. He released Jimi Hendrix to the public.

In 1966, Hendrix was a bluesman, but by 1967, The Jim Hendrix Experience had charted over three top 10 albums.

Having done everything with his guitar from burning it to fornicating with it, Jimi Hendrix was dubbed "The Wild Man Borneo."

This image was fitting, but not true. Hendrix loved the blues, and under all the show, he wanted to play the blues.

According to his biography, Jimi Hendrix Voodoo Child of the Aquarian Age (now called 'Scuse Me While I Kiss the Sky), this wild image, along with being temporarily banned from recording or performing sent Hendrix into depression.

He never came out.

It is unclear what his impact was, but it is safe to say that rock music as we know it wouldn't be the same without his influence.

Jimi Hendrix was the Experience.

Greenwood will make a "quick stop" in Spain on October 8 and 9. In Madrid and Salamanca she will visit with officials of the university in each city, as well as with persons from the University of Seville. While in Spain, Dr. Greenwood will link up with a University of Virginia-affiliated group.

Within a year French university presidents will be coming to the United States; hopefully, to Longwood, Dr. Greenwood said.

release program. This deals with working with inmates 3 months before they are released. Therefore, when their time is up, they are prepared right then for any job opportunity.

This program has had a fairly good turnout so far. According to Maryann Greenwell, "Job placement has reached nearly 80 percent which is not bad at all." She went on to say: "You're always going to find a certain few looking for a handout and easy way out, but so far we've found very few like that. These people want jobs and know they are hard to find.

The parolees involved in Project Breakthrough come from all over the state. They can be referred by any institution. The office located in Farmville was recently set up, but other offices are located in Virginia. These offices get their funds from the federal government who supports them 100 percent.

The results from this program have been so great. Mr. Moore wants to continue it for as long as possible. He says, "As long as they keep sending me guys, I'll keep taking them."

Overall, the parolees here on Longwood Campus have come a long way. As Robert said, "I'd like to keep on working...I don't know where... somewhere. I'm gonna save, buy a car... a popular car." Then, with an air of determination, he concludes, "a Camaro."

El Greco

Possibly the essential forebear of today's free-spirited thinkers, an artist called "El Greco" by natives in his adopted city, was the subject of a major international exhibition held at the National Gallery of Art in Washington D.C., for two months this summer. Barely catching the last weekend of the touring exhibition, about 25 Longwood students and faculty travelled to Washington to experience this rare event.

The group left Farmville at 6 a.m. on Saturday, September 4, for a day of museum touring, lecture, discussion, and questions.

El Greco was born Domenikos Theokopoules in Crete in 1515. At 36, he moved to Toledo, Spain where his artistic work flourished. The exhibition consisted of 57 paintings, most of which came from Spain. "From what I could determine," said trip coordinator, Dr. Elizabeth Flynn, "the students were fascinated to see originals of great works of art." It took about four or five years to put together this exhibition, which travelled to Toledo, Ohio September 6, and will end its tour in Houston.

The L.C. students who went on this trip, one of several art trips planned this semester, had reservations to go right into the show without waiting in line, and had the afternoon off to go through the Smithsonian Institute, or to see other art exhibitions.

The Good Times That We Had

By GWEN STEPHENSON

And that's exactly what we did have, too, Wednesday night in the Gold Room with singer - songwriter John Paul Walters and his friend — the bass player, Frank Brown.

John Paul introduced "The Good Times That We Had" as a song about his college years at the University of Florida. He and a group of male friends rented a house off campus. It came unfurnished, but since the leader of the gang was a graduate student in horticulture, he and his cronies stole $2000 worth of plants from the university greenhouse, and their bungalow promptly became "The Garden Home."

John Paul is a player of piano, guitar, banjo and dulcimer (though he did not play the dulcimer Wed. night, much to my regret). His home is in Nashville, Tennessee, with wife Jan and "the best dog in the whole world," Jeremiah.

The first song he sang was Simon & Garfunkel's "Homeward Bound." The audience of 50-75 students promptly fell in love with his easy, unaffected way. He followed with a beautiful rendition of J. Taylor's "Fire and Rain." John Paul sang us a couple songs of his own making, "Fool's Gold" and "Angel."

"If an angel came to see you would you make her feel at home? Or would you let her pass you by, and spend your life alone?

If an angel came to see you and you did not know her name, would you let her be your friend without knowing why she came?"

Then Mr. Walters did something truly astonishing. He encouraged a group of tired, young college students to sing along — "Fox on the Run," "Will the Circle be Unbroken," "Rocky Top," a fun song of his own called "Country Boy." And did these jaded, sophisticated college students actually sing? They did indeed, and had one hell of a good time doing it, too.

He proceeded to mellow out his audience; close out his show with "Summertime" (from Porgy & Bess, for you Broadway buffs), done under soft blue lights.

THE ROTUNDA

VOL. LVIII | LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1982 | NO. 6

Trible Speaks At Lankford

Paul Trible, the Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, was in Farmville last Saturday at a reception given in his honor by the Prince Edward County Republican Party. Mr. Trible, who is currently serving as the Congressman from the first congressional district, spoke to a gathering of approximately seventy people in the Gold Room. During his address, Trible stated that his ability and experience has been proven by his record for the past six years in Congress.

Attacking his opponent, Trible stated that Lieutenant Governor Dick Davis was "not content with the 98 billion tax package" and wanted to raise taxes even higher. Trible differentiated himself even further from Davis by expressing his firm belief that the "problem in Washington is not that taxes are too low — we have to hold down on spending."

Before rushing off to catch the plane that would take him to the next stop in his campaign, Trible was able to share his views concerning a few current issues with the Rotunda.

Rotunda: How do you stand on voluntary prayer in school?

Trible: I'm for it.

Rotunda: As you know, many people are calling for a nuclear freeze. Do you believe that such an action would be an effective means of preventing a nuclear war?

Trible: I was the first Virginian to urge the Reagan Administration to return to the negotiating table with the Soviets in the effort to achieve a fair and enforceable arms reduction treaty. Any nuclear freeze must be accompanied by arms reduction and verification.

Rotunda: The execution of convicted murderer Frank Coppola brought national attention to Virginia and raised questions concerning the place of capital punishment in our society. Do you believe Capital punishment belongs in our system of justice?

Trible: I believe there are certain crimes that are premeditated and cold bloodedly executed for which capital punishment is an appropriate sanction.

Rotunda: Are you for or against gun control?

Trible: As a former prosecutor I do not believe that gun control is an effective means of stopping the flow of firearms to the criminal. Rather we need strict and mandatory jail terms for the people that carry dangerous weapons on the commission of crimes.

Rotunda: Recently, there have been proposals favoring a cut back on student assistance loans. Do you support these cutbacks?

Trible: As a member of the budget committee this year, I supported a restoration of monies for education and job training. I fully support the student Assistance programs that have helped millions of young Americans get a quality education and become productive citizens.

Rotunda: The Reagan administration is calling for a stronger National Defense. Do you believe that these increases are necessary?

Trible: I believe that we must spend more money on National defense but those monies must be wisely spent. As a member of the Armed Services Committee, I've worked hard to encourage innovative thinking about the essential building blocks of a strong national defense — strategy and tactics, hardware, and people.

Dr. Scott and Paul Trible discuss Politics in Lankford.

From Coloring Books To Lathes

By NATALIE BETZ and RICHARD BRYANT

"When the project opened, the workers colored in coloring books. Now they are working with lathes and turning out perfectly good furniture," said Pat Payne, a Pre-Med graduate of Longwood, now Director of the Tri-County Sheltered Workshop, located on Depot Street in Farmville, which attracts workers from Prince Edward, Cumberland, Buckingham, Amelia, Nottoway, Lunenburg and Appomattox Counties.

The Workshop opened in May of 1976 as a satellite of Sheltered Workshop of Lynchburg, Inc. As of October 1, the Workshop will become legally independent of the Lynchburg Workshop. It is a non-profit corporation whose purpose is to give the mentally, physically and emotionally handicapped people a chance to learn a trade, earn a salary and learn to fend for themsleves.

Walking into the workshop is a little surprising. It is a very old, somewhat drab building filled to the hilt with furniture, clothes and equipment. However, the people who work there seem very content with their work and with themselves. Barbara, who has been with the workshop for six years, says, "I like the work." She does chair caning and woodwork. When asked if she learned her jobs easily, she smiled and replied, "It all came in no time at all." All of the workers seem to have had little trouble learning their jobs and are proud of their development.

When speaking with Pat Payne, she expresses her total devotion to the workshop, "I'm in love with my job, although it is the hardest job I've ever had. And these are the finest people I've ever worked with." She feels the job is rewarding and said, "I've seen lives changed in here."

The people often work with complex and dangerous tools. While walking through the workshop, one can see a young woman caning a chair with an extremely sharp knife, handling it with dexterity, diligence and little concern of danger. There have been no major accidents at the workshop since its opening.

Becky, who has been in the workshop's employ for a year, beamed with excitement while telling about her new responsibility of answering the phone. She sat at the side of an aisle, near the telephone, anticipating the chance to use her recently acquired skill.

"A lot of businessmen are not willing to go out on a limb and give these people a chance. They have a very hard time finding a job," said Jesse Spivey, a vocational skills trainer. "I think these people just need a chance to prove themselves in the outside world. They will give it a damn good try."

Workers arrive at the Workshop by buses or by private transportation Monday through Friday; and work average hours. Specific jobs are upholstering, woodworking, chair caning, and furniture refinishing. They are presently refinishing a sofa and two chairs for Longwood administrative offices.

Currently, the workers are planning a new project to sell deck chairs to Longwood and Hampden-Sydney students. The chairs will be made from oak wood with canvas backing, a moisture resistant finish. The chairs can be easily disassembled for moving and are available in six colors. They will also be available with fraternity and sorority insignias and college seals. The estimated price per chair is $34.00. In the future, they would like to start recycling glass and aluminum

Special projects are provided for the workers. Longwood's Lancer Pool is available for their enjoyment every Friday afternoon. In December, either Longwood or Hampden-Sydney will be sponsoring a Special Olympics for them to compete in.

Registration

Dr. Chuck Ballard, chairman of the Voter Registration Campaign (sponsored by Farmville Jaycees) is recruiting helpers from Longwood campus in his effort to register voters for the November elections. Two campus groups Alpha Phi Omega, a coed national fraternity and the Sociology and Anthropology club of Longwood, have volunteered their assistance in distributing door to door flyers and setting up information booths in front of several local businesses.

To register, go to the Town Municipal building room no. 1 from 9:00-12:00 and 1:00-5:00 Tuesday-Thursday at least 30 days prior to the Nov. 2 elections. Qualification to register requires 1) being a resident of Prince Edward County, 2) being 18 years old and older as of Nov. 2, 3) not having any convictions, 4) not adjudicated mentally incompetent.

Registration forms for students wishing to send in absentee ballots can be found in the counseling service rooms on 1st floor French dormitory. Sign-up sheets for volunteers offering their assistance in distributing flyers or manning registration booths are on the 2nd floor Hiner bulletin board.

Gyre Judges

The Gyre, Longwood's literary magazine has begun organization for the 1982-83 publication, out in March, 1983.

They will be judging poetry, short fiction and prose along with art work as they are submitted. Initial submissions are due by December 10, 1982, and can be turned in to Gyre, Box 1135. All copies will be returned. There will be a prize for artwork and the literary piece that is judged the winner.

Don't let the Bastards get you Down

"So hail the Bastards! Merry-be-got!

Give credit where it's due!

But who knows which one, which are not?

Could I be one? could you?

For many a man rocks another man's cradle

While he thinks he is rocking his own,

And many a dame — like the sphinx with its riddle,

In her heart seals her secret alone." Guy Hoover

"So you're a Longwood College student eh?"

"Yes sir"

"terrible, terrible"

Dr. George W. Jeffers was not one to mince words, nor topics for books, his favorite at this time being bastards or those people conceived or born out of wedlock. "It seemed interesting...it is interesting!" One couldn't argue with the rationale nor the man who sat before me. At 85 Dr. Jeffers is, to say the least, energetic and not a little bit spicy. His study reflects his personality. Wide open windows and a desk cluttered with lists of things — things some people may call intriguing, things others may call downright distraceful...like bastards, for instance.

He has an adamant fear that Jerry Falwell will burn a cross in his lawn some night. "People don't understand...just because a man's a bastard doesn't mean he's no good...he's just illegitimate. In other words, we can't inherit a crown or title...it's a wonderful topic, really!"

Perhaps by comparison, it is a wonderful topic or at least not as controversial as say, a dictionary of famous homosexuals, a topic which he "had to burn up...there were too many of them now everybody's a homosexual." But bastards; bastards are special people — Leonardo da Vinci was one, so was Charlemagne, William the Conquerer, Cleopatra, Alexander Hamilton, Erasmus, Lawrence of Arabia, Rod McKuen and Fidel Castro.

Also several popes and saints were among figures who entered the world outside the bonds of wedlock, according to the list of approximately 1,000 bastards that the retired Longwood biology professor has been assembling over the past 25 to 30 years. Recently the list has been distilled and the biographical backgrounds expanded and embellished in Dr. Jeffers' new book "The Bastard's Book."

There was, he indicates, a certain element of the biologist in him that has nourished his interest in compiling names and biographies of noteworthy bastards over the years "as a biologist, I knew there was something to hybridization and how "genetic lines sometimes yield outstanding products through hybridization...some of the top brains who ever existed were bastards."

Much of his material is obtained from biographies which Dr. Jeffers, a voracious reader, is instantly reviewing. Also an organization named the Barsinister society has given their support and available information on living bastards to Dr. Jeffers. Not surprisingly the Barsinister society is made up of bastards who decided to organize themselves and do exactly what Dr. Jeffers had already done — compile a list of notable bastards.

Somewhat disheartened, but being bastards persevering, they swore allegiance and aide to Dr. Jeffers and as he put it "did the dirty work."

The Bastard's Book includes more than just biographies of bastards, Dr. Jeffers points out emphatically, there are also synonyms which have an interesting history of his own. "Love accident," "Love child", "Merry-be-Got" and "Son of a Gun."

"Son of a Gun" is a term that has a dual origin. One version is that it refers to a soldiers illegitimate child. Another is that it comes from the Napoleanic period when women were often allowed on ships, with the result that an occasional baby would be born aboard. It was believed that labor was facilitated by fright, and a gun would be fired to frighten the prospective mother.

There are of course, different types of bastards — women bastards, black bastards, military bastards, adventurer and explorer bastards, artists bastards, politian bastards, bastards of fiction and mythology (Hercules, Oliver Twist, Romulus and Renus etc.) even Golf pro bastards (would you believe Lee Trevino).

Considering the excellent background of many of his bastards one question seemed particularly appropriate, are you a bastard? Dr. Jeffers laughed. "No", I'm not a bastard". He seemed almost disappointed.

Dr. Jeffers was born in 1897 in Freshwater, New Foundland. After becoming a United States citizen in 1938, he obtained his B.S. and M.A. degrees from Boston University and his doctorate in marine biology from the University of Toronto in 1931.

Dr. Jeffers was one of the co-founders of the National Association of Biology teachers and was a professor of biology for 42 years at Longwood College, where he resided as chairman of the science department. The science auditorium at Longwood is named after him. His book will be available at the Longwood Bookstore beginning September 28 and he will be on hand to sign editions from 3:30-4:30, September 29.

Archeology Ace

Second Article of a Two-Part Series)

By CINDY CORELL

"What's so special about this site is that it is 'my baby'," said Bob Flippen of third site in conjunction with others on Hampden-Sydney College campus. "Dr. Jordan has given me all the responsibility of it, especially the administrative part, which is the experience I need." Bob has been very involved in these three archeology sites and is very excited about the third. He is looking for volunteers for the excavation in October.

The first site on H-SC campus, offically called H-S1, was discovered when Mrs. Josiah Bunting, the president's wife, was having work done on a building behind the president's home. The building is believed to be a slave cabin. A trustee of the college had donated funds to have the building restored for a guest house. Workmen ripped up the floor of the building and found several blue bottles. Mrs. Bunting called in Dr. James W. Jordan of the Longwood Anthropology Department to investigate this find. Dr. Jordan called Bob, who is considered an expert of historic bottles.

Bob came down the following weekend from George Washington University to check out the bottles and became very interested in the entire project.

Dr. Theodore R. Reinhart, Associate Professor of Anthropology from William and Mary College also came to the aid of the crew as a field consultant. "His expertise was very important in identifying objects and dating them," said Dr. Jordan, "and his efforts were entirely a labor of love for anthropology's sake."

Dr. Jordan called for volunteers to help excavate the site. It was the perfect time for archeology — mid-spring and L.C. students came out several weekends. Near the middle of the completion of the excavation, the school term ended and the Longwood Anthropology Field School began. Nineteen students in the Field School went to the site and finished the excavation.

The slave cabin had three rooms and each room was gridded into quadrants. In the room that the original bottles were found, the students found more, about 200 total, ceramic wares, two VMI cadet brass buttons, and many small animal skeletons.

The bottles could be aged by type of manufacture. Evidence of their manufacture lies mainly in the seam up the side of the bottle: if the seam continues up the side to the neck of the bottle, it was made by machine; if the seam endes before the neck, it was hand made because the neck was put on by hand. Both types of these methods of manufacture were found in the slave cabin floor, so the bottles were left there during the transition of bottle manufacture, about the 1800's to the 1920's.

In another room, the students uncovered a pit, believed to be a root cellar. They found old bricks in the formation of a cellar foundation below the floor of the oldest room in the cabin. The root cellar has now been restored, covered by a trap door and can easily be viewed as it is thought to have been when it was used.

When the L.C. Anthropology Field School came out to the H-S1 site, Mrs. Bunting realized that all 19 of the students would not fit comfortably in the small cabin, so she suggested that they move half of the students over to another project on the campus: digging for the foundations of the original (1776) Hampden-Sydney buildings. The exact layout of the original buildings was not known with certainty. So "in order to pick a starting point for our dig," Dr. Jordan said, "we used two methods, the first being that using clues from old documents, such as insurance policies, to help determine the actual measurements and probable locations of the buildings." Diaries were also useful. The second method was talking to groundsmen who had worked at the campus for many years, and can still remember when the foundations were visible.

Once a probable site was determined, H-S2 and a datum, or center point established, the students dug four twenty-five foot trenches, about ten inches deep, from the datum point in north, east, south and west directions. They discovered the foundation of a building which is believed to be the kitchen of the original home of the college's president.

The types of artifacts found in the excavation included the rubble of the kitchen's foundation and objects that would be commonly found in a kitchen, such as cutlery, animal bones with butchering marks and crockery.

Thirty-two clay pipestems were also found, common artifacts from sites like this, along with several parts of guns, flash pan of a rifle, shot and flint of a rifle. Many pieces of metal were also discovered some of which can be identified, some which remain a mystery.

Mrs. Bunting commented at the completion of the site excavation, that she hoped that the Longwood Field School would return to H-SC for further work.

This past summer, Bob Flippen was traveling past the site and noticed some activity which would lead to Mrs. Bunting's hope coming true. A team of telephone company workmen were close to the H-S2 site doing some salvage work before construction of a new dormitory begins.

During this salvage work, Bob noticed that the men were finding parts of another foundation, which would have been in the eastern shadow of the kitchen, H-S2. This site is now the official proving ground for students interested in Archeology. This is the project that Bob needs volunteers for.

Bob has planned an evening of orientation the week after Fall Break which will introduce and intrigue those students who are not especially knowledgeable about archeology, but at least interested in the subject. He will talk about past work at these sites, his plans for this excavation and show slides of previous excavation as introduction to archeological excavations.

Interested students are encouraged to contact the Department of Anthropology and Sociology, second floor Hiner at 392-9277, as soon as possible.

For The Record

The salary supplement which Longwood President Dr. Greenwood has received is part of a college contract which calls for a specific percentage (15 per cent) of the state salary to be provided for through college funds.

Longwood payed for the supplement of $8,006 from interest income on the Foundation's board unrestricted endowment fund (of about $230,000).

The Faculty Staff Fund Campaign was funneled into the Second Founders Fund, which is a restricted fund whose purpose is to build college and community relations. "Not a penny has been expended." said Dan Lemish head of the Office of Institutional Advancement.

Athletic scholarships for Longwood students come from two major sources — student fees and private gifts. Approximately 1.31 per cent of a student's fee of 1,360 goes towards athletic scholarships.

Funding for Dr. Greenwood's inauguration came from state funds appropriated for the inauguration and private donations. Since the ceremony was combined with Founders Day and Spring weekend, the estimated cost for just the inauguration was between $2,500 and $3,000.

Editor's Turn

A blue and beige pamphlet has been circulating the campus lately, running from hand to hand and spreading like an amiable germ bug, from mouth to mouth. Its topic is most definitely in vogue and quite the "thing" to be up on for pleasant dinner conversation and cocktails.

Preventing Nuclear War is its title and it compiles a list of facts which may possibly lend truth to the proverb "History is the propaganda of the Victors."

I'm not saying what's in this little pamphlet is completely false, but they do manage to jump over a few essential facts to reach their conclusion. "As a result, any sudden freeze (in the Nuclear arms bilateral build up) would penalize the West for showing considerable restraint during the same period the Soviets were having the largest military build-up in World History." They (being "the Committee to Prevent Nuclear War" who wrote the pamphlet, and who no doubt contributed to Reagan's Campaign fund or vice versa) base their conclusion on a somewhat biased (do I understate? — certainly) historical perspective on military actions undertaken in the global theatre for the last 20-30 years. Their contention is that from 19-45-1950 the U.S. and Britain did not use their superior power to dominate others and that from 1950-60 the same basic policy prevailed.

Biddledash: in 1946 Great Britain, after invading and conquering Greece after the Nazi's occupation, found itself unable to hold their conquest (more than likely due to their restoring royalists elements and Nazi collaborators to state power in Greece).

The United States, seeing armed resistance developing, displaced Britain under the auspices of the American Mission for Aid to Greece (AMAG) and lent its "fervent and uncompromising support to state violence, which included the imprisonment without trials of tens of thousands of people in concentration camps where they were subject to 'reindoctrination'." (Noam Chomsky. Towards a new cold war (pp. 198 and 199) "If" in the words of the AMAG chief "they were found to have affiliations which cast grave doubt upon their loyalty to the state."

U.S. Charge Karl Rankin warned later in 1948 that "there must...be no leniency toward the confirmed agents of an alien and subversive influence." He argued that execution of political prisoners (in Greece) was legitimate because even though when arrested they may not have been "hardened communists, it is unlikely that they (would) have been able to resist the influence of communist indoctrination organizations existing within most prisons."

"U.S. intelligence also engaged in extensive surveillance of Greek citizens and assisted the government in carrying out mass deportations of alleged subversives to concentration camps and reduction centers." (Noam Chomsky: Towards A New Cold War pp.198-199)

When a British official objected to rounding up 14,000 people and exiling them without trial to island concentration camps, American Ambassadors Lincoln Mac Veagh responded that the Greek government "had to throw their net very wide to catch the right people," whom he estimated at about "a dozen key men."

The list goes on.

For the last twenty years or so the United States has carried on a number of similar (if more covert) actions against Cuba. Apart from the attempts to assassinate Castro, which are well known, terrorists actions (sponsored by the U.S. government, via the CIA)included attacks on fishing boats and Cuban civilian installations, and poisoning of crops and livestock. . Taylor Branch and George Crile III authors of "The Kennedy Venditta: Our Secret War on Cuba" estimate that the four-year campaign involved several thousand men and cost as much as $100 million a year. "As late as 1964, the Agency was landing weapons in Cuba every week and sending up to fifty agents on missions to destroy oil refineries, railroad bridges and sugar mills ...and large scale raids aimed at blowing up refineries and chemical plants." Including ironically, an attack on a Texaco Oil refinery.

More recently in El Salvador, reports from the Hondura border describe the nature of the government which the U.S. is supporting, advising, training and arming.

David Blundy of the Sunday Times (London) spent ten days in the border area interviewing doctors, priests, Honduran soldiers, Salvadoran refugees and members of church aid groups who "Provided overwhelming evidence of atrocities of increasing brutality and repression by the Honduran army as well as the Salvadorians who are carrying out what can only be described as mass extermination of thousands of peasants living in the area," in a "coordinated military campaign by the Salvadoran military, assisted by the Honduran army with — according to Honduran sources — the support of the United States."

The Council on Hemispheric Affairs wrote in 1980: "More people have died in El Salvador during the past year, largely as the result of government condoned right wing "death squad" killings, than in all other nations of Latin America combined...The death toll reached almost 10,000 with the vast majority of the victims falling prey to the right-wing terrorism sanctioned by key government officials. These countless killings have gone unpunished and even uninvestigated as the governments own military and police force are almost always involved in them."

One can check the histories of Chile, Guatemala, Nicaragua and ah yes, the Achilles heel, Vietnam to find further incidences of the U.S. and its allies "not using" their superior power to dominate others. Not only does the pamphlet have such minor oversights as those listed above, it also contains a rather glaring oversight in basic logic. For instance, what are we deterring by a nuclear arms build-up — the U.S.S.R. from dropping 20,000 megatons worth of explosives on us...seconds before we drop the same on them? — hardly.

In the Spring issue of Foreign Affairs GeorgeMcBundy,George F. Kennan, Robert S. McNamara and Gerard Smith put forth a credible alternative to the arms race which would allow for "our" (NATO and U.S.) security and a no-first use policy. They realize that "The Soviet government is already aware of the awful risk inherent in any use of these weapons, and there is no current or prospective Soviet "Superiority" that would tempt anyone in Moscow toward nuclear adventurism."

Their idea locates the sensitive point for any probable Soviet conventional aggression—The Federal Republic of Germany- and contends that a conventional arms build-up in this region and others possible "sensitive zones" (enough to deter the threat of a possible conventional Soviet attack) would allow the U.S. to drop its "asserted willingness to be the first... to use nuclear weapons to defend (conventional) aggression in Europe" — the reason for its 37 year old "nuclear umbrella."

The advantages of such a proposal are manifold first, we can escape from the notion that we must somehow watch everything "the rocket commanders in the Soviet Union extract from their government." Second, it would allow us to give up the idea of deploying a neutron bomb which has caused so much anxiety for Western Europeans (particularly West Germans — and with good cause). Third, — "the savings permitted by a more modest nuclear arms program could go toward meeting the financial costs of our contribution to conventional forces."

Last and perhaps most important, a build-up of conventional arms would reduce (if not altogether eliminate) the risk of conventional aggression in Europe, which, in a situation where NATO conventional arms might be lacking, could lead to that decisive moment when the finger hits the little red button — boom.

To the Editor, Rotunda

I have never before written a letter to the editor of a college newspaper, for I have always believed that a college paper exists primarily for the students it serves, both as a training ground for tomorrow's journalists and as an information medium. While I have frequently been appalled enough — and occasionally outraged sufficiently — to write to the editor of the Rotunda about incidents at Longwood, I have always resisted the temptation. Until now.

Sometime last Tuesday night four unabridged dictionaries were taken from four classrooms in the Grainger building; the dictionaries had been bound to specially built tables and secured by light chains to the table's frame to discourage "impulsive borrowing," but everyone knew that such precautions would not prevent their theft if one were determined to remove them.

What a thoughtless, mindless, insensitive, cowardly action! And who are the losers? Not the English Department, nor its faculty, for we won't replace them. As usual in such matters, the students will lose — today's students and tomorrow's students. And they will lose not merely the convenience of having a dictionary available for their use while writing in-class themes or taking tests; they will also lose in countless other unknown ways, for the little touches undertaken by faculty members and administrators alike to improve Longwood's learning environment will no longer be undertaken: why bother to help those who don't want to be helped.

And no cop-outs, please, from those of you not involved in this particular incident, because there are enough of you out there who know about this and similar incidents who by your silence appear to condone the actions of the few, and thereby encourage further mindless and anti-social actions against Longwood's entire community: false fire alarms, stair-well and hall dorm fires, broken statues of Joan of Arc, and too many other signs and symbols of sick and diseased minds. W.L. FRANK

Editors Note: The Dictionaries cost approximately $57.00 each when bought. Cost for replacements will probably be higher.

To the Editor:

I wish to address several points of Mr. Shanahan's letter of Sept. 21, and render an adverse point of view: specifically, mine.

I am entering my fourth and hopefully final year at Longwood. Since my initial enrollment, I have patiently endured the food, out of touch administrators, and traditions that each year become more obsolete, and seemingly out of place at a college. Why? Because I felt that I was getting something which could aid me in later life, an opportunity I was so fortunately afforded, an education. I, as Mr. Shanahan, rank this college high on my list, but as a result of the recent administrative "flushing", feel neither left out nor put down, and certainly not kicked in the seat. Rather, I find it admirable to speak to an administrator without the customary drumming of fingers, clock watching, and the occasional sigh of "yea, sure" as the only retort. Why even Mr. Shanahan, in his letter, has shown the compatability of the new members in that he has already established a first name basis! He speaks so fondly of CHI, blue and white, and other traditions, but admits they are neandethal. These "traditions" were brought into being by girls, for girls. Perhaps were some of these "girly" traditions disbanded, so would be the ever-present "Girls School" label that Longwood has carried for so long.

The banners in the dining hall were also a target of his rage. Well put this in your Kazoo and foot it, Mr. Ra Ra: I find it disgusting to eat in a dining hall which is randomly strewn with posters spouting irrelevance about someone's birthday. Really, besides the birthday person, and a handful of friends, who cares? Anything newsworthy can be referred to the campus bulletin. So you want balloons and streamers? HA! Grow up, this is college, not romper room!

You have a good point about the school colors, Colin, they should not need changing. In fact, they should have been changed long ago, when the co-ed transition was made. Baby blue just rubs me the wrong way. Have you noticed the flag pole behind the new smoker? Baby blue indeed!

Finally, if and when I do graduate, I will assume the mighty alumni status, or should I say, the mighty $$ status, and will be able to exercise a minute influence over this college. I for one, will not financially support an Alma Mater that promotes the practice of dressing up a bunch of immature quiche eaters as "Klowns" (one would think a college student able to spell "clown") and allowing them to run rampant through the college community harassing hell out of anyone who happens by. (I won't even get started on these damn elves!) Nor will I boast school colors that should be reserved for female's undergarments.

As times change, it becomes necessary to evaluate the reassess values, principles, and most certainly traditions. Longwood, although quite slowly, is progressing. The changes Mr. Shanahan has cited in his letter are somewhat less than landmark. If anything, these minor alterations serve to enhance Longwood's growth, not hinder it.

On Preventing Misconceptions

There is a story which has floated from word of mouth among social workers and circulated throughout the halls of most welfare departments. It is about a woman who had gone to a doctor and received a number of tubes of contraceptive jelly. She did not come back to the doctor for a few months, but when she did her condition was not good...she was 2 months pregnant. The doctor was perplexed and asked the woman if she had used the contraceptive jelly he had given her. "Yes" she replied, "I put it on my husbands toast every morning."

Not a very pleasant incident, but one which can be avoided with a proper education about contraceptives and their use. In 1979 a Longwood clinic for male and female students began at the Prince Edward County Health Department to do just that. Since then it has grown to the point where one female student estimates that at least one in five Longwood students (predominantly female) use the facility.

The Prince Edward County Health Department is located behind the Farmville County Courthouse. It is a rather blank building with no billboards advertising its presence except a small "private parking doctors only" sign. Miss Lucy Ferguson director of the department explained that no advertising was really necessary since "it is a free service" and word travels quickly when there is a need. It has gradually built up over the years but lately has undergone some mishaps which have caused a delay in the usual once a month clinic.

"One of our clinicians (Dr. Terry) died over the summer and we've had to shuffle some clinics — recombine them. We are in the process of re-organizing and hope to begin the services (the Longwood Clinic) sometime in the middle of October, after fall break."

Mrs. Ferguson explained the procedure for the clinic. "A student comes in and requests an appointment with the Longwood Clinic. At the time of the appointment they register and on eligibility determination is made. (Since most college students are not financially well off they are generally eligible). A registered nurse then talks to them and does a medical and nursing history — chronic diseases, blood tests, allergies, etc. She then talks with the students and explains various methods of contraception and any other topics the students may want to discuss. After the discussion, the students see a clinician and nurse practitioner who does a complete physical examination, (including PAP test for females) and the types of available contraceptives which would be best for them is would be best for them are determined in conjunction with the students wishes. (Some students can not take birth control pills due to medical reasons.) They are also taught self-breast examinations. These services are of course provided on an individual basis. After Seeing the doctor or nurse practitioner they are reviewed on the methods of using the different types of contraceptives — and the risks and side effects of each. We do follow ups for abnormal tests results and get in touch with the student referring her to a doctor if necessary (this is done confidentially if the girl wishes)".

Mrs. Ferguson thinks the clinic is good but admits that it is overcrowded. "A possible option" she said "is the Longwood clinic being based over at (Longwood) campus" but that is "still under discussion." The clinic itself is federally funded so if a federal cut in the program were to go into effect Miss Ferguson said that "it may turn out that there will be a payment" required for the services.

Dr. Phyllis Mable, vice president of Student Affairs has said she will take an active part in "assuring these services are available" to Longwood students — with or without payment.

In Search of...Hotspots

By DEBBIE RIPPY

Where does one find it? In this vast metropolitan area there must be a single locality, a unique location that Longwood students swarm to like bees to honey. So, where are these places. Where does everybody go when there aren't campus events or Cox is not a rockin'. I began my search in the heart of urban Farmville.

My first stop was Beegles. The rustic looking walls, the red and green color scheme, and the bathtub salad bar provide you with a different and relaxed atmosphere until about 8:30 when the juke box is turned up and 'fun' the theme.

The busiest time is from 5:30-8 nightly and on Wednesday during Happy Hour Orientation, which is 5-11 with two choice beverages on tap. About 85 percent of the business at this time is from the college with the biggest seller being the Longwood Weekend. According to manager Kent Rock, "It's not a bar. We're just a restaurant with golden beverages."

My next stop was Pino's. Here, when I first walked in, I got the impression of it being one big party or family reunion from the arrangement of the seats.

It is close enough to walk to from the college which provides about 75 percent of the business from 5-9 nightly. They have two choice beverages to go along with their biggest seller, pizza. They also have delivery service to Longwood College.

A stuffed fox, three guns and two tobacco baskets displayed on the walls of the Fox Hunt Inn really gives the place a country look and a family type atmosphere. The busiest time is from 3-7 Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Thursday's big attraction is the spaghetti dinner, and the fresh seafood really packs them in on Friday and Saturday. About 70 percent of this business is from the college students, which also includes Hampden-Sydney College, who really go for the spaghetti.

The Upper Den will be coming as soon as the main problem of a fire escape can be settled. They will serve basically deli sandwiches upstairs and have six beverages on tap. A Happy Hour is provided for students at present though.

Having been recently remodeled, Perini's still reflects the college atmosphere by sometimes having both the juke box and television on simultaneously, especially when a big game or other sports event is on. The busiest time is 5-8 on Friday and Saturday nights or since they are so close to walk to, when the dining hall is serving fish or liver and onions. At these times, 50-60 percent of the business is from the college, which also includes Hampden-Sydney College, and 40 percent during the week.

They have seven choice beverages to go along with their biggest seller, pepperoni pizza. There is no Happy Hour, but they do provide free chips and pretzels for anyone who wants to just come in and drink.

Being more restaurant than a fast food or takeout service, Sunny's Cafe does specialize in some deli sandwiches. Over the Christmas holiday they do hope to become a more progressive cafe with candles, plants, good music and a lot of atmosphere.

They are the busiest all night Friday when about 98 percent of that is college students. Their Mood Modification Hour is from 5-7 with eight choice beverages.

According to owner Judy Johnson, "We just want a place where people will come and be happy. We want to see the energy that they (the college students) have brought."

Last but not least, we have the Pioneer Inn. The exterior is that of a log cabin and the interior is virtually all wood. It has a country atmosphere from the appearance, a relaxed atmosphere for dining and a "let's have fun" atmosphere when the entertainment arrives. The busiest times are Tuesday, Friday and Saturday nights. Tuesday is ladies' night with sounds by Clay. About 99 percent of this is from the college. Fridays and Saturdays have either a jazz or country band.

Editor, The Rotunda,

No doubt most of you have heard the ROTC cadets running around campus at unheard of hours in the morning. Judging from the feedback we've gotten, you are in one of two groups. You either love it or hate it. To those of you who love it, thanks for your support. To those of you who hate it, let me explain a few things to you.

The physical training program was voted on and approved by the cadets themselves. The cadets who participate have made a commitment to serve in the Army as officers upon graduation. Life as an Army officer is a demanding experience, both physically and mentally. These cadets realize this and want to start preparing now. So you ask, why 6:00 a.m.? As anyone who has tried to organize an event in the afternoon or evening will tell you, it is impossible to find a time after classes when everyone can meet. We've got to do it in the morning if we're to have maximum participation. What really bothers you, however, is all the noise. Calling cadence while running is an Army tradition. It makes the running easier. No one in their right mind likes to run that early. The cadence calling helps to take their minds off how tired they are. When you hear the singing outside your dorm, try to remember that these people are the future leaders of our country's Army. You will soon be relying on them to defend you and the freedoms you enjoy. I cannot imagine that you would want this responsibility to be given to someone who cannot withstand the physical demands that accompany it. So when you hear them outside, in the dark, don't curse them, thank them. Someone has to shoulder the responsibility of our country's defense. Because they have volunteered to do it, you don't have to.

Escort Service

As Service Chairman of Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity, I would like to announce that we are continuing our escort service, which was started last year. Any Longwood lady who has a place to go late at night and does not want to run the risk of having to walk alone may phone one of the brothers for an escort. A list of participating brothers will be placed in the office of all female and co-ed dorms. Don't walk alone!

Notes

By CHRIS YOUNG

After releasing Night in the Ruts, Aerosmith went poof! Lead guitarist Joe Perry left and formed the Joe Perry Project. They have released two albums so far.

Aerosmith was still "poofed."

Then rhythm guitarist Brad Whitford left Aerosmith and formed the Whitford-St. Holmes Band. They released one album (a loser).

Well low and behold, Aerosmith started to read want ads, and they picked up two new guitarists: Jimmy Crespo and Rick Dufay.

And then they got cooking, and said, "Wow man, let's make a record!"

Soooo, they made a record called Rock in a Hard Place.

In usual Aerosmith fashion, the album has a couple of good cuts, a couple of real stinkers, and a couple of, "I'll listen to you once and put you on my shelf" cuts.

Side I starts out with what is definitely the best song on the album, Jailbait. It's got a really fast, driving beat. Whatever singer Steven Tyler sings is copied by the guitar, which gives it a really nice effect. Now the bad point about Jailbait. What is it about? I'm sorry Mr. Tyler, but you have just received this year's "Most Unaudible Voice Award."

Lightning Strikes is a song about a gang rumble in a parking lot, complete with chains, guns, and unaudible vocals.

The beginning of Bitch's Brew sounds almost identical to Seasons of Wither on their album Get Your Wings. What a coincidence.

Now for this week's trivia question. What would you get if you played Walk This Way on 16 r.p.m.? You guessed it! The Bolivian Ragamuffin!

Moving right along, we come to Cry Me A River. Nice song. A really nice song. (ballad)

Flip the old record over, and we come upon one of the two songs about Joanie.

Prelude to Joanie sounds like E.L.O. imitating Robert Plant having a baby. Yuck.

Joannie's Butterfly is an unsuccessful attempt to sound like Led Zeppelin. Yuck!

The title track (also called Chesire Cat) isn't bad at all. In fact it's rather good! (finally a bright spot in this dark album).

The Gig is Up. I hate songs like this. There's nothing to it, and the beat is awful. You guessed it, yuck!

Finally we come to the last track. It's called Push Comes to Shove (no, it's not a Van Halen cover version). It's kind of a rock-blues-boogie song. I'll call it Bloogie! I really like this song. It kind of makes you want to lean against a wall, cock your hat, and snap your fingers.

Good song to end the album with.

All in all, this is just your average Aerosmith album, with a few goodies, and a lot of badies.

If you're an Aerosmith groupie, you're probably used to their good-bad ratio, so you'll enjoy.

But if you don't like Aerosmith, keep away, because this album won't start you liking them.

(Correction: In last week's column, I incorrectly stated that Jimi Hendrix wrote All Along the Watch Tower. It was written by Bob Dylan).

Wheelchair Basketball

By LYNLEY DOWS

In response to a present need for recreational opportunities and services for handicapped individuals of both the Longwood College and surrounding communities a wheelchair basketball team is in the process of being organized. Mr. Frank M. Brasile, Coordinator of Handicapped Student Services at Longwood College, and the Therapeutic Recreation Organization are coordinating and sponsoring the efforts of players and supporters to create an opportunity for individuals with permanent physical disabilities of the lower extremities to engage in wheelchair basketball as a recreational pursuit. Disabilities such as amputation, paralysis, or joint injuries which prohibit one from playing conventional competitive sports would qualify an individual to participate with the wheelchair basketball team. Although the individuals will compete in wheelchairs, they need not be wheelchair bound.

The team meets once a week to practice and prepare for the approximate ten game schedule which will tentatively include a Virginia Beach tournament with seven other teams. Currently the team is comprised of four disabled Longwood students, two individuals from the Appomattox area, and one from Nottoway.

This program, although presently limited to basketball, is a community outreach program and as such will hopefully establish a precedent and pathway for similar programs. Individuals interested in either participating in or aiding the basketball team should contact Mr. Brasile in 114 Lancer Hall or by telephone: 392-9266. Mr. Brasile would also like to encourage students and community members with interest in participating in or organizing additional athletic or recreational programs for the handicapped to share their interests and ideas with him. This and similar programs have the potential to serve the entire community as a recreational, educational, and awareness tool.

The Cellar, which will be basically college territory, is opening up on Tuesday, September 28, with a 'Drink and Drown' night. They have eight choice beverages, and there will be sounds by Clay. There will even be video games arriving shortly for the back room.

I'm sure there are other places around Farmville that Longwood students like to go to; these were just a few. Which one is the most popular? A hard question, perhaps unanswerable, but then . . . that is for you to decide.

Movie Review

"Dead water and dead sand
Contending for the upper hand.
The parched eviscerate soil
Gapes at the vanity of toil
Laughs without mirth
This is the death of earth"

T.S. Eliot

Max the warrior rides through the wasteland, in the last of the V-8's. He is above the ordinary men, who have become "battered and smashed" in George Miller's post-Apocalyptic setting for the film "The Road Warriors."

One of a series of films dealing in an old genre with a futuristic setting (Blade Runner — Humphry Bogart in a new New York, Fire Fox — Clint Eastwood as a novel James Bond, Tron — a Fantastic Voyage into a computer). George Miller has taken some of the best and a lot of the worst of "Shane," "Death Race 2000" and "Masada" and tossed it into a Nevada desert somewhere (proclaimed a barrened post-WW III scenario), jazzed it up with stunts reminiscent of "Raiders of the Lost Ark"; and filmed it all brilliantlv.

Although titled "The Road Warriors" in the U.S. it is being shown under the title of "Mad Max II" in other countries since logically enough "The Road Warriors" is actually a sequel to "Mad Max" a movie that received a brief viewing from American audiences when it first appeared in 1980. Apparently the anarchaic nihilism and the "kick of horsepower" vitality were too much for an American audience to stomach, so George Miller has tried to mend his ways and seduce the audience with a post-Apocalyptic morality-improbable, impossible even, but legends have to start somehwere — in this case they start with Max a lot of gimmicks, and sand.

The plot is simple enough for a legend — Max (Mel Gibson) and his vanguard of compatriots, a capricious canine named eloquently Dog and a dehydrated, Gollum-like 'copter flier named (again eloquently) Gyro Captain, attempt to make a deal with an embattled petroleum plant (embattled because oil is black gold) . . . — a body for 5 gallons of high octane? — (impossible, improbable even but . . . you know the rest). The plant, managed by the good guys (relatively speaking), is embattled by a maurading motor-cycle gang that rules the wasteland — the Humongas. Their hideous legions include an archvillian in a Mohawk (orange) haircut and warpaint whose S&M get-up includes viking plumes and a studded codpiece. Surprisingly, he does not stand out at all (except for his remarkable destructiveness — Freud might have called it Thanos personified) in the vicious S&M iconography which makes up this movie.

Max gets terribly beaten in the flick but manages to run the "gauntlet" (do I make an allusion? . . . yes) and live through two crashes, a hook in his chest and various minor injuries which the nasty Humonga s have inflicted.

As stated before, the movie is filmed brilliantly, plenty of eye opening, heart stopping moments, but the plot? How can one say, a thin purplish veneer over a maelstrom of destructiveness. The dialogue? The dialogue brings to mind what the director of "Cannonball Run" said to a writer who was fretting over a line. "Screw the dialogue . . let's wreck some cars." The point or moral which Miller hoped would redeem his "Mad Max II"? That comes across in a poignant scene when the leader of the good guys attempts to convince a reluctant Max that helping him would somehow sanctify Max's own existence.

"What burns you out? . . . Here, we're still human beings with dignity — it's, you out there with the garbage, it makes you nothing." So Max helps them escape, but does not stay. Perhaps he knows what the leader of the Humongas has said is true, ". . . Nobody, nobody gets out of here alive." Perhaps he doesn't care for a domesticated dignity. The viewer is not sure and with sweaty palms and rising blood pressure must leave the theatre thinking "and where does he go now, and what shall he do now?"

Lancers Tie UMBC

By BETSY DUNK

Saturday, in their only game of the week, the Longwood soccer team failed to score in overtime, settling for a 2-2 tie against Maryland B.C. Their record now stands at 4-1-1.

Offensively, the Lancers did not let up throughout the first half. Numerous shots came off the feet of Brian Allmendinger, Tim Brennan, Bill Foster and Gus Leal. Steve Kern made his presence on the field known by starting and assisting in many key plays.

Defensively, Joe Parker, Dan Bubnis and Scott Thoden did an excellent job of holding off Maryland's offense. Goalie Al Del Monte sent Maryland to the sidelines scoreless at halftime.

After 45 minutes of play, the score stood at 0-0.

The Lancers came up with two goals in the second half. Brian Allmendinger netted his fifth goal of the season with an assist from Gusl Leal. The second goal came off the head of Darryl Case on a beautifully centered corner kick. Maryland's goalie stopped a great number of shots from Bill Foster, Chris Wilkerson and Gus Leal.

Defensive standout Darryl Case turned around many Maryland attacks, often by using his head to clear the ball. Dan Bubnis also showed a lot of hustle in stopping the Maryland offense.

It looked as though Longwood had a sure 2-0 victory. Then, in the final five minutes of play Maryland pounced, scoring two goals and sending the game into double overtime. Neither team was able to put the ball in the net in either overtime period, and the game ended in a 2-2 tie.

Longwood's next game will be September 29 at 3:00 against host Roanoke. The Lancers play several games over fall break: October 2, Liberty Baptist visits for a morning match; October 9-10, Longwood heads to Blacksburg for the Virginia Tech Invitational with Tech, Randolph-Macon and Appalachian State.

AGGRESSIVE LANCER

Women's Tennis

By GARY THORNHILL

Longwood's women's tennis team slipped to 0-4 after dropping matches to Lynchburg 7-2 last Monday and Friday to Sweet Briar 9-0.

Sophomore Whitney Phillips and freshman Penny Powell improved their record to 3-0 with a victory over Lynchburg at No. 3 doubles. Senior Angie Coppedge and junior Lisa Barnes, playing No. 1 doubles, lifted their record to 2-1 with the victory over Lynchburg.

Friday Sweet Briar proved to be too strong for the young Longwood netters. The Lady Lancers came up short with four of the six singles matches going to three sets to decide the winner.

"Despite the team's record they're doing a heck of a job. It's ough for a young team composed of mostly first year players to play against veteran teams," said coach Beatrice White.

The Lady netters travels to Mary Baldwin Tuesday and entertain Emory & Henry Wednesday at 1:00.

Rugby Wins 15-0

Taking advantage of superior backs and sound execution, the Longwood College Rugby Football Club defeated the New River Valley R.F.C., 15-0 Saturday. It was the first home appearance of the year for Longwood and after winning this game plus beating V.M.I. last week, they made it clear that they are quite improved over last year.

Both teams seemed rather confused, offensively, in the first half, New River constantly missing field goals and Longwood ineffective on line-ins. On defense, however, Longwood was effective, allowing New River only one deep venture in to their end of the field which resulted in a missed field goal.

Marty Mann broke the ice with a straight 20 yard field goal, fairly late in the half, putting Longwood up, 3-0.

In the second half, Longwood's backs took over. Everyone of them deserves an assist for the first try of the second half as they advanced and passed off perfectly to go in from an initial scrum-down about 40 yards out. Bill Galloway took the final pass from Dean Lakey and busted through a man for the score. Marty Mann successfully converted and Longwood was in command, 9-0.

The second try was started off by a perfect little spot kick by Dean Driskill Mann caught the ball going at a good pace and bolted through a hole in the New River defense, then, faking the last man totally out, went in from about 40 yards out to seal the win at 15-0 after he successfully converted.

The game ended at 15-0, proof positive that although they expect to improve throughout the season, Longwood is much farther along in terms of performing up to their potential than last season. ML

Player Of The Week

From Sports Information

Junior forward Tim Brennan turned in a four-goal performance in Longwood's 6-3 soccer victory over Catawba September 19 and, for his efforts, \Brennan has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period September 17-24.

Brennan's four-goal showing, which helped Longwood (4-1-1) pull away from a 2-2 deadlock, established a new school record for goals in a game. Brennan had held the previous record of three along with senior Gus Leal.

Longwood's leading goal scorer (6) and point producer (12) through six games, Brennan now has 23 goals in his three-year career, plus eight assists. The Upper Dublin High School product had nine goals as a freshman and eight last season.

Captain and All-Suburban I at Upper Dublin, Brennan is in his third year as a starter for the Lancers.

A physical education major, Brennan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Brennan of North Hills.

Spikers 2-3

By GARY THORNHILL

Longwood's women's volleyball team opened its season with a victory over Sweet Briar, Thursday night.

Paced by a strong performance from sophomore Becky Norris, the lady spikers won 15-5, 9-15, 15-4 and 15-5.

"Becky had an excellent performance in the Sweet Briar match Thursday," said coach Joyce Phillips. "She put everything together in that match."

In play Saturday, Longwood finished 4th out of 5 teams in the Mary Washington Tournament. Longwood's only victory was over Gallaudet 15-6, 4-15 and 15-12.

Longwood dropped matches to host Mary Washington 15-7, 15-5; Chowan 15-8, 15-10 and tournament champion Western Maryland 15-0, 15-4. The lady spikers record now stands at 2-3.

Thursday Longwood travels to Virginia Commonwealth University for a 6:30 match and a 7:30 match against William & Mary.

Men's Golf

By GARY THORNHILL

Participating in the VMI and Washington & Lee Invitational this past weekend, Longwood's men's golf team had a surprisingly off-day.

Playing at the Lexington County Club, the Lancers finished 19th with a team total 356. Old Dominion and James Madison tied for the team title with 295.

The two-day invitational was scheduled for 36 holes but the final 18 holes were rained out on Sunday.

Top scorers for Longwood were junior Stan Edwards 84 and freshman Tommy Spencer 87. Other scores included: Richard Miller 92, David Pittman 93, and Punkaj Rishi 100.

"We just played very poorly," said coach Steve Nelson. "We're a much better team than we showed, but we had a bad day."

Longwood played without the services of Todd Atkinson, one of the top golfers on the team, who was out sick.

Monday and Tuesday, Longwood plays at the Newport News Municipal Golf Course in the Old Dominion Golf Club Invitational.

Women's Golf

By GEREE LYELL

The Lancer's women's golf team playing in the Appalachian State Tournament last week, had an impressive two-day score of 699. Playing against such Division I teams as Duke and William and Mary, Longwood placed 10th, with senior Robin Andrews being the Lancers' top performer with a total score of 166. Coming in second for the team was Lanie Gerkin with a score of 172.

The Lady Lancers have had an impressive season so far finishing about 10 strokes ahead of last year's record at this time. Because there are not many nearby Division II teams to play, the Lancers schedule is tough with Div. I teams. Last year, the Lady Lancers finished third in the AIAW Division II National Tournament.

The Lady Lancers next tournament is the James Madison Invitational, held in Harrisonburg Sept. 26-27.

Riding

By BETH WILEY

The Riding Team went to Mary Washington Sunday, Sept. 26, to co-host their first show of the year. Eight colleges attended including U.Va., Sweet Briar, Christopher Newport, Lynchburg, William and Mary, and Randolph-Macon Woman's College. Longwood finished with a total of 18 team points leaving us in fifth place overall.

Individual results are:

Open Division — Bryan Farrar fifth on the flat, third over fencers. Intermediate Division — Kirsten Landendorf fifth on the flat, third over fences. Novice Division — Beth Wiley fifth over fences; Kristen Birath first on the flat; Amy Jo Poor sixth on the flat; sixth over fences; Martie Wilson second on the flat, second over fences. Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter — Mary Brockwell fifth; Sarah Farris fifth. Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter — Carol Turner second; Sherrie Morkow fifth. Amy Jo Poor and Beth Wiley advanced to the Intermediate Division over fences and qualified for regionals at the Novice level.

The next show will be October 3 at William and Mary.

Baseball 1-3 Last Week

By REENE WADSWORTH

Longwoods baseball team played exhibition games last weekend against the most formidable teams in the state.

Friday Division III power Lynchburg came to Lancer Field to meet the nationally ranked Longwood Lancer baseball team.

With a team consisting of many newcomers, coach Buddy Bolding and his Lancer team made a strong showing despite their 6-3 loss.

Longwood participated in the James Madison Invitational tournament Saturday and Sunday, winning one of three games.

The first game was against the University of Virginia which Longwood won 8-4. Longwood ripped out 13 hits in seven innings with John Sullivan leading with two hits and three RBI's. Chris Wilburn and Alan Lawter each collected two hits apiece. Scott Miles pitched seven very impressive innings, holding Virginia to four runs while striking out five.

Longwood then played two games against Virginia Tech, losing 3-2 and 8-4.

On Saturday, in the first game against the Hokies, Glen Mitchell pitched a super game. He held Tech to one run until the last inning when they scored two runs to win the game.

Sundays rematch with Virginia Tech ended in an 8-4 loss, Longwood's only bright spot came when Tommy Walsh connected with a fastball for the only homerun of the tournament, driving in two runs.

Coach Bolding was extremely pleased with the way in which his young pitchers performed against such tough Division I teams.

"It was a great experience for a Division II team to play with the top teams in the state," said the Longwood coach.

Synchronized Swimming

By SUSAN DREWRY

Synchronized swimming is going to the 1984 Olympic Games. If you're not familiar with the sport, you should get acquainted with Longwood's synchronized swimming team — The Catalinas.

The Catalinas are now preparing a show for Oktoberfest. Although synchronized swimming can be a competitive sport, the Catalinas concentrate on performing for an audience. The Oktoberfest show will consist of six routines choreographed to music. Other shows will be at Christmas and in the spring.

The 1982 Catalinas are: Lynda Stratton (President), Renie Mahoney (Vice President), Jo Weber (Secretary), Frances Vavloukis (Treasurer), Susan Drewry (Historian), Dianne Doss, Berni Toner, Laurie Stefaniga, Denise Goodie, Cheryl Compton, Debbie Bucsko, Chris Tullington, Anne Mulvihill, Judy Luck, Mo Rogge, Mindy Robinson, Ellen Brown, Elinor Lee and Betty Lou Brogan.

Don't miss your opportunity to see the Catalinas in action! Be on the look-out for a schedule of show times.

Field Hockey

Longwood's field hockey team has a busy schedule this week as they travel to Randolph-Macon on Tuesday, Richmond on Thursday and then participate in the Appalachian State Invitational Tournament (Boone, N.C.) on Friday and Saturday.

In last week's action, the Lady Lancers fell to Division I Virginia 8-1 and Virginia Tech 4-1. Senior co-captain Cherie Stevens scored against the Wahoos on Tuesday while Pam Esworthy made the goal in Saturday's VPI game.

Longwood's record now stands 0-3. Although competing in NCAA Division II, the Lady Lancers have so far played all Division I teams. KMS

Getting to Know

To The Student Body:

When you returned to Longwood this fall, many changes had taken place. Rooms had been painted and rearranged. New carpet was put in the banquet and Board of Visitors rooms. The floors in the Rotunda and Dining Hall were waxed.

Many changes also took place within Longwood as well as on the outside. This year's administration is almost entirely new. Some of these people you may have already met through various meetings.

Students have expressed a desire to meet and talk with these new people. Possible ideas have included a "study break" with students and administrators gathering in the dining hall to talk over a sundae or chips and drinks.

Do you have any suggestions on meeting the "new people?" If so, drop them by the vice president for student affairs office. Or just drop by to chat, discuss problems or bring up proposals. Even if you disagree or agree with something, tell them. Don't just sit back and complain about the "uncaring administrators" They're not going to read minds, only work with them!

Let them know you're here on campus and willing to work. Ms. Mable, the new V.P. for student affairs, is located on 1st floor of the Rotunda. Mr. Ogrosky, new dean of students, is 1st floor rotunda, also across from the housing office.

Get to know these people and the rest who make up Longwood's administration.

Sincerely,
Lisa Swackhammer

VOL. LVIII | LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1982 | NO. 7

If it's Monday, this must be Longwood

"I know when I was a student I would have given anything for an opportunity like this, also when I was a faculty member; now the opportunity is real or appears to be real (for the student or faculty member) and we've got to do some creative thinking on how we can achieve it," said Dr. Greenwood about a possible exchange of Longwood students and faculty with the students and faculty of foreign universities.

An exchange program may be just one of the results of Dr. Greenwood's recent trip to Europe. "The Mission to France" sponsored by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU) with excursions to Holland and Spain ended last Sunday, October 10.

While in France, Dr. Greenwood visited four major universities — The University of Nice (located on the southeast coast of France, near the Mediterranean, "a magnificently beautiful area"), two universities in Paris — Paris-Dauphine and Paris Nanterre and the University of Lyon located in Lyon, France.

"France is on a different system of higher education than we are," said Dr. Greenwood. Anyone who wants to go to college can go — there is a minimal fee of about the equivalent of $100.00 in the U.S. for anyone wanting to attend (not including room and board). In high school they study what we might study as general education requirements in college. In college they immediately become more specific: their first cycle (cycles are the equivalent of about two years in college) is like our last two years with intense concentrations in their majors. The second cycle is the equivalent of a master's degree and the third cycle is equal to a doctorate (this cycle tends to be longer than two years).

However, she pointed out, there are definite drawbacks. Higher education is highly centralized everything is controlled by the ministry (French government). This type of socialism insures security (teaching is a guaranteed life-time job) but there is no incentive — which is bad. There is no concept of higher mobility — a lot of inbreeding results which leads to stagnation in what is being taught and what is being learned.

A number of the univerities were interested in Longwood's teacher education program (particularly Nice University) because it is an area which they are just beginning to get involved in. Their other interests are concentrated in business and high technology.

"They took us on a tour of the Renault factory in France, first thing. They are extremely interested in the area of high technology and training in this field", and with good reason. "What I saw (at Renault) was a factory where 85 per cent of the work was done by robots and 15 per cent was done by humans, and they still employed 18,000 workers watching the machines, and pulling maintenance." They feel America is dropping far behind in high technology and believe in the future there will be only five major auto industries. Renault is planning on being one of those. How? By high technology training in the universities and colleges — computer literacy and familiarity with terms and concepts dealing with automated plants and factories.

A number of the French universities showed interest in possible collaborative research between faculty and students from the different universities. The University of Nice offered a particularly flexible program of a student or students going there in September to take a concentrated language course and then, depending on the student(s)' wishes, staying on for a year or a semester, taking courses at Nice.

In Spain, at the University of Salamanca, interest is also being shown in student and faculty exchanges. Doctor del Greco, whom Dr. Greenwood met during her visit to Madrid, Spain, discussed the possibility of such a program. However, the politial unrest in Spain at this time is a drawback to such an idea. Dr. Greenwood said that the country seems to be anticipating a military coup sometime prior to the national election. That point was brought home to her when sitting in a restaurant next to the table of the President of Indonesia (who was visiting Spain then), she found herself amidst a number of bodyguards bearing machine guns.

Surprisingly Holland may be even more difficult to arrange an exchange program with. Unlike the other European universities, Holland allows only a certain number of students to enter higher education, and this is not based on money (it's free) or merit. Rather, it is based on Lady Luck. "They (Holland) have a lottery system that decides who gets into college," which is a shame because there are a lot of advantages to studying in Holland. They speak English, and have one of the highest standards of living of any European country (minimum wage, $15,000 per year) and "the country is phenomenally clean, even riding through the lowest class areas you don't see low class houses with junked cars. There is unemployment — but those people are taken care of by the government. You can sit and do nothing and still be well-to-do (by our standards). Dr. Greenwood did say that a faculty exchange in Holland may be possible.

Her visit with Clemens and Neeltje van de Ven who live in Holland near Amsterdam proved to be pleasant and productive. "They (the van der Vens) have agreed to serve on the Fine Arts board at Longwood." The van der Vens, who own and have restored Snowden, a James River plantation in Goochland County, are owners of an extensive collection of porcelain vases. Mrs. van der Ven, adept at restoration, "would have the skills to help restore the old high school" (which is under consideration as a possible location for the fine arts center)" said Dr. Greenwood. While with the van der Vens Dr. Greenwood toured the Palace Loo (William and Mary's Palace). "I was able to see, firsthand, the outcome of his restoration — beautiful."

Yes, Dr. Greenwood did get a chance to visit the Louvre during her trip but didn't seem to enjoy the "cram-packed conditions." Apparently the day she visited was the day the museum allows free passes (they generally charge a fee). The only other incident which bothered her was a very large dachshund ("they take their dogs with them everywhere!") that got air sick on one of her flights, " the stewardesses took care of it though ... they seemed experienced in such matters."

In January the van der Vens, including two of Mr. van der Ven's brothers, hope to visit the college. The younger brother Steven would like to give a presentation for students of his political journalism. Next August the President and Vice President of the Paris-Nanterre University will be here for the opening of school. During the last two weeks of April or the following fall the other Presidents of the French and Spanish universities may also visit Longwood.

From Yale To Longwood

By LIZ D'SURNEY

"I liked the new administration team, especially the president who was a big attraction...the size of the college, and its traditions... also, the enthusiasm of the people I met and that of the student body." These are a few of tne reasons Dr. Haltzel, Longwood's new Chief Academic Officer decided to come to Longwood.

Dr. Haltzel's office is located in the Vice Presidents office on 1st floor West Ruffner. It is decorated simply. A few chairs and a loveseat are arranged close together forming a conversation area. A German coca-cola label, hanging on the wall across from his desk is one of the few German mementos from his Berlin days. He graduated with a B.A. from Yale, and A.M. in Soviet Studies from Harvard, and a Ph.D. in history from Harvard. He has studied abroad in Berlin,

NEWS BRIEFS

By an overwhelming vote of the Polish Parliament, Sejm, the Polish Independent Union Federation, Solidarity, has been banned, marking the end of the most popular group effort of communist subjects in recent years. Having established new, highly restrictive trade unions strictly at the individual factory level with virtually no right to strike, the government claims to have put behind them the "turmoil," that was created by Solidarity's constant clashes with the nation's leaders. The new law not only abolishes Solidarity but all Polish labor unions presently operating as well.

Tops on this week's list of stupid things to do is taking Tylenol. One of the most popular painkillers in the country, this drug is taboo due to the deaths of seven people in the Chicago area from taking cyanide laced capsules of the product. Authorities have few clues as to the identity or motives of the poisoner and their chances of catching this person are quite slim due to the detachment from the actual deaths that the murderer has.

In Sweden's Hors Bay, a submarine has been located that was not invited by the Swedes themselves. Naturally, the Swedes would be quite happy if the owner of the sub would come up and introduce himself and have a little chat about trespassing, spying and generally just what he is doing down there. Expectations are that the crew speaks Russian fluently, and they just wanted to take a few pictures of the highly developed Swedish naval base nearby and its surroundings.

In October of 1981, a Russian submarine was so cooperative as to run aground in the vicinity of a naval base at Karlokrone, Sweden, and the Swedes enjoyed talking with him so much that they have now placed submarine nets in both openings of the bay and have sent down calling cards in the form of 330 pound depth charges whenever they have found out where the sub is. This sub is a bit shyer than the last one, though, and has not come up yet and was once so rude as to try and leave by breaking through the nets but did not succeed. But the Swedes have been patient and are sure that the sub will have to come up sometime and presently are merely sitting and waiting.

Ronny had a heckler a couple of weeks ago. It seems that a mean man named Gary Richard Arnold who cannot even get money from his own Republican Party, has been having difficulty getting anyone to listen to his complaints about the Trilateral Commission and Reagan himself so he just stood up at a Republican campaign briefing and cut loose when the President was at the podium.

A sampling of the gory verse: "Mr. President, you have given us the largest tax increase in the U. S. history . . . The Soviets get the wheat and the Americans get the shaft . . . You have a small elite Reich — the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission — that totally runs your organization and your White House." Reagan attempted to silence Arnold by first calling him a liar and then cracking a joke, "I thought this was for Republican candidates."

Finally Mr. Reagan simply yelled, "Shut up!" and blew the opposition away with a fine little speech on China and Taiwan. Immediately afterwards, Reagan was congenial again while Arnold was not.

Where I Turn For Help

For those of you who are considering jumping off of the roof of Frazer, snorting Anacin, or O.D.-ing on the Dining Hall food, Longwood does provide counseling services.

"We deal with all kinds of problems," said Mrs. Barlow, the newest addition to the counseling services. "Anything from relationships, to drugs, to suicides, even hangnails."

Mrs. Barlow said, "Sometimes students will come in and tell me a different problem just to feel me out but I don't think they would bother to come if they didn't want help. Students believe that you have to be mentally ill to come to the counseling service or that they're the only one with problems. However, that's not true; almost everyone has a problem soemtime or another and they're normal."

Office hours are from eight to five but they are not rigid according to Mrs. Barlow. "Most of the people who come to us are women. They make appointments and they usually come back more than once."

When asked how she got the job Mrs. Barlow said, "I met Dr. Cox in Boston and I wasn't really planning to work but later on I was interviewed for an area coordinator job, then hired with the understanding of working with the counseling services."

Mrs. Barlow has had quite a lot of experience dealing with people and their problems. She has worked in residence halls, as a psychologist in the Lynchburg Training School, and she also did an internship in counseling at U.Va. She will finish her doctorate in counseling at U. Va. in the spring.

The counseling service also promotes different programs like how to study, deciding on majors, and career development. They are also working on others which will be done next year.

The counseling services are located on the first level of French dormitory. The area is well lit and there is a lounge, an office, a conference room, and the offices of the counselors. The atmosphere is really casual but it demonstrates the totally confidential policy that is stressed.

Series Continues

The Department of Sociology and Anthropology will present the second program in the 1982-83 Anthropology Film Series on Wednesday, Oct. 20, at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium.

The program will consist of two films entitled The Holy Ghost People and Floating in the Air.

The Holy Ghost People is a record of a white Pentecostal religious group in Southern - Appalachia whose members handle poisonous snakes, drink strychnine and speak in tongues. They believe themselves to be following the literal interpretation of the Biblical passage: "In my name they shall speak in new tongues. They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them." The film was made at a four-hour meeting during which the congregation is exhorted by an evangelist. As the meeting proceeds, some of the - congregation begin to pray, dance, and speak in tongues. Several members collapse in trance-like states. At the height of the meeting, boxes of rattlesnakes and copperheads are brought in, and the people pick them up, throw them to one another, and sing.

Floating in the Air is a film focusing on the Hindu Festival of Thaipusam in which Hindu holy men enter entranced states and the believers carry large - decorative costumes on their heads and backs. The costumes, which weigh about 100 pounds, are attached to their bodies with metal pins and wires. They carry these heavy costumes on sort of a secret trip, almost a short pilgrimage. The trance that these holy men put themselves into creates an ecstasy which overcomes the physical pain and burden of the trip.

Dr. James W. Jordan, Associate Professor of Anthropology, will introduce the films before the presentation.

Cognitive Crystals?

By MIMI A. DREHER

Patrick Barber's face lit up with enthusiasm as he presented a display of crystal creations. These pretty crystals have more useful qualities than just as ornaments, a fact to which Dr. Barber quickly attests.

Dr. Barber, an associate professor in the Department of Natural Sciences, is also very involved in crystalography, the study of the solid state structure of materials (such as the arrangement of molecules in a crystal).

Dr. Barber was chosen to work for a government research lab for ten weeks this summer. Sponsored by the American Society for Engineering Education, this project pulled faculty from all over the country to participate in research. Dr. Barber's job was to work on projects previously studied in the electronic-optical branch at NASA. "New instrumentation for space appreciation" was the idea behind these projects. Replacing magnetic fields with ferro-electric fields was one of the goals of the program before Dr. Barber began his work.

A pure syllican crystal wafer coated with a chemical called bismuth titanale, will hopefully act as a memory in any information storing appliance such as a calculator, computer, tape recorder, etc. For example, computer programs held in memory with magnetic fields can be completely diminished due to a power shortage. But, if the computer holds the memory with crystallization (ferroelectric), as Dr. Barber foresees, the memory is insured to exist regardless of possible power failures.

Dr. Barber's responsibility was to analyze the material of the syllican crystal wafer so that the making of one may be duplicated. Through several processes, Dr. Barber analyzed and found the composition of the wafer. First, he used analytical chemistry, x-raying fluorescents to discover their chemical composition. Then, by annealing (applying heat) to the wafer, he found that the components did not remain constant. Lastly, he chipped off atoms (auger analysis) and then used activation analysis in which the wafer piece is placed in the care of a nuclear reactor. Neutrons bombard the wafer and activate it so that the composition is countable. With these analyses, Dr. Barber was able to identify (mostly) the composition of a syllican crystal wafer.

These studies are still being researched, but Dr. Barber is hopeful that the project will be continued and perfected until the findings "can be used in the next generation of computers."

Another World

"Another World," or the Planet Earth as it was 350 million years ago, will be the subject of the second lecture in this year's Faculty Colloquium at Longwood College.

The lecture will be given by Dr. William A. Shear, professor of biology at Hampden-Sydney College, on Wednesday, October 20 at 7:30 p.m. in the Wygal Building, Longwood. The public is cordially invited to attend the lecture at no charge.

Editor's Turn

Oktoberfest's Perils

First and foremost, let me say I had no intention of writing on Oktoberfest. It seemed wise somehow to disregard the entire shenanigans as mere nuances of over-energetic (and slightly neurotic) college students having their day in the sun. As fate would have it, however, a voice spoke to me last night, spoke to me as I lay curled in quilts, sheltered and warm.

"Wake, you sorry excuse for an editor, wake, and hear what I have to say!!" It's a dream, I thought to myself, only a dream, and I snuggled deeper into the bowel of my quilt. "Wake, I say, you have a mission, a duty to perform and can shirk it no longer." I felt a slap on my back — something was pulling the quilt from my body. Looking up, I saw a small iridescent woman dressed in a long flowing white robe. "Who are you?" I asked. "I am the Ghost of Oktoberfest past." "The what?"

"The Ghost of Oktoberfest past . . . Come, we only have one night and you have many things to see." She held out a patch of robe for me to hold onto. Back through time we traveled; the eighties were gone in a blink, then the seventies, the sixties, fifties, and forties.

We ended in a small room; young women of about eighteen or nineteen were working on a poster. "Where are we?" I asked. "We are in one of Longwood's dormitories — the girls are working on posters for Oktoberfest. See that girl over there with the paint brush?" "Yes, I see her." "She will fail her German test tomorrow because she has skipped so many classes." "Really? But she looks so happy." "Oh, she is happy, she hasn't a care in the world, she's completely forgotten about her German test because her mind is filled with skits, posters, ribbons, and all the fun things she is working on now." "But isn't that what Oktoberfest is for? — to forget one's worries and just have a little fun?"

The spirit smiled and turned her head.

"Come, it is time to go back. Two other Spirits will visit you and answer any questions you may have." "But what of the girl? — Will the spirits tell me about her? What will these spirits look like? How can they possibly visit in one night?" She did not answer.

I was beginning to doze when I heard the second spirit. A light jingle pervading my consciousness. "A light jingle?" I thought. I peered out from under the quilt to see whatever it was that was causing a light jingle. A short clown with an idotic red nose and green tights stood before me. "Hi," the klown said with a smile that matched his nose. "I'm the ghost of Oktoberfest present. Here, grab my hand and we'll take a flight to a fanciful land." "Where are we going?" He wiggled his foot and gave a jingle. "We're off to have fun and paint and giggle." We arrived at Lancer Hall where everything jingled like the klown's foot. "What's going on here?" "The klowns are preparing for a half hour romp. They will entice the crowds with silliness and pomp." "Oh," I said.

"Let's go and watch the class color skits. They will throw you into laughter fits." "No, that's all right," I said. "There's one more spirit who has to see me tonight and I don't think I'll have time for all this fun." "Time is for laughter and light-hearted mirth — time is for happiness from the moment of birth." "Fine," I said, "but I need to get some sleep." "Oh, no," said the klown with the idiotic nose and smile to match, but I insisted and he carried me back.

The third spirit arrived seconds after I had crawled into bed. It (for there was no tell-tale sign of gender) had no face and was wearing a black leather teddy with spiked studs and fish net hose. It carried a whip and a chain. "I am the ghost of Oktoberfest future, hold onto my chain." I didn't argue.

It laughed wickedly as we floated to the future. "So you think you can play all your life, eh?, think nobody has a care, eh?" It cracked the whip. "Well, listen to me — nothing, I say nothing, in life is gotten for free. Look there!"

We stood at a barren back alley window — an old woman with strands of gray hair worked by a stove dishing out some type of stew to three starch-faced children. "You see that hag . . . that was once the girl who painted so merrily." I covered my face. "Come, there is more."

We arrived at an old apartment. A man was sitting in a chair talking to a young boy. "Grandpa," the child said, "What did you do great when you were young?" The man looked down, not sure of a response; suddenly his face brightened — and he waved an arthritic forefinger, "There was one thing I remember; something I did back in my college days . . . I was once a klown." The young boy walked away disappointed.

"Who is that man, whose only accomplishment is being a klown?" The spirit laughed hideously. "That man is you in another fifty years." I shuddered. "Oh-no-no, I will mend my ways, just get me back in time. Give me a chance. I'll never have the least sympathy for Oktoberfest or Geist or any of those things. You've showed me my error."

I woke with a start. "They did it," I thought as I saw the clock. "They did it all in one night."

So, you see, I still had time to redeem myself and write a short carol, on Oktoberfest and its many perils.

Your Turn

To the Editor:

There seems to be a great deal of uncertainty on the part of the student body concerning the scheduling of events for Oktoberfest 1982. In that there is some controversy, Geist would like to clear up the misconceptions.

It was on the basis of student polls and the survey which we ran in the Dining Hall last spring that Geist decided to reschedule the "Skits" as "One Acts" for Thursday night. The administration was supportive of this decision; however, they did not initiate it.

Geist felt that this decision would be a favorable one for the majority of Longwood's students on the basis of the opinions which we received. Furthermore, the inclusion of a play by the drama department and a Saturday Night Alive in place of the skits were decisions made to enhance the appeal of Oktoberfest for visitors and students as well.

Geist is not trying to do away with tradition. It is merely our goal to make Oktoberfest a more enjoyable weekend for everyone.

If there are any questions at all about other events, please feel free to contact anyone in Geist.

And thanks to all of you who are working for the one quality of Oktoberfest that can never be changed — the spirit.

In the Longwood Spirit,
Carol E. Atkins
Oktoberfest Chairman 1982

From Yale

Marburg, and Helsinki. He has published a good deal of writing, among this, numerous articles. He taught during his last year of school at Harvard and then taught several years at Hamilton College in upstate New York. He was also the Deputy Director of the Aspen Institute in West Berlin, Germany.

How did Dr. Haltzel find out about Longwood? What made him leave his home in the suburbs of Albany, N.Y. "I knew someone in the administration of another college who told me about Longwood," he said. He is also fairly familiar with Virginia since he has family from here, so Longwood was not quite so brand new to him. Speaking in reference to Longwood, he comments, "It has great more importance now than ever before." He continues speaking with confidence and clarity. "Every place should attempt to improve itself constantly," which is something Dr. Haltzel wants to take part in.

Dr. Haltzel has quite a few plans in mind to improve the quality of the college. He said, "I'd like to maintain quality in the curriculum of the institutional programs. I'd like to see an increase in class offerings in areas we don't have. I'd like to get the best teachers available and attract bright students in the future."

"I'm an advocate for learning at least one foreign language. I believe this will help people in any career they choose to do...in every field. Students should have the capability of expressing themselves in an articulate manner in English and one foreign language as part of a well rounded education."

"Externally there are not many built-in opportunities to meet students. I would like to remedy this situation by finding informal ways to meet students," he said. He eats in the dining hall from time to time to interact with the students. He also would like to teach next year if his schedule allows it.

Dr. Haltzel is determined to do all he can to meet as many students as possible. "I'd like to find a central location, perhaps the Rotunda, where coffee and doughnuts could be served and offer a chance for students and the administration to get to know each other. I don't have the chance to meet students as much as I'd like. I'd be willing to clear my calendar periodically, even if it's only for 10-15 minutes at a time," he said.

Open hours for students to talk with Dr. Haltzel are from 4:00-5:00 every Thursday in his office. If there are a few people still waiting to see him at 5:00, he is willing to stay later. Anything students wish to talk about, he will listen to. So far, Dr. Haltzel says the response to this open house has been fair, but he would like to see more students take advantage of it. In the near future, he is planning to hold a slide-lecture presentation from his trips abroad to anyone interested.

Aside from his job, Dr. Haltzel has other interests and hobbies. He enjoys all sports, especially those outdoors, such as hiking and canoeing. He is active in a variety of sports and in physical fitness. He also plans on becoming more involved in intercollegiate athletics.

A main intention stated by Dr. Haltzel was, "I want students to have four years of education where they are challenged and asked to think. I want to see them participate in the life of their college community and have their loyalty to Longwood continue throughout their lives."

Summer Session '83

Planning for the Summer Session of 1983 is already underway. The staff of the Office of Continuing Studies would like you, the students, to help us develop a summer program which will meet your needs.

During the Summer of 1982, Longwood offered 168 classes during two 5-week sessions. We want to try next year to meet as many needs as possible during the summer session.

One suggestion made by several students is to increase the number of courses to be offered during the evenings in order to accommodate the students who hold summer jobs yet desire to attend school. Suggestions from students help us to initiate new programs. To help us plan course offerings for the summer of 1983, clip the coupon below, indicate the course(s), and return the coupon to the Office of Continuing Studies, Dr. Robert H. Lehman, Dean, (Wynne Building) prior to November 1. REMEMBER — in order for us to know your needs, you must fill out the coupon and return it.

A Conversation With William Styron

By DAVID S. AREFORD

It is the clear, brilliant morning of Wednesday, October 6th around 10:30 and I am sitting in a black rod iron chair on a small green piece of lawn behind the office of Josiah Bunting, President of Hampden-Sydney College. With me are Dr. Bill Frank and Rotunda editor Joe Johnson. Dr. Bunting is playing music in his office as he goes about his daily activities, and the notes drift out the back door in the form of a violin and piano which mesh with the song of birds in the circling trees and with the voice of Dr. Bunting's guest who sits opposite me. I am facing the rising sun and also novelist William Styron.

The night before, Styron had given a reading from his most recent novel, the 1979 best seller Sophie's Choice which was awarded the 1980 American Book Award for Best American Fiction.

Styron's stalwart position in the literary world began when he was twenty-six, with his first novel, Lie Down in Darkness which was awarded the Prix De Rome of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. In 1953, his novella, The Long March was published and in 1960, his third novel, Set This House On Fire. Then in 1967, the controversial story of a historical Rebel Slave, The Confessions of Nat Turner was published and awarded the Pulitzer Prize for that year. Sophie's Choice is the most recent novel since 1967.

After Confessions of Nat Turner, Styron had begun work on a new novel, The Way Of The Warrior, which was to concern a United States Marine Colonel serving during the Korean War. But in 1974, Styron had a dream about a woman he once knew in New York that compelled him to begin work on Sophie's Choice, Styron is once again working The Way Of The Warrior which should be expected to be published one to two years from now.

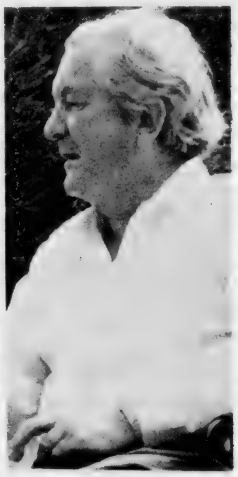
A volume will appear in November entitled This Quiet Dust And Other Essays and will contain thirty pieces on the south, war and victims which Styron wrote while and between writing his novels.

Styron has changed a bit from the Jacket Photo on his recent novel. He is fifty-seven years old and his hair is almost completely white and he is slightly overweight. He wears a white shirt unbuttoned at the neck and is relaxed, often resting an arm up on his head.

In his work, Styron is different from many of his contemporaries. John Updike was recently pictured on the October 18th issue of Time magazine. Updike is fifty years old and this month his 26th volume will appear. Numerically, Styron is belittled in the light of such a prolific writer as Updike. Styron has written the five novels mentioned and also one play. Updike has written more novels, but he has also written poetry and short stories. Styron is strictly a novelist and his lengthy, complex novels require years in writing.

On the issue of short fiction, Styron, who wrote some short stories in his college days, says he is not active in writing short stories because he is more comfortable with the form of the novel. His ideas are more suitable for longer works and the short story and himself are not compatible. Another consideration for Styron is that there is, with few exceptions, no market place for such work. A short story by Styron was published in Esquire in the late seventies, but he says the writing of it was a special instance when he was seized by the subject matter of an old black man, during his writing of Sophie's Choice. Given the limitations of time and his continuing interest in the novel, he sees little likelihood in getting involved in short story writing. The novel is definitely what suits him.

On the writing and production of his only play, In The Clap Shack, which involves a scared young recruit in the V.D. ward of a U.S. Naval Hospital, Styron comments that he ventured into this bit of playwriting for "fun." Playwriting is not something frivolous but something he does enjoy. He is presently preparing a play in collaboration with a friend about a murder in 1929 and hopes to have it produced in the near future.



This past summer on "signature", an interview program on CBS Cable, Styron said that writing is "like coughing up blood", when I asked him to elaborate, Styron made the remarkable statement that he really does not enjoy writing, for it is enormously hard and tedious work, but to Styron it is the only thing he was meant to do.

In a review of Sophie's Choice for The New York Times Book Review, the late John Gardner wrote, "those who wish so can easily prove him anti-black, anti-white, anti-southern, anti-yankee, anti-polish, anti-semitic, anti-christian, anti-German, anti-American, Anti-Irish — the list could go on and on. No bigotry escapes him."

Styron responds that he does not think of himself as a bigot. Many novels contain what could be called "Racial Slurs," but they are not intended as serious. He comments that any American writer with any scope couldn't help but to touch on these subjects, since each writer is in the center of this "melting pot" called America.

As mentioned before, Sophie's Choice won the American Book Awarded for 1980, but Styron turned this award down. Styron had joined a group of writers boycotting the new awards that replaced the National Book Awards and included a televised ceremony on William F. Buckley's "Firing Line." Styron says he did not exactly reject the process but he was against the "Academy Awards" kind of ceremony and aspect. He says it was the first time he turned down 1,000 dollars, but of course, he could not accept the money under those conditions.

Styron's readers and movie enthusiasts are awaiting ... the release of the movie version of Sophie's Choice, which stars Meryl Streep, Kevin Kline, and Peter McNichol. It will premiere

WILLIAM STYRON

Dec. 5 in New York.

Styron has read the script and enjoyed it and is confident of the ability of the cast. An aspect he looks forward to in having his work adapted for film is the increase of his audience.

Styron thought that The French Lieutenant's Woman was a fine film, but thought Streep had too narrow a space in which to work. Sophie is quite an undertaking as a character and I would suppose will be a huge highlight in Meryl Streep's career.

Styron says that he doesn't have one favorite novel out of the five he has written, but he likes to think of all his work as a continuous writing. He doesn't have a particular favorite but he does have favorite passages.

Styron read some early passages from Sophie's Choice the night before in the Parents and Friends Lounge at Hampden-Sydney College (Styron says he would have read from The Way Of The Warrior, if he had known of the advance publicity saying that he was). Styron gave most of the reading with the help of a large flashlight after the podium light mysteriously went out.

"A Light in the Darkness" may be a way to describe the endings of at least three Styron novels, which end with scenes set in the morning and with images of the sun. Nat Turner ends with, "Oh How Bright And Fair The Morning Star" which comes from the words of Christ mentioned earlier in the novel,"...I am the root and offbring of David, and the bright and morning star." Sophie ends with "this was not judgement day — only morning. Morning: excellent and fair. The ending of STHOF also is set in the morning. A group of children playing is also found at the ending of these two novels.

Styron says that the sun was "A Symbol Of Ressurection" in Nat Turner and was not Biblical in Sophie, but was to a virtually nonreligious Stingo, the narrator, a symbol of hope. The children, as the sun, are a symbol of renewal and continuity.

The Biblical tradition was important to Nat Turner and also to Styron's overall development as a writer. After the reading, Styron said that if he must pinpoint, he was most influenced by "All the People who wrote the Bible," as are many writers with a protestant background. He also mentioned the influence of Elizabethan poets such as Shakespeare and modern writers such as Faulkner.

Styron, who lives in Roxbury, Conn. with his wife and four children, is truly in his element in the South, being raised in Newport News. He is still considered a "Southern Writer", since all of his novels concern the South in some way.

In a commencement address given at H-SC on May 23rd, 1980, Styron said about his search for a college, "...my father and I traveled up here to Hampden-Sydney...I was so totally beguiled by this serene and lovely campus (it remains so, I'm happy to say, to this very day) and by the splendid easy-goingness of the place, and by so much else in the human sense that was wonderfully attractive, that I said to myself: this is where I want to be." He was turned down at H-S but went on to Davidson and then to Duke University. In 1980, Styron was given an honorary degree from H-S, and after the reading Bunting presented Styron with a H-SC Maroon pullover sweat jacket.

As we drive away, I am reminded of Stingo's words in - Sophie's Choice as he spies out his boarding house window at a party at the house of a rich couple and lets his imagination fly — "There was Wallace Stevens! And Robert Lowell! That mustached gentleman looking rather furtively from the door, could that really be Faulkner? He was rumored to be in New York... the shortish man with the wry ruddy sardonic face could only be John Cheever." I glance out the window at the man who gives a slight wave goodbye. He could be a H-S alumnus walking with Dr. Bunting, but a novelist was rumored to be in Hampden-Sydney. That shortish, shy reserved man with a gentle face full of Southern charm. Could that really be William Styron?

Information Notification

"Of course, we're really here to help the students," says Evelyn Ranson of her job in the information office. An elderly lady with greying hair and horn-rimmed glasses, Mrs. Ranson takes her job very seriously.

In addition to supervising the Rotunda and New Smoker, her job entails making change and selling stamps. "...Mostly we get information calls, of course," she adds as she lays down her Harlequin Romance beside an overflowing in-basket. "If things get slow around here I sometimes turn on the TV. It really gets boring when the young ladies and boys are gone on a break — it's worse than being in prison!"

Her wooden desk sits on a Longwood Blue carpet, right beside a large Greyhound Bus schedule. An artificial flower arrangement occupies the old fireplace while an antique wooden clock rests on the mantle. Across from this hangs a huge, tarnished plaque which constituted the Role of Honor back when Longwood was State Teachers College.

"We tell the people a little about the college, the number of students, etc., when they come to visit. I'll sometimes get up and show them around the Rotunda, but I can't leave the phone!" she stresses as she glances at her bright red phone. "We must get 1000 calls a night when there's a chance that school will be closed because of snow," says Ranson. "Sometimes, of course, we call campus police when students come in here sick...one girl had a seizure right here in the office and we had to call the nurse up from the infirmary to help her."

On thinking back, Mrs. Ranson recalls another event that has stuck in her mind over the years: "Some Hampden-Sydney boys went streaking right through the Rotunda! I'll never forget that — it scared me, of course. I was sittin' here at the desk, and when I looked out the door there they were, just as naked as they came into the world. The next day I was back at my desk when I saw a pair of naked legs standing in front of me. I looked up and there was Dr. Willett with his tennis racquet in his hand. He asked me how was everything going, and I told him things were better than they were last night!"

Mrs. Ranson shares her responsibilities with two other women, Ms. Clark and Ms. Baldwin. Between the three of them, they keep the Information Office running from 8:00 a.m. until 12:00 a.m. "We just do our best to steer students in the right direction with information...don't hesitate to ask — if we don't know, we just don't know."

Burn Out On Sunset Strip

By JOHNEL BORWN

Richard Pryor is back. The black Lenny Bruce with his very own tailored-trash-talk-technique. But not with a bang. This time with only a dull thud. It was his first movie since his explosive accident with cocaine and ether. The explosion has obviously changed him — brushes with death usually do. And his attitudes have changed. Nearly all of them. He's bitter towards drugs, addictions and junkies. He still satirizes racism but his tone is different. The usual subtle anti-racist undertones emerge as strong didactic overtones.

He still appears in the same fluorescent Pryor get-up — sparkling red suit complete with gold shoes and a yellow roese in his pocket. Burns' scars peeked above his black silk shirt complemented by the black silk bow tie. Trophies from free basing.

The jokes were sparse and produced some healthy chuckles, but none of the roar Pryor usually receives. His humor has always been a raunch brazen kind that was appealing because of the bare truths they often revealed. Live on Sunset Strip is different. Instead of the usual funny truths about your next-door neighbor, your mother or wife, Pryor uses jokes and realities to force his audience to laugh at themselves. He spoke of his trip to Africa which enlightened him. He vows to forever refer to black people as just that. The black people. No more slang or colloquial racial sloughs. His message was clear and even touching. "It's f—g hard enough to be a human being" — he cried as he went on in a fervor about repressions, possessions and plights. The audience was silent as Pryor pleaded for reflections and harsh realizations.

His story about his addiction to cocaine had the same mix of humor and bitterness. He told of the isolation a junkie feels and joked about how a junkie turns to his pipe and has real conversations and struggles with it. It's funny but it reveals the desperation of an addiction.

Live on Sunset Strip is a break from Pryor's usual style. It cleverly combines his personalized comedy with a twang of bitter morality. He comes on stronger than before, perhaps because he needs for his audience to see the revelation, and his unusual nervousness made it clear that he wanted their approval.

Alice in Blunderland

By CHIRS YOUNG

Oh, God. Alice Cooper is back. His newest attempt is called Zipper Catches Skin. Ouch!

Alice Cooper started out as a group, but the lead guy took on the name Alice.

You probably figured that, because who would name their son Alice?

Enough with the background. Who really cares where Alice Cooper came from anyway?

This album is a trip. To start it all off, they wrapped it too tight. It took me five agonizing minutes to tear the plastic off.

Realizing that it probably was an omen, I was a little apprehensive about putting it on my stereo.

After another five minutes of agony, I said, "What the hey, I'll listen to it."

So, much to my regret, I put it on. After five more agonizing minutes, I took it off.

I said, "This is going to be rough!", and believe me, it was.

O.K. Side One.

Zorro's Ascent is the first song. As you may have guessed, it's about Zorro. As with all songs on this album, it's stupid. The lyrics don't make a bit of sense.

"And let the skinny Peons feed upon the fat, it was liberated from some aristocrat, eh?"

Huh, Alice? Strike one babes

Make That Money (Scrooge's Song) is about, of course, money.

It starts out, "When I was a boy, my father was a man . . .? Really, Alice? I heard that was going around.

"Let that money, run like honey, on your tongue."

Is this for real? Strike two.

The next song is from the movie "Class of '84." It's called I Am the Future. If there's anything with any value on this album (besides the clever cover concept) this is it. It's about the kiddies of '84 saying "give me a chance."

Nice try, Alice. Foul ball.

Now before I tell you about this next song, I just want to say that I'm not suffering from pressure, severe trauma, insanity, or D.T.'s.

All right, here it is. It's called No Baloney Homo Saplens. And to top it off, it's dedicated to Steve and E.T.

It tells all of the little green and blues out there in outer space that we're black and white, and all right, and come on down, we won't eat you.

Time out. Alice just got hit by the pitch. (During the time out, I think he wrote side two.)

Side two is just about as bad. The first cut is called Adaptable (Anything for You). (All of his songs have sub-titles.)

In this song, Big Al is "your Sony, your Panasonic, heavy metal, philharmonic, I get ear aches, I turn my volume down a notch, or two."

Note: So far, Alice hasn't had to sing. He just does a "heavy metal rap."

I Like Girls is next. (I wonder if his girl friend's name is Allen?)

Anyway, it's a song about fast cars, blondes, luggage, and sex. Oh, yeah, his guitarist just discovered a second note!

Remarkably Insincere is about the same stuff.

Now it's time for Alice to bring in something close to home.

He says, "Just like the scene, in 'Halloween', you think it's all over, and you're gazing into space then you hear something, you start to turn, then you're staring him face to face, and he says, "Tag, You're It."

I Better Be Good sounds like one of those 40 Funky Hits albums. (It's after the Duke of Earl.)

Pitiful.

Now here's the killer. It's called, well, take a guess.

It's about dear Alice out in the middle of a highway, ane he doesn't see the truck "60 times my size" coming at him. (It's not like trucks are loud or anything!) All of a sudden he feels a tug at his leg, and his dead pet saves his life.

Here's what it's called, and I promise, I'm not making it up.

I'm Alive (That Was the Day My Dead Pet Returned To Save My Life)

Strike three, you are out!

Alice Cooper should go back to robbing graves, because he is a loser when it comes to music.

Tango in Taiwan

By JOHNEL BROWN

And she made it. Cindy Watson, a sophomore at Longwood, was Farmville's very own hero when she worked her way to the National AAU Karate Championships held in New Jersey in September. In New Jersey, Cindy competed against other finalists for membership on the United States Karate Team. In order to make the team, she had to beat every entrant in her division twice. Cindy finished in the top two of the Women's Heavyweight Class. Now she's a national champion, and as a member of the U.S. team, she'll go on to Taiwan in November to represent the United States in the World Karate Trials. When the judges told her she'd made it, was was surprised, "I Am?!"

After the team had been chosen, they had to fill out forms for new Gi's, (univorms). "I couldn't even write my name. That's how bad I was shaking." She seemed excited about having a new tailored U.S. Gi, but she said she would miss her old worn one that was covered with award badges. "It's just good luck. I like wearing it."

Cindy will meet the rest of the team in New York and they'll fly to Taiwan November 19. Because of conflicting plane schedules, Cindy will have to spend the night in N.Y. Airport. She didn't seem the slightest bit worried about the possible dangers of a small-town college girl along in a place like New York. After she finds where the plane for Taiwan is boarding she says, "I'm gonna sleep in front of that runway. There's no way they're gonna leave me in New York!"

The plane tickets will cost each member $800 and hotel rooms and meals for the 10-day stay will cost $600. Farmville merchants have been generous in helping to fund Cindy's trip. She appreciates the support. "It's a lot better than I expected, and every little bit helps. Some people just can't help. But you can't blame them. Times are hard, I guess." So far, Cindy's raised $400, and is working hard for more.

Jim Scott, resident supervisor of Frazer Residence Hall talked to Beegles Restaurant Manager, about creating a special sandwich for Cindy's cause. They agreed, and the result is a turkey and roast beef club sandwich called the Frazer High Rise. Fifty-cents from each sandwich sold will go to Cindy. It's a good way for students who can't donate a lot ot money to help support her.

When asked if the United States stands a good chance of winning the world games, Cindy lit up and said, "Oh Yeah!!" She says she's ready for the competition in Taiwan. She's been fighting her trainer, Sam Justice, of Richmond. "It's better to get beat than to fight someone you know you can beat all the time." It's much harder to fight men, according to Cindy, but it makes her more aggressive and makes it seem easier fighting women. "I've never been hurt by a woman. I'm used to fighting with Sam. He doesn't take it easy on me just because I'm a girl." Sometimes women will pretend they're badly hurt to make it seem their opponent isn't controlling her punches. "I've never been one to fake pain. I figure it's like degrading myself.

Would the World Games be on television? "I don't know. They sure oughta be — they show logrolling and stuff like that on there!"

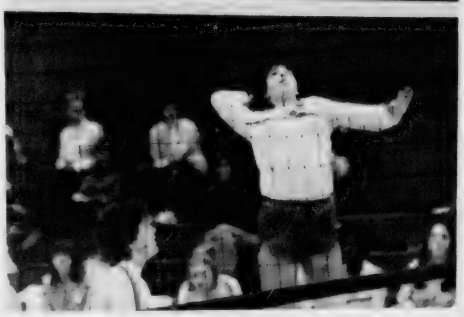
All Tournament

VCU won all six of their games in Pool 1 and won matches over Liberty Baptist and Eastern Mennonite in the playoffs to capture the title of the second annual Cindy Smith Memorial Invitational Volleyball Tournament Saturday. The tournament consisted of eight teams split into two pools and was held in honor of the late Cindy Smith, a Longwood alumnus and former volleyball player.

In the Pool 1 action, VCU's spotless 6-0 mark was joined by Longwood 3-3, Emory and Henry 2-4 and Ferrum 1-5. Eastern Mennonite also turned in a perfect 6-0 record in Pool 2. Liberty Baptist, Randolph-Macon Women's College and Hampton Institute recorded scores of 4-2, 1-5 and 1-5 respectively.

In the playoffs, VCU (Champion of Pool 1) defeated the LBC Flames (Runner-up of Pool 2) 15-7, 15-12, and the Lady Lancers (Runner-up of Pool 1) fell victim to hard spiking Eastern Mennonite (Champion of Pool 2) 13-15, 3-15. The Lady Rams defeated EMC 15-10, 15-8 in the Championship game.

Longwood Coach Joyce Phillips was pleased with the improvement of her Lady Lancers, and also noted that her team can come from behind to win. Longwood posted a 16-14 victory.



"(Against Emory and Henry) we came and fought," said Phillips. We did not just lie down and die."

Becky Norris, who has been the catalyst of the Lady Spikers this season, was named to the All-Tournament Team. Norris, a sophomore hitter, was praised for her outstanding play.

Becky has been playing well all season," noted the coach. "Her consistent play and aggressive style have been valuable assets for our team."

Currently 2-10, the Lady Lancers travel Thursday to meet Ferrum with Radford.

Rugby

Any basketball fan who has seen a college team overcome the opposition by stalling instead of playing real basketball would know exactly what to say after witnessing the style of play that both Hampden-Sydney and VCU RFCs used to beat Longwood 3-0 each time. "BOORING!!" Both teams heavily relied on kicking in order to keep Longwood's scrum and upper backs at bay, creating many line-ins and kick exchanges and not very much sound rugby.

The first game Wednesday afternoon against Hampden-Sydney was drastically altered in character by a drenching rain that reduced the ball-handling and maneuverability significantly. Although camped on Hampden-Sydney's end of the field for nearly the entire game, Longwood never scored, missing three field goals and having many drives stall right at the goal line. Hampden-Sydney not only got within range twice but one first half field goal on a penalty-kick was all they needed to beat a Longwood team that just couldn't smell blood on the other end. The 3-0 victory gave Hampden-Sydney only its second victory ever over Longwood. They will meet again on November 17 at H.S.

For the Saturday game against VCU the weather was much less of a factor but exhorbitant kicking by the opposition still was. Another factor against Longwood was a rash at penalties versus relatively few against VCU. The game was fairly even although Longwood was the clear aggressor until they were close to a score, whereupon VCU would tighten up and oust them somehow. A VCU 25-yard field goal in the first half was again all the opposition would need for a 3-0 victory, although Longwood nearly tied it up late in the game when Billy Galloway almost made a 30-yard field goal.

Losing by a total of six points in two games does not look all that bad but when you look at who they played, maybe it does. As Mark Furnari summed it up "We beat ourselves twice."

Blue and White Scrimmage

Longwood's men's basketball team, which opened pre-season workouts Friday, will play in the fourth Blue-White Scrimmage Saturday at 3:00 in Lancer Hall as a part of the college's Oktoberfest Weekend activities.

The Lancers, 15-8 last season, will split up into two eight-man teams for Saturday's intra-squad scrimmage which is open to the public at no charge. Longwood fans will be able to get their first look at a strong group of incoming players.

Head coach Cal Luther, assisted by Ernest Neal, has seven lettermen and three starters back from last season, plus nine new faces. Longwood faces a rugged 25-game schedule which includes defending national Division II champ District of Columbia and five teams that were ranked in the Division II Top 20 in '81-82.

Women's Golf 11th

By GEREE LYELL

The Lancer's Women's Golf team finished 11th out of 16 teams playing in the Duke Fall Invitational Tournament in Durham, N.C. on Oct. 8-10.

Senior, Robin Andrews tied for 10th place out of 75 players with a 3 day score of 235. Lanie Gerken, a sophomore from Watertown, N.Y., was second among the Longwood ladies with 243.

During the Duke tournament, junior Sue Morgan scored her career low, a 246. Coach Barbara Smith said "I'm really excited for Sue getting her career low. I hope she can keep it up."

Longwood's total score for the tournament was 998, just behind William and Mary's 996. Duke won the tournament with a score of 908.

On October 22-24 the Lancers will participate in the Lady Tar Heel Invitational at North Carolina.

Riding

By CYNTHIA SETTLE

The Longwood Riding team met at a show hosted by the College of William and Mary October 3 to prove their equestrian worth and emerged holding many brightly colored ribbons. The young team rode against eight schools consisting of over 90 competitors. Mary Brockwell, two year veteran, earned a fourth place which advances her to novice level. The results are as follows: Kristin Biarath — third Novice-Flat, first Novice Fences; Mary Brockwell, fourth Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter; Sara Farris — fourth Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter; Kirstin Lancendorf — third Intermediate-Flat, fifth Intermediate-Fences; Sherri Markow — fourth Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter; Amy Jo Poor — sixth Novice flat, sixth Intermediate-Fences; Carol Turner — fourth Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter; Beth Wiley — third Novice-Flat, fifth Intermediate-Fences, and Marty Wilson — third Novice-Fences, sixth Novice-Flat.

Player of the Week

Sophomore goalie Brian Sprinkle has been a key factor in Longwood Compiling an 8-2-1 record in soccer and for his play in the Gobbler Soccer Tournament October 9-10, Sprinkle has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 8-15. Player of the week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Sprinkle had nine saves in Longwood's 2-1 overtime win over Division I Virginia Tech and came back with five saves in Longwood's 1-0 overtime loss to Randolph-Macon. Brian has established himself as Longwood's starting goalie and has seen action in seven games with an outstanding goals against average of 0.57.

"Brian's play was outstanding in the Gobbler Tournament," said Coach Rich Posipanko. "He has given us very steady play in the goal the past few weeks. His efforts have been a key factor in our strong defensive play."

A graduate of Sherwood High School, Sprinkle started 11 games for Longwood last season as a freshman and finished with a 1.63 goals against average. Posipanko describes him as a very coachable player with a high work rate. "He could turn out to be one of the top goalkeepers in the state," says Posipanko.

A business major, the sophomore is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Sprinkle of Olney, Maryland.

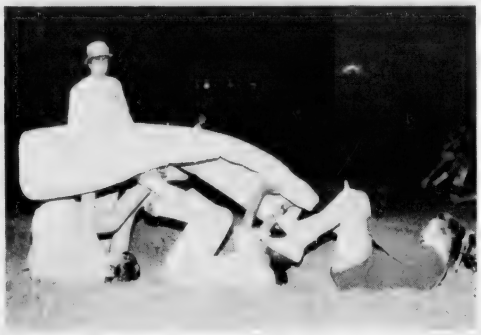
Soccer Team Breaks Record

By BECKY DUNK

Saturday, the Longwood soccer team boosted its record to 8-2-1 by defeating host Mary Washington 3-0. This gives the Lancers a total of six shutouts on the season, breaking their 1981 record of five.

Goals for Longwood were scored by Mark McArdle, Chris Wilkerson and Tim Brennan. (Brennan leads the Lancers in scoring with eight goals so far this season.) Assisting on the goals were Bill Foster and Steve Kern.



The Lancer defense looked real good, according to coach Rich Posipanko. Standouts were Scott Thoden, Dan Bubnis and Steve Kern.

Goalie Brian Sprinkle played an excellent game against Mary Washington, chalking up his fourth shutout of the season. This ties the school record for most career shutouts and most shutouts in a season.

The Lancers played excellent soccer just prior to, and during, fall break. On September 29, Longwood defeated host Roanoke 1-0, and on October 2, they shutout visiting Liberty Baptist 3-0.

Longwood traveled to Blacksburg on October 9 to participate in the Virginia Tech Invitational. They came away from the tournament with second place honors.

In first round play, the Lancers smothered Division I Virginia Tech's hopes of winning their own tourney, defeating them 2-1 in overtime.

Field Hockey 4-5

By KAY SCHMIDT

Although starting their season off with a disappointing 0-3 record, Longwood's field hockey team has won four of their last six games to bring their record to 4-5. The Lady Lancers, competing in NCAA Division II, have already played five division I schools this season, with two more on schedule.

Longwood's first two wins this season were shutouts against Division II Randolph-Macon 6-0 (Sept. 28) and Division I Richmond 1-0 (Sept. 30).

The Lady Lancers placed second in the Appalachian State Invitational (Oct. 1-2), winning two out of three games. Longwood lost in the opener against Division I ASU 1-0 then rebounded with wins over Davidson, 4-3, and Hollins, 3-0. Sophomore transfer Pam Esworthy scored two goals against both Davidson and Hollins.

Friday the lady sticker fell to nationally ranked Division III Lynchburg 2-0.

Longwood's J.V. team defeated Richmond J.V. 4-2, ASU J.V. 1-0 and 2-0 and were blanked by Lynchburg J.V. 2-0.

Leading the Lady Lancers in scoring is Esworthy with 5 goals, followed by freshmen Susan Groff and Mary Dey with 3 goals each.

This week Longwood hosts James Madison Tuesday (3:00), Bridgewater Friday (3:00) and travel to Duke on Saturday.

The Catalinas will present their first synchronized swimming show this Saturday during Oktoberfest. Showtimes are at 2:00, 2:30, 3:00 & 3:30. Admission is 25¢.

Golfers Host Tourney

Longwood's men's golf team, ninth in last week's Ferrum Invitational, will host its own tournament Friday afternoon at Longwood Golf Course. Several teams will join Longwood for the 18-hole tournament. The Lancers are defending champs.

With an 18-hole total of 353, Longwood came in ninth out of 11 teams in the abbreviated Ferrum Invitational at Old Mill Golf Club in Groundhog Mountain, Virginia Tuesday. The first round was canceled Monday because of heavy fog.

Tops for Longwood was Richard Miller who shot an 87. North Carolina-Methodist won the title with a 304.

For Junkies Only

You have a Problem.

You've been eating nothing but potato chips and peanuts since you arrived at Longwood. Now your weight is up and you don't know what to do.

You need help.

Nutritionalist Rita Harris is here at Longwood to help people with problems like yours. She is promoting the "Treat Yourself Right" program sponsored by ARA Food Services. The program aids in developing better eating habits and provides students with information about nutrition and well-balanced diets.

"Each person has their own individual eating habits," says Miss Harris, "I'm here to help students find out what's best for them." She can be found in Blackwell Dining Hall and is available to answer any questions students have concerning diets, exercise, or ARA Food Services.

"If students have questions about the types of food served in the Dining Hall or if they want to know why they can't have steak every night I can find the answer for them."

Miss Harris is also open for any suggestions for the improvement of the Dining Hall. She stressed the importance of student involvement.

"I am a service for the students here at Longwood but before I can help them, I need input. Student Feedback is necessary in order for me to know what the needs of the students are."

Miss Harris is a Home Economics graduate student from James Madison University and has worked with several dieticians.

R R R

The Riverboat Ragtime Review steamed through Farmville in an appearance at Jarman Hall last Monday, October 11. The show combined music and comedy, featuring a colorful quartet, an accurate impersonation of satirist Mark Twain, tap dancing to rag music, and even a one- man band.

The New San Francisco Jubilee Singers, led by musical director of the show Charles Mills, went through such well known old-time songs as "Give My Regards To Broadway" and "Yankee Doodle" as they enacted a trip down the Mississippi. Their singing was inspiring although perhaps "Camptown Lady" was a bit too light for the evening.

Actor comedian Donald Cowan came on stage intermittantly to give advice in the words of Mark Twain on "The fine art of lying." His performance throughout the show was brilliantly presented as he developed the humorous character of Twain. The evening was highlighted with a masterful piano solo by Fred Wells, playing "Maple Leaf Rag" by Scot Joplin.

After the show, many Longwood students met the cast and were able to speak with them about the show. Cowan, who looks sixty on stage, is actually about thirty. He spends two hours before each show with make-up. Both he and the Jubilee Singers tour separately from the fifteen-member Riverboat cast. Jim Coston, banjo player, helped to start and has been editor of "International Banjo" magazine.

The Riverboat Ragtime Review was one of the best shows at Longwood this fall.

Seapower

Selected paintings which tell the story of Naval history from the Age of the Galley to the present will be featured in Bedford Gallery from October 20 to November 21. The exhibition, presented by The Longwood Fine Arts Center, is on loan from the Mariner's Museum in Newport News, Va. This museum is dedicated to the preservation of the history and culture of the sea.

Works in the exhibit are dated from the mid-1700's to the 1920's. Gallery times are Monday — Friday, 9 a.m.-12 noon and 1 p.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday and Sunday, 2-6 p.m.

Archeology Offer

Tomorrow afternoon, anyone interested in archeology will have a rare opportunity to dig with the best of them!

Bob Flippen, an Anthropology intern here from George Washington University, is beginning an archeology dig at a site on Hampden-Sydney campus. He is offering anyone interested a chance for first-hand experience at an archeological excavation. The first excavation will be tomorrow from 1:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. The van will leave around 1:00 from behind Hiner.

Anyone interested should also attend an orientation presentation tonight at 7:30 in Hiner, room 206. Bob will show slides of previous digs, give a history of other digs in the area, and introduce this particular site to those who are not familiar with archeology.

Showcase Gallery

The work of senior art major Mike Lewandowski is currently featured in the Showcase Gallery at Longwood College.

The exhibit includes acrylic and oil paintings and drawings in charcoal and crayon.

Lewandowski will complete requirements for the Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in December. He is serving as student director of the Showcase Galley and is head host for the Bedford Gallery at Longwood.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Felix E. Lewandowski, of Annandale.

The public is cordially invited to view Lewandowski's exhibit in the Reading Rooms of the Lankford Student Union Building through October 22.

Student Concerns Discussed at Press Conference

By LIZ D'SURNEY

President Janet Greenwood responded to a number of questions concerning various topics raised by students in her press conference held Tuesday in the Virginia Room. For the most part, many of the issues raised dealt with the benefit and well-being of the students.

One of the eight questions raised was where the funds come from for the Summit, a publication (newsletter) geared toward blacks. Publication cost is $56.30 and comes from the budget of Vice-President for Student Affairs. Dr. Greenwood stressed the importance of such a publication stating, "This is one way in which colleges and universities have tried to develop a sense of responsiveness among minority students." She concluded by saying, "Such types of action have proven to be lucrative. A specific number of minority students are to be retained and we must retain them and make sure they are placed if we are to keep federal money and federal money means financial aid."

The question of funds to purchase lamps for the study rooms in dorms was raised. However, there are no specific funds for this. This is something which may need to be decided between each dorm. Dr. Greenwood did say, "We need to work on, number one, the identification of specific areas: where lamps are to be placed, and number two, how to secure them."

In conjunction with funds for the lamps, funds for stolen phones is another unsolved problem. Phones have been stolen from the library and other public areas, and this is yet another case of being "unsure" where the funds to replace them will come from.

Relocation of freshmen and whether or not upperclassmen will have a voice in this situation is another concern of students. It was mentioned that there will be approximately 200 room vacancies at the end of the semester due to drop-outs, graduation, and transfers. Dr. Greenwood said, "Choices will be determined by which spaces are available. Some upperclassmen will get freshman roommates. Options have been reviewed but decisions have not been made." Sixty-five students still remain in triples. Thirty to forty transfers are expected at the end of the semester.

A request for clarification of the new $100 damage fee requirement was brought up. Dr. Greenwood said a number of people agreed upon the enforcement of this new rule. "Parents, administration, and faculty, as well as some students, thought that those who do the damage should be the ones who pay for it," she said. The $100 will be returned to students at the end of their four years here provided they have not done any damage. "Hopefully this will limit the amount of damage done. I would hate to estimate the amount added to the housing fee over the past years to compensate for damage done," she said.

Clarification was also requested on the hall council fee usage. Dr. Greenwood stated that the decision to collect this money was made by the residence life committee and was not mandatory. She said, "The money is to be used on hall activities for the entire year and hall councils and hall residents would decide what those activities would be."

In reply as to why the fast food equipment for the dining hall was not here, it was said that it has been ordered and is on the way.

A request for a brief summary on Dr. Greenwood's trip to Europe was discussed. Dr. Greenwood refrained from going into detail, only briefly mentioning various colleges and universities she visited. However, she is planning a slide-lecture presentation to be given in the near future to those interested.

Party was the name of the game for Longwood students during Oktoberfest. See related story on page two.

The Rape Of The Locked

By JOHNEL BROWN

Thursday, October 21

Two o'clock a.m. (or thereabouts) . . . A small group of hoodlums entered Lankford. A door unlocked — perhaps propped ajar with a bent Budweiser can, or a window cracked. No one knows.

Two fifteen a.m. . . . Quietly they stalk the first floor, looking for damage to be done. Posters to be slashed. Glasses to be broken. Walls to be marred.

Two twenty a.m. . . . The door to the student mailbox room is open. They've spotted their target. The pewter-colored mailboxes gleam in the dim light. The engraved box numbers shine white.

Eight ten a.m. . . . Allen Franklin enters the mail room in Lankford. He yawns and finishes the cold coffee from Hardee's. He's ready for another day of mail sorting, box stuffing and stamp selling. He walks to the students' box area. Thirteen doors have been ripped from their hinges.

Yes, they've hit Longwood and its checkbook again. Vandalism is the in thing. Or so it seems. First, four unabridged dictionaries were stolen from Grainger. Then phones were taken from various public areas on campus. Now, the vandals have graduated to destroying mailboxes.

The mailbox caper will cost the students over $400. Lt. Tom Webb of Campus Police said that they are unsure of many of the details. They do know that it happened after 1:30 a.m. on Thursday. "Apparently they just came in and jerked the doors open. It looks like they used a screwdriver and popped them open." No one is even sure of why they chose the mailboxes. "I don't know, unless they were looking for money," said Lt. Webb. They threw all of the severed doors into the trashbox along with the mail they took from the boxes.

The vandals have caused some administrative hassles in addition to the financial consequences. Mr. Allen, the postmaster downtown, said, "The boxes are ruined, and if vandalism continues they can't be replaced."

"Now we have to keep those students' mail separate," lamented postmistress Mrs. Bailey, "I'd like to wring their necks."

Oktoberfest 1982

By DEBBIE RIPPY

Oktoberfest der Geist 1982 started off with color rush, a series of relays between the Reds and Greens. The Reds won this competitive event due in large part to the large number of males on the Reds' team and females on the Greens'. The Reds also won the paint battle that followed.

While waiting for the skits to begin on Thursday, the Klowns sang songs about speckled frogs on speckled logs, a lollipop count, and an old lady who swallowed a fly, a spider, a bird, a cat, a dog, a cow and a horse. Of course the lady died, but why did she swallow the fly?

Eight Geist members did a short but cute traditional German dance which was repeated at the end of the parade.

The Meisters were introduced and welcomed all to Oktoberfest '82, and the skits began.

The Reds did their skit in accordance with the story of The Night Before Christmas. Grandpa is trying to tuck in his three grandchildren who want to hear a story first. The story hasn't been told in so long that when he opens the book, he must blow the dust from the pages. He then began, "It was the night before Oktoberfest and all through the halls..."

After his story, the Klowns gave a performance and were followed by the Greens giving their skit.

The Greens' skit was an adaption of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol". It started out with Harold, a typical Longwood College student, studying for a Business Law test. He is talking about how just about everyone else is studying, and no one is really into Oktoberfest. He travels with three ghosts to the past, present and future and witnesses the decline of Oktoberfest. Escorted by the ghost of the future who is dressed all in white except for his very large green with white polkadotted tie, Harold watches as all events and practices are cancelled since no one is involved. He knows things need to change, but that "One person can not be an Oktoberfest!" Both of these skits got their points across so well, that the judges declared it a tie.

Saturday, although quite cold, had a large turnout and an array of scheduled events to attend. The Lancer Edition kicked the entertainment off with performances at 9 and 9:30. They started off with "Great Jubilation" then went on to "Blues Down to my Shoes", "Fame", "On My Own", and "Body Electric." The vibrant movement that they showed was the result of choreography by Eileen Mathis, Horace Scruggs, and Sabra Seneff. They really seemed to get the energy flowing into the audience during the song "Blues Down to My Shoes".

The Parade was at 11 and there were not many participants. Those that did participate seemed to be having fun though. First prize in the float competition went to the color float displaying the hex sign.

A picnic was held on Stubbs Mall with a jazz band performance. The area was flooded with people waiting in line for chicken dinners.

The Midway was open from 12:30-4:00 with boothes to suit just about anyone. You could smash a Sig, send a Delta Zeta care package, play games, throw wet sponges at a crow's face, or buy foods, drinks, mugs, bumper stickers, hats or buttons. For the kids, there were race cars to drive, a choo-choo train to steer or ride and a moon walk. In Wygal's basement, there was a haunted house sponsored by the concert choir who had a performance in Jarman at 1.

During the Klowns performance at 2:00 in Lancer Hall, they did various skits and gymnastics. They started out tumbling, then sang their version of a tune from "The Sound of Music" entitled "My Favorite Things." They did a bathroom skit, a suit sale skit and a good impression of some unforeseeable machine. The end and the height of the show was the pyramid. There were six layers. Unfortunately, after the second try the first row was removed. The third try was a success though for the last five layers.

The play "Ten Little Indians" was shown at 8 p.m. every night.

On Thursday, the Meisters challenged everyone to search for the true meaning of Oktoberfest and to catch the Oktoberfest spirit. Another point demonstrated — "Longwood is the only place where red and green makes blue."

"Pick a Klown, any Klown."

Contest

Longwood College students are invited to participate in GLAMOUR Magazine's 1983 Top Ten College Women Competition. Young women from colleges and universities throughout the country will compete in GLAMOUR's search for ten outstanding students. A panel of GLAMOUR editors will select the winners on the basis of their solid records of achievement in academic studies and-or in extracurricular activities on campus or in the community.

The 1983 Top Ten College Women will be featured in GLAMOUR's August College Issue. The ten winners will receive a $1,000 cash prize.

Anyone who is interested in entering the search should contact the Public Affairs Office for more information. The deadline for submitting an application to GLAMOUR is December 1, 1982.

Pottery At Midway

Under a tent that whipped constantly against the wind in the field next to the midway stood the pottery exhibit sponsored by Randy Edmondson, Professor of Art here at Longwood. Clad in a down vest and ski cap Edmondson explained the sources and purpose of the exhibit.

"Students, teachers, and professionals including local potter, Tray Eppes, are involved in the cause," says Edmondson. "We all get together about a week before the exhibit for one day of intensive pottery making." A little over one-hundred pots are produced and sold for anywhere between two and fifteen dollars. "We make on the average about five-hundred and fifty dollars a year which isn't a lot but it helps."

The money made during the exhibit goes toward new equipment for the Art Department. Edmondson stated, "Students who participate in the exhibit help themselves as well as future generations at Longwood."

David and Nancy review pottery Saturday, at the Oktoberfest Midway.

Editor's Turn

Dr. Holmeson has always been intrigued with the mind of a criminal. A disciple of Mailor and no stranger to Capote, Dr. Holmeson has made his living guiding clients through the murkey depths of the criminal psyche.

I went to his study for help yesterday. I, too, was curious; curious about a certain culprit or culprits who recently has stolen four dictionaries from the English Department and ripped the doors off of 13 mailboxes at the Longwood post office. I hoped Dr. Holmeson could help me.

"Dr. Holmeson, I've got a problem," I said. He smiled vaguely and waved me into his study.

I told him my story. "Humm," he settled back into his chair, eyeing the large, wooden bowled pipe in front of him, "and the mailboxes, any possibilities of a numerical code?" he quered.

"None that I know of; it looked as though they just went in and tore the doors off randomly.

"Did the dictionaries have any particular value outside of their utility."

"They were big," I said, "and old."

"Curious," he said and fingered his pipe thoughtfully. He lit the pipe and began to pace the floor.

"You know, I have solved many a complicated problem from this room, siphoned an answer from the bilage of information a client would offer but this. . . this," he continued to pace.

"I've heard of religious murders, literal 'cat' burglars, virgin prostitutes, and southern Baptist alcoholics, but this. . . this problem; it seems impossible." He plunked himself down in the chair. You see there is no possible, rational motive. Stealing one dictionary, certainly perhaps two, but four — there is no solid foundation for such an action. And the mailboxes — who in his right mind would rip the doors off of 13 mailboxes? They did not keep the mail; they did not keep the doors; they did nothing but add to the fees that the students have to pay. . .students they could well be themselves. Why, it's the actions of a. . ." and he stopped talking. His eyes brightened.

"Why, Mr. Johnson, I've been so slow. . . you know sometimes I wonder if I don't grow too old for this type of work. I fear senility may have taken the edge off." He tapped his forehead.

"The answer has been right here in front of us. The obvious solutions are always the hardest to detect. The person you are looking for is thoughtless, correct?"

"Certainly," I said.

"He is selfish, for he cares nothing about the students."

"Yes," I said.

"He is energetic, but not curious; and if he's a student himself, also rather dumb."

I agreed.

"Well, the person you are looking for is, to sum up all those qualities in a single word, an 'idiot.'"

"An idiot?" I said.

"Yes, an 'idiot', I think that term is quite succinct."

I had to agree.

Your Turn

To The Student Body:

Monday, November 1st will mark the beginning of Longwood's first alcohol awareness week. Each day of that week will consist of slogans, posters, pamphlets and one or more featured speakers each evening in Jarman Auditorium. There will be no charge and faculty, staff and students are invited to all events.

This week WILL NOT be one of lectures, threats, or scare tactics to individuals about "the dangers of drinking." This is a week of becoming aware of alcohol and of peoples experiences through themselves or someone else drinking.

The student committee for this week wants to extend a challenge to all of the campus community to attend these events and listen. That is all we ask for from you. We feel the speakers are worth going to see and hope that you will also.

Respectfully,
Lisa Swackhommer,
Chairman Alcohol
Awareness Week

Your Turn

A bit of drama unfolded Thursday night, as the Oktoberfest Klowns got into trouble trying to complete one of their pyramids, after already succeeding on an earlier one. You have to see these acts, especially when tried by a group made up almost entirely of girls, to appreciate the great effort required to complete the building of a human pyramid. One cannot accuse the Klowns of giving anything less than 100 percent for not only their performance Thursday night and on through Oktoberfest but also for the weeks of preparation it must have taken them to be ready to perform these acts. After two successive failures to complete a pyramid it became obvious that they were taxing their limits and really should have given up, but they made it on the fourth try, even though agonized faces were clearly showing through pointed makeup of joviality. About 100 people witnessed this and were on their feet giving a standing ovation as a result.

So last Thursday night, 22 Klowns and over 100 people shared a fine moment while the rest of the college could have cared less. Apathy has become more and more prevalent as each Oktoberfest has passed and this year, Geist had momentarily expressed difficulty in getting enough people to perform some of the events. The more traditional events seem to be taking most of the criticism, being billed as immature and unintelligent. A survey conducted by Geist last year revealed a high overall interest in concerts and festhouses while skits and Klowns were at the low end of the scale. One cannot say that apathy and ethnocentism are not a part of the hostile feelings towards the traditions, but one must also admit that the majority of the average college community is slowly turning awa from many parts of this institutions feature weekend, whether their feelings are the result of intelligent judgements or not.

One of the ironic things about the accusations of immaturity on the part of the costumed participants is that they are active in many facets of school life, and cannot be billed as silly or immature when GPA's and other such records are shown. They are merely highly motivated to get involved in the school life and this is one of the most visual ways to be involved. They are typical of the type of group that exists in all colleges that simply needs outlets to express their support for the school. "Find a more suitable outlet" the opposition would say. If they are quite happy to be Klowns and Meisters and such, maybe they would be just as happy to fill other roles that are less offensive to the students that now insult them. Maybe so.

On Friday afternoon a recent graduate of Longwood was leaning on the rail of the balcony of first floor Cox, where major parties were to be held that night. "I like to get drunk and immature on occasion but organized immaturity, that's too much." At the tail end of a rather small Oktoberfest parade Saturday morning, loud unisonous and very girlish shouts came from a Farmville fire truck. "We have the spirit!! We are the Klowns!!" The chant sounds determined the impressive. "It sounds like Romper Room" one spectator says.

The work that has gone into Oktoberfest was well meant and impressive but the initial ideas are what the static is about. It is saddening to see such able people being offended behind their backs but when the basis for the offense is insult of intelligence, one - begins to agree with that side. At a recent press conference a spokesperson for Geist stated that "We are not trying to do away with any of the traditions of Oktoberfest. We are merely trying to make the weekend more enjoyable for everyone." At the end of last Oktoberfest an alumnus who was part of the very first male class at Longwood, bluntly stated his opinion. "Longwood is as atavistic as you can get."

There was one group of people who did nothing at all to sensationalize the old traditions of Oktoberfest, while definitely participating in the event. In the Oktoberfest parade, S.P.E. train No 69 chugged its way to the 35 dollar first prize which was spent on a keg for the brothers to chug down later. Even to those who dislike the festival normally, it was a hit.

Despite the criticism that grows yearly in the face of a slowly changing institution, it is obvious that Longwood will always need an Oktoberfest. You just can't kill the whole thing. But due to the growing amount of dissatisfaction in the student body, some type of format change would seem to be wise at this point. Presently, the criticisms of Oktoberfest are merely grumblings. Left unchecked, they could grow into quite an embarrassing situation for the college. According to the silent majority, the elimination of Oktoberfest would be fallacious but some change in the structure is necessary. But the final decisions are in the hands of Geist and if the subtle changes they made this year are any indication of their ability to handle the situation, competent moves should result.

Sincerely,
Mike Lynch

Yogaville: Truth is one, Paths are many

Head up Route 15 to Sprouses Corner and take a left onto 60. Watch the rolled bales of hay flash by perpendicular to the road and feel the lump in your stomach swell as the terrain becomes more mountainous. Take a right onto 56 in Buckingham and start threading down the serpentine back road lined with gutted gasoline stations and landscaped (a'la pulpwood industry) with branches and stems gapping from the ground like perennial skeletons. Another right onto 604 and the first popping of mountains come into view. Slip through the rows of boxed houses slapped down in a mad dash for domestication and follow an arrowed sign leading to a dirt road — "Go Slowly, Please, Raise No Dust" — and you are there. "Welcome to Yogaville."

"Everybody is afraid of dying . . . why, if it is the first time you are dying . . . if we did not know fire would burn, we would go up and hug it as a friend . . . the very fear of dying is the very proof that you have died before . . . and you don't want that to happen again."

Sri Swami Satchidananda was on a roll. He sat in a cushioned chair shoved to the farthest corner of his newly built meeting room. Rows of disciples, monks and semi-interested fad seekers circled around him cross-legged on the floor. Two hundred yoganites swelling and meditating in reverential dreamdum.

". . . like a peaceful lake — no waves, a mirror . . . you drop a stone in — the stone creates a depression, on the other side of the depression a crest forms and it goes on — crest, depression, crest, depression . . . how would you fill a depression, why chop the crest and tumble it down to the depression — a peaceful lake, smooth like a sheet, a mirror . . . your true nature is a straight line — eternally happy, eternally peaceful."

"That's the idea behind Yogaville" said Swami Sivananda, one of Sannya's monks attending the service. We stood in a room adjacent to the ceremonial area where Satchidananda spoke. A series of four glass panes and a doorway separated us from the people, but not from the Swami inside, "We have a video tape setup and P.A. system. We film and tape Sri Swami Satchidananda for pamphlets and our magazine 'Integral Yoga,'" said Sivananda. He was dressed conventially (Izod sweater and Levi corduroys) but entirely in orange — the color of his manastic order, the Sannya's which originated some 2000 years ago.

"A lot of people who get involved in Yoga aren't religious, but get religious . . . they begin to look into their own religions for some depth. Yoga trains the body physically and mentally if you let it. What we have here, or hope to have here at Yogaville is just a safe place to live, a comfortable environment. You don't have to practice Yoga to belong, just don't violate our lifestyle."

"You must be a boat, a boat with no holes. You should be in the water but the water should not be in you. A ship that sits in the harbor is safe, but that's not what ships are for."

Satchidananda's voice floated throughout the building.

"We don't see ourselves as separate from the community, our Yoga lifestyle is different, but we still interact." Savinanda pointed to a model on a nearby table, "the Yogaville community and Lotus are very strongly connected. We hope to create a universal church." He handed me a pamphlet "Truth is One, Paths are Many." The design of the church, named Lotus (Light of Truth Universal Shrine) is, according to the pamphlet, "a visual statement of that oneness." It was designed by architect James Mcabe (a disciple of Satchidananda) in the shape of a Lotus flower and would occupy a large part of the 700 acres which Yogaville or "The Integral Yoga Institute" has already purchased in Buckingham County. "On the main level, you will be able to approach any of the individual altars where a ray of light shines on the symbol and scripture of a particular faith. But when you turn around to face the center of the shrine, you will see that all of the altars are in fact illuminated by one central light which rises and divides into those many rays. Each altar — representing Hinduism, Judaism, Taoism, Buddhism, Shinotism, Christianity, Islam, Sikhism and native American and African religions — will be sheltered within the curve of one of the petals. Another altar for all faiths known and unknown, with or without scriptures and formal symbols, will also be there. The next level will repeat this pattern, having a central hall surrounded by libraries containing the scriptures and books of each of the faiths represented by the altars in the main shrine above. At specified times, a small, underground room without symbols or other adornment will be available specifically for experiencing complete silence.

Satchidananda speaks to a crowd at Yogaville. A microphone for taping and the P.A. system, is located directly in front of him.

The entire structure will be surrounded by reflecting pools and fountains in a landscaped park. Eventually, small individual shrines for the various religions will form yet another concentric ring. Each one will use the architecture traditional to that house of worship."

SRI SWAMI SATCHIDANANDA

Andrews Large & Whidden Construction began construction April 30, 1980. The Lotus will require about 2 million in funds for completion. The following breakdown shows anticipated cost of each phase, and in what area skills and materials will be needed. Phase one has been completed.

Phase 1: $250,000 — Road to site, including grading and drainage.

Phase 2: $250,000 — Grading of temple site.

Phase 3: $400,000 — Installation of base.

Phase 4: $300,000 — Installation of dome.

Phase 5: $800,000 — Furnishings, lighting, fountains and landscaping.

On the back of the pamphlet was a statement of possible ways to "fill" such needs.

1. GIFT: You may wish to give now, in whatever sum you can.

2. PLEDGES: For those who would like to give a significant amount, but cannot do so all at once, regular contributions can be made over a period of time that is comfortable for you.

3. TITHING: An age-old custom in many traditions, giving 5-10 percent of your income allows you to renew your commitment to the LOTUS each month.

Swami Satchidananda's voice came over the "Big Brute" speakers hanging from the wall. "There's nothing wrong with the world, you don't have to run away from it to your Himalayan cave. It's not the things that attack you, it's your relationship to them. It's very easy for us to blame somebody or something for our misery — but pleasure and pain do not come as somebody's gift, you are the creator of your own Heaven and Hell."

A small girl sat in the corner looking through photographs of the construction of Satchidananda's home, which is about a half-mile from the meeting house. There are twenty children enrolled in the school at Yogaville. State certified teachers practice an open classroom curriculum in the ceremonial room during the day, bringing home the major disciplines of Yoga. The child smiled, everybody seemed to smile.

"I used to go to school here. They teach about being friendly and Yoga. Some of the kids really cry when they're on vacations. Kids here aren't as rowdy or mean like in public schools. They don't tease you a lot."

"I go to public school in Washington now, but we come down here every weekend for Swami's talk." Her name is Rada, or divine love. She is an eleven-year-old adherent to the Yoga lifestyle. She has never eaten meat, does not smoke and does not drink — like all members of Yogaville.

Rada showed me the rows of magazines and small gift items which form a large part of the financial basis for the Integral Yoga Institute. Swami Satchidananda is the subject of the magazine covers and much of her incessant chatter

"He's 67, but he doesn't act 67. Sometimes he'll take us down to the lake area in his jeep — I think it's a Ronco —" "Bronco?" "Yeah — Bronco, and he has a cadillac or something like a cadillac — you could call it a cadillac, anyway, he does neat things like setting off firecrackers on the 4th of July for everybody to see. He's just like a little kid."

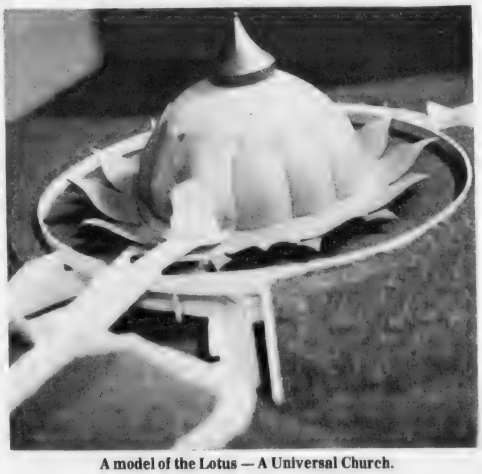
Continued: Yogaville Truth is one, Paths are many

Rada plans on coming to Yogaville "regularly — whenever my parents move down or whenever I get old enough to come down." She assesses Yogaville in familial terms— "just like a great big home." And like large homes, materials are exchanged or donated to a boutique which members can siphon through for clothes or other items which may be useful.



Sometimes children are exchanged. Chitra, or divine artist, is a young girl about thirteen. She was editor of a junior high school newspaper in Texas before she came to Virginia last August. Now she goes to Yogaville. Her family still lives in Texas. They did not want her to be bussed 120 miles to the nearest school, so, being one of "the family" they contacted members of the Integral Yoga Institutes Administration and set up an arrangement with a family (the Metros) to care for her in Buckingham. Chitra's family has never met the Metros, nor have they ever been to Buckingham.

"It was a real act of faith to send her all this way, not knowing us," said Bhavani Metro, the mother of 7 children, 6 natural, and of course Chitra, the "adopted" child. "We have people here from all walks of life, almost all professions — lawyers in Washington, chiropractors, doctors, nurses, teachers, construction workers and computer services. They're from areas as far away as India. We have centers in Richmond, Connecticut, Washington, New York and Charlottesville — just on the East Coast."

The service was ended. Everybody stood waiting for Swami Satchidananda to pass through the room; a slight ripple in his metaphorical peaceful lake — the disciples looked disappointed. He would be going to Australia for a few months. Yoga was spreading outward, reaching the many paths for that one truth. Satchidananda was leaving his garden. He smiled as he walked past in a long white robe. Tapping Chitra lightly on the head, he whispered "Your family will visit you soon . . . take the calf and the cow will follow."

The Metros drove to Farmville in a white van. Carpet lined the interior and the dim back light shadowed the features of the children who had eagerly consented to take a ride with that stranger from Farmville. They talked and waved animatedly reviewing their prophet's words and shooting questions like "Why do you write so much?"

Baghavan Metro, the father and driver, talked of Yogaville's new airstrip — (they now have a single engined plane) the Lotus International Airport. He has his own construction firm — Metro Construction. They are adept at conversation, for TV is not a part of their lifestyle. Baghavan comments on the treats that make up their lives — like going to a hotel or restaurant and ordering two desserts — a sugar "rush" or dosing up on coffee and experiencing a caffeine "rush." The children grow tired, it is late, and midnite excursions no matter how exciting, eventually take their toll. Baghavan offered an apple and commented on the diet which is usually supplemented by individual gardens. The vegetables are expensive out of season; but this year there was no garden for the Metros, they were too busy working with Yogaville. She looked out the window as we entered Farmville town limits. "But a garden for sure next year . . . definitely a garden."

L.C. Associate Finds Ancient Stone Tool

By BETTY BRYANT

Man's link with his far-distant past is sometimes as fragile as a bit of stone on the lake shore.

To most of us, that bit of stone would have had no special significance. But because of the collaboration between a "lay" archeologist and a professional one, it has now been identified and recorded by the Smithsonian Institution as a Paleo-Indian scraper-blade from the Archaic Period (9000-1000 B.C.).

Jesse Overstreet, of Clarksville, found the artifact near the lake in the Boydton district of Mecklenburg County. He took it home and added it to his collection, which now numbers approximately 1,000 projectile points, scrapers, and other tools used by prehistoric Indians.

Through his wife, who is a member of the Longwood College board of visitors, Overstreet met Dr. James Jordan, director of Longwood's Field School in Archeology. The Overstreets visited the Field School dig in Cumberland County and the Smith-Taylor Mound site near Farmville.

This past summer, the Overstreets invited Dr. Jordan and his Field School students to a picnic at their home in Clarksville. While there, Dr. Jordan and the students viewed Overstreet's collection of artifacts.

The scraper-blade captured Dr. Jordan's attention immediately. "It is unlike any artifact I had ever seen before," Jordan said. "Both the material and the shape are different from artifacts usually found in this part of the country."

Dr. Jordan offered to send the artifact to Dr. George Phoebus, supervisor of the Anthropological Processing Laboratory at the Smithsonian, for identification.

"I think Dr. Jordan thought it might be something I had made, trying to fool him," Overstreet recalls with amusement. "He was giving me the lie detector test by sending it to the Smithsonian."

He has been completely vindicated by the Smithsonian's official report, indicating that the stone tool is quite possibly 10 thousand years old.

Overstreet has been collecting artifacts for almost 30 years. "When I moved to Clarksville in 1963, there was a lot of (Buggs Island) construction going on," he said. "Everybody was saving artifacts and talking about them."

He describes himself as a history buff and a beachcomber at heart. "This kind of thing gets a hold on you," he said. "You find something like the scraper-blade, lying there on top of the ground as though someone had just dropped it, and you start wondering about who made it and what kind of circumstances he lived under."

Another very old artifact in his collection is a Clovis projectile point, the kind used to hunt mastadons 11 or 12 thousand years ago. Named for a site in New Mexico, this type of projectile point is very rare in the eastern United States.

Overstreet and his son, Robert found the Clovis about a mile from the spot where the scraper-blade was found. Robert, who is now an air-traffic controller in Baltimore, still shares his father's interest in artifact collecting. "Whenever he comes home, he tries to find time to go to a promising site and look around," Overstreet said.

How does he recognize an artifact? "Well, this is something you learn," Overstreet explained. "Shape and color are clues. Most of the artifact stone is very white or bluish, different in color (to his eyes, at least) from the native rock in this area.

"Sometimes, you can spot the outline of a projectile point or a piece of stone that has been hollowed out for use as a mill."

Overstreet says, rather sadly, that he doesn't have much time these days for beachcombing. "But I do some quail hunting in the winter, and I keep my eyes open." The next significant find may be there, just waiting for the right pair of eyes to spot it.

Archeology Dig Begins

By CINDY CORELL

The archeology dig at the third excavation site at Hampden-Sydney began last Wednesday afternoon with a crew of eight Longwood students, Longwood professor, Dr. James W. Jordan and Anthropology intern from George Washington University and excavation director, Bob Flippen.

The crew consisted of Archeology veterans: Johnny Aranza, Rose Goad, Mary Ellen Munoz, and David Wilson and those relatively unfamiliar with the work: Mary Cawthorne, Linda Compton, Joanne Gerow and Tom Richard.

They first went to the museum at H-SC and saw some of the artifacts found at previous sites on campus. From there they went to the new site near the H-S football field.

Many artifacts were found in the dig including a lot of ceramic wares, glass wares, and a small caliber bullet. Some of the most important objects were three clay pipe stems, even a rare one that still had the entire name of the manufacturer, "I. Hayes." Two very unusual ceramic pieces were found, both of them supposedly plates. One was yellow, one grey and both had unique designs rubbed through the glaze.

Another excavation is planned for Friday, Oct. 29, and if anyone is interested in the short-ranged project, they are invited to contact Bob at the Department of Sociology-Anthropology at 392-9277.

"So far, I have been very impressed with these volunteers," said Bob, "They've been a lot of help and have shown a great deal of initiative and energy."

Davis vs. Trible—Nov. 2

Davis Sets Education Issue Straight

Dear Editor:

In recent weeks, persons acting on behalf of Paul Trible's campaign have distributed materials on Virginia campuses which falsify and distort my views on education. Unfortunately, distortion has become a staple of the Trible campaign. I'm sending you the enclosed information to set the record straight.

Financing Higher Education

Students returning to campus this fall and their parents have been faced with some very perplexing questions about financial assistance and student loans. For many, there has been a great deal of uncertainty and confusion — will there be enough student aid available, will we qualify, what changes have been made?

The reason for this confusion and concern is evident. The federal budget for the basic Pell Grants for needy students has been trimmed; the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant program has been cut by 25 percent; there have been cuts in the College Work Study and State Student Incentive Grants programs and cuts in new fund. for National Direct Student Loans. Altogether, these loan cuts have amounted to a 17 percent reduction in funds for this fall.

College and university officials expect there to be further cuts in the largest of all aid programs, the Guaranteed Student Loan program. How much the cuts will be and who will be affected are still unknown.

In the meantime, many students and parents have not applied for loans, thinking that they were no longer eligible or that the money had dried up. State and federal loan programs, as a result, have seen a drop in the number of applicants, available money that is not being apportioned to students, and the inevitable last minute rush of applicants.

Students and parents are forced to plan all the more carefully and a long-range basis for the mounting costs of higher education. They must be able to plan with the knowledge that loans, assistance programs, scholarships and other forms of aid will be available to those who are deserving, talented and motivated.

Because of the central importance of education and the need to ensure that education is available to as many as possible who have the drive, intelligence, and ambition to succeed, I outline these basic policy goals for higher education assistance.

Cuts in financial aid for higher education should be stopped.

Stability and continuity are necessary in financial aid programs.

More work-study opportunities are necessary.

Greater surveillance of student abuse of loans is necessary.

"Students, parents, college and university officials, and lending institutions must know clearly, and with sufficient lead time, how much money will be available (for financial aid), if students and their parents will be eligible, and if work-study funds will be available."

Cordially
Dick Davis

A Letter to Students Concerning Trible

A very important event will take place in Virginia one week from today. The citizens of VA will elect either Representative Paul Trible or Lt. Gov. Dick Davis for the U.S. Senate.

. . Let's look at the issue of aid to students of higher education. This year Paul Trible introduced a bill into the House of Representatives which would greatly increase the amount of money to assist students in paying for their higher education. Under Mr. Trible's legislation, tax payers who would be eligible for federal tax refunds would be able to check a box at the end of their tax return indicating their desire to contribute to programs of student financial assistance. The amount designated, ten dollars for a single return or twenty dollars for a jointly filed return, would be used to support programs authorized by Title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965. These programs aid post secondary students in meeting their college costs and take the form as Guaranteed Student Loans, Pell Grants, Work Study, National Direct Student Loans, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants and Student Incentive Grants. The individual donors could specify which program they wished to contribute to. If the tax payer did not specify the program, then the federal government would distribute the money to the Title IV programs. This program would neither drain revenue from the government nor contribute to the budget deficit.

Secondly let's look at Dick Davis' views on taxes. He supports deferring or eliminating the third year ten percent tax cut which the government owes you. And when speaking of Social Security on October the sixth, Mr. Davis stated Social Security payments should be met "...I don't care where it comes from. Granted, Social Security payments must be met, but a more equitable system should be devised to help keep the system sound,

Lastly, I conclude this letter with a quote from the next junior senator from the state of Virginia. "Evidently Dick Davis has nothing of substance to say to the people of Virginia, and would prefer to draw the campaign away from the matters that are of importance — jobs, the economy and defense. Virginia's future is at stake. It's unfortunate that a candidate for the senate in Virginia would resort to questionable campaign tactics. Do we want Virginia's future to be in the hands of someone who has to resort to name-calling because he has no substance to back him up, no experience to back him up, someone who can't address the issues of the campaign because he can't understand them?" When we go to vote next week, remember that we are voting for a candidate for the U.S. Senate from Virginia, Virginia. Don't settle for second best, let's all tell Dick Davis "tough luck". Vote for the man who best represents the interests of the upcoming generation, Vote for Paul Trible.

Cordially,
Tom Moran

Results of Mock Elections

Students at Longwood College selected Paul Trible over Dick Davis by better than a 2 to 1 margin in a mock election sponsored by the Student Government Association today. The final tally showed Trible the victor over Davis, 67 percent to 33 percent.

Tom Moran, chairman of the Longwood College Republicans, said it was Trible's positions on the issues which concern young Virginians that prompted them to choose Trible as the next junior senator and not Dick Davis. "There is no doubt that Davis' statement regarding social security has hurt him considerably," stated Moran. Two weeks ago Davis said it would be "just tough luck" if young people have to shoulder the burden of higher taxes to support social security.

Cherie Stevens, President of the Student Government Association, said, "Twice as many students have participated in the mock election this year. This reflects a growing concern of students for what's going to affect their future."

The official vote count was 225 for Trible and 74 for Davis.

Play Review — 10-4 Little Indians

By JOE JOHNSON

There's nothing like an Agatha Christie mystery — sitting back under a veranda, sipping gin and tonic or iced tea depending on one's preference, and slipping into the sleuth's shoes, invading the dark recesses of a murderer's membranes, or when brought to the stage , seeing the intricate network of deceptions unfold before your eyes, the actors and actresses bringing to life the psychological foibles of Christie's characters. Foibles as obvious as an alcoholic doctor who "doth protest too much" or as subtle as a would-be murderer who protests not at all.

Character delineation is Christie's strong suit and nowhere is it more prevalent than in the stage adaptation of "10 Little Indians" performed October 20-23 at Jarman Auditorium by the Longwood Players.

The play is set in August of 1944, in the living room of a house on Indian Island, off the coast of Devon, England. Ten visitors arrive having supposedly been sent invitations by some unknown party. The murders begin and the plot thickens. Could it be Rogers, the reluctant butler (William Huskey)? Or perhaps Philip Lombard (Mark Winecoff), suave and debonair man of the minute? The audience is never really sure until the end. Guesses are taken: "It's the butler, I know it's the butler"; "No, no, look at the face of that doctor, a criminal for sure," but the Longwood Players keep the game going; run the audience through a gamut of titillating emotions (slapstick hilarity, heart-breaking secrets and, of course, gruesome death scenes) until the last shot is fired.

Mr. Evans should be complimented on the beautiful set. If he can provide such an elaborate backdrop, in two weeks' time, one wonders what he could do in a month, in a year (perhaps another King Arthur's court for Camelot, eth?) The lighting was impressive, but ran into a short or two during Thursday's performance (according to Dr. Lockwood just another visitation from the local Jarman ghost). The performers covered quite well for that and other mishaps also (was Wargrave really supposed to spill that drink during Friday's performance . . . not matter, Mr. Thomas made it seem that way and played it with the true audacity of a professional).

Choreography was a shifting maze of feet and characters which added to the tension, building steadily throughout the play. The confusion it caused heightened the overall effect of deepening mystery and something about to happen — masterful.

Act I , as an introduction, was a little slow-paced. William Huskey (Rogers) needs to work on projection and the opening scene between him and Cynthia Jude (Mrs. Rogers) needed work — rather choppy and in some cases barely audible. The act picked up with the entrance of the other guests, though. Michael Foster's (William Blore) hand shaking zealotry was humorous and lightened the act considerably (particularly his handshake with Sir Lawrence Wargrave — Jeffrey Thomas) — nice job.

David Walton as Anthony Warston needs to pick up an English accent somewhere if his character's roost is London — a Southern drawl just doesn't cut it. Aside from that his performance was quite good.

Mark Winecoff as Lombard stands out as one of the best performances of the evening. He fit the character like a glove (or at least made it seem that way) and would have stolen the show if there weren't so many other talented actors and actresses around him.

Act II picked up the pace and was an overall success. Sound effects for the storm were nicely done. Character interaction was at a high point and came off unmarred. Particular praise goes to Michael Foster and Mark Winecoff. You could see the hidden sparks flying. Anthony Russo pulled off Dr. Armstrong's stumbling over a drink (alas, only water) with nice timing and did a fine job throughout the play. Sabra Seneff as an hysterical Vera Claythorne reminds one of the old adage, "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned" — very realistic. Whoever bought the blanks for the show must have had a thing for gunpowder — loud and scary — quite effective. The only complaint is General MacKensie who, made up as an old gent and obviously suffering from senility, occasionally lapsed into a voice which sounded not unlike a college student's. True, consistency is the hobgloblin of little minds, but a 70-year-old character that sounds five years out of puberty is a little hard to swallow.

The crescendo of the play and the performance was, of course, Act III. Jeffrey Thomas as an insane Sir Lawrence Wargrave was brilliantly delineated. Ahh, the pregnant pause of melodrama, the fast weaving speeches chanted on the edges of sanity, the rumbled hair, the agitated eyes, the quickening gestures — he must have loved that part — so did the audience. Sabra and Mark did a great job laying the groundwork for that scene and also finishing it off.

What more can be said? Hopefully, some of the technical aspects of Jarman can be smoothed out before the next play (lighting and sound) and perhaps a few of the actors and actresses will watch the boo-boos that don't ruin a play but can certainly take the edge off. Overall, though, if the next show contains as much talent as this one did, the Longwood Players can take a well-deserved bow.

Requirements For Aid Established

At the May Board of Visitors meeting a policy was adopted which adhered to guidelines set forth by the Federal Government for academic requirements for students receiving financial aide. The policy is divided into two main areas for Federal Financial Aide — Campus based programs (the financial aide office at Longwood select the recipient and the amount — according to his-her needs) which include Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG) College Work Study (CW-S) and National Direct Student Loans (NLSL) and noncampus based programs (programs where the amount is determined by the Financial Aide Office but the recipient is not) which include Pell Grants, Guaranteed Student Loans and Plus Loans.

Grants are awards of money that you do not have to pay back, work-study gives the student a chance to work and earn the money needed. Loans are borrowed money which a student must repay with interest.

For those students receiving campus based financial aide there are three major requirements. The student must be enrolled for twelve undergraduate hours or nine graduate hours and must have a satisfactory academic standing defined as follows.

1. Continued enrollment at Longwood as determined by the academic dean.

2. Achievement of 0.5 or better cumulative grade point average in any one semester. Students earning less than 0.5 GDA will not be eligible for financial assistance the following semester, and must have made satisfactory academic progress, which means that during any year in which a student receives financial assistance, that student must average 12 earned credit hours for each semester (9 hours for graduate enrollment). Typically a student who attends both fall and spring semesters and who does not attend summer school, must complete 24 credit hours during those two semesters. A student who does not earn the 24 hours has the following options:

1. Enroll for the necessary number of hours during the summer term (without summer financial aid). Successful completion would reestablish aid eligibility for the following semester.

2. Not attend the summer term and for the fall semester (without financial aid) earn 12 hours plus the necessary number to bring the total (fall and spring from the prior year plus fall semester) to 36 hours. Successful completion of these hours would reestablish eligibility for the spring semester.

For the noncampus based aid such as Pell grants the requirements are the same if the student is full time. If a part-time student the required number of hours to be completed will be reduced proportionately.

Students withdrawing from the college during the semester will be expected to repay a prorated amount to the applicable assistance program. Students withdrawing after mid-semester will not be eligible for financial aide during the next academic year when (and if) they return.

State funded financial aide (such as CSAP-College Scholarship Assistance Program or VELA Virginia Education Loan Authority) have the same academic standing requirements (0.5 GPA and registered full time student) but only distribute aide per grade level.

Thus a freshman can only receive more aide after completing 30 credit hours (the requirement for being a sophomore at Longwood College), a sophomore after completing 60 hours and a junior after completing 90 hours. If a student withdraws after the halfway point through the semester, he-she is not eligible (except if withdrawal is for medical reasons) to receive aid for a waiting period of one year.

Starting next year (1983-84) male students over 18 must have certification of registration for the draft before receiving financial aide. Also a 10-40 tax form will be required.

Director of Financial aide Mr. Marvin Ragland put it quite simply "Money's getting so tight that they're not giving it away like they used to. You can't make a six-year career out of college anymore. Financial aide is trying to give money to students that need it and deserve it."

New Chief of Campus Police Named

Eric Wayne Shoemaker, of Richmond, has been named Chief of Campus Police at Longwood.

He will be coming to Longwood on November 1 from Virginia Commonwealth University where he has been associated with the department of public safety since 1976. He has been director of training and recruitment for the department, assistant director of the training academy, criminal investigator, and patrol officer.

In his work at VCU, Mr. Shoemaker introduced the first certified training course in the state for private security personnel. He initiated performance-based testing at VCU's police academy and served as chairman of the Police Training Assessment Committee.

Mr. Shoemaker holds the bachelor's degree in government from the College of William and Mary and the master's degree in the administration of justice and public safety from VCU. He also has completed specialized training, including the Legal Instructor's School conducted by the Marshall-Wythe School of Law at William and Mary, and the Firearms Instructor School at the FBI Academy in Quantico.

Before going to VCU, Mr. Shoemaker was a patrol officer and criminal investigator with the University of Virginia's police department.

The exhibition of selected paintings from the Mariners' Museum in Newport News is on display in the Bedford Gallery at Longwood College through November 21. The 31 paintings, all from the 19th century, depict the many moods of the sea, harbors and coastlines, and "portraits" of ships.

Cameratas Hit The Road

The Camerata Singers, Longwood's mixed vocal ensemble, will leave tomorrow (Oct. 27) for two days of performances in the Richmond area and Northern Virginia.

The Cameratas are scheduled to perform Wednesday at Thomas Dale High School in Chester and Douglas Freeman High School in Richmond, and Thursday at South Lakes High School in Reston and Herndon High School.

Also, there is a possibility the group will perform Friday at two high schools in northern Virginia and Fredericksburg, said Dr. L.E. Egbert Jr., the group's director and head of the Music Department.

Formed in 1976, the Camerata Singers are a select, 40-member ensemble specializing in chamber music from the sixteenth through the twentieth century. The Cameratas perform annually for both the Renaissance Dinner and Contemporary Music Symposium, perform every other year with the Richmond Symphony, and present various "Period" and other concerts.

Fall Choral Festival

"I am always impressed with the level or work done by the high school teachers for this event and the students have always come very well-prepared for this very long day of singing," said Dr. Louard E. Egbert of the 4th annual Fall Choral Festival which was presented Sunday at 7:30 in Jarman Auditorium.

About 200 high school juniors and seniors from all over the state of Virginia gathered on Jarman's stage to sing three pieces. "Regina Coeli," by Wolfgang Mozart, "The Road Not Taken," and "Choose Something Like A Star," from Randall Thompson's Frostiana and "Song of Democracy," by Howard Hanson. Soloists for the performance were Jeanne Drewer, soprano from Longwood, Donna Mason, alto from Waynesboro, Va., Chris Pace, Longwood student, tenor and Longwood Music professor, Thomas Williams, Boss.

According to director Louard Egbert, "One of the drawing cards of these performances is the fact that the arrangement of the pieces performed include an orchestra that accompanies the choir," This orchestra consists of fifteen string instruments and nine winds, and is made up of Longwood Music faculty, music students and professional musicians from the Richmond area. Frieda Myers, a Longwood faculty member and Wanda Morris, a music student will accompany for both rehearsal and performance. Dr. Bruce Montgomery is the Festival Manager.

From Womb To Tomb

By JOAN BROOKS

LYNDA WHITLEY

Dr. L. B. Rock was, in a number of ways, a lot like his name. His jaws were set tightly and his brownish blond hair did not take away from the allusion . . . "Rock". He was very calm, unmoved, you might say, by the questions Toby Thompson's Longwood journalism class threw at him. Most importantly Rock stood for something . . . himself.

Dr. L. B. "Sandy" Rock is the only doctor in a small county on the other side of the Blue Ridge Mountains named Craig. Craig County patients differ from city patients. They know little or nothing about preventive medicine, and aren't as well read as city patients. "The people from the country come in and ask for penicillin for runny noses."

The teen-agers are different from most. The girls marry early, some don't even finish high school. The ones who go off to college become sexually permissive, take drugs, and turn to alcohol to help them overcome the pressures that they aren't used to. Rock stated that, "Most of the kids who grow up in this area want to get the hell out but they usually find the city to be a terrible place and they come on back."

An average day for Rock begins when he "comes into the office about 9:00 a.m." to a waiting room full of patients either with or without appointments. Most cases are infectious diseases, or follow ups for chronic lung problems, heart problems, or high blood pressure. He has noticed that the injuries he treats are seasonal. Injuries caused by the chain saw happen in the spring and fall when people cut firewood. Gunshot wounds happen during hunting season. Unlike most city doctors, Rock makes house calls and is also the county coroner since the nearest hospital is twenty-five miles away. He literally treats everything from the womb to the tomb.

He chose to practice in a small town because the rural people were ignorant of preventive health care. He hoped not only to cure them, but also to educate them. He added that he has enjoyed the country life. He lives alone but friendly neighbors keep him company. He speaks highly of a couple in their mid-eighties who invite him over frequently, and an elderly lady who cooks Sunday dinner for him every week. "You just can't help but be close to the people," he says. He arrived in Craig County two years ago with a two year commitment and now his patients want him to stay for the next thirty-five years.

He has chosen not to continue his practice in Craig County, however. His commitment ends in December. He has accepted a position with Virginia Tech as a student health counselor. He says his reason for change is, "I didn't want a life of constant medicine, and I am interested in student health." Some of the problems of a college age student are relatively new to Dr. Rock who admits that he has been away from them a long time and he was afraid he couldn't handle their problems. He feels students are more into alcohol and drugs and are much more sexually permissive. Because of the permissiveness he was seeing a lot of sexually transmitted diseases. One disease Dr. Rock elaborated on was a homosexual related disease called kaposisarcma. It totally wipes out a person's immunity system. Someone with this disease can die from something as simple as a cold. Drugs and alcohol are a definite problem with college students. Dr. Rock feels that marijuana is everywhere. Some people would rather have drugs because it changes some people for the better while it changes others for the worse.

Dr. Rock does not know how long he will stay at Tech. "It depends on whether or not I like it," he said. His plans for the future are simple. He hopes that in the next ten years he will not be blown to oblivion by a nuclear holocaust. His sole advice to college students is, "Hmmmmm . . . Have your blood pressure checked. And, oh yeah, don't smoke cigarettes. I'm a fanatic about cigarette smoking."

Basketball Conference Formed

Starting in January, 1984 Longwood will join with Randolph-Macon, Radford, Mount St. Mary's, Maryland Baltimore County and Pittsburgh-Johnstown as play begins in the Mason Dixon Athletic Conference, a Division II men's basketball league.

Formation of the conference which took place October 6 in a meeting at Randolph-Macon, was a big day for Longwood basketball. After joining Division II in 1980, the Lancers now have their first ever conference affiliation since the men's basketball program began in 1976. There is a strong likelihood that the conference will add other sports in the future.

Being a member of the Mason Dixon means that Longwood will have at least 10 games against quality opponents each season and in the future the Lancers and other conference members will have a shot at qualifying for an automatic berth in the NCAA playoffs. The new league must wait until the spring of 1985 to request the automatic qualifier.

The new conference should be one of the strongest Division II leagues in the nation. Longwood, which advanced to the Division III Final Four in 1980, has an 81-28 record over the past four seasons. Radford has had a strong program in recent years and The Mount, UMBC and Randolph-Macon have made a total of nine appearances in the national tournament since 1977.

Starting with the 1983-84 season, the MDAC will have double round-robin slate with games being played between January 10 and the last Saturday in February. A six-team post-season tournament will be held with Mount St. Mary's serving as the first host school. Radford will host the tourney in 1985, UMBC in 1986, Longwood in 1987, Pittsburgh-Johnstown in 1988 and Randolph-Macon in 1989.

Longwood plays Radford and Randolph-Macon twice and Maryland Baltimore County once in the upcoming season.

Booters Win 2

By BECKY DUNK

In soccer action last week, the Longwood Lancers chalked up two more victories and suffered one defeat. Their record now stands at 10-3-1.

Randolph-Macon, one of Longwood's toughest opponents, visited for an afternoon match on October 19. The Lancers defeated them 2-1.

Both of Longwood's goals came in the first half. Steve Kern's shot from forty yards out bounced over the goalie and into the net for their first goal. With four minutes left in the first half, Gus Leal scored his fourth goal of the season, with an assist from Chris Wilkerson.

Randolph-Macon came back with one goal in the second half, but it wasn't enough to stop the Lancers.

Brian Sprinkle played the entire game in goal. He saved seven of Randolph-Macon's eight shots.

On October 22, Longwood easily defeated visiting Newport News 6-0. (This game was originally scheduled for October 13, but was postoned due to rain.)

High scorers for the game were Leal and Tim Brennan with a goal apiece in both halves. The other two goals were scored by Clay Mullican (first half) and Dan Bubnis (second half).

Good offensive performances were given by Brennan, Leal and Steve McGurl.

Al Del Monte tended the Lancer goal during the first half, and was replaced by D.J. Walters in the second half.

On October 23, host Virginia Wesleyan defeated Longwood 1-0. This was just the third loss for the Lancers this season.

Starters Gus Leal and Steve Kern were held out of action for disciplinary reasons.

Longwood remains idle until October 30-31, when they travel to Randolph-Macon for the Mid-Atlantic Tournament. Other tournament participants include Radford and Mount Saint Mary's.

Hockey Team Hosts Radford

In last week's action, Longwood's field hockey team was edged by James Madison 2-1, shut out Bridgewater 3-0 and fell to Duke 2-0.

Jeannie Wakelyn scored one goal in both the JMU and Bridgewater game, while handing out two assists.

"Her speed greatly contributed to our win against Bridgewater and our effectiveness in the Madison game," said Coach Bette Harris of the senior forward.

B. J. Casey and Susan Groff also scored in Friday's Bridgewater contest. Goalie Lorrie Garber led the defense with a total of 21 saves in the three-game week.

"I feel we played fairly well against some tough competition," said Coach Harris of last week's play against two Division I schools.

Longwood's J.V. team beat Bridgewater J.V. 4-0 and lost to James Madison J.U. 2-0

This week the Lady Lancers travel to Mary Washington on Wednesday, host Radford on Friday at 3:00 and participate in the Battlefield Tournament at Mary Washington on Saturday. Longwood now holds a 5-7 overall record and stand 1-0 in Division II play.

KMS

Golfers 4-0

Paced by an overall team effort. Longwood's men's golf team defeated Ferrum Saturday at the Longwood Golf Course.

The Lancers finished the fall season 4-0 in match play with the 337 to 356 victory over Ferrum.

Freshman Tommy Spencer fired an 83 giving him runner-up meadlist honors. Richard Miller and David Pittman were next, shooting 84's.

Other Longwood scores included: Stan Edwards 86, Punkaj Rishi 87 and Ty Bordner 90.

Looking forward to the spring season, coach Steve Nelson said, "We didn't play well but it still was a good fall season; the freshmen and first year players had a good experience."

Sports Profile: Robin Andrews

Running, Weight-Training Important For Golfers Too.

By BECKY DUNK

According to Longwood senior golfer Robin Andrews, golf is "not just a game where fat men go out on the course, drive around in golf carts, and play as fast as they can." Golf is a sport which requires rigorous exercise and strong arms and legs.

Being a dedicated golfer, Robin believes it is very important to stay in shape. "You have to be in good physical shape, partly because you have to carry your golf clubs around for 18 holes."

To stay in shape, Robin practices almost every day. She is sometimes on the course chipping away at the ball for four hours at a time. In addition, she goes running every other day. During the winter, Robin lifts weights to keep her muscles toned.

All this exercise, practice, and conditioning has paid off. And how! Robin has led the Lady Lancer golf team to second and third place finishes in Division II Nationals, twice attaining All-American status for herself.

She holds two school records: low score two rounds and low score three rounds. She has won many golf tournaments, amateur and collegiate, during her career.

Finally, Robin has been selected Longwood College Player of the Week five times. Who is the person behind all these honors and awards?

Sitting on her bed, golf clubs close at hand, Robin, a Business Administration major from Woodlawn, Virginia, tells us how she began playing golf. "I started playing when I was about ten years old. I went to the golf course with my dad when he got off work in the afternoon." She loves being out-of-doors and enjoys "just walking around," so golf is the perfect sport for her.

Robin's high school, Carroll County High, had no girl's golf team. Consequently, she played on the boy's team. This experience helped her a lot. Robin says that the guys "used to hit (the ball) from the farthest tees and I would try to hit as far as they did."

Robin was captain of the boy's golf team during her junior and senior years. This fact shows how well she was accepted by the guys on the team.

Robin came to Longwood on a full golf scholarship. She received an offer of a partial scholarship from a school in southern Illinois. However, "It's too cold there," Robin says, so she decided to stay in her native Virginia.

"My game has really improved since I came to Longwood," Robin says. Mostly she has improved her short game (chips and putts). "I have become more patient with myself, too," Robin says. "If I'm having a bad game, I try not to get upset."

Robin thoroughly enjoys participating in tournaments. She likes to watch other people play almost as much as she "gets into" playing herself. "I love to watch other good golfers," Robin says. "I played once with a girl who had shot a 67. I enjoyed playing the course with her, talking to her."

Robin has shot one hole-in-one during her golf career. It came while she was participating in a Virginia State Tournament. Naturally, the hole-in-one occurred during pre-tournament practice. "I hit it badly and it just happened to roll in," Robin says with a laugh.

Ideally, when she graduates in May of 1983, Robin would like to play professionally and coach or teach golf. However, this really would not be practical. "There's a lot of stress when you play professionally...you have to win or you don't make any money," she says. And Robin, just like all the rest of us, will need money to survive.

She hopes to find a management job and continue to play amateur golf. Maybe one day she will go professional. For right now, however, Robin just feels fortunate she is able to play.

The Longwood women's volleyball team defeated Ferrum 13-15, 15-13, 15-3 and suffered a setback to Radford by scores of 15-11, 6-15, 6-15 Thursday, October 21, in last week's only action.

Although the Lady Lancers would have liked to take two victories, Coach Joyce Phillips was impressed with the win over Ferrum.

"We played well together in the third game (15-3) against Ferrum," said the coach. "But I feel that in order to win more games, we must have more consistent team play."

Currently 3-11, the Lady Lancers host Bridgewater Tuesday at 6:00 and Bluefield and Randolph-Macon Women's College Friday at 6:00. All home matches are played in Lancer Hall.

Kersey All-American

Longwood junior forward Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey has been named to the pre-season small college All-America basketball team chosen by Street & Smith's Official Yearbook for 1982-83.

One of only three Virginia cagers named to the team, Kersey is the ghird leading career rebounder and field goal percentage shooter among active players in NCAA Division II. He averaged 17 points and 11.8 rebounds last season as a sophomore, ranking seventh in Division II rebounding.

Twenty players from NCAA Divisions II and III and the NAIA were chosen for the Street & Smith team, compiled by Jim Bukata. Other Virginia cagers picked were Hampton Institute senior Tony Washington and Roanoke College senior Gerald Holmes.

Unquestionably one of the finest players in the nation, Kersey led Longwood in scoring, rebounding, steals (45), dunks (28) and blocked shots (26) in '81-'82 and was second in assists (61). The 6-7 power forward has scored 864 points and pulled down 509 rebounds in his career while making 60-9 per cent of his shots from the floor. He was a first team All-South Atlantic Region selection last season.

Longwood All-Americans: A Diverse Group

By KENT BOOTY

Their sports range from baseball and soccer to golf and gymnastics. Their hometowns are as big as Cincinnati and as small as Woodlawn, Va. (population — MAYBE %??(. They include four seniors, a junior and one sophomore.

But all of these Longwood College students have something in common. They are All-Americans.

And they aren't the first All-American athletes that Longwood has boasted recently.

In the past three years, a total of 11 Longwood students have achieved All-American status in their respective sports. One athlete, who has since graduated, attained the equivalent of all-American status three consecutive years, and another has made it twice.

The six All-Americans currently enrolled at Longwood are: Robin Andrews (golf), Darryl Case (soccer), Dayna Hankinson (gymnastics), Dwayne Kingery and Doug Toombs (baseball), and Tim White (golf). A seventh All-American, golfer Emily Fletcher, withdrew to transfer early this semester.

Some, like Case and Andrews, give much of the credit to their coaches at Longwood.

"What Rich (Posipanko) did is that he gave me the chance," noted Case, a business administration major from Cincinnati. "I had to prove myself. And the players helped a lot, too."

Asked where his soccer career was before coming to Longwood, Case said bluntly, "Nowhere."

Andrews, a business administration major from the Carroll County community of Woodlawn, praised women's golf coach Barbara Smith for her patience and confidence-building.

"She helps us on our attitudes; that's a big part of it," said Andrews, an All-American in 1981 and again this year. "She helps us when we get down on ourselves. Confidence is important — if you think you can do something, you can do it."

Case was center fullback, or "stopper," on the team that compiled an 11-4-3 mark — the best ever — last year. Andrews, who finished fourth in the national women's Division II tournament in 1981, was runner-up at the state amateur tournament this past summer.

Last year's baseball team, the Division II South Atlantic Region champs, featured a pair of All-Americans: shortstop Dwayne Kingery and catcher Doug Toombs.

Toombs, a social work major from Chase City, became an All-American after a phenomenal freshman season during which he led Division III with a .565 batting average. He is Longwood's career leader in batting average (.422), hits, runs batted in and doubles.

"I just love the game. I've always wanted to play baseball," noted Toombs.

Kingery, who transferred to Longwood after two years at Ferrum College, also professes a love for the national pastime. "I've played since I was five," said Kingery a business - administration major from Roanoke. And like his teammate, his statistics are impressive; he led the team with 38 RBI's last spring, hit .390 and was named most valuable player for the regional tournament.

Dayna Hankinson claims the distinction of reaching the lofty All-American plateau in her freshman year. A business education major from Springfield, she made it to the finals in floor exercise at the Division II national championships in March.

"The team spirit is one of the best things," Hankinson, now a sophomore, said of the women's gymnastics program. "That's one of the reasons I came here."

Golfer Tim White, a Richmonder who will graduate this December, was named All-American during his sophomore year. One of 20 individual golfers chosen for the national Division III tournament that year, he finished 14th out of 120, thereby reaping the honor.

"That (making All-American) gave me a lot of confidence and let me know I could play in some good tournaments," said White, who is student teaching in Chesterfield County.

White, who won the third Greater Richmond Association Championship in August would like to be a professional golfer.

The health, physical education and recreation major helped the men's team win its first College Division state championship in April.

Other All-Americans have included lacrosse player Julie Dayton (1981) Golfer Kay Smith (1981) basketball player Kenny Ford (1980) and gymnast Kathy Idelson (1979).

Kersey, Armstrong Lead In Scrimmage

From Sports Information

Street & Smith All-American Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey and junior Adrian Armstrong led the Blue team to a 110-98 victory in the fourth Blue-White basketball game Saturday afternoon in Lancer Hall.

Kersey had 30 points and 14 rebounds while hitting 12 of 14 shots from the floor and Armstrong tallied 27 points and nine rebounds. Freshmen Lonnie Lewis added 18 points, Frank Tennyson scored 13 and John Rusevlyan had 10 for the Blues, who led 49-35 at the half.

For the white team, seniors Joe Remar and Ron Orr, both of Elizabeth, New Jersey, led the way with 29 and 24 points, respectively. Junior Mitch Walker and senior Bobby Carter scored 16 and 13 points.

Head Coach Cal Luther admitted that play was often ragged as are most pre-season scrimmages, but he felt the game was valuable for the players.

"The game gave us a chance to see our freshmen play in front of a crowd and to see how they would react in a game type situation," said Luther. "We had good enthusiasm and hustle."

The Lancers open the 1982-83 season at the Mansfield State Tip-Off Tournament November 20-21.

MADD, SADD, Others Present Cases During Alcohol Awareness Week

By DEBBIE RIPPY
and JULIE CRUMPTON

In March of 1981 the first chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers was started in Virginia by Susan Midgett whose 14-year-old son was killed by a drunk driver on Sept. 30, 1980. The driver hit the boy who was located over 15 feet off of the highway and proceded on as if he had only hit a dog. He was apprehended 2½ miles away with a blood alcohol content (BAC) of .33.

At present, the man is out on a work release with a job at a bar and grill just 3 blocks from Susan Midgett's house. He will get his license back this coming Dec. 2.

Susan Midgett spoke last Monday night at Jarman Auditorium, the first of Longwood's Alcohol Awareness Week speakers. She provided some interesting statewide statistics. There are 500-600 deaths annually, 42 deaths monthly, and 10-11 deaths weekly due to drunk drivers. Nationally there are 26,000 deaths annually, 500 deaths weekly, 71 deaths a day, and 1 death every half hour. One thousand or more victims are crippled, injured or maimed for life yearly. Drunk drivers cost $24 billion a year in property damage, human life, and funerals.

The punishments for these offenses are rather slack. If the driver is caught drunk a second time there is a mandatory jail sentence to be served at his convenience. If he is convicted of involuntary manslaughter he will face a sentence of 1-10 years when it used to be only 1 to 5.

When MADD marched at the General Assembly, they were still Mothers Against Drunk Drivers. Since then the name has been changed to Many Against Drunk Drivers.

Mrs. Midgett stated that her group is not out for destruction. They only want progressive change in the laws to help prevent the accidents caused by drunk drivers.

"More than two-third's of adults drink occasionally. Most do so moderately. One out of ten are problem drinkers. And thousands of these problem drinkers are under twenty-one."

Kim Terry, former resident of Farmville and graduate of Longwood, stated some facts concerning alcoholism before starting her speech on Tuesday night.

She began in a very straight forward way.

"Both of my parents were alcoholics. I was affected by it long before I was afflicted with alcohol. I was afraid to take people home because they might talk about my parents. I was very protective."

Kim began to drink the first day of her freshman year when her aunt attempted suicide. She drank to cope with her feelings and she also began to build up a reputation.

At the beginning of her sophomore year her aunt committed suicide. Her mother gave her three beers before the news. She felt a lot of depression. She saw several deans for counseling and took classes at random to stay in school because that was expected of her.

Eventually, she decided to go into social work. She discovered during her internship at Norfolk that she didn't know how to handle the real world. While she

Minority Students Increase Pursued

By Dora Ann Daniels

Back in 1978, the Federal Government and the United States Department of Education were informed that there still existed several institutions of higher learning in the state of Virginia which were not in compliance with the established desegregation laws.

Faced with the possible cutoff of federal funds, Governor Dalton acted as overseer of a possible method to effect desegregation in these institutions. The outcome: the Virginia Plan.

The Virginia Plan is the product of an agreement between the state of Virginia and the Office of Civil Rights of the United States Department of Education. The purpose of this plan was to increase the number of other race faculty, staff, and students in Virginia's predominately white, state-supported institutions.

The Department of Education established enrollment goals for each of the fourteen public, predominately white institutions in Virginia, with hopes that all objectives would be met by June 30, 1983. Unfortunately, the Virginia Plan has not been considered successful. By their own admission, Virginia attests to falling short of their goals. By Fall, 1980, only 1286 minority students had been enrolled in Virginia's traditional institutions. This is 334 short of the 1,650 they had hoped to have enrolled by that time.

As of June 19, 1982, the Reagan Administration rejected the Virginia Plan as a failure and ordered Virginia to come up with a new strategy to bring about desegregation in these schools.

Longwood College is one of such institutions under Federal scrutiny. The College has chosen to direct their efforts towards the recruitment of black faculty, students, and staff. During the past four years, Longwood's recruitment efforts have been somewhat successful: the school year 1979-80 marked a good year for recruitment of students as did the years 1980-81 and 1981-82 for faculty and staff recruitment. However none of these efforts have been consistent.

The 1982-83 school year marks the beginning of a concerted, continuous effort to recruit minority students, faculty, and staff to Longwood, despite the fact that the overall plan has been deemed a failure. With the installment of Longwood's new President, Dr. Janet Greenwood, and other new persons under her administration, great measures are being taken to insure the enrollment of minority students at Longwood.

The summer of 1982 saw colossal effort to recruit minority students. An "ad hoc" committee was formed whose duties were to locate and recruit minority students for the 1982-83 academic year. The committee began by confirming the minority applicants already accepted to Longwood by sending to each student personal welcome letters from Dr. Greenwood and Edna Allen-Bledsoe, Minority Affairs Coordinator. In addition, Ms. Allen-Bledsoe and Delores Scott, a new minority Admission Counselor, made a personal phone call to each student.

Other plans of action include location of additional applicants through review of applications on file, the contacting of local schools, and the reviewing of the available lists of high school graduates from the past three or four years eligible for admission to Longwood.

Just as tremendous effort has been made to recruit the minority to Longwood, that much more effort has been made to keep the students here. "The quality of black life has to improve at Longwood," says Ms. Allen Bledsoe. "The minority student needs to see evidences of a college environment that is culturally and socially enriched enough to fit his-her needs."

Efforts to retain minority students include the emphasis of black organizations on campus. The Afro-American Student Alliance and the Basic Gospel Choir are such organizations. In addition, there are two black Greek organizations on campus; Omega Psi Phi Fraternity and

As predicted, the Spanish Socialist Workers Party had a field day in the country's recent National elections gaining 201 of the parliament's 350 seats for a clear majority and making Felipe Gonzalez Marques Spain's new prime minister. Spain's army did not, as feared, retaliate with a military coup, stating that they would support whatever party comes out on top. The victory marks Socialism's reemergance as a political power after they were ousted in Spain's civil war 47 years ago.

The conservative opposition now comes from the second most successful party, the Alianzo Popularist's, led by Manuel Fragot Irisbasne. And if the socialists fail to succeed in solving Spain's many problems, highlighted by 16 percent unemployment and 12 percent inflation and a still very touchy governmental structure, the Alianzo's will probably win the majority in the next elections two years away.

The Socialist's goals are not going to take quite as abrupt a turn from former policy as one would expect, mainly due to the fact that there is very little manuevering room in the economic crisis and they want to please as many people as possible, socialist or not. The only industry that will be nationalized is electronics and the only real touchy issues are the proposals to legalize abortion and withdraw Spain from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops, the ruling body of this country's 51 million Catholics, recently drafted a pastoral letter condemning American and NATO strategies of deploying nuclear arms, should the Soviet Union invade Western Europe by conventional methods. Putting themselves in direct conflict with government directives, the architects of the letter stated that "We do not perceive any situation in which the deliberate initiation of nuclear warfare, on however restricted a scale, can be morally justified."

The letter is not intended as a strict directive to the country's Catholics but rather as a guideline should decisions in that area need to be made. For antinuclear activists, the letter could not have come at a better time as general elections were upon the public and the fact that the letter would have influence on the races was undeniable although the Catholic hierarchy has publicly denied that this was their intent. Government reaction to the letter consisted of the statement that we need the nuclear strategy mainly as a threat to the Russians to stay put and also as a counter balance to the fact that the Russians enjoy a 2.6 to 1 advantage in conventional firepower. The Catholic response: "We have judged immoral even the threat to use nuclear weapons."

A scuffle between local police of Miracle Valley Arizona 100 miles south of Tuscon, and members of the Christ Miracle Healing Center and Church, an all-black religious group originally from Chicago, resulted in two deaths and two police officers wounded. Augusta Tate and William Thomas, Jr., both of the church, died in the altercation which was ignited when police tried to issue warrants to two of the church members for failure to answer traffic violations summons. Five men then attacked the two officers who proceeded to call for a back up. Nine police cars responded and around 100 church members were out to greet them with any kind of weapon they could find.

The police fired no shots, although they were clearly outnumbered until two of them were hit by shotgun fire whereupon they started shooting back while retreating. After the fight, ten members of the church were arrested which probably did not upset them too much since arrests of Christ Miracle members have been commonplace ever since they arrived. Claiming that the townspeople were not exactly being nice to them, the congregation started patrolling their own streets with the intention of keeping everybody else out. They filed civil rights suits against the local authorities, even though the rest of the black townspeople got along fine with the whites, and once ran the police out of their neighborhood at gunpoint.

In the face of these charges and many others against them, the church members refuse to leave insisting that they are simply living a life of total holiness according to the Bible. No one else seems to agree.

Artist-of-the-Month Award

The winner of the Longwood College Art Department's Artist of the Month Award for October is Kathryn DeHaven for her silk-screen print, "Adventures in Print."

Miss HeHaven was born in 1962 in Dayton, Ohio. As her father was an Army officer, she and her family have traveled extensively. She feels fortunate in having lived in Africa and Germany and in having had the opportunity to see the famous works of art which surrounded her. After four years in Germany, Kathryn and her family returned to the United States to reside in Newport Virginia, where she graduated from Menchville High School in 1980. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. T.R. DeHaven, now live in Dale City.

Kathryn was uncertain of her major when she came to Longwood her freshman year. After taking a few art classes, however, she knew exactly what her interest was: the field of art. She is presently a Junior Art Major, working towards a B.F.A. degree in Crafts. She plans to use her artistic ability to fulfill her goals in the future. She enjoys designing and building toys for children, and hopes some day she will be able to sell her work in a small store of her own.

Second place in the studio competition went to Rebecca Silberman, a Freshman Art Major from Leesburg, and third Place to Wanda Lloyd, a Senior Art Major from Blackstone.

The Artist-of-the-Month Contest is a monthly competition open to all students enrolled in Art classes at Longwood. The award carries a $50 cash prize and the winning works are displayed in the Bedford Art Building at the College. The competition is now in its third successful year.

Flight Service Lands In Farmville

By GEREE LYELL

"Theoretically, it's a profit operation, but its my hobby too." This is what Fred Hanbury, manager of the Citizen's Savings and Loan in Farmville had to say about his new business, a chartered flight service and flight school. Mr. Hanbury, a certified flight instructor for Air Virginia in Lynchburg, is offering, to both the Farmville community and the college students, services in the areas of in-flight air training, ground school, and chartered air flights.

In addition to being a flight instructor, Mr. Hanbury is also a commercial pilot with 480 flight hours logged. He received his commercial and instrument ratings at Flight Safety in Vero Beach, Fla., and his instructor-rating at Air Virginia in Lynchburg. For his flights, he uses either a Cessna 172 or Piper Arrow plane, both standards of the small plane type. "The Cessna plane is owned by Air Virginia and the Piper is my own," said Hanbury. "Both are heavily insured with personal liability in the millions. Both are very safe planes, very standard in chartered flights." Hanbury hopes to build up the service of the remodeled Farmville airport, which is now owned by the town.

When asked about the expense of flying, Hanbury replied, "I don't charge for my time, just for the expense of the equipment and gasoline. I'm trying to build up the service, and that's where all the profit is going." Basically, a chartered flight costs about $50 an hour for 1-3 persons. What that means is that three people could split the cost and fly for the same price as one person. The distance of a one hour flight is approximately from Farmville to Washington D.C. "I'll fly people pretty much anywhere as long as there is an airport nearby," said Hanbury. He has recently flown people to the Worlds Fair and Florida but hasn't had any offers from Longwood students yet.

Hanbury is also offering flight instruction, both ground school and in-flight. Ground school costs $100 per person for 35 hours of instruction. Upon completion, the student should be ready for the F.A.A. Private Pilot Written Test. In-flight hours cost $42 for solo and $52 with an instructor. Forty hours are needed to complete the requirements for a private pilot's license. "I offer instruction ranging from private to commercial," commented Hanbury. "The flight school will be held at the Farmville Airport."

When asked why he began his new business, Hanbury replied, "I wanted to offer a reasonably modern flight service to Farmville and in the process, profit by gaining more flight time for myself." If interested in a chartered flight or flight school training, Mr. Hanbury can be reached at 392-3147 during the day or 392-3614 in the evening.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority. Efforts are being made to insure the presence of other black Greek organizations in the near future. The newly dedicated N.P. Miller Room in Curry Dormitory is designated as a meeting place for minority students, where they can study, hold A.A.S.A. meetings, talk, or just relax. A bi-annual newsletter entitled "The Summit", has also begun publication as of Fall, 1982. This newsletter is geared towards minority students, with hopes that they will actively participate in its publication.

Development of a Minority Studies Program at Longwood is currently taking place. The Social Work Department will act as co-ordinator of the curricula and have committed themselves to the locating of a study area.

Another approach to the retention of minority students is the visibility of minority faculty and staff on Longwood's campus. The implementation of a Faculty Exchange Program is highly possible in the near future. Under this program faculty from Norfolk and Virginia State Universities would come to Longwood to teach in substitution for Longwood faculty members sent to teach at these predominately black institutions.

The United States Department of Education is currently reviewing a revised Virginia Plan submitted by John Casteen several weeks ago. According to Gary Groneweg, Director of Admissions, ther[illegible]chnically no longer exists a Virginia Plan. "Longwood has made a conscious commitment to insure the enrollment of minority students and we will continue to do so, Virginia Plan or not."

EDITOR'S TURN

Normally, considering the events of the previous week and the passing of liquor by the drink for Farmville and Prince Edward County on November 2, alcoholism should have been the subject of any editorial commentary. A short paragraph or two describing the advantages of pina coladas over lobster newburg or the disgracefulness of running 70 down route 15, one six pack per mile. However, a major event has anticipated this writing and caused me to reconsider the subject for my editorial. In a way (a strange way) the new subject is analogous to alcoholism. It has a corruptible influence on youth and spreads like that liquid fire through the system. It destroys judgment and general mental capabilities (particularly siphoning visceral material from fact) and finally it disables — leaving the victim a raw mass of paranoid nerve endings. Simply put, it's a cold war.

About a week and a half ago in the Frazer TV room, Dr. Crowl and Dr. Helms both of the Longwood history department debated certain U.S. foreign policy moves. A more or less rhetorical question was thrown out to the student audience: "Would the Soviet Union ever attempt a nuclear weapon first strike aimed at the U.S.?" The answer — wide-eyed head nods and a growing consensus — Yes. Yes? Rather a shocker to anyone who has faith in the basic intelligence of college students. The right answer is, of course, no. To paraphrase Mr. Weinberger, a USSR first strike is not really a possibility because the U.S. or NATO would actually be the first potential users of nuclear weaponry due to a possible Soviet conventional attack. Simple; engraved in our foreign policy, but the students still said Yes.

I write this with no real hopes of a change in student opinion, because one finds that the basis for most decisions made by students and others (from Dr. Helms to President Reagan) is a knee jerk ideology with its roots in fear (the roots of conservatism in general) — a delusion propagated by Reagan's steadfast refusal to talk detente and a consequential cold war mentality which forms a window of crisis for U. S. perspective. We must have a stronger defense, at all cost. To hell with education; buy a tank. the pinkos are coming, the pinkos are coming. The poor will always be with us, get a missile, the reds are coming, the reds are coming. And students not unsurprisingly sacrifice — for they have the choice, this is a democracy — financial aid for education in order to keep a strong defense. After all, the Apaches are at the gate and one must man his post. This is no time for luxuries, tighten the belts while the military industrial complex feeds on the fat.

"Isn't it nationalistic fervor by any other name?" No, instead of nationalism (which is not synonymous with patriotism or good) the cold war has in effect given the Russians the major voice in determining what proportion of our budget goes to the military and subsequently what amount is not made available for domestic, social, and economic projects — those internal 'luxuries.' As David Riesman said in Abundance for What? the cold war "is a distraction from serious thought about man's condition."

The most serious consequence of cold war mentality is not the blind offerings to a thanatic industry (paying one's weight in warheads) but rather an attitude of expectancy.

As Professor Allport wrote "The indispensable condition of war is that people must expect war and must prepare for war . . . before they make war." Like a self-fulfilling prophecy, war becomes a reality largely because it is expected to be a reality.

George Orwell authored a novel that related a future world in which superpowers were constantly battling, draining domestic capital and creating a stark environment for those in or not in the elite party. Most critics took it as a futuristic view of 'Big Brother' communism. Perhaps a second interpretation may be devised by applying it to conditions in the U. S. Not now surely, such an application at this time would be hyperbolic. However, in a couple of years, would a constant state of crisis have dilapidated internal resources sufficiently to draw a distinct parallel between a gin soaked proles world and our own?

An absurd scenario, perhaps. One which will hopefully be proved wrong. But for now, the important thing is to realize where we're heading and to stop it.

Alcohol Awareness Week

was working she would drink two 6-packs and take eight tranquilizers a day. And all the while she didn't realize what she was doing to herself.

She took classes at John Tyler Community College and became a part of the concerned persons program. It is a program designed to help members understand alcoholism and provides the concepts of responsible drinking.

1) Drinking is not essential you have a choice.

2) Maturity is not a factor.

3) Controlled drinking depends on society.

4) Drinking is an illness and must be treated as such.

On Wednesday afternoon there was a MADD-SADD workshop. Pam Quillian spoke of the SADD (Students Against Drunk Drivers) group she started in March of 1981 in Chesterfield.

She helped to give guidelines to those present who may want to start their own SADD group. She started her group to prevent drunk driving rather than the result of an accident or experience. At present there are 10 members. This number is expected to increase after December.

On Thursday night, Kenn Tunnell made his presentation. His speech was different in that another life other than his own was involved.

On his way home from his girl friend's house, after a New Year's Eve party on January, 1982, his car crossed three feet over the double yellow line and hit a V.W. bug, killing the young girl inside.

From there he stressed the fact that he was not confessing to the audience. He was merely trying to help the audience by telling his story.

During the time of the accident he considered himself a weekend alcoholic. He was very immature. "Ask anyone in my class and they'll tell you I was an 11-year-old wearing the shoes of a 17-year-old." He said that he had spiritually matured greatly both mentally and since the accident. "After the accident it seems everywhere I turn there is a Christian."

Realizing that his speech would get lost in the shuffle of parties over the weekend he tried to prolong the effect by challenging the audience.

"I'm sure that everyone here has or will experience alcohol, and judging by the size of this crowd quite a few of you drink. Just ask yourself this: Could I go just one month without drinking? If you cannot pass this simple test you are an alcoholic or on the road to it.

Kevin's entire sentence for his accident is speaking 40 hours a week for one year starting February 24, 1982. His license has been revoked until he turns 21. And he must also send $1 a week for the next 18 years in check form to the girl's family in the name of Susan Marie, the girl he killed.

Damage Deposits Raise Questions

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

Once again, students are distrustful and objecting to yet another brainchild of the new Longwood administration. As tuition, room and board creep up dollar by dollar each year, living expenses leave students a bit strapped for funds and more critical of the way their monies are being spent.

Recently students were informed that effective January - 1983, a $100 damage deposit would be collected of each dormitory student. The $100 would be kept for the entire time a student resides at Longwood, and returned to the student, in full, providing no damage or vandalism expenses were assessed to the student's account. Students are questioning the - administration's proposed use of the collected deposits, and more importantly the use of the interest accrued on the sum of the deposits.

The administration seems eager to clear up the confusion, answer the questions and dispel the skeptic mistrust over the newfangled damage deposit. Phyllis Mable, vice president for Student Affairs, outlined the two primary functions of the deposit. First, the deposits collected will insure that there is money on hand, upfront, to pay for damages done to the dormitory rooms by students. According to Ms. Mable, "The conditions here at Longwood are horrible — they're getting better but the complaints from parents and board members are horrendous because of the damages." Ms. Mable believes student damages and vandalism are increasing. There seems to be discrepancy among the reports regarding the increase of vandalism. In a newsletter that was sent home to parents informing them of the damage deposit. Tom Nanzig Director of Housing, explained that the "total damages to residence halls, including vandalism, was approximately $600 per month, between January and April of this year." Roy Hill, Director of the Physical Plant, said that they spent $10-12,000 in repairs of damages between January and April. "We've seen a great improvement in the decrease of damages. There's a very little bit of vandalism, which pleases us because it gives us a chance to do regular maintenance."

Because of the believed increase in student vandalism and damages, Ms. Mable says the deposit is secondly to provide incentive for students in hopes to discourage damages. If damage is done in a suite or on a hall even, and the blame cannot be assessed, all the students in the suite or on the hall will be held responsible and billed respectively. Ms. Mable feels that this shared liability will "cause students to figure out who did do it (damages). When students have to be responsible for their own actions, they don't want to be responsible for anyone elses."

"If damage is done in a suite or on a hall, and the blame cannot be assessed, all the students...will be held responsible and billed."

There are approximately 2,000 dorm students at Longwood and in January $200,000 will be collected as damage deposits and deposited in local banks at the highest possible rates of return interest, according to Betty Kidder, of Longwood's Business Office. An investment of $20,000 in a local bank can draw up to 9 per cent interest annually. With the returns on the investment amounting to nearly $20,000, students have questioned the proposed use of the interes. "Let's face it, $20,000 isn't a lot of money," according to Ms. Mable. She says that the "interest will basically be used to administer the program." Would it really cost $20,000 a year to administer the damage deposit program? "No. Well, Maybe." The money left over from the administrative costs will be funnelled back into the program to improve the conditions of the dormitories. When asked if it had been considered to return the interest to the students on their $100 investment, Ms. Mable defensively replied, "I guess we could. But we're not going to...there's no plan to do that. There've been questions and there's no problem with the legality of not returning that interest.

Joan Murphy, Assistant Attorney General of Virginia was contacted about the deposit and the question of returning interest. She cited a similar case in Illinois, but emphasized that there was no ruling on the situation as of yet in Virginia. In order to get a ruling, students or parents would have to request it from their Senators, thereby reaching the courts for a direct specific ruling to be handed down. Recently, Virginia State University implemented the same program. According to Dr. John McClusky, Executive Vice President of Va. State, there were questions among their administration as to the legal implications of keeping the interest tied up into the program. They, too, found no direct statute to govern their application of the interest accrued.

In the past, damage fees were collected as the damages occurred from the student(s) responsible. Apparently there was a problem with this system or as Ms. Mable put it, "I don't think we did it very well." Although, damages should be paid for by students responsible and not those who aren't there are still some unanswered questions and little justification for the $100 damage deposit. But, according to Ms. Mable, "You're going to pay for it one way or another."

" Let's face it, $20,000 isn't a lot of money..."

VCU "Sigmas" Block Show

By DORA ANN DANIEL

Saturday, October 30, was a fair, mild night, the perfect weather for the clusters of people standing outside the Commonwealth Room restless, waiting for the show to begin. However, the show couldn't begin without the main attraction: the brothers of Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity Incorporated from Virginia Commonwealth University. This black Greek organization was invited to Longwood College by the Afro-American Student Alliance to perform a block show.

"Blocking," a social ritual characteristic of the eight existing national black Greek organizations, consists of a series of synchronized dance steps and chants with a variety of head, arm, and hand movements incorporated into the routine.

The Sigmas, scheduled to perform at 8:00 p.m. didn't arrive until 9:30 p.m., finding many of their audience perturbed and impatient, or simply gone. Nonetheless, with their fraternity sweethearts cheering them on, they gave an impressive performance, evoking a healthy round of applause from the remainder of the audience, along with some cheers, whistles, and standing ovations.

A dance followed the show, giving the visiting fraternity an opportunity to mingle with Longwood students. The affair ended at 2:00 a.m. with the students reluctant to see their visitors leave. There were several goodbyes and invitations to return with the Sigmas extending an invitation to the students to attend their next performance at VCU on December 3, 1982.

Suds Beat Energy At The Worlds Fair

By LIZ D'SURNEY

It was just after 12:00 Friday afternoon when we pulled off the road and stopped the car on the shoulder of Rt. 460 West, just outside of Farmville. The four of us jumped out of the white Ford Escort, loaded down with suitcases, cameras and 2 grocery bags full of junk food, and wildly began scribbling the words "KNOXVILLE OR BUST — WORLD'S FAIR" on the rear window in thick heavy lines of ivory soap.

Seven and a half hours later we pulled into the driveway of Three Chimneys of Knoxville, our place of residence for the weekend. At 10:00 p.m. we were sitting on the porch of the second floor watching the daily fireworks of the World's Fair.

Early Saturday morning, we headed out, a ticket in hand, to attend the fair. We entered the gates, gazing at the enormous pavilions, confused as to which direction to follow first. Finally, we found ourselves headed toward Australia.

ENERGY ENERGY boomed the voice as we entered the building. We stopped to watch cartoons on conserving Petrol. ENERGY ENERGY rang the voice as we fell in step with the crowd and wandered past the exhibits of windmills and new machinery. ENERGY ENERGY echoed in our minds as we stepped out into the sun and proceeded to the Federal Express show. Little did we know ENERGY was to haunt us continually for the next two days.

The expansion of technology and our ever changing society were pointed out through the Federal express show. Numerous screens, each showing a different picture changed every few seconds to show new products on the market. A family was portrayed as being lost and caught up in the whirlwind of technological advancement and seeking ways to deal with these new ideas.

Exiting the Express theatre, we strolled through the fair observing the sights and people. We soon found ourselves standing in line for a live performance called Sing Tennessee. Waiting in line we heard fireworks and sirens ringing in the air. The 1982 World's Fair had reached its goal, the 11 millionth person had just walked through the gates.

Before the start of the show, the 11 millionth couple, from Connecticut, was escorted onto stage. One by one, representatives greeted them and presented them with an elaborate gift from their country. Among these gifts were books, wood carvings, paper weights and many bottles of wine. T.V. cameramen and reporters were scattered throughout the crowd capturing the special moment.

Sing Tennessee was a medley of songs which made Nashville famous. Songs of long ago to present day were sung and acted out, reliving moments in history. The talent of the performers was rewarded by a standing ovation from an appreciative audience. Leaving an hour of entertainment behind us, we moved on to Germany...Italy...only to find that ENERGY and its benefits to society was still being embedded into our minds.

We headed to the Budweiser House. Here, it was not long before we forgot all about energy and technology...Eventually leaving the Budweiser House, we headed for Mexico, Japan, the Phillipines...Hungary...In each pavilion we walked around observing but not absorbing all the facts and information presented to us.

We retraced our footsteps...to the Budweiser House. We found this to be the only place where we could relax and truly "absorb" our environment. We still had much to see, so off we went. Canada, Egypt, Peru, ENERGY, ENERGY.

It was getting to be 10:00, time for the pavilions to close. When they did, we stationed ourselves on a bench to watch the fireworks. The show was tremendous, with dozens and dozens of fireworks darting into the air and bursting in the night.

When the fireworks ended, we headed to a Halloween party...at the Budweiser House. The place was crowded with people of all

Bishop Exhibits Work

Three handmade paper and fiber collage works by Barbara Bishop were included in the ART-PAPER exhibit at the F & M Gallery in Richmond during the month of October.

The exhibit was sponsored by the Hand Workshop, Inc., with support from F & M National Bank.

Ten Virginia artists who utilize handmade paper in their work were represented in the exhibit. They are: Nancy Dahlstrom, Hollins; Laura Pharis, Carolyn Ferrell, Nancy David, and Dale Keator, all of Richmond; Rebecca Humphrey and Barbara Fast, of Harrisonburg; Liz Kregloe, Staunton; William F. Harmon, Bon Air; and Ms. Bishop, who is chairman of the art department at Longwood College.

These artist practice the ancient craft of papermaking, a process which has not changed since the Chinese Ts'ai Lun first formed paper from mulberry trees in 195 A.D., because it offers "a variety of aesthetic qualities," "much flexibility for color, texture, and form," and is "a very exciting and unpredictable process."

Ms. Bishop's works in the exhibit were Earth Shield — Three and Four, and Measure of the Land, Two.

Settini Entertains Full Crowd

By DEBBIE RIPPY

He calls himself "Tim Settini, the Mime (me, me)." When I first saw him, he was dressed casual and was very relaxed and put my nerves quickly at ease.

There was a stool in Mr. Dent's office that Tim quickly started studying and commented that it might be a good addition to the act. He then laid across it and began humming the theme to "Superman" while spinning on it.

He was inspired by a clown, Jango Edwards, who about 10 years ago, cooled out about 200 bikers with his mime talents. Tim went on to study in Boston at the Pocket Mime Theater.

He performed street mime for about five years. He prefers to perform in clubs as opposed to colleges since he gets a wider cross section. He has realized this in just the past year. After the performance he stated that he also enjoyed performing at Longwood.

As a child, he was rather shy since his family moved around a lot due to his father's job and learned to make friends easily by displaying his drawing ability. He was raised by strict Roman Catholic parents and describes himself as a 'creepy little kid.' From this he uses one of the grade school teachers, Sister Rosangela, in several jokes during the show.

He graduated from Western Illinois University as an art major in painting and sculpture. At age 33 he has his own cafe called Cafe Debris, which he drew the blueprints for and has completed in the past five years when not working. He does perform there and has sort of a Vaudeville house. Recently he performed with Flip, the clown mime that was here over Oktoberfest.

Tim considers himself a clown. His own definition is "a clown can do anything at all." A clown uses the art of mime, music, jokes, etc. The hardest part, though, is writing and coming up with new ideas. He gets his ideas from what is in front of him. Different things around us, if looked at, are rather funny.

Before the show, Eddie Esalto commented on Tim's performance. "He is one of the most touching, yet funny performers you will ever see at Longwood. He doesn't look at it like a job, rather just something he enjoys doing."

Tim began the performance on roller skates and had a few ad libs with the noises coming from Stubbs. He pulled out the stool he was horsing around with in Mr. Dent's office and repeated some of the same antics.

After removing the skates, he talks about graffiti and described it as the "bumper stickers for the toilet." Then on to bathroom pranks of which he learned some from his three younger sisters.

He demonstrated the many uses of a flute and then suggested a sing-a-long when he played the guitar. Everyone was interested in this possibility when he quickly shouted, "I hate insincere enthusiasm!"

The serious part of the show included two very artistic skits. The first was "The Heart Takes the Stage" in which a janitor cleaning up after the show in one of the dressing rooms, believes he is the star. However, reality returns.

"The life cycle" was very moving. You see how quickly one goes through the many stages of life and how soon it is over. At first, everyone is still while watching the new infant, then giggle as he is a small child and near tears when he is old.

He ends by telling us he is our 'crazy man,' our 'exception.' If nothing else he has proved that.

Lancers Win Visa Semifinals

By HOKE CURRIE and BECKY DUNK

Longwood's hard-charging soccer team took a giant step toward a state title Sunday afternoon as the Lancers defeated Roanoke 4-2 in the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association state semifinals.

Now 14-3-1, Longwood will host the winner of Wednesday's semifinal battle between Lynchburg and Virginia Wesleyan in the state title game Saturday afternoon at 2:00 on First Ave. Field. Longwood closes out its regular season Wednesday afternoon with a contest at William & Mary beginning at 2:30.

While the Lancers got good news on the field Sunday, there was some disappointing off-the-field news. Longwood will apparently not receive a bid to the NCAA Div. II Playoffs despite having one of the best records in the nation. The South Region selection committee ranked three Florida teams above the Lancers.

"We're disappointed," said Coach Rich Posipanko, "but not too surprised. I had heard earlier in the day (Sunday) that our chances looked pretty good if we beat Roanoke, but it didn't work out that way. Two members of the selection committee are from Florida and they feel that Tampa, Central Florida and Florida International are stronger than us."

Only 12 teams are selected for the Division II Playoffs nationwide.

In Sunday's VISA state semifinal game against Roanoke, Longwood scored first with only nine minutes gone in the game and held the lead throughout the rest of the match.

Senior Gus Leal and junior Tim Brennan led the Lancer offense by scoring two goals apiece. Leal now has a total of 51 career goals (a school record) and Brennan has 32 total points.

Goalie Brian Sprinkle played a good game, stopping many Roanoke shots.

In regular season play last week, Longwood beat rival Hampden-Sydney 5-2. in the Farmville Herald Challenge Cup The Lancers led at the half by just one goal, but went on to score two more in the second half for the victory.

High scorer for the game was Leal with his third two-goal game of the season. The other three Lancer goals were scored by Steve Kern, Dan Bubnis, and Tim Brennan. Kern and Brian Allmendinger each had one assist in the game.

Posipanko called Sunday's game with Roanoke the biggest of his career and his team responded with one of its best performances of the year.

"You guys played like you really wanted this one," Posipanko told his team after the game. "Everyone did a great job."

Volleyball

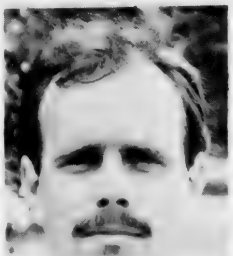
Upping their record to 7-10, Longwood's volleyball team split with Roanoke and Mary Washington Thursday night, beating the Maroons 15-10, 15-13 but falling to the Blue Tide 10-15, 15-11, 15-11. Longwood ends its season Monday at Chowan with Elizabeth City.

Earlier in the week (Monday) the Lady Lancers fell to Eastern Mennonite 15-12, 15-13 and Liberty Baptist 15-9, 15-7.

Coach Joyce Phillips praised co-captains Kathy Gunning and Elaine Olay and freshman Karen Moye for their play in Thursday's twin bill.

"Moye did a good job at the net and Gunning and Olay played well overall," said the coach. "Gunning was a real motivator for the team in Thursday's action. She keeps talking and helps keep the team fired up."

Player of the Week



From Sports Information

Senior back Mike McGeehan, who stepped in for the injured Joe Parker and helped Longwood's soccer team reel off three wins in a row, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 29 to November 5. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

McGeehan, in his fourth year on the Lancer squad, led the way on defense from his center-fullback post as Longwood beat Mount St. Mary's 5-2, Radford 2-0 and Hampden-Sydney 5-2 Friday. The win over The Mount and Radford (October 30-31) gave Longwood the title in the Mid-Atlantic Div. II Classic.

"Mike did a great job filling in for Parker," said Coach Rich Posipanko. "He provided us with leadership as well as outstanding play. His play helped us give up just four goals in those three games."

Longwood stretched its record to 13-3-1 last week

MIKE McGEEHAN

McGeehan, a graduate of Pennsbury High School in Levittown, was captain and Most Dedicated on the 1980 Longwood team. Very determined and steady, he has been a key factor in Longwood's rise to prominence in soccer. A business administration major, Mike is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McGeehan of Levittown.

Stickers

Longwood's field hockey team ended its season Wednesday with a 2-1 win over Division I VCU. The Lady Lancers upped its record to 8-7 overall and 2-0 in Division II play.

Trailing 1-0 at halftime, the Lady Lancers rallied to score two points in the second half to defeat the Lady Rams. Senior forward Chris Mayer scored the tying goal at 5:34 into the second period and freshman Susan Groff scored the winning point with 9½ minutes left in play. Groff and B.J. Casey each picked up an assist, while goalie Lorrie Garber had seven saves.

"Chris has been a leader this year as a co-captain," said Coach Bette Harris. "She demonstrated her leadership quality in the VCU game by playing assertively to score the tying goal which helped the other players get motivated to play better."

The Lady Stickers, which boasts one of the toughest schedules of Longwood athletic teams, played nine Division I schools this season. Their season was highlighted by wins over Division I Richmond (1-0), Davidson (4-3) and VCU (2-1) and Division II Randolph-Macon (6-0) and Radford (4-0). Longwood competes in NCAA Division II.

Groff led the Lady Lancers in scoring this season with seven goals, followed by Pam Esworthy with five and Mayer with four. Garber headed up the defense, averaging over six saves per game while allowing only 1.8 goals per contest. The senior goalkeeper had six shutouts this season. KMS

Tennis Player Angie Coppedge

Number One On The Team And A Grandmother Too

By BECKY DUNK

Angie Coppedge is the number one player on Longwood's women's tennis team. She also happens to be a grandmother.

"When the other girls on the team talk about their moms and dads coming to the matches, I talk about my husband and kids coming to watch," says Angie.

A Farmville resident and senior at Longwood, Angie is married (her husband is a doctor in Farmville), has several children and just recently became a grandmother. This fall she tried out for the Longwood women's tennis team. Not only did she make the team, she's the number one player in singles and teams with Lisa Barnes of Suffolk at number one doubles.

Dressed in complete tennis apparel and racquet in hand, Angie explains why she tried out for Longwood's tennis team: "All of my friends had become too busy to play, so I decided to look elsewhere for tennis partners. I wasn't sure I could make the team, but it was my only shot. This is my last year . . . I knew I couldn't do it (play on the team) any more after this."

An avid tennis player for the past 10 years, Angie had earned a reputation as one of the top women netters in the area, but she played mostly "social tennis" before this fall. "I didn't play tennis in high school because women didn't compete as much back then," she says. "If I had been given a chance, though, I think I could have been a superstar."

Angie says that when she hit the court for the very first match, "I asked myself, 'What am I doing here?' It took me a while to settle down and get over the nervousness."

A large part of Angie's nervousness stemmed from the fact that she is older than her opponents. "I overcame my uneasiness by reminding myself that everyone's equal on the court," she says. "Age isn't a factor in winning a match. It just depends on who plays the best."

"When I first made the team," says Angie, "I worried that the other girls wouldn't accept me because I'm older and play in the number one spot. They accept and support me as much as they do each other, though. The girls have really been great. We're all in it together."

The women's tennis team recently completed their season. Angie finished with a record of 3-7 in singles and 6-3 in doubles. She lost three three-set singles matches after winning the first set. Angie won't be able to play spring tennis because she will be out student teaching.

ANGIE COPPEDGE

According to Coach Beatrice White, "Angie has been a pleasure to work with. She is a motivational source for older women . . . I really admire her courage."

Angie's courage, combined with a love for the game and the desire to win, add to her effectiveness as a player. "I'm a big competitor," she says. "I love to win. But I have to be patient and consistent. What probably helps me the most is that I hang in there. If I fall behind, I simply try to make it up on the next volley."

"My tennis game is contradictory to my nature," Angie says. "On the court I'm calm and patient. Off the court I always have to be doing something . . . I can't sit still!"

This need for something to do, the overabundance of energy which Angie possesses, compelled her to return to school several years ago. "My kids are grown and my husband works all day," she says, "so I decided to come back to school. There was no point in just sitting around doing nothing."

Lady Cagers Seek To Improve Offense

Last year in a season which produced an 8-15 record, the Lady Lancer basketball team was known for its defensive abilities. Coach Jane Miller believes her team must make strides in realizing its offensive potential in order to make the 1982-83 season a success.

Longwood limited foes to 63.9 points a game and held the opposition below 70 points in 17 of 23 contests. Trouble was, the Lady Lancers scored but 56.5 points themselves and poor shooting was a big part of the problem. Miller feels her club is ready to score more points and bag more wins in the coming season.

"We've been developing a strong defensive team," said Miller. "This year we need to improve our offensive output. We should get more scoring from our guards this year and I feel we have a group that can put together a winning season."

Four starters and a total of seven players return from last season. All-VAIAW Division II forward Florence Holmes heads the returning group. The 5-9 sophomore averaged 13.3 points and 9.7 rebounds last season. Senior Cindy Eckel returns for her fourth season after averaging just under 10 points and 5.3 rebounds.

Other returning starters are senior center Barbara DeGraff and junior point guard Robin Powell. DeGraff averaged nearly six rebounds and Powell handed out 65 assists in '81-'82. Top reserves Valerie Turner, Mariana Johnson and Karen Savarese played key roles off the bench last season.

Miller sees maturity as another positive factor working for Longwood this year. Assistant Coach Nanette Fisher notes that the Lady Lancers weren't very selective in their shooting last season. "It's a matter of maturing or learning to take good shots," said Fisher. "I think our veteran players will be more selective in their shooting."

Four new faces have joined the Longwood team. Guards Kim McConnell and Amy Cook, forward Bev Powell, sister of Robin, and center Holly Hearne are the newcomers.

With the VAIAW Division II Conference no longer in operation, several new opponents appear on this year's schedule. While old foes Radford, Richmond, VCU, William & Mary and Liberty Baptist are on the slate, new opponents Guilford, Christopher-Newport and Maryland Baltimore County are also scheduled. Longwood will play in two tournaments.

When Longwood opens its season at home against Maryland Eastern Shore November 20, Miller isn't sure who will be in her starting lineup.

"We have a lot of talented players who will see action," said the coach. "All 12 will contribute in one way or another.

"I feel optimistic about this year," she continued. "I think both the players and coaches learned a tremendous amount last season. We're going to be realistic about our goals and put out maximum effort. Maximum Effort! That's our slogan for the year."

Grapplers

By RONNIE BROWN

The 1982-83 edition of Longwood wrestling will be the most talented squad since wrestling became an intercollegiate sport in 1978, but the Lancers will again be confronted with a tough schedule.

"We have more depth and talent than last season, but our schedule includes seven dual meets with Division I teams," said third year coach Steve Nelson. "Obviously, we would like to have a winning season, but our main objective is to be competitive."

The grapplers will begin the season at the ODU Tournament in Norfolk Friday and Saturday. Nelson will take eleven of his wrestlers to the tourney that boasts the best wrestlers from the southeast. In last year's tournament, there were nine All-Americans and three national champions in Division I. The competition will be on an individual basis. The Lancers will return home Wednesday with a match against VMI and Newport News Apprentice in Lancer Hall at 7:00 (November 17).

Longwood has 10 returnees from last year's 9-9 squad. Senior Joe Bass, a 177 pounder brings the most experience to the Lancer squad and compiled a 17-8 record last season. David Dodd, a junior 150-158 pounder, was 5-2-1 - last year while competing in only a portion of the season because of an injury. Soph Steve Albeck, the 1981-82 wrestling MVP who compiled a 21-12 record, returns along with sophomores Charles Campbell, a 150 pounder, Mike Hackett, a 126 pounder, and Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder. Campbell, Hackett and Dunlap wrestled to records of 12-12, 15-8, and 16-11-1 respectively in last year's campaign. Other returnees include junior Mike O'Hare, a 177 pounder, sophomores Carl Bird, a 158 pounder, Mark Casstevens, a 190 pounder, and Bob Clark, a 150 pounder.

This year's returnees will be joined by a talented group of newcomers. Included in this year's freshman class are Steve Kidwell, a 126 pounder and a Maryland State Champion, Terry Hale, a 134 pounder and Virginia State Champion, and Jim Fitzgerald, a 118 pounder and two time North Carolina State place

In a match that was more exciting than the 10-3 score would indicate, the Longwood College Rugby Football Club was defeated by the Richmond Rats, a non-college club, quite older and more skilled than Longwood. The main attributes of the Rats were a scrum slightly superior to Longwood's, which is rare among most Longwood opponents, and two native New Zealanders in the backfield. Anyone who doubts their ability to play the game should refer to the fact that New Zealand regularly sends teams to this country that clobber anyone dumb enough to play them.

Richmond clearly controlled the early moments of the contest, but blew three straight field goal attempts while Longwood got a 20 yard field goal from Chris Conners its first time within range. Richmond finally got a field goal shortly afterward to tie the score at 3-3. But for much of the rest of the half, Longwood was the aggressor although Richmond did break through for a try off of a line-in, fairly late in the half, to go up 7-3.

The closest Longwood came to getting a try was when successive attempts to simply pass the ball off from a penalty kick to Phil Jameson, Longwood's rendition of a human wrecking ball, going at full tilt. Plowing in from less than five yards out, Jameson got over the end line once but the play was called back due to a penalty on the hand off. The half ended with Richmond threatening but unable to score 7-3.

The only score of the second half was a sole Richmond field goal although they attempted many times. Semi-sorry tackling on Longwood's part and solid running on Richmond's resulted in the Rats' dominating the second half, allowing Longwood only one field goal attempt, which they missed. The game ended at 10-3 although if it were not for solid efforts by many Longwood players, the score would have been much worse, for Richmond clearly had the skill and experience advantage.

Gymnastics

From Sports Information

The Longwood gymnastics team will put on an exhibition of its talent in floor exercise, bars, beam and vaulting Tuesday night at 8:00 in Lancer Hall. The pre-season performance is open to the public at no charge.

The Longwood gymnasts, who for the past four years have sent one or more competitors to the Division II nationals, won't actually begin their competitive season until January 14 when they visit Western Carolina. Coach Ruth Budd has scheduled Tuesday's exhibition and an inter-squad meet November 22 at 7:30 to give her team the opportunity to perform before a crowd.

"We have several gymnasts injured right now," said Budd, "so, from that standpoint maybe it's just as well we don't open the season until January. We have a lot of talent on this year's squad. I feel we can have another strong team."

Budd has seven gymnasts back from last year's squad with two who qualified for nationals. Sophomores Dayna Hankinson, an All-American in floor exercise and Kelly Crepps, Longwood's top all-around performer at nationals, lead the group of returnees. Also back from last season are junior Sherri Meeks and sophomores Elsa Kretz, Kim Owens, Angie Smith and Gray Stabley.

Seven promising freshmen are also members of the Longwood team. The newcomers are Lisa Zuraw, Tracey Roberts, Judy Wagner, Allison Berry, Kim Kenworthy, Cindy Weinstock, and Terri Audi.

Coach Barbara Smith says her team is looking with anticipation to the spring season. "We're disappointed that we didn't play with more consistency in the fall, but the team members are looking for improvement in the spring," she said.

Smith will have freshman Holli Hudson back in action. Hudson was sidelined by illness but expects to return in the spring.

ages, from 10 to 90, dressed in costumes. A band was playing and at midnight a "best costume" contest was held. Gorillas, dogs, devils, and the Jolly Green Giant paraded up on stage, but the winner was a guy dressed as the Earth Sphere, the tower at the fair.

Sunday soon rolled around, the closing day of the World's Fair. Every booth set up was having fantastic sales, buy one get one free. ½ price, 3 for 1, and the souvenirs were being bought by the many tourists. Any item imaginable was marked with "World's Fair" and had a price tag on it.

The crowd was not as heavy as we expected it to be. We saw everything we hadn't seen the day before, China, Korea, the U.S., the rides and many other pavilions of various topics, ENERGY being the main concern.

All too soon it was time to go. Our high expectations of the Worlds Fair were returning home with us, unfulfilled. Reflecting on our weekend, the high and low points, we found that we consumed a lot of Budweiser, but were all out of Energy.

Angie enrolled at Longwood and began taking classes on a part-time basis. "One day I realized I had compiled an awful lot of credits, so I started seriously working toward a history major," she says.

After graduating from Longwood in June of 1983, Angie plans to become a high school history teacher. "I want to contribute something and feel that I can through teaching," she says.

Angie knows one thing is certain about her post-college days: "I will continue to play tennis every chance I get."

Other freshmen include Ross Anderson, a 150-158 pounder, John Ayoub, a 190-HW wrestler, Keith Barnes, a 190 pounder, John Davis, a 126 pounder, Kevin Fyfe, a 118 pounder, Vince Lee, a 118 pounder, and Curtis Vest, a 118 pounder.

With the addition of a skilled group of newcomers to a proven nucleus of returnees, Coach Nelson is pleased with the improvement, but claims that the team will still have to deal with some obstacles.

"We do not have enough depth at the middle weights and heavyweight, so we will have to stay healthy throughout the season," explained Nelson, "We will again be one of the youngest teams in the state."

R.O.T.C. Update

Rappelling down 40 foot towers and small mountains, and firing military weapons on official Army rifle ranges are among some of the activities students enrolled in Longwood's Military Science courses have been doing so far this year. More than two hundred students are enrolled in these courses this semester, and they have had several exciting experiences since September.

September 17, all of the students in the Freshman course, about 90 went to the University of Richmond campus to rappel down a 40-foot tower there. The next day about nineteen students went on a Ranger expedition to the Kyanite Mine, located on Willis Mountain. There, these students rapelled much more realistically down the face of the mountain. They were instructed by Dr. Alan Ferrell, the Head of the Foreign Language Dept. at Hampden-Sydney College and a Reserved Green Beret.

Also on this weekend, the third year advanced R.O.T.C. (Reserved Officer Training Corps.) cadets went on an outing to Aberdeen, Maryland for a planned orientation tour of the duties of an officer in the Ordinance Corps. The trip included a brief look into the firing and optical systems of armoured vehicles, and a sneak preview of the latest super-tank, the M-1 Abrams.

In mid-October, all the advanced R.O.T.C. students travelled to Fort A.P. Hill to complete a Field Leadership Exercise (F.L.X.) with the R.O.T.C. students from the University of Richmond. The cadets stayed in Army Barracks, ate C-Rations and spent the days firing military weapons and navigating map and compass courses.

Running Scared

Longwood's Discreet Gay Society

By JOE JOHNSON

The Gay Community, only recently, in the last decade or so, has as a group come out of the closet in the U. S. Previously a hint of homosexuality could lead to book censorship, banishment from the stage, or a burning at the stake. In the early 70's, however, the sexual revolution, legitimized homosexual activity in such renowned California outposts of free love as San Francisco, or Fire Island in New York. As the sexual liberation spread so did the number of homosexuals coming out of the closet.

Depending on the community, reactions to this extrovertness varied. Some took it in stride and welcomed the gay community with open arms (metaphorically speaking). Others, not unsurprisingly, withdrew and remainded citadels of the conservative attitude.

Longwood, as a community, has never been subject to such a choice. Although Longwood in the past as an all female institute has had a reputation for homosexual activity it was kept covert and closeted. This semester, an organization named Longwood's Discreet Gay Society (L.D.G.S.) may well force Longwood to make such a choice.

"L.D.G.S. was started in part as a reaction to my own personal experience as a bisexual on Longwood's campus," said the organizer of L.D.G.S. who preferring anonymity, will be referred to as Walt. He estimates that such an organization oriented to the gay community could pull in as many as 325 participants or about 13 percent of Longwood's population, a modest estimation of the number of practicing homosexuals currently enrolled at Longwood.

As a practicing bisexual, Walt up until very recently was extraordinarily discreet about his sexual preferences and practices. Unfortunately an incident occurred in his dormitory which revealed to a non-sympathetic suitemate his "true" colors.

"It happened about a week before fall break. I was partying wi some 'straight' friends (as opposed to homosexual or bi-sexual friends). At the time I was extremely depressed about the general lack of acceptance and understanding and began to talk intimately of my own problem — about being bi-sexual, here at Longwood."

Unfortunately, at the same time his suitemate had overheard the conversation and came into the room demanding an explanation, as Walt put it, an explanation that would "let me off the hook."

"I said, 'I'm sorry that you heard that, I hope you won't hold it against me . . . because that's the way I am.' " The suitemate, an ROTC cadet, did hold it against him saying, "Look, you're that way, and I can't accept that. I think it's disgusting.' " "He refused to be reasonable, about keeping it quiet, he found it appalling that my parents didn't know, he said he wanted nothing to do with me, didn't want to associate with me and then promptly went ahead and told all his friends about it."

What followed was a series of petty annoyances and in some cases incidents which rivaled VMI's "initiation" ceremonies in maliciousness.

"At first it was just verbal abuse, people yelling faggot from their window or in the hall. My suitemate wouldn't let me use the phone, which was in my name but in his room. He didn't even pay the bill . . . I had to pay it. Later they wrote Faggot on the door in red magic marker. They thought my roommate (who is straight) was homosexual and started hassling him with cat calls — faggot, faggot.

"I went to visit Dr. Cox (head of Longwood's Counseling Service) because I was worried about a nervous breakdown. He and myself were hoping that incidents would die down after fall break . . . and they did for half a week. The Wednesday after fall break some people started screaming, 'faggot, I've heard you're a goddamned faggot.' They started kicking on the door to my room. They threatened violence. Later that night, I was in the room alone when I heard my suitemate and apparently some of his friends yelling taunts in the bathroom such as 'gay rights' or 'sexual preference, sexual preference . . . Oh, let me suck that juicy cock' or 'Oh, bend over and let me drive' and all the while someone was in the background singing America the Beautiful. I felt like going to Captain Stanford and saying 'Sir, I think you should know that one of your ROTC cadets was participating in a homosexual orgy in my bathroom.' I put up with a lot of crap. Anyway, I left the room because I was worried about them getting violent.

"I came back later and found faggot written on the door again — this time misspelled — one 'g' — but then they never accused biggots of being literate. I came into the room and found a puddle of yellowish liquid in front of my door (it was shampoo — not mine, my worst fear and immediate suspicion). They had dumped my shampoo, put graphite lead on my toothbrush and stuck pinholes in my toothpaste — it was pretty childish.

"I told the R.A. about the incident and we went to my room, he started writing up the incident report, when my suitemade came in the room. He said something to the effect of 'you goddamned bastard, if you ever do that again I'll kill you.' He never said what he was talking about. He was really mad, his arm was cocked. The R.A. told him to calm down and asked him what happened. He wouldn't answer and started shaking like he was about to explode. The R.A. told him to go into his room and he said, "Yeh, I'll go over there and then I'll kill him.' Later after the R.A. had gotten my story and had gone next door and heard what my suitemate had to say we all got together and tried to work out a solution. My suitemate insisted that I leave. He suggested that I should commit suicide because I had no place in society.

"The upshot of all this was nil. I spoke with the R.S. about pressing charges — it was slow going. I don't know if he's ever written it up even. I liked school, but thought I'd have to move out — with prevailing attitudes like my suitemate's.

"Finally, I went to various administrative officials, Thomas Nanzig (director of housing), Dr. Cox, Dean Ogrosky, and Ray Rotherwell. I told them about my problem. The administration was 100 percent supportive. They all helped a lot. Mr. Nanzig gave me possible legal routes to follow, and all of them were on my side — very professional about it.

"Things started to happen. My suitemate finally paid the phone bill; he stopped the harassments and was forced (I believe by Captain Stanford) to move out.

"L.D.G.S. is a direct result of this experience. I talked to the administration and told them of how such dilemmas may be commonplace and the need for an organizational force of some sort to prevent such incidents in the future. Without it every homosexual on campus would be like me — running scared. Everyone from Dr. Greenwood to Phyliss Maple seemed supportive of the idea. So I decided, why not."

Following is an interview describing the organization and some of Walt's feelings on homosexuality.

Rotunda — Has there been a good response to the L.D.G.S. salvo? Do you feel there will be a good response on this campus?

Walt — I don't know really, it seems that the majority of the pamphlets which I hung at various places around campus instead of being ripped up and destroyed by indignant, uptight people who can't handle the concept, were being taken down and passed around. I mean I only found one in a garbage can.

Rotunda — Do you think there is a real chance of such an organization having members?

Walt — I think there is good potential, simply because of the fact that there are a good sized percentage of gays here at Longwood.

Rotunda — When did you first realize that you were bisexual?

Walt — Well, as far back as I can remember, in fact, the heterosexual tendencies only came out starting at age 19 when I thought I'd go ahead and give heterosexuality a try . . . it didn't pan out all that well, though.

Rotunda — When was your first homosexual experience?

Walt — At age 17.

Rotunda — Is it stressful to you, without the added stress of dormitory living and suitemates, is just being in the minority as far as sexual preference is concerned, stressful to you?

Walt — No, why should it be, statistics indicate that 10 per cent of the world's population is gay. Do you realize how many that is, like 200 million of us running around. A bit less now, Khomeini's marching them in front of the firing squad, but we're used to that, Hitler did the same thing. America's a nice place to be, though, you're able to "get away" with it.

Rotunda — Do you have any particular admiration for homosexual writers, homosexual artists, homosexual musicians?

Walt — I'm not well versed enough really, I've only just recently begun to get involved in

Sexual Harassment at Longwood

"Our goal is zero incidents, one is too many. We want to stop it at all cost," said Dean Convey in reference to sexual harassment at Longwood College. Three such incidents between faculty and students at Longwood provoked Dean Conway into institutioning an informal committee on sexual harassment during a meeting of the appointment, reappointment and tenure committee held Nov. 4 in the Prince Edward Room.

The three incidents involved students that had gone to either their advisor, a faculty member or department head and had reported incidents which they felt were ones of sexual harassment. The informal committee is being established to hear these and other incidents of students or staff members who wish to report an allegation of misconduct by or against a faculty member.

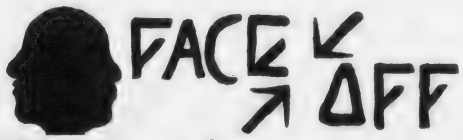
What constitutes sexual harassment varies in degree from an unwarranted comment to heavy petting. As defined by the Board of Visitors November 6, 1981, sexual harassment is "an attempt to coerse an unwilling person into a sexual relationship, or to subject a person to unwanted sexual attention, or to punish a refusal to comply, or to create a sexually intimidating hostile, or offensive working or educational environment. Sexual harassment is understood to include a wide range of behaviors from the actual coercing of sexual relations to the unwelcomed and inappropriate emphasizing of sexual identity. This definition does not impinge on individual standards of mature behavior, academic freedom or freedom of expression."

Although a remark or verbal sexual advance may seem superficially harmless, Dean Conway said that there is a substructure of trust to a student-faculty relationship and such advances can prove harmful. "Important, even essential to the educational process is a trusting relationship between the faculty and students . . . a sexual advance can destroy that trust — not only between a student and a faculty member but, by association, all faculty members."

The Committee will have the right to hear not only from alleged victims but also from those who might be able to provide testimony in support of the allegation. Confrontation between the accused and the alleged victim will not be permitted in the deliberations of the Committee. The alleged victim may bring a companion to the deliberations. All communications to and by the Committee will be privileged.

The Committee will recommend to the Dean of Faculty a course of action in each individual case, as well as improvements in College procedures which hopefully will reduce incidents of sexual harassment.

The Committee will consist of three faculty members appointed by Dean Conway and one representative appointed by either the Vice President for Student Affairs (if the alleged victim is a student) or by the supervising Vice President if the alleged victim is a staff member.



Under the Policies and Procedures adopted by the Board of Visitors on July 16, 1982, the Dean of Faculty is responsible for disciplinary action to be taken against a faculty member for serious misconduct or incompetence. Included in the list of examples of serious misconduct is sexual harassment.

The Coathanger & The Rose

By JOHNEL BROWN

A pregnant 37-year old is rushed into the emergency room. She has tried to abort herself with a glass thermometer, and the hemorrhaging calls for an immediate hysterectomy and ultimately her death.

Abortion has always been a prominent issue. In the 1800's there were no laws prohibiting or providing for abortion. In 1840 abortionists advertised their services in newspapers and journals. By 1900, however, abortions were ruled to be criminal offenses in most instances in the United States. Between 1900 and 1973, illegal abortions claimed the lives of many women. It wasn't until 1973 that abortions were deemed legal by the U.S. Supreme Court ruling on the Roe V Wade case. Since then, elective abortions have become medically safe — safer even than childbirth. In 1980, 33 percent of all pregnancies were terminated by abortions.

Records show that women have been exercising the option of abortion as early as 2700 B.C. in ancient Chinese medical practice Even during its prohibition, women found ways — sometimes fatally — sometimes not to retain the ultimate control and rights over their bodies.

The Right-to-Life movement is threatening the abortion laws as they stand, providing that all abortions, except in the cases where the mother's life would be endangered, or in cases of rape or incest would be illegal. Somehow they feel that, regardless of the volume of evidence to the contrary, a law prohibiting elective abortions would thereby eliminate them. And, that somehow, the law would be enforceable and in the best interest of everyone, including women. Why the Right-to-Lifers insist that by stripping a woman of her freedom of choice, pushing her to disregard the law and possibly fatally threaten her life will be in the best interest of anyone, is beyond logic. The Right-to Lifers base their stand on the question (and their shot-in-the-dark answer) of when life really begins. Science remains silent on what seems to some a scientific issue. Life, however, is present in the sperm and egg even before fertilization, but is not yet human life. What kind of life exactly the zygote is, remains a theological or philosophical question. Of course the zygote has potential for human life, it has not yet been declared so just on the basis of potential as an acorn has yet to be called an oak.

There are countless horror tales of women in "back alley-butcher" abortionist clinics, and to adopt a constitutional amendment that would force a morality that only a chosen few select, would discredit the law. One wonders for whose rights the Right-to-Lifers are fighting, and for whose lives.

There is no issue which can arouse such poignant images, devastating rhetoric and good intentioned hatred as abortion. Pro-choice members fight for an idealistic and pragmatic goal. Ideally the right to the freedom of individual moral responsibility and pragmatically the elimination back alley coat hangar abortions. Pro-life members fight against what they perceive as cold blooded murder in its worst form, the killing of a helpless innocent.

Let's examine the pro-choice arguments. They contend that each woman has a right to the decision of whether abortion is morally justifiable or not — putting the act of abortion in the same category as contraception or the act of fornication. The secular state has no moral presumptions on these actions, nor should they on the act of abortion.

Secondly, Pro-choice members argue that to adopt a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion would create a situation analogous to our prohibition era. Like the sale of sight robbing moonshine, if abortions were made illegal back alley abortions would spread potentially maiming as many mothers, as the number of fetus' the law was meant to protect.

Pro-life arguments take both of these arguments on with a simple rationale. The fetus is human. One does not kill humans knowingly.

Ah, the pro-choice say, but a fetus is only a potential human A caterpillar is not a butterfly, an acorn is not an oak and a two celled zygote is not a human. But who among them would contend that a child prior to puberty is not a human being. Or an infant interious womb is not a human while one minute later exterious womb it is. And who among them would be God like enough to set a dividing time between human and non-human life while one has already, by nature or God, if you will, been set. It's called conception.

Parent Objects: Deposit Proves Damaging

It is apparent from the new demand for a $100 damage deposit, in addition to the increased other mandatory charges, that Longwood administration does have a problem. But before they compound the problem, I would like to see some effort in finding the source of the inefficiency, rather than grasping for funds from all the students. If in the past, billing the guilty students for damages has proven ineffective then I ask how would money on hand be more advantageous? I fail to see how the administration can withdraw from a student's account any more than they can bill if that student is innocent. In short, I would have to conclude that if the administration of the billing failed, then the withdrawal of funds will meet the same problems.

Perhaps the administration should review their past records of this situation very carefully before they place more financial burdens on the students. Even though Ms. Mable stated that "$20,000 isn't a lot of money," there are students at Longwood that are having to obtain loans for the $100, loans on which they will be forced to pay interest, give Longwood the $100, Longwood will place the money in the banks in Farmville, and I am assuming Longwood will receive the interest from the student's borrowed $100. But when the money is returned to the student (if it is ever) where will this interest be? Although Vepco and C&P have been ruled to pay interest on deposits, Longwood at present is exempt.

When my daughter was enrolled in college it was solely for educational purposes for her, not me. I, in no way, intended for the Longwood administration to become my arbitrary financial investor.

This unconcerned attitude for students and parents definitely disappoints and even infuriates me. In fact, I am not accustomed to giving from one hand while the same establishment takes from the other — therefore, please strike my name from your annual donation list.

Social Rednecks

I am a heterosexual male. I thought this opening statement necessary to give the reader a certain perspective. The recent leaflets which have appeared over campus bannering an association of "Discreet Gays" seem to have upset a number of our more intellectual students, and, before the witch hunt begins I want to be counted out!

On the day when the leaflets were put up, many muscle-bound male students began to scream and holler about all those "damned faggots" who are presumably taking over the Longwood campus. They ranted over this horrifying occurrence and swore to take down every one of the leaflets, which they promptly did. At lunch, I overheard a mild discussion between three ROTC students who were planning to bring in a Howitzer and obliterate all effeminate males on campus. At supper, two good old boys from Backwash, North Carolina were plotting to bring in a twelve gauge double barrel Remington and make siege upon the accused, whom they had laboriously tracked down by lifting fingerprints off of the offensive leaflets.

Perhaps the reason that these males react so violently to homosexuality is that they feel it is a threat to their "manhood." Muscles and all that, you know. Maybe they are worried that their girl friends will think less of them if they respect the privacy — the basic rights — of a person who happens to be a homosexual. The person that put up this leaflet has been subjected to verbal and physical abuse which he in no way deserved. He is owed an apology by most of the people on campus who have cussed him out without even knowing who he was.

Perhaps, indeed, we should segregate our classrooms so that we won't be influenced by these dangerous deviants. Let's all write home about this one, kids, maybe Mommy and Daddy will have Dr. Greenwood expel all males who don't smoke Marlboro cigarettes, drink Miller beer, or don't participate in other such masculine habits.

While all of this scandal was going on, I tried to establish why people would be so deeply angered by the fact that there are homosexuals at Longwood. Had they been so naive as to think homosexuality could not exist right here in Farmville? Or did they believe that though the "problem" did exist, gay people were supposed to live passive, quiet lives hiding in a dark room somewhere out in California? Unfortunately, it would seem that many people believe just that.

I have nothing else to write, Joe, I just hope to God that all of the bigoted asses, male and female, on this campus will reconsider their prejudices. For those who just can't do that: friends, enjoy your Sunday brunches with Jerry Falwell on the tube — don't forget to put on your Barry Goldwater for President button, and, while you're at it, drop Ron a line on what a fine job he's doing for his ultra-conservative supporters here in Farmville.

It took real courage to put up those pamphlets, no matter what you may think of them, more, I suspect, than most of us have; more, I am sure than any ROTC redneck from Backwash, North Carolina could muster.

Where The Body Meets the Soul

By DAVID S. AREFORD

The Longwood College Company of Dancers' Fall Concert is a spectrum of dances by student choreographers presenting different moods and styles of dance. The program consists of eight pieces opening with a suite of three dances called "The Seasons" which is the work of three new choreographers, Nancy Grimstead, Shanna Eyer, and Laura Cawthorne. Movement, costume and lighting come together nicely here, especially in "Fall" with its autumn-rust lighting and costumes. All three dances in the suite are wonderful mood pieces.

"The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly," choreographed and danced by Robbie Hanger and Pam Smith is a slick, cool slow motion gun fight with equally slick movement and costumes. Two other dances: "Breakin' Loose" choreographed by Lisa Snellings and "The Work-Out" choreographed by Rebecca Johnson seem to be just about dancing. They are a colorful tour de force of stylized contemporary dance with music by Quincy Jones, Diana Ross and Steve Winwood.

Eileen Mathis, president of Company is a business major who is also minoring in Dance. She has performed with Company since she was a freshman and "Americana Suite," her senior work, is featured in this concert. In three parts, it reflects the taming of the American frontier, the struggle of its people and their continuing faith and the joy of a free and open country. Also included in the program is "Contenders" which Miss Mathis choreographed with Carol Cunningham.

The two standouts are "Out of the Deep," choreographed by Karey Kaiser. Kaiser's dance is a celebration of the body and the spirit that fills it and could have been more appropriately entitled "Out of the Womb", for it begins with the blossoming of bodies; wonderful slow unfurling movements in blue side lighting. The dancers include Shanna Eyer, Karey Kaiser, Liz Lesesne, Natalie Wack, and Edward Fetzner. These are not fish from "the deep" but humans dancing from the uncharted depths of the soul. Miss Kaiser has included breathing which is visual and audible to the audience. It is as if these new children of the earth are taking their first breaths of air. The simplicity and deliberateness of this breathing and movement are sensational. Mr. Fetzner, breaking off from the others, seems to represent a bursting forth of the dancers' inner selves. He dances with bravado, spinning away from the others. He is alone as all of us at times must be. His action that closes the dance is exciting and surprising (I will not ruin the surprise but let you experience it yourself). It reflects the daring and risk we must all take and the trust we must have in others.

The most ambitious dance of the concert is "Temple" choreographed by Horace Scruggs, III. It is "most ambitious" because of the size of the group of dancers (9), the use of specific stylized motifs, and its originality. It creates an incredible mood. The music is exotic and Eastern in flavor and adds to the ritualistic atmosphere. It is as if we have entered an ancient temple or a clearing in a mystical forest. Light spills in center stage: a fire or a spirit from above. A line of women enter silhouetted against red. Men enter stomping, supplicating their bodies in dance to their god. The dancers join in a circle around the light. They become a part of the light with their upraised fingers as flames of the fire. It is pagan and also mythological. It closes with the dancers moving away from the center and then crossing through the light and exiting with no particular order. The music ends with a rush of wind and the pool of light fades in the center — ashes of the fire, the resting of the spirit. The dancers have finished their ritual and have scattered in the forest. The god is appeased.

The dancers: Shanna Eyer, Karey Kaiser, Nancy Nuckols Pam Smith, Sabra Seneff, Eddie Fetzner, Dean Lakey, Dave Sawyer, and Horace Scruggs. The men should be commended for a fine and brave performance, the level of which is probably a first for men in the company.

The concert is presented in Lancer Hall Dance Studio at 7:30 and admission is free, but ticket holders will be seated first. Tickets will be available in the New Smoker or in the Dance Office in Lancer Hall.

Ambitious Ambassadors

By LINDA WHITLEY

If you notice an unusual number of grey and navy outfits being worn by your fellow classmates, please know that it is not because of a new fashion trend. These outfits are sported by members of a new group on campus known as Longwood Ambassadors.

Selected on the basis of scholarship, leadership and activities, these students volunteer their time to help advance the college and its image, and to help raise money for the Annual Fund.

"Longwood needs a voluntary group like this one to contact alumni because students relate better to students," says Ambassador Bob Jensen. "It's a good program...I think the P.R. that the college is getting will help in the near future."

Duties of an Ambassador entail working with both the Board of Visitors and the foundation which allocates unrestricted dollars, making trips to recruit perspective students to the college, mingling with dignitaries and community leaders when they visit the college (as Karen Kelsey and John Todd did when Senator John Warner visited the college last week), and acting as tour guides. "It's a beneficial addition to Longwood," says Ambassadress Karen Kelsey. "I love being an Ambassador...and the idea of students representing the college."

Ambassadors also do two major projects per year, such as a bike-a-thon, to raise money for student scholarships. A major duty of an ambassador is raising money through a TELEFUND campaign. This money supports the Annual Fund which provides scholarships for outstanding students, helps with academic programs, special activities, and also provides for many alumni programs.

They have accomplished a great deal for the short time that they have been working together. They helped host a golf tournament, met with dignitaries, given tours, helped host dinner parties for the president and various school organizations, and have raised over $12,600 for the Annual Fund.

How much more will this group be able to accomplish towards bettering the college? For now, the possibilities are endless. If you are interested in becoming a member of this organization, interviews are being held in the Office of Institutional Advancement from November 15-18. Applicants must have a grade point average of at least 2.3.

Film Series

The third film in this year's Anthropology Film Series will be screened Wednesday, November 17, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium. The Anthropology Film Series, now in its fourth year, is sponsored by the Department of Sociology and Anthropology and is a presentation of classic films focusing on the culture and styles of lives of people in societies other than our own or on people in prehistoric times.

The Hunters is a film study of 13 days in the life of a hunting band of Kung Bushman. The Kung live in the Kalahari Desert in southern Africa. They number about 55,000 and are unique culturally in that they speak a "click" language which contains sounds not found in any other language in the world. The Hunters focuses on a chase after a giraffe which the Bushmen have wounded with a small poison arrow. Nearly two weeks are spent tracking the wounded and sick animal until the last scene when it is finally trapped by the hunters.

Dr. James W. Jordan, Associate Professor of Anthropology and Director of the Anthropology Film Series will provide a brief introduction to the film. All films in the Series are free and open to the public.

Archeology Excavation

We're still not sure exactly what it is yet: it may be a dry well (large hole in the ground, covered by a small house and used as a root cellar) or it still may be a regular well, but we still haven't found any of the bricks used to build a well." Bob Flippen is getting a little frustrated, anxious to know what the purpose of the site being excavated out at Hampden-Sydney since October. Bob, an Anthropology intern from George Washington University is the Excavation Director, in charge of this site, H-S 3, the latest in a series of three Archeology sites on the H-S campus.

This site is closer to the H-S 2 site, the original college presidents home, and was found with the help of a telephone company salvage crew who were in the area preparing for a new dormitory on campus. Since it is in such close proximity to H-S 2, there was some speculation that may have been an ice house, but that has neither been proven nor disproven.

The last dig at the site was Friday, Oct. 29. David Wilson, Mary Ellen Munoz, Rose Good, Maurice Frank, and Bernie Toner, all Archeology veterns joined Bob in the excavation, as well as new comer Beth Hall. They continued the regular strategy of vertical face stripping of the site to clear out the ground on top so the serious digging can begin. "I see about one more afternoon of this and then several test digs to give us an idea of what we will find and hopefully what this site is," said Bob. So far they have found everything from clay pipes, some which are "a pipe collectors dream," according to Bob, to ceramic and glass wares, and even a Brewerton projectile point. This type of projectile point was found this summer at the Smith-Taylor Mound site.

Not only are college students helping Bob with this project, last week four Prince Edward County High School students who are in Mrs. Mary Ellen Munoz's Girl Scout troop and are looking into careers, decided that they are interested in Archeology. They went through the Archeology Orientation program Bob set up at the beginning of this excavation, including slides, several museum tours and preliminary look at the site, and next week, Carrie Banks, Keasha Brown, Denae Whitus, and Carol Berry will be excavating at H-S 3.

Bob has scheduled three more afternoons for excavations and encourages anyone to come join the fun. A van will pick up interested students behind Hiner at 1:00 p.m. and will return them 5:00 p.m. on Monday, Nov. 15, Wednesday, Nov. 17, and Tuesday, Nov. 23. Please contact Bob through the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, 392-9277 for more information.

N.Y. in November

By CINDY CORELL

At 4:00 a.m. on Friday of the first weekend in November, eleven Longwood students, a friend of one, and Dr. Bruce Montgomery set off for the Big Apple, to see, feel and experience one of the most exciting cities in the world. The trip was planned in conjunction with one of Dr. Montgomery's music classes, Jazz, Folk, Rock and Broadway Musicals. An avid Broadway enthusiast himself, Dr. Montgomery planned the weekend excursion and held it open to anyone who was interested. The group travelled in a Longwood van and stayed in a hotel on 48th Street. The price for the trip included two nights in the hotel, transportation, tolls and parking fees and the total was under $90.00.

The group arrived in New York through Staten Island and took the ferry over to Manhattan. They arrived there about 2:00 p.m. and checked into their hotel. They spent the rest of the afternoon in Soho, a section of lower Manhattan which is south of Houston Street, hence the name. Soho is considered a very artsy section of the city and the neighborhood has an atmosphere all its own. After visiting a few clothing stores and art shops, the group headed back uptown, ate dinner near their hotel and then went their own ways, a few experiencing the Manhattan bar scene.

Saturday morning, a group of the students went with Dr. Montgomery to the stores on Fifth Avenue. Doug Rossi tried on a nice jacket in Saks. Leather and nylon. It was a nice fit but the salesman didn't make a sale. It seems Doug didn't have $2,100.00 on him at the moment. Meanwhile, another jacket caught the eye of Dr. Montgomery. Genuine coyote fur, for a mere $5,400.00. Alas, another failure for the salesman. According to Doug though, Dr. Montgomery "...looked like a pimp with it on," so maybe Farmville wasn't ready for that jacket anyway.

While they were this far uptown, the students walked through one end of Central Park and saw all the horse and buggy rides being advertised.

They took the subway down to Chinatown, "a real trip" for most of the students. They ate Italian food in Little Italy (of course), and saw the post card view of N.Y.C. from the top of the World Trade Center. Being used to the Frazer elevator, Doug was taken aback with the 20-mites-an-hour 107-floors-in-less-than-a-minute trip to the top of one of the tallest buildings in the world.

That evening they all went to different plays and spent the rest of the evening as they pleased.

Around 1:00 p.m. on Sunday, the travelers were weary and homebound. Doug spoke for just about all of the students when he stated, "It was a good trip, and a fun way to see the city, no direct authority. Dr. Montgomery was great; he was a lot of help and a lot of fun, especially fooling around in Sacks and when he couldn't find the van at the end of the weekend!"

Military Ball

"It was a good experience for these young cadets to see what a military social event is like; they aren't quite like civilian parties," said Captain Tom Stanford of the Military Ball held Saturday night at the Defense General Supply Center in Richmond, Va. It was attended by all of the R.O.T.C. cadets from Longwood, University of Richmond, Hampden-Sydney College and Virginia Commonwealth University. Dr. J.R. Scully, the Assistant Secretary of the Army, Dr. Janet D. Greenwood, president of Longwood, Dr. Verna Armstrong, Vice President for Business Affairs, and Donald Lemish, Vice President for Institutional Advancement. High ranking officials from the other schools also attended, as well as ranking officers from the Pentagon.

A highlight of the evening was the crowning of the Military Ball queen. This year the advanced corps cadets from U. of R. and Longwood elected Karen Kaiser, a Longwood junior who is studying dance. Two of the finalists in her court, Marsha Booth and Ann McCarty (first runner-up) are also Longwood students.

A contingent of the Old Guard from Fort Myer, the Army's ceremonial unit were presented and performed for the event.

Players at Wesley

One of the church's most important — and toughest — jobs is to challenge its members . . . to keep them alive, thinking, growing, ill at ease with complacency . . . to make Christian commitment an exciting, total way of life, not just an hour a week in Sunday worship. The unfortunate truth is of course, that most of us don't like being challenged very much . . . having our toes stepped on . . . so we find lots of ways to avoid paying attention.

Having something to say, and getting people to hear and respond to it, are two different things. Covenant players was created with just this in mind . . . the need for media that can communicate the vibrant challenges of Christian commitment . . . in a way to engrossing to ignore, too much fun to get uptight about. Too potent and personal to be rationalized away.

Covenat players, an international repertory drama group, utilize a unique kind of drama. With a repertoire of over 900 plays, it allows a flexibility to communicate a variety of themes, issues, and subject matter. Using everything from light comedy to heavy drama, science, fiction, and biblical characterizations, they present their message. One of 85 touring groups will be performing November 17, at 6:45 p.m. at the Wesley Foundation Student Center. A second performance will be held at 12:30 p.m. on November 18.

Wild Night At Frazer

One hundred two students were written up in Frazer dormitories early Friday morning. Jim Scott, the Resident Supervisor, admitted that writing up 102 residents in a single day was a bit excessive but said it was the result of a generally bizarre day.

"Thursday we had a lot of problems. Early in the afternoon an entire suite had to be written up for throwing firecrackers out of the windows. We had three callin complaints from the Town Police, later that night, one cocerning a party itn the Frazer TV room (the music was loud enough to be heard at Par bil's), another at about one in the morning. Apparently a number of Marines were out in back of the dormitories, yelling and screaming — one guy almost got clobbered with a bottle. And still another concerning a person on 8th floor who insisted on screaming out of the window."

Those incidents only bagged 15-20 students at the most, but the coup de grace for Jim Scott's record books came early Friday morning at 4:02 a.m.

"The false alarm Friday morning really inflated the incident reports. We had had a false alarm Wednesday night and students must not have felt too ambitious about crawling out of bed at 4:00 a.m. I know I didn't. But it's against the law not to. Seventy-two people were written up who didn't leave for various reasons. It took us 40 minutes to clear the people out of the building — that's absurd."

The total of 102 write-ups may not necessarily end in 102 punishments. "Fifty per cent of those will be people with legitimate reasons for not leaving the building — some were sick or on medication or in other ways handicapped, some simply didn't wake up — but it's still pretty serious — God forbid, there would be a real fire."

Jim Scott estimates that each incident report dealt with solely on his level will take about an hour to an hour and one-half to investigate, write up and hear. By the modest estimate, that's 102 hours' worth of work for one day — and Resident Supervisors don't get overtime.

Lancer Edition

Lancer Edition has been invited to attend the Virginia Music Educators Association (VMEA) convention to be held November 18, 19, 20 in Richmond. This convention is held annually and is attended by music educators in schools across Virginia. The clinician for the vocal jazz ensemble section of the convention is Kirby Shaw, nationally known Jazz Show Choir composer and arranger. Other schools represented in this section of the convention will be Roanoke College, Old Dominion University, and Turner Ashby High School, as well as two jazz bands.

Lancer Edition is directed by Dr. Louard E. Egbert, Jr., Head of the Music Department. The members this semester are, soprano: Lisa Bowers, Sonja Held, Kim Kenworthy, and Sabra Seneff; alto, Brenda Davis, Kathy Hartung, Amy McGonigle, and Amy Thomas; tenor: Mike Berry, Mike Pentall, John Scott, and Jeff Thomas; and bass: Mike Foster, Gordon Parr and Horace Scruggs. They will be accompanied by a jazz combo including pianist, Jeanne Drewer; guitarist, David Pool; percussionists, Arthur Johnson and Rick Allen; saxophonist, Theresa Fowler; trombonist, Pete Tideman, and Richard Durham playing fleugel-horn and trumpet.

One Act Plays

Longwood's Drama Department is now beginning work on the production of a series of One Act Plays which will be presented in Jarman Auditorium during the first week of December. Each of the One Acts will be directed and performed by Longwood students.

The One Act Plays presented will include the following: Visitor from Forest Hills, written by Cindy June; Cecil, directed by George Hughes; The Typist, directed by Sherry Forbes; The Lover, directed by Ann Bentley; Picnic on the Battlefield, directed by David Wood; and Dr. Doris Anderson, written by Douglas Young and directed by Patty Vogel. The audience will be seated on Jarman's stage for these performances; therefore, limited seating will be available. Details on advanced ticket sales will be publicized later.

Need some extra credit? Students are presently needed to help with publicity and set construction for the One Acts. Anyone who volunteers 45 hours of help will receive one hour of academic credit. If you are interested in contributing your time, please contact the Drama Department between 8:30 and 5:00 at 2-9361, or see Sherry Forbes.

Longwood Booters Win State Title

By BECKY DUNK

Longwood's sensational soccer team won the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association state title Saturday by defeating Lynchburg 1-0 in the championship game. This was the final match of the year for the Lancers, who compiled a record of 15-4-1, the best in their six-year history.

The game, which lasted more than two hours, was tough for both teams. Longwood dominated the game but failed to break through Lynchburg's defense. At the end of regulation play, the score remained 0-0. Two 15-minute overtimes and a third five-minute overtime were played and still there was no score.

Finally, with only 25 seconds gone in the fourth overtime period, freshman Brian Allmendinger headed in a pass from Steve Kern for the winning goal. "It felt good to score, but I was stunned," said Allmendinger. "I thought it was going over the net."

Besides being Virginia State Champions this season, the Lancers are ranked second in the Division II Mid-Atlantic Region, and are among the top 15 in Division II nationwide.

Six of Longwood's players were named to the VISA All-Central Division team. They are: goalie Brian Sprinkle, backs Dan Bubnis, Joe Parker, and Darryl Case, midfielder Bill Foster, and forward Tim Brennan.

These six Lancers will play for the Eastern Division VISA All-Stars when they go up against a team from the west at the VISA All-Star game December 5 at 1:00 here at Longwood.

High scorer for the Lancers this season was senior Gus Leal with 11 goals and 10 assists for 32 points. Junior Tim Brennan scored the most goals (14) and had two assists for a total of 32 points and freshman Brian Allmendinger had 9 goals and 3 assists for 21 points. Leal finished his career with a school record 51 goals and 19 assists.

Longwood's top goalie, Brian Sprinkle, played in 15 games this season and gave up just one goal per game.

In other action last week, the Lancers fell to host William and Mary 3-0 in their final regular season game. William and Mary outshot Longwood 15-9.

Player of the Week

From Sports Information

Senior Kathy Gunning won her serve a perfect 22 out of 22 times in a match last Tuesday for the Longwood volleyball team and for her efforts, Gunning has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period November 5-12. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

"In her last college match, Gunning played consistently and led the team through a very touch four-game match," said Coach Joyce Phillips. "Her 100 per cent serving was a key in keeping us in the match." Chowan defeated LC 9-15, 18-16, 15-4 and 15-9.

Gunning, a co-captain, compiled some impressive statistics in Longwood's loss to Chowan. She had 33 of 35 bumps (94 per cent), 43 of 46 sets (94 per cent), 5 of 7 spikes (72 per cent), 6 of 8 dinks with one ace, 22 of 22 serves, and 2 of 2 on drives.

KATHY GUNNING

Longwood finished up its season with a record of 7-11.

A graduate of Martin Spaulding High School, Gunning was named MVP of her volleyball and softball teams in high school. She was also captain of the basketball team two years. In addition to playing four years on the Longwood volleyball team, Gunning has also been a member of the Lady Lancer softball team the past two years.

An English major, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Gunning.

Individual results from UVA are as follows:

Open Division — Bryan Farrar, 2nd over fences; Intermediate — Beth Wiley, 4th over fences; Novice Division — Amy Jo Poor, 5th flat; Kristin Birath, 1st over fences; Mary Brockwell, 6th flat.

Advanced walk-trot-canter — Sara Farris, 3rd; Beginner walk-trot-canter — Carol Turner, 3rd.

High point college for Friday was UVA and Reserve was Sweet Briar College. Longwood finished 8th overall.

Individual results from RMWC:

Intermediate — Beth Wiley, 6th flat; Kirsten Landendor, 4th over fences; Novice Division — Amy Jo Poor, 4th flat; Martie Wilson, 4th over fences; Kristin Birath, 3rd flat, 1st over fences; Mary Brockwell, 1st flat.

Advanced walk-trot-canter — Sarah Farris, 2nd; Beginner walk-trot-canter — Carol Turner, 4th.

High point college was Randolph-Macon. Reserve high point college was UVA. Longwood was 3rd out of 8 competing schools.

Amy Jo Poor and Kristin Birath will be added to the list of Longwood riders competing in the regional show this spring. Both of these riders will also advance from the novice to the intermediate division. There are several other Longwood riders who only need a few more points to qualify. Qualifications for regionals is an accumulation of 21 points in a given class — 1st place is 7 points, 2nd is 5 points, 3rd is 4 points, and so on.

There will be approximately five shows next semester with the season starting again in February.

Mark McArdle Plays Big For His Size

Longwood Freshman Soccer Player Stands 5-2

By BECKY DUNK

When Longwood soccer player Mark McArdle goes onto the field during a game, opposing fans and players stop and stare. A lot of them say, "look at that little kid. What's he doing on the field?"

Being small doesn't bother the 5'2", 105-pound freshman from Neptune, New Jersey. "My height is really an advantage because the other team doesn't mark me as tight. I receive a lot of hell from opposing fans, but it just makes me play harder."

"The only time my size is a problem is when I try to head the ball," Mark adds. "I usually can't reach it."

Mark is better known by fans and friends as "Smurf" and "Tuna." Dave Via started calling me 'Smurf' because I'm small," he says. "It just kinda' caught on. They call me 'Tuna' since I'm from Neptune."

A soccer fanatic since age 10, Mark began his career playing on community teams. From there he went on to complete four very successful years as a starting forward on his high school soccer team. He made All Conference Coaches Pick - 2nd team, received an All-Shore Honorable Mention, and was captain of the team his senior year.

Impressed By Longwood

Several schools other than Longwood tried to recruit Mark for their team, but he turned them all down. "The coach (Rich Posipanko) influenced me a lot. He talked me into coming here," he says. "I also looked at Longwood's record — how it has improved over the past years. It was real impressive."

Early in the season, Mark was sidelined for several weeks due to an injury. "I hyperextended my left knee during a game and tore the cartilage. Doc Powers (trainer) has really been a big help. He's worked with me a lot to try to get it better. He's the one who got me back into action."

Valuable Member Of Team

Coach Rich Posipanko feels Mark is a valuable member of the team. "It's really a plus having him back after his injury," he says. "Mark has a super attitude. He gives an all-out effort every time he plays."

The effort Mark puts into his play has helped him see action in 14 games this season. He has had four attempted shots, one goal and one assist. These statistics hardly reflect the real contribution Mark has made to the team. His quickness and ability to move the ball downfield have enhanced the Lancer offense.

MARK McARDLE

"I feel I've had a good season," Mark says. "Rich gave me enough playing time . . . I think I helped the team both on and off the bench."

"I've improved a lot since I came to Longwood," says Mark. "College soccer is different than high school soccer. In college, you don't have guys chasing you all over the field trying to get the ball. You have more time to control it and make good moves."

"Playing with good players has definitely helped," Mark adds. "When you're playing next to Billy Foster and Steve Kern, you can't mess up."

This season the Lancers won the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association state title by defeating Lynchburg 1-0. They compiled a record of 15-4-1, the best in their six-year history. Longwood had hoped to participate in the NCAA Division II playoffs in Florida, but they didn't receive a bid.

"As a team, we definitely had a great season," Mark says. "We deserved to go to the NCAA playoffs . . . some of the guys were real upset, but that's just the way it goes."

Mark, "Smurf," "Tuna" — call him what you will. But with one successful season behind him and three potentially good seasons ahead, be sure to call him a competitor.

Cagers Open Play Friday

From Sports Information

Coach Cal Luther will unveil his 1982-83 Lancer basketball team in the Mansfield State Tip-Off Tournament Friday night in Mansfield, Pennsylvania. The Lancers, 15-8 last season, take on Clarion State in the tournament opener at 6:00 Friday while Mansfield plays Elmira in the second contest at 8:00.

Losers will play in the consolation game Saturday night at 6:00 while the winners square off at 8:00 for the championship.

Luther expects seniors Joe Remar and Mike Testa to start at guard, senior Ron Orr at center and junior Jerome (COBRA) Kersey and sophomore John Weber at forwards. Remar and Orr are three-year starters while Kersey has been in the starting lineup two years.

Kersey has been bothered with a sore foot throughout the pre-season and could still be knocked out of action if the ailment flares up again. The 6-7, 215-pound pre-season All-American has missed a lot of practice time over the past three weeks.

Backing up Longwood's top cagers will be freshman Lonnie Lewis and sophomore Adrian Armstrong at forward and 6-7 junior Ray Witiak at center. Senior Bobby Carter is likely to be the first guard substitute.

Longwood's first round opponent Clarion State finished 16-11 last season, but has a new coach in former Creighton assistant Dick Taylor and only two lettermen back from last season.

"Clarion has a new coach and new players," said Luther. "I think we're going to have a pretty good defensive club, but it's going to be tough to preapre for this game when we know so little about them."

Luther has two main concerns as he heads into his second season as coach of the Lancers. One concern is simply to keep Kersey healthy. The big forward led Longwood in scoring (17.0) and rebounding (11.8) last season. If Kersey is out with an injury it would be impossible to compensate for his absence.

The Longwood coach also is concerned about his team's lack of depth at guard. Only senior Joe Remar could be called experienced. Senior Mike Testa saw some action in a back-up role last season after Longwood lost number 3 guard Jim Sixsmith.

"We have a definite lack of experience at the guard position," said the coach. "We're pretty thin in terms of experience and ability."

Following the weekend trip to Pennsylvania, the Lancers will be on the road again Tuesday night for a game against always tough Virginia Union. The Panthers will be opening their season after qualifying for the NCAA Playoffs last year.

Wrestlers Host VMI & Newport News

By RONNIE BROWN

The Lancer grapplers start their regular season Wednesday hosting VMI and Newport News Apprentice at 7:00 at Lancer Hall. After a rough weekend of wrestling at the ODU Tournament, Coach Steve Nelson knows that Wednesday's homestand will not be an easy chore for his young wrestlers.

"We did not wrestle as well as we could have," explained Nelson. "We were intimidated by the level of competition. VMI looked very impressive at the Tournament (ODU) and we will have to wrestle a hundred percent better to compete with them."

Newport News, who the Lancers defeated twice last season, will not be a pushover either with an improved squad with particular strength in the lightweight classifications.

Although the wrestlers only compiled 6.5 points in the ODU tourney, there were some bright spots. Of the 10 wrestlers making the trip, Steve Kidwell, 1-2 at 126, John Ayoub, 1-2 at 190 and Steve Albeck, 1-2 at 142 had impressive performances against some of the South's better wrestlers. Albeck came from behind 8-2 to pin his opponent from William and Mary at 5:21.

Lady Lancers Host UMES Saturday

From Sports Information

Longwood's women's basketball team opens its season Saturday afternoon at 3:00 when Coach Jane Miller's squad hosts Maryland Eastern Shore in Lancer Hall.

Longwood, 8-15 last season, returns four starters and seven players. The Lady Lancers are hoping to bring their offensive output up to the level of their defense in the coming season.

Coach Miller expects juniors Robin Powell and Kim McConnell to start at guard, senior Karen Savarese at center and Florence Holmes, Valerie Turner or Mariana Johnson at forward.

Returning starters Cindy Eckel and Barbara DeGraff have missed considerable practice time in pre-season because of a conflict with student teaching. Miller expects Eckel and DeGraff to see considerable action, however.

Maryland Eastern Shore was 6-19 last season and has five players back. Longwood and UMES played in 1980-81 with the Lady Lancers taking a 79-63 win.

Last season the Lady Lancers were known for their defensive abilities. Coach Miller feels her team must make strides in realizing its offensive potential if the upcoming season is to be a success.

Spikers 7-11

By RONNIE BROWN

The Lady Lancers finished the 1982 season Tuesday, November 9, on a losing note to Chowan 15-9, 16-18, 4-15, 9-15. Although Coach Joyce Phillips was disappointed with the 7-11 mark, she says the record is deceiving.

"We should have won more matches, but considering the competition, we played better than our record indicates," explained Phillips. "When the team communicated well with each other, we were effective."

Although three seniors will be leaving, including co-captains Elaine Olay and Kathy Gunning, the Lady Lancers return the rest of the 1982 squad.

Gymnasts Spring Into Action

By JAUDON CONKWRIGHT

The 1982-83 Lady Lancer gymnastic team displayed their talent and strength last Tuesday night at their annual pre-season exhibition. Since competition does not begin until January, Coach Ruth Budd held the exhibition to give the public a preview of the team as well as prepare the gymnasts for competition in front of an audience.

The exhibition opened with a tumbling performance done by the entire squad. After, several girls performed various routines in the four areas: bars, beam, floor exercise, and vaulting. These routines did not consist of polished competitive performances, but rather a preview of skills and routines the team is preparing.

Returning from last year's team are team captain and sophomore, Kim Owens; junior Sherri Meeks; sophomores Angie Smith, Kelly Crepps, Gray Stabley, Elsa Kretz, and Dayna Hankinson. There are seven freshmen newcomers to this year's young squad: Lisa Zuraw, Judy Wagner, Tracey Roberts, Kim Kenworthy, Allison Berry, Cindy Weinstock and Terri Audi. Helping Coach Budd with this year's large squad is senior student assistant Nancy Pierce.

This year's outlook seems to be good. One of the major reasons is because of the brand new spring floor exercise mat. Not only does this floor give the gymnasts increased tumbling ability, but also enables Longwood to bring in top recruits and highly rated college teams to compete against.

Last Tuesday was not the only chance this semester the public will get to see the girls perform. On Monday, Nov. 22, at 7:30, the girls will compete in an inter-squad meet to be held in Lancer Hall. Please come out and support the girls in their first competitive event. The girls' performance should be much improved since the exhibition and the audience will be well entertained.

Gay Society

the subculture. Just this past summer I found out where the gay action was up in my hometown — that was great. By day I was with my mother and grandmother the good, clean-cut little boy, by night I was myself. I let my hair down, so to speak, after they turned in I prowled the boardwalk — it was great.

Rotunda — What kind of action?

Walt — Well, there are gay bars — all male and all female and bisexual bars — male and female and mixed gay bars — bisexuals, heterosexuals and homosexuals. In D.C. gay action - is paradise. They've got over 20 gay bars, gay restaurants, gay bookstores, gay theaters, gay dancing spots.

Rotunda — You're probably heard of the movie Cruising and its investigation of the Sado-Maso gay scene. What's your opinion on the leather side of gay life?

Walt — I'm not much into the leather gay scene, or the lavender and lace gay scene, I'm into the normal gay scene. Those are both extremes. They're the minority within the minority. I think it's rather vulgar.

Rotunda — Do you feel your homosexuality is a result of your environment or an innate natural characteristic?

Walt — It's just a natural attraction, not a disease or psychological disorder — the American Psychological - Association (APA) removed it off the list of psychological disorders back in the early 70's. It decreed that they did not approve of any prejudice against anyone because of sexual preference. The reason many of them do seek psychological help is because of the hostile environment — this school is a hostile environment. Back to your original question, I don't think it's environment strictly or hormonal imbalance (the most masculine men can be found in an S&M gay bar — leather jackets and tight blue jeans type -- most of the guys on campus would be hard pressed to match them for the so-called macho image — the hairy chest, big muscles and so forth) if there was any lack of testosterone they wouldn't have developed that way physically. I think it's a combination, probably, of all the above. There is a certain amount of tendency, a certain amount of open mindedness.

Rotunda — Without being stereotypic, do you find that gays tend to be more inclined to the liberal arts — music, art work, writing?

Walt — As a general rule yes, the gay people I've run into have been very intelligent, very artistically inclined. Again, I hate stereotyping but many do get involved in drama or music and art. I guess it's because if You're not intelligent and open minded, you're not going to be able to accept yourself, in which case you'll probably be a suicide.

Rotunda — Is there a high percentage of suicide among gays?

Walt — There's a very, very high percentage. The survivability rate is very poor. It's probably one of the most common problems along with drug and alcohol abuse. It's a hostile society that drives them to it. They are not born sicko or suicidal or alcoholic but the nonacceptance of society drives them to it.

Rotunda — You mentioned before that you hadn't told your parents about your homosexuality. Are you planning on telling them, if so, what do you think will be their reaction?

Walt — Don't remind me. Yes, I am planning to tell them. I'll probably bring this article and say simply, "I'm Walt." I'm very worried about their reaction. My dad is the most open minded of the two. He will be shocked but I think he'll get over it, he looks on me as a person. My mother will probably react the way she did when she found out I smoked or drank or went to wild parties — "Oh, God, what did I do wrong, I didn't raise a child to be a smoker or I didn't raise a child to drink, or oh, my God, what did I do wrong, I should have made you go out with girls more often." I'm very worried about that.

Rotunda — Do gays, you think, feel a special bond between themselves, aside from the sexual?

Walt — When they manage to find each other, yes, but they are so used to hiding. They've had to hide throughout grade school, intermediate school, high school, college even. Many don't manage to find themselves, to be themselves, until they're out on their own. Then they can finally face themselves and meet others — that's of course, if they haven't committed suicide yet.

Rotunda — A lot of people hold the opinion that gays put an undue emphasis on sex. Do you think that it is true, is that ridiculous, or a double standard?

Walt — I find that they're just ordinary people. It's like with the heterosexual community, you've got those that are interested in little kids. There are a few absolute creeps out there. But there's just as high percentage in the heterosexual community. Likewise you've got the guys who will go from bed to bed, "score" as much as possible, or those interested in a meaningful relationship, or those who go in for an occasional one night stand because they don't want to be by themselves that night. I think that there's really no difference; both community's heterosexuals and homosexuals have varying degrees of sexual activity. I think people say gays put undue emphasis on sex because gays have a difficult time finding stable partners. First of all, gays have restricted themselves instead of looking at half the population to find a suitable partner, they find themselves looking at half of 10 per cent of the world's population. To find someone you are compatible with, you can live with, you can care for, you can really love, is very difficult.

Rotunda — Ideally, what would you like to see the L.D.G.S. become?

Walt — I would like to see first of all, an open organization stemming from this, of people who are open about themselves, an acceptance within the school community to try to undo the bad image that gays have received over the decades here. That can only be done by setting an example.

Rotunda — What kind of bad image are you talking about?

Walt — Let's face it, this place used to have a big reputation; it still has a big reputation, frankly. When it was an all female institute a bunch of lesbians would get together and have an all girl party and invite unsuspecting freshman girls. Next thing you know the girls would be paired off and the ones who weren't paired off were making moves at the freshman girls. The parents would get very upset. As the school became more and more mixed (co-ed) those type of incidents slowly died out. They (the homosexuals) went underground.

We should be able to set an example now, as a community and show that we are not going to come on to every unsuspecting freshman. We should be open about our behavior, to undo the stereotype images, to increase people's understanding — we are not sinful or evil — I accept the basic tenets of the Christian faith. Christ died for our sins, not our sexuality. But a lot of people refuse to accept this or understand it. It would be nice if they would learn to accept a person as a person — and since this is a college environment — it would be nice, if they can't be tolerant to be at least knowledgable of certain facts and statistics — such as one in six people have a homosexual experience and one in 10 practice it. If that's the case, then if you have 20 friends, odds are very good that three have had a homosexual experience of some kind or another and two liked it and stayed with it.

Mable Awarded

Phyllis L. Mable, Vice President for Student Affairs at Longwood College, has been named the recipient of the Mel Hardee Award for Outstanding Service to student affairs work. This latest national professional award presented to Phyllis Mable cited her leadership on the national level and her contributions as writer, lecturer, practitioner, and college administrator. She was named to the Longwood College Vice Presidency this year.

The co-editor of three widely acclaimed books dealing with student affairs administration in colleges and universities, Mable is also the author or co-author of some twenty chapters and manuscripts dealing with College Student Services, the role of student services practitioners, and the professional practices of administrators. She is past president of the American College Personnel Association and is presently serving as national chairman of the Task Force on Standards for college deans and counselors. One could question the fundamental sacredness of human life. But such an inquiry proves rhetorical at best.

We all for the most part value our lives, and those that don't weren't born not valuing it; but I learned it through their environment. Thus, a fetus, one could assume values its life as much or more than the bipod fetus' walking and breathing daily. Empirically there is proof. Jerome Lyiene has experimented with 2 month (the size of a thumb) old fetus' and found they react quite violently to harmful stimuli and likewise fondly to pleasant stimuli. As he wrote in "A Very Neat Beginning."

"to accept the fact that after fertilization has taken place, a new human has come into being, is no longer a matter of taste an opinion. The human nature of the human being from conception to old age is not a metaphysical contention, it is plain experimental evidence."

Longwood Signs Agreement With German College

Longwood College has taken a first step toward developing "a global consciousness," one of the goals outlined by President Janet Greenwood in her inaugural address last April.

After sessions of exploration and discovery on both sides of the Atlantic, Longwood has entered into an official "agreement of partnership" with the Fachhochschule fuer Sozialarbeit und Sozialpaedagogik (Technical College for Social Work and Social Work Education) in West Berlin. It is the oldest school of social work in Europe.

The agreement, signed by President Greenwood and Hans-Jochen Brauns, Rektor of the F.H.S.S., states that the two institutions "having found that they share many educational goals, visions, and problems declare themselves to be partner institutions and undertake to seek appropriate means to develop and deepen their relationship."

The goals of the partnership include four "areas of mutual concern": international and intercultural understanding; curricular and program development; applications of technology in human-service delivery; and personal and professional development.

The F.H.S.S. has a faculty of approximately 50 professors and a student body drawn from Berlin, West Germany and throughout Europe. The students complete six semesters of classwork and a two-semester practicum. They must then pass a state examination to be certified in their profession.

Fields of specialization at the F.H.S.S. include social work, social research, social medicine, social work education and educational media, and social psychology and law.

Initial contacts leading to the partnership agreement were made last summer by Dr. Michael Haltzel, Longwood's vice president for academic affairs, during his stay in Hamburg and Berlin as a member of an American Young Leaders delegation invited by the Haus Rissen International Institute for Politics and Economics and the West German Foreign Office.

To identify potential partners among German institutions of higher learning, Dr. Haltzel spoke with the executive director of the Fulbright Commission in West Germany (Haltzel was a member of that commission from 1976-78) and with government officials he knew there. They suggested that he contact David Kramer, an American who is Prorektor (dean) of the F.H.S.S.

"Dr. Kramer and I met and decided that the partnership idea was worth pursuing," Dr. Haltzel said. "I learned that Dr. Kramer would be in the United States in August, so I invited him to come to Longwood for a two-day visit."

On the Longwood campus, Dr. Kramer talked with President Greenwood, Dr. Haltzel, George Stonikinis (Head of the Social Work department), Dr. Geoffrey Orth (Assistant Professor of German), and other faculty members and students.

"The whole thing just seemed to click," Stonikinis said. "Dr. Kramer is particularly interested in the way we are redefining the human services, and the ways that high technology can enhance the quality of living."

Since the partnership has become reality, Stonikinis has been invited to write an essay on Longwood's social work program and the use of computerized evaluation in social work education. His paper, along with articles by Dr. Kramer and contributors from Sweden, Norway, England, France, and India, will be included in a book on international problems in social work education.

Dr. Haltzel has been invited to lecture at the F.H.S.S. as soon as a mutually agreeable schedule can be worked out. Other faculty and staff exchanges are being considered.

Both Stonikinis and Dr. Orth are looking forward to implementing a student exchange program between the two colleges. "We hope to bring some F.H.S.S. students to Longwood to spend perhaps a semester," Orth said. "This will give them exposure to the social work profession in America, and they could assist our language studies as tutors or instructional assistants in the language labs."

Longwood students might perform the same functions and receive the same benefits by spending a semester at the F.H.S.S. "The presence of exchange students on the two campuses will enrich student diversity and help establish a cosmopolitan perspective," Stonikinis said.

A major goal in planning the student exchanges is "to make them affordable," Orth said.

The partnership also provides opportunities for "consultative exchanges" in a number of learning areas, as well as the exchange of information on professional social work practice and training, curriculum and instructional design approaches, and internship processes and models.

Longwood officials point out that West Germany and the U.S. share a number of societal problems and challenges, including unemployment, a growing geriatric population, relations among ethnic groups, and computer-based economic systems.

These similarities between the two countries "offer a unique opportunity for interchange."

The F.H.S.S. has a partnership arrangement with one other American university, the State University of New York at Stony Brook, and with universities in England, Northern Ireland, France, and Turkey.

Dr. Haltzel hopes that this first partnership between Longwood and a foreign university will "lead the way to similar arrangements with other universities in Europe." President Greenwood made some initial contacts with institutions in France and Spain during her visits there last month.

"It's all part of what we are trying to develop," Dr. Haltzel said, "and that's the internationalization of Longwood College."

Private Funds Emphasized

The need for private funds for faculty support was emphasized by Longwood President Janet Greenwood at a meeting November 19 of the Longwood College Foundation Board of Directors.

This support, she said, must include funds for faculty salaries, merit increases, and faculty development.

President Greenwood also stressed the need for student scholarships to "fill the gap" between rising costs and decreasing financial aid.

The third priority for the immediate future, she said, is "to continue to examine approaches" for the development of the Longwood Fine Arts Center. One of the possibilities under consideration is the conversion of the old Prince Edward County High School building, now owned by the Foundation, into a fine arts center.

Reports to the Foundation directors from Donald L. Lemish, Longwood's Vice President for Institutional Advancement, indicated that total private support to the college in fiscal year 1981-82 reached a record $670,655.

Included in this amount was more than $450,000 from the Nellie Ward Nance testamentary trust. Income from this trust will provide some 35 scholarships annually of approximately $1,200 each.

Alumni giving during the past fiscal year also set a new record, with gifts received from 27.4 percent of all alumni solicited.

"This is a great step forward in our five-year goal to reach 30 percent alumni participation in the annual fund," Lemish said. "In 1980-81, just over 20 percent of Longwood alumni made contributions. This past fiscal - year we solicited 11,559 alumni and received 3,168 contributions totaling $62,039.

"Equally encouraging was the better than 86 percent donor participation of all Longwood faculty and staff," Lemish said.

Non-alumni donors, including parents, contributed $65,298 in 1981-82. Ninety-one gifts were matched by corporations for a total of $5,175.

Total annual fund giving to Longwood in 1981-82 ($193,036) was up 13.2 percent, or $22,549 more than the previous fiscal year.

The Foundation directors approved a policy and guidelines on fund raising and guidelines on Foundation funds expenditures.

At a dinner Friday evening, six former directors were recognized for their service to the Longwood Foundation. Those honored were: Mrs. Raymond M. Brown, Jr. of Hampton; Frank B. Hurt of Ferrum; William H. King of Burkeville; George R. Bristol of Roanoke (former director and executive secretary); Andre Nielsen of Richmond; and James B. Bourne, Jr. of Sandston.

At 10:00 o'clock on November 10, a fifty-six hour name reading vigil began in a small chapel at the Washington Cathedral. It was a dreary Wednesday with cold, freezing rain and as the list of the dead or missing was read the Vietnam Memorial began filling with name seekers and veterans, their eyes roaming the wailing wall for friends, relatives or comrades.

It was in all respects a somber occasion. From the black monument sunk below the ground, like a vast marked grave, to the veterans, crippled and whole, scanning the desolate scene — some with a feeling of relief at final official recognition, others bitter at the political metaphor which seemed to emanate from Maya Ying Lin's design: a national scar — they fought for nothing.

UPI captured the moment perfectly in a black and white photograph of Fred Strother, a 1966 Marine in Vietnam. His amputated leg, two crutches and wide brimmed hat poised above the camera parallel to the wall and in the background a mother's bowed figure veiled in black, told better than any threnody could have, the cost of this war — death.

And that is how it should be. A simple moment — sans movement — that equates war with the only thing it can truly represent — death. Of course, there are those who would try to fix it, who would try to eradicate Vietnam, or America's attitude towards Vietnam — the 'Vietnam Syndrome,' as it were — from the quagmire of guilt and remorse over feelings that the veterans have died for nothing or worse, for an unjust cause — which they did. But this takes nothing away from the sacrifice the veterans made for what they perceived as duties. What does take away from the solemnity and final - honesty of the occasion are the attempts to distort the truth.

Mr. Reagan managed to pervert the ceremonies by one of his usual prevarications: "These are men who died for freedom just as surely as any men who fought for this country . . . The tragedy was they were asked to fight and die for a cause that their country was unwilling to win." And later at noon on the last of the four-day salute, U.S. F-4 jets and four combat helicopters flew over a startled audience and streamed onward above Indepencence Avenue — leaving a memorial statement in their vapor trails — might makes right.

The tragedy of Vietnam was not that it was an error in judgment, or a cause the U.S. felt unwilling to win. It was a political, social and moral evil for which the U.S. bears full responsibility. The 'Vietnam Syndrome, as political theorists like to refer to it, is the American people's realization that, yes, it was unjustifiable and, yes, no country, not even saintly U.S.A. has any right to impose its will on another sovereign nation — which is what happened in Vietnam.

Joseph Gatins served in Vietnam from May 1969 to April 1970. His candid statements concerning the monument and what was affirmed by it, should, I think, remain alive in our memories individually and as a nation.

— We affirmed that we went when called, while the majority of our contemporaries honored their consciences in defferent, escape or solemn protest.

— We affirmed that secret shame that we once felt furtively relieved when those other guys, not us, got shot full of holes.

— We affirmed too, that we had once grooved on the awesome firepower of a howitzer and fragmentation grenades and flechette rounds and rumbling B-52 raids that sowed gore countrywide.

— We affirmed that we had often cheated death by glorifying it — taken with defiant glee, thousands of snapshots of the - mangled corpses that we left behind in the tree lines, the rice paddies and bomb craters.

— We came here and poignantly affirmed the past.

It is not a matter of opening an old wound, but rather, cleansing it of sophistry and hypocrisy and letting the scar remain, unbandaged with lies and distortions. We can read in it our own failings and our need for reform.

Your Turn

As the elevator opens on the first floor, I see a young man passionately embracing the favors of a very generous young lady, finalizing the whole event with a rather lengthy meeting of the lips. "Excuse me," I reply. But why must I excuse myself? I immediately feel like an intruder, even a voyeur. After all, it was not by my choice that I became subjected to this public display of affection. PDA, as it is called, eradicates the position that some things are private. It maintains that this open display of affection and even sexual desire is a spectator's sport. I have no desire to view the sexual preferences between two people during lunch, before dinner, and after class. Besides, at 8 a.m. who has that kind of energy? Obviously some people possess this energy in mass quantities. And PDA at Longwood runs the gamut. It seems that any act, from a friendly embrace to hand-holding to a sweet peck on the cheek, would suffice within the confines of public view. This however is not the case in point. As Dr. Sprague reflects, "it used to be pigeons on the grass, alas! but now it's not pigeons anymore!" Whatever sexual activities that people decide to indulge in is their own business. I just wish they wouldn't make it mine too.

Mr. Joe Johnson:

As a fellow member of the "press," I find your recent article "Running Scared" a prime example of irresponsible journalism and unnecessary media hype. Not only were the events described old news, but by being concerned with one individual's account, you have presented a distorted view of overall campus behavior and attitudes.

In addition, no other campus club has been given this kind of extensive coverage — that in itself seems rather biased.

I don't know if your intention was to solve a problem or cause one, but I do hope the unwarranted controversy you have created compensates you in some manner for your lack of professionalism.

Thank goodness you are writing for a campus paper and, hopefully, will eventually learn to keep your editorials on the proper page.

Last week's front-page article, based on an interview with a male homosexual student, could be interpreted to mean that the administration is "100 percent supportive" of a gay movement on campus. Such an interpretation would be incorrect.

The student interviewed in the article had met earlier with President Greenwood, the Vice President for Student Affairs, and me. At the meeting, the student made one request. He wanted us to print an item in the "Campus Bulletin" announcing the date and time for a meeting of gay students. We indicated that we would print the item only if his name appeared with it, since that is the policy for all announcements. He did not want his name used; we therefore refused to carry the announcement.

He then asked about forming an organization, and we indicated that he had the legal right to do so, but that he had to follow the procedures, rules, and regulations that applied to the formation of any campus organization. We did not encourage him to start a group; we informed him of his legal right to do so. This should not be interpreted as "being supportive."

The article also quotes him as saying that such an organization "could pull in as many as 325 participants or about 13 percent of Longwood's population." When we met with the student, we specifically asked him how many homosexuals he thought were at Longwood. He replied that he knew of only three or four, but assumed there were more. We do not know how he arrived at the 325 figure a day later.

While there are many other disturbing aspects to the article, I especially wanted to clarify these misleading statements.

H. Donald Winkler
Director of Public Affairs
Longwood College

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Winkler did not read closely, apparently. Walt was quoted as saying the Administration was "100 percent supportive" in helping with the harrassment incidents, as indeed those involved were. The actual quote in reference to the Administrative support for the formation of L.D.G.S. is that those approached "seemed supportive of the idea." Mr. Winkler was not one of those approached; Walt went to him only in regards to the Campus Bulletin notice.

"Running Scared" has created quite a stir.

Some R.O.T.C. members felt slandered. To set the record straight, my suitemate reacted to something foreign to him as an individual; Other R.O.T.C. members were helpful in calming the situation down. A reasonable solution was reached, which has been honoured. The R.O.T.C. shouldn't be stereotyped by his initial reaction. All stereotyping is wrong.

Some get the impression that the dorm staff did nothing during the incidents. They did all they could to help, but the paperwork takes time so I went to the Administration as a stopgap measure.

The figures warrant explanation. About 10 percent of the U.S. population is Gay. Most male homosexuals are from white middle class families, as are most males on this campus. Longwood's Lesbian reputation is well known; a 1975 Playboy article ranked Longwood among the top ten Gay schools in the U.S. Therefore Longwood is probably higher than the national 10 percent average. No administrator I've spoken with has disputed the 13-16 per cent estimate, and some students and faculty say it should be higher. Hence the estimate of over 300 Gays here.

L.D.G.S. has been granted use of L.C. Box 1101, since most Gays don't want to be publicly known and a shared box may risk a member's privacy being violated. Virtually all of the Administrators I've spoken with have been helpful. If L.D.G.S. eventually tries to become official, the Administration won't block it like other colleges have; They believe in human rights here.

To Walt,

If you ever read the Bible, the source of the basic tenets of Christianity, you would know that homosexuality is a sin. What do you think Sodom and Gomorrah was all about? So don't use the grace of Jesus Christ as a rationalization for your sin but rather repent and ask to be of His fold.

"Do you not know that the wicked will not inherit the kingdom of God! Do not be deceived! Neither the sexually immoral nor idolators nor adulterers nor male prostitutes nor homosexual offenders nor thieves nor the greedy nor drunkards nor slanderers nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God." NEWS BRIEFS

As a consequence of the recent death of Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev, one would expect the party leaders to simply dip in to the clone pool and pick out another leader of exactly the same ideals, sort of like how Tom Landry picks quarterbacks. But Yuri Andropov, the new head of the country, is not quite the Brezhnev worshipper that would have been required to keep the country on its stagnant course.

Naturally, one can't expect the Soviet Union to change too much, but with Andropov will come a wave of new government officials eager to oust many old, ineffective ones who are only in power because Brezhnev was nice enough to allow them to stay. Indeed, the mere replacement of Brezhnev, who had been so sickly as to be nonfunctional half the time, with Andropov, who has proven himself to be a methodical and effective ruler as former chief of the K.G.B., will at least give other nations a valid representative to work with. It is expected that this change will take place throughout the Soviet Government in the next few years.

Your Turn

Virginia recently elected a new U.S. Senator. Now is the time to let Paul Trible know where Virginia stands on the nuclear freeze.

Senators Ted Kennedy and Mark Hatfield have co-sponsored a resolution calling for a nuclear freeze between the U.S. and the Soviet Union. The Kennedy-Hatfield resolution calls for a mutual freeze on nuclear weapons and their delivery systems (missiles, bombers, and submarines).

Under the agreement, neither side would be allowed to increase the size of its nuclear arsenal. Existing weapons or delivery systems could be replaced on a one to one basis. The testing of either would be banned outright.

Most Americans are concerned about verification of an arms control agreement. The Kennedy-Hatfield resolution would require verification through satellite reconnaissance and other intelligence means. Experts favoring the bill agree that any major violation by the Soviets would be detected. The resolution would also provide incentives for each side to reduce their biggest and most accurate weapons. These are land based missiles (ICBMs).

The Kennedy-Hatfield resolution is the best arms control bill to date. Adoption of this measure can reduce the chances of nuclear war ever becoming a reality. It is something every Virginian should be for.

Sincerely,
William Huskey

Bedford Scholarships Awarded

Longwood College students Mary Catherine Thornton, of Farmville, and Mary Ruth Shields, of Clifton Forge, have been awarded Virginia E. Bedford Art Scholarships.

The Virginia Bedford Scholarship Fund is a perpetual endowment established in 1980 as a memorial to Miss Bedford, a member of Longwood's Art faculty for 44 years and chairman of the department from 1942 1970. Income from the endowment provides two $450 scholarships each year.

Applicants for the Scholarships must be full-time art majors at Longwood, with at least 30 credit hours of work completed and a grade point average of 2.50 or higher. They must submit a portfolio of their work in a variety of media, a resume, and a statement of goals. Scholarship recipients are selected by the art department faculty.

Mrs. Thornton is a sophomore at Longwood and has twice won the college's "Artist of the Month" competition. She has taught glaze and underglaze techniques in ceramic ware and has lectured on craft techniques and applications for various age groups.

She also has designed a sign and logo for a local business, posters for Longwood's counseling services and the ornamentation for the cake served at President Janet Greenwood's inauguration.

She is the wife of Lowell B. Thornton, minister of the Farmville Church of Christ, and mother of two sons.

Ms. Shields is a senior working toward the bachelor of fine arts degree, with a concentration in drawing and extensive work in crafts. She is currently engaged in an honors project entitled "Felt: Its History and Potential as a Contemporary Art Medium." Upon successful completion of the project, she will be graduated in May 1983 with honors in art.

She is art editor of "Gyre," Longwood's literary-art magazine, and won the "Artist of the Month" competition last November. Her work has been exhibited in the Covington Sidewalk Art Show, the Heart of Virginia Festival, and the Historic Fincastle Art Show.

After graduation from Longwood, Ms. Shields hopes to study crafts further in graduate school or as an apprentice. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace C. Shields, of Clifton Forge.

Lancers Win McDonalds Classic

Led by tournament MVP Joe Remar (ELIZABETH, NJ), Longwood's men's basketball team defeated Clarion State 71-63 Friday and Mansfield State 70-65 Saturday to win the McDonald's Classic title in Mansfield, Pennsylvania.

Remar, who scored 27 points in the title game and helped Longwood come from behind, has now scored 1,053 points in his four-year career, making the 6-1 senior the top Lancer point producer of all time. Remar surpassed All-American Kenny Ford's three-year total of 1,040 with his performance Saturday night.

The 2-0 Lancers have no time to celebrate their tournament title. Coming up Tuesday night is a contest with highly regarded Virginia Union in Richmond. The Panthers have been ranked among the top small college teams in the country in pre-season and boast All-American candidate Charles Oakley, a 6-8 sophomore.

Tuesday's contest, slated for an 8:00 start, will be broadcast on WFLO-FM (95.7) with the broadcast slated to begin at 7:45 with a pre-game show.

Friday night the Lancers will return to the friendly confines of Lancer Hall for their first home game of the 1982-83 season. Hawthorne College (New Hampshire), an NAIA member, will furnish the opposition. The Lancers have a 17-2 record at home over the last two seasons. Students (college age and below) will be admitted free of charge when accompanied by an adult ticket-buyer. Tipoff for the contest is 8:00.

Longwood trailed Mansfield state 61-58 with 3:22 to go in Saturday's McDonald's Classic title game. Then Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey (CLARKSVILLE), Ron Orr (ELIZABETH, NJ) and Remar took over.

After Kersey and Orr scored inside to put Longwood on top 62-61, Remar canned six of six free throw attempts in the final 1:22 to ice the triumph for Longwood. Three times Remar went to the line with one-and-one attempts and three times he converted both ends.

In a Remar-kable performance, the senior guard scored 27 points, hitting 10 of 18 shots from the floor and seven of 10 at the line. He added four assists and four steals for good measure. The performance netted Longwood's all-time leading scorer the MVP trophy for the tournament and a spot on the all-tournament team.

Joining Remar on the all-tourney squad were Kersey who had 19 rebounds and 38 points in the two games.

Also contributing to the victory was guard Mike Testa (DAMASCUS, MD) who had a key steal to set up Remar's second one-and-one attempt. Testa had eight steals in the two games. Longwood's assist leader in the tournament was surprisingly 6-7 forward John Weber (PRINCE FREDERICK, MD) who handed out 11 assists in the tournament.

Next week the Lancers will face another tough slate of games with a date at Division I VMI Tuesday, a home contest with Division III power Otterbein Thursday (December 2) and another home tilt with always tough Radford Saturday (December 4).

Wrestlers Split Two

The Lancer grapplers defeated Newport News Apprentice 34-14 and lost to VMI 38-8 Wednesday at Lancer Hall to give the team a 1-1 record. Although the Lancers suffered a big loss to a tough Keydet squad, Coach Steve Nelson was not disappointed with the performance. "I was fairly pleased with our performance, but we still need to be more aggressive explained Nelson. "We need someone to step forward and wrestle aggressively and fire the team up."

Individually, Longwood had some shining performances by senior Joe Bass (Alexandria), junior David Dodd (Highland Springs) and sophomore Dana Dunlap (Fairfax). Bass, who wrestled at the 180 class, pinned his first opponent from Newport News in 54 seconds and won a 14-2 decision over Tomas Amador of VMI. Dodd, who won Longwood's other match against VMI, defeated his Keydet opponent 6-2 in the 161 weight class. Dunlap, who wrestled in the 170 weight class, was injured in his pin against Newport News, but still managed a gallant performance in a 6-2 loss to VMI.

4 Lancers On All-Visa Teams

Four Longwood booters, goalkeeper Brian Sprinkle (Olney, MD), midfielder Bill Foster (Newport News), back Darryl Case (Cincinnati, OH) and forward Tim Brennan (North Hills, PA) have been named to the 1982 ALL-VISA soccer team.

Leading vote-getter on the team was Brennan who scored 14 goals to lead Longwood to its finest season in history. Brennan has 31 career goals.

Sprinkle limited Longwood foes to one goal per game, giving up just 15 goals in 15 games. The sophomore standout also had six shutouts for the season, a school record for both career and season. He had nine saves in the 1-0 state championship win over Lynchburg.

Foster, a junior, had four assists and one goal for the Lancers but was especially effective with ball control in the midfield area. Case had four goals for Longwood and was a standout on defense. All four Lancer booters will be back next season.

Holmes Sparks Comeback Win

Sophomore Florence Holmes (King George) scored eight of her team-high nine points in a six-minute stretch at the beginning of the second half, sparking Longwood's women's basketball team to a come-from-behind 50-41 victory over Maryland Eastern Shore Saturday afternoon.

Trailing 26-21 at halftime, Longwood came out pressing in the second half. Forcing turnover after turnover, the Lady Lancers went on a 15-2 tear, taking a 36-28 lead. The visiting Lady Hawks were never able to recover.

Coach Jane Miller's team will take its 1-0 record into the Thanksgiving holidays. The Lady Lancers don't play again until Tuesday, November 30, when they visit Christopher-Newport. Longwood's next home tilt will be December 10 when Lynchburg visits.

While Holmes, a 5-9 sophomore who averaged 13.3 a year ago, got most of her points at the crucial time, Longwood had balanced scoring from several players in its season opener. Senior center Karen Savarese (Trumbull, Ct.) contributed eight points, forward Bev Powell (Silver Spring, Md.) had seven and Mariana Johnson (Farmville) and Barbara DeGraff (Stanhope, N.J.) had six points each.

Johnson added 10 rebounds, Holmes nine and DeGraff seven. Junior guard Robin Powell (Silver Spring, Md.) played well with five steals, three assists and two blocks in addition to four points. Longwood played without forward Valerie Turner (Richmond) who was injured.

"Our pressure in the second half made the difference," said Coach Miller. "Pressure! That's our game. When we began to double team and trap that's when we got going. I thought Karen (Savarese) played well despite her sprained ankle."

Miller also praised Johnson for her rebounding and defense and Robin Powell for her leadership from the point.

Miller also cited a group of players who came off the bench in the first half and got Longwood back into the game.

The Lady Lancers had fallen behind 22-12 when Miller replaced her starting five. Cindy Eckel (S. Plainfield, N.J.) came in and scored three points, DeGraff had a bucket inside, guard Amy Cook (Verona) hit from outside and Bev Powell canned a follow-shot as Longwood went on a 9-2 spurt that pulled them within 24-21.

Then in the second half the Lady Lancer pressure defense decided the issue.

Cheering

By TAMI WHITLEY

The Longwood Cheerleaders cheered at their first basketball game of the season last Saturday for the women's team. They performed four routines on the court, each followed by a group stunt. They were all really pleased with the crowd's response, and hope to see even more participation at their next home game when the men's basketball team plays Otterbein on Thursday, Dec. 2, at 8:00.

Case Player Of Week

Longwood junior Darryl Case (Cincinnati, OH) turned in one of the top defensive performances of his career in the state finals Sunday despite playing with a fractured toe. Case's play has netted him Longwood College Player of the Week honors for the period November 12-19.

A Division II All-American last season, Case was a major factor in Longwood's ringing up a 15-4-1 record and winning the state title in a thrilling 1-0 finale over Lynchburg Sunday. Though in obvious pain, Case played an outstanding game against the Hornets.

A graduate of Madeira High School in Cincinnati, Darryl is majoring in business administration. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Case

Wegener Speaks At Wygal

By NANCY PASCHALL

Longwood was honored by the presence of Ambassador Henning Wegener of the Federal Republic of Germany (West Germany) who spoke on "A European Perspective of Disarmament" December 1 at 8 p.m. in the Wygal recital hall.

The ambassador, a distinguished looking man, who spoke fluently and clearly, opened with the European perspective on disarmament saying that it is a vital subject that must be dealt with, yet a vastly complicated one. A well-made point was revealed when he said each country views the world differently. We in the United States see the world from an island point of view, and view Europe as separate from Asia, when in fact, it is not. This cannot help but influence the perspective each country has.

As conscious as America is of the U.S.S.R., we here cannot feel the same intensity of threat as Eurasia does, simply due to the proximity of the Soviet bloc to the Eurasian countries. As a spokesman for the FRG, he feels that his country can no longer hide under the nuclear umbrella of protection provided by the United States and other NATO-pact countries.

Ambassador Wegener suggested a three-pronged view of a security relationship. The first step is that of a credible defense system. We must have the means to defend ourselves and they must pose a realistic threat to any opposing nation. Secondly, we must continue to negotiate toward disarmament, and, thirdly, we must all cooperate.

"Disarmament, what it is all about, is lowering the level of nuclear weapons with a balance between the two military blocs." Currently, embalance in the relationships is being perpetuated by both blocs. What is needed is a forceful arms policy with the aim of balance, both global and regional. Any disarmament policy must emenate from the most powerful country."

Wegener, a representative to the Committee on Disarmament, a committee of the U.N., headquartered in Geneva, said that they had set as their goal world peace, which is, in fact, in their charter. Only through disarmament can world peace be attained. The United Nations is not the body in which treaties concerning the actual dismantling should take precedent; instead, agreements within the United Nations should only set a basis for further discussions between individual nations

In Geneva at this time there are several proposals being worked on in an area comparable to nuclear disarmament, that of chemical bans. There is work being done in the area of a total ban on chemical weapons. This is of particular concern now considering the Soviets' use of chemical warfare in Afghanistan, Cambodia and Laos. A similar proposal is that of a ban on production and storage of chemical weapons and also a proposal banning those chemicals which have the potential to change the environment. He then left the topic of chemical warfare and began talking of the technical obstacles facing disarmament.

The first problem lies in the validity and reliability of data collection. Even with the best approximations, we never know precisely which side has what or in what quantity.

Wegener attributed this primarily to the U.S.S.R.'s refusal to provide information. This, in Wegener's eyes, is primarily due to their own fear and "because of the inborn secretive urges which dictatorships share." "Surveillance also provides a problem. How are we to know what has been reduced, and by how much if we don't know how many they had in the first place." How, in other words, do we determine when a balance has been reached?

He then mentioned that the United States now has a proposal in front of the Geneva Conference calling for the reduction of warheads and launchers.

Returning to technical obstacles, which he spoke extensivley on, he said we need on-site inspectors, in other words, inspectors to determine whether factories are or are not producing nuclear arms. He believes satellites to be effective only in some circumstances, and worthless in others, such as the detection of chemicals. "Without such inspectors, who knows?" Wegener seems to feel it would not be fair to the parties under the treaty for them to have to be inspected while others were not required to be so. He then mentioned two prohibitors of peace: Dual ammunitions (those which can either be armed conventionally or nuclearly), and the domain of outer space.

Another, similar, topic area he discussed was that of science technology. A valid point was that science moves so fast that the international negotiations are always behind. Wegener also believes there is not enough to the international community as a whole.

He says the outer space is of prime concern, a point he had mentioned earlier. "The international community may find a new domain beyond repair because of the time lag versus scientific progress."

Wegener then branched out again and began to speak on the technicality of the whole disarmament process. He said, "The maze of technological information is highly complex and causes much confusion in the political mind. The most important problem is public opinion in the free countries concerning disarmament negotiations tend to separate themselves from the masses."

Installment Reading At Longwood

By LAURIE MITCHELL

Anyone who has passed through the Rotunda on his or her way to classes or to the dining hall may have noticed a glass case display. In Lancaster Library, directly across from the circulation desk on the main floor are two displays. In the former display are facsimiles of 19th century books written by Charles Dickens. In the latter displays are the original copies of books by Dickens and William Makepiece Thackeray.

During the 19th century, books were written in parts called installments, usually with twenty installments making a complete book. Each installment was about thirty-two pages in length with two full page advertisements in the front of the book. The cover designs and illustrations were used to suggest the nature of the story printed within. By writing a book in this way, the reader's interest was held longer because he or she would want to find out what was to happen and the only way to find out was to wait until the next installment was published.

This concept of reading has come to Longwood College through the work of Dr. Michael Lund, Assistant Professor of English. The displayed books were obtained through the Longwood Foundation and the combined efforts of Dr. Don Lemish, Vice President for Institutional Advancement and Dr. Lund. About six years ago Dr. Lund began trying to recreate this 19th century way of reading books. "Every year that I've used this approach, the benefits have increased. The students really seem to enjoy reading more." He also commented that students often get turned off when they have an assignment to read an entire book by the next class period. The way this approach is used in the classroom is a certain number of pages in a novel are assigned and the students should not proceed past this point until they are instructed. At the next class meeting, the assigned portion is discussed and the next installment is given.

No Fear and Loathing on The Campaign Trail

By MIKE LYNCH

What if there was an election and nobody won? (I've heard that somewhere before.) That was not the case at Longwood this year, but one thing is for certain. Nobody else won. Out of the 20 posts offered to candidates for last weeks JGA Major-Minor elections, only two (IAA Chairman and Campus Life Chairman) were not taken unopposed. Equally obysmal is the voter total of 234 or slightly less than ten percent of the student body. And out of those faithful, even fewer knew what was going on as some showed by making mistaken on their ballots.

Election officials stated that some people, when voting for the two opposed offices, checked both names and even more ignored introduction on the Honor Board Senators positions allowing the person to check a space only if he is a member of the class of the candidate. Some people asked what the difference was between a major and minor office. Many observed the candidates positions posted at the polling spot and merely walked away.

The number one cause of both problems as usual, is general apathy. The students don't know about the S.G.A. and they do not really care to know. Apathy has been quite the vogue lately at Longwood but nowhere is it more apparent then in election results. Lisa Swackhammer, chairperson of this years election committee, said that "the last two major-minors, about the top four or five positions went unopposed, or there were just two people running."

"It just seems like a waste of time" said one non-voter. "I don't see the results of what they do and I didn't really know any of them". This is not just an isolated example of student opinions. It is practically the norm. People either don't know who the candidates are or they believe that they are all of the same types; brownnoses, people who snuggle up to the administration and ultimately refuse to go against them.

But this year the accusations have become even uglier than that, to a situation in which three candidates were allowed to submit petitions for office after the November 23rd deadline. What ensued was typical Longwood. One of the candidates, Derick Wolfe, originally wanted to run for president, but was informed that since his petition was turned in late, he could only run for an uncontested position. He chose Residence Hall Life Chairman and won it unopposed. Tom Cumber was content to run for an uncontested position from the start and chose Campus Life Chairman, the only uncontested

After 8 Years - Still On Guard

By LIZ D'SURNEY

"I was being robbed. The tables turned and I beat up a guy. I hit him with a two by four. He died from my blows an hour and a half later."

This rather nonchallant statement came from a 28 year old man presently on parole for the next 6 months. Just recently released from the State Penitentiary, he is currently employed at Longwood College.

"I served time for 8 years. Right now I'm on mandatory parole for the next 6 months. During this time I'm required to check in with my parole officer once a month," he said. Shifting in his chair he continues, "I also have traveling restrictions. There are only 5 counties I can enter into freely. I can't go outside of any of them without special permission."

Speaking graphically of life in the pen, this young man talks freely of the time he served. "The scenery it (the pen) puts out for people is deceiving. The lifestyle is totally different than what you see. We're in a forced situation...forced to live with all types of people... from 14-40 years of age, junkies, handicapped...everyone from different marks of life are put together...from the naive country boy to the city slicker."

According to this parolee, weapons are common among prisoners, especially knives. A man can earn one of two types of respect for himself. This depends on whether he fights with a weapon or just with his hands physically. Rubbing his upper lip he pauses, then says, "People I didn't like, I stayed out of their way and they stayed out of mine. If not, the result may be physical violence. If you were caught, you were put into what they call isolation. We call it jail. The only things they give you are a Bible and legal material."

Recalling one particular incident that occurred between him and another inmate, the man described it intensely. "It was payday and we were waiting in line for canteen tickets. With my smoking habit I make sure I have plenty of cigarettes. That day I had 3 or 4 left. I don't mine giving one away if I have one, but then I had just enough to get me through. This guy asked me for one and I turned him down. He got mad and I ignored him and walked off." He fiddles with the patch on his jeans, and pauses, then continues. "Later I was taking a shower and the same guy comes in there and starts getting nasty. He lunges forward like he is going to do something. I slip out of my flip flops, you need them to keep the fungus from eating your feet up, then sure enough, he hit me. I caught him sitting down and grabbed a hand full of hair and started hitting his head against the porcelin sink. When his knees started buckling, I let him go but he was not bleeding."

He becomes more serious explaining, "When you walk away from someone in there, you've got to be careful how you do it. Someone could pull a shank out on you that is two feet long. These things never get reported. Some are too scared to say anything, it's their way of life to keep their mouth shut...others see it and don't say anything. I tend to keep my mouth shut. That's the reason I came out of there alive."

While in the pen, the parolee went to college for a year and a half and studied sociology and psychology and also became certified as a heavy equipment operator. He got married in the pen to a woman he had known for a while. Plans to further his education and become a well-rounded mechanic and open a business are in the future.

An interest in working with juveniles is another area he would like to pursue. He said, "I would like to see if I can't help some kid from making the same mistake I made. I want to go where it will do the most good." He takes a drink then continues, "People with textbook know how may be vastly superior to me education wise, but there's one thing I can do that they can't. I can make the child understand...I've been there...I know what's going through his head."

He pulls out his wallet and withdraws a yellowed newspaper article. He holds it saying, "This is me, I sure have changed. My main objective to life is to associate with only a few of the people I know. For the most part, I want to be left alone and leave well enough alone. I want to enjoy being with my wife and raising a family. I could care less what Reagan does or any other politician. I've done my time and paid my debt."

Expectations, Thackeray's Vanity Fair, Tolstoy's War and Peace, Conrad's Lord Jim, etc. have been presented to Longwood College students in this 19th century manner. Longwood College's approach to teaching these classics have raised enthusiastic responses from teachers and scholars at other institutions.

Dr. Lund is very excited about the project and he says the books obtained so far are the first steps in starting a collection of 19th century novels. In years to come hopefully the college will be financially able to purchase more of the original copies of these classics.

One Act Directors Reviewed

By LINDA SAUVE

The series of six one acts presented Dec. 1-4 were an experiment in educational theater which yielded successful results. The one acts were directed by students as projects for the Department's directing class. All of the plays were well directed with one exception. In "Picnic in the Battle Field" the actors appeared to be struggling too much with the show itself and this was the result of an obvious lack in their direction. The director did not adequately define the characters for the actors and left them grasping at straws, which consequently resulted in an undeveloped and unbelievable performance.

"The Typists", "The Lover" and "Miss Doris Anderson" all had good actors which complimented their directors. The supporting, as well as the leading roles, were exceptional. "Cecile" and "Visitor From Forest Hills" were well directed but there seemed, at times, to be something missing on stage. The ability was there but it was not fully exercised — most of the characters needed more development.

The difficulties in presenting three separate shows in a two and a half hour period are immense. There is a separate set and different lighting involved with each show. The set used in the productions was simple and basic black which each director used to create his own scene. The correct props were set and replaced for each one act with speed and accuracy. The lighting was also standard for each show. But in "Miss Doris Anderson" its creative use added an atmosphere that complimented this one act.

Directing is an involved and often thankless job.

As an actor one is only responsible for his character as directors, these students, took the responsibility of all actors, set lighting, props, costumes, in short the show. The educational value of such a job is evident, the entertainment value, in this case was equal. Student directors take a bow.

Liquor to the Lips

Reported by Leigh Ann Lilly
Written by Paul Kennedy

In a move certain to stimulate this town's economy, a majority of Farmville voters voted yes on the Nov. 2 public referendum, allowing the sale of liquor by the drink in restaurants meeting local ordinances.

Neither the bevy of rules governing liquor sale, nor the heavy license fee have discouraged the owners of several local establishments from applying for liquor licenses.

The Steer hopes to begin selling mixed drinks by Dec. 19. The Pioneer Inn, The Royal Garden, Cedar Brook, and Perini's have also applied, although Mr. Perini concedes "the chances are slim" he'll qualify. The Red Lyon has not applied, nor has it any immediate plans to reopen.

Students returning from Christmas break should find life in Farmville somewhat more tolerable. Here's to you Farmville voters!

Black Students' View

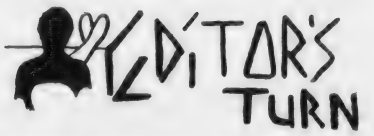
By DORA ANN DANIEL

Longwood College opened its doors to black students about thirteen years ago. Since then, many adjustments have been made by both black and white students alike. What is it like to be a black student at Longwood?

Sandra Hicks, a junior and President of the Afro American Student Alliance, the major black organization on Longwood's campus, says it isn't easy. "The only thing Longwood has to offer is an education. There's no social life for black students. I found the only way to cope is to get involved in as many activities as possible." Sandra, in addition to being president of the AASA, is a Longwood Ambassador, a Resident Assistant in Main Cunningham Dormitory and the Treasurer of the Student Member Section of the Junior Home Economics Association of Virginia. When asked if she thought Longwood was prejudiced, Sandra replied, "there still exists a great deal of prejudice at Longwood although not verbally expressed. As an R.A. I haven't had any real problems, just minor incidents."

Prejudice at Longwood has been a major issue since black students began attending the college. After talking with many students, feelings about prejudice at Longwood range from very positive to extremely negative. (Many students were reluctant to talk and most wished to remain anonymous).

Anita Randolph, a transfer student from Virginia Tech says, "When I first came to Longwood everyone talked about how prejudiced the school was. Actually, I don't find Longwood as prejudiced as Virginia Tech." Madeline Taylor, also a transfer from Duke University, doesn't find Longwood unbearable. "I haven't found the white students difficult to get along with at all, says Madeline. It's no different here than at any other predominately white school. However, it's easy to discern which whites are prejudiced and which aren't. Some of the white students here have never associated with the blacks here and don't intend to."



One black student, who wishes to remain anonymous, came to the defense of the supposedly prejudiced white student. "Yes there are white students on this campus who are prejudiced against blacks, but it's really not their fault. They learn the whole concept of bigotry from their parents. That's where the ignorance begins. It's sad that some parents instill these types of beliefs in their children."

A white Longwood student, who also wishes to remain anonymous, replies, "I don't care how many black students come to Longwood. I just think it's unfair that the administration should make so much fuss over them coming here and gives them special treatment, like the room over in Curry."

Sheryl Taylor, a third-year student, is Vice-President of the AASA. "I think that prejudice is very prevalent on this campus, says Sheryl. The whites try very hard to hide their feelings but it's evident in their actions. I think that some of the blacks on campus are just as prejudiced as the whites. This is very unhealthy. I really don't know how a person can live with himself knowing that the only reason he dislikes someone is because of the color of their skin."

Another black student who also wants anonymity, feels that Longwood isn't trying to keep it's black students. "I don't think the administration is fair to the black students financially. Most of us are here because of work-study or a loan or grant or something. Not all of us can play basketball. There are only a few of us who are lucky enough to have parents who can foot all or part of the bill. I was in the post office one day and I heard a white girl say, 'I only come to my mailbox on Wednesdays — that's when my Dad sends my allowance.' Some of us aren't fortunate to get an allowance every week worse, to even have a father. When the administration gets a bright idea to create a new fee like the Room Damage Deposit, where are some of us left?"

Another anonymous black student seemed to sum up the feelings of black students at Longwood. "We are not here to take over or to start trouble, the student says. We are here to get an education just like any white student. By choosing Longwood, we have simply come to the realization that it would be detrimental to us in the long run to isolate ourselves from whites by attending a predominately black school. This is a society made up mainly of white people and run by white people. We must learn to function in this society. Coming to Longwood is our way of making a start."

There is nothing like the threat of Nuclear Holocaust to bring folks together. People from all walks of life (students, bishops, ambassadors, alcoholics, senators, professors, to name a few) commune to discuss, with the appropriate attitude of moral vindication and intellectual insight this issue of the eighties. The chic sophisticate with an ear finely tuned to la vogue, dwells, with thoughtful nods, on the ultimate destruction of our dear sweet planet. Such comments as "We can destroy the world 30 times over, this is madness!" have become as cliche as moon unit's "Oh, gag me with a spoon."

Nationally, this is no doubt due to Reagan's untimely push to get the MX Missile through the Senate (in which he succeeded with a sweat wringing tie) and the accompanying media blitz. Locally, recent lectures by rather conservative nucleocrats at Longwood's campus such as Senator John Warner's or Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany to the U.N., Henning Wegener's have led to similar rampant discussions. Now, I wholeheartedly applaud such men of national and international distinction taking the time to come to Farmville, U.S.A. in an attempt to increase students' awareness on national and international perspectives concerning nuclear deterrence, disarmament and-or holocaust. But Longwood students have received a slightly distorted (and wholly conservative) point of view.

Both Warner and Wegener began their talks with an a priori premise — that there is a drastic imbalance between the nuclear arsenals of the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. This seemed peculiar, in light of a recent C.B.S. news report (granted not the most reliable source of information) which said that the current five year defense budget is approximately 1.6 trillion dollars. That amounts to a 48 per cent increase in defense spending over the past five years and once this is broken down to the grassroots level — $2,600 per American family. Rather odd, that we should spend over seven percent of our gross national product on defense and still trail the Soviets in nuclear armaments. So odd in fact that once one does a bit of research one finds it isn't true.

According to the Washington based center for Defense Information (an organization consisting of retired military officers acting as research analysts on U. S. defensive capabilities) there are 30,000 nuclear weapons belonging to the U.S., in total, and 20,000 belonging to the U.S.S.R. (Don't you feel safer already?)

For the sake of statistics let's break it down a bit. The U.S. currently has 5000 nuclear armed weapons on submarines, 3000 of which are just off the Soviet Union's coast. The Soviets have 1000 nuclear armed submarines and keep 100 off the U.S. coast. The U.S. has 400 jet propelled strategic bombers. The Soviets have only 140; 100 of which are propeller driven (i.e., substantially slower and more vulnerable). In fact, the only area the Soviets exceed the U.S. in nuclear ability is in I.C.B.M.'s (Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles), 1398 to the U.S.S.R. and 1052 to the U.S.A.

Perhaps this difference of 346 ICBM's (hardly a dent in the credible response strategy which Wegener alluded to, considering our sea and air superority) is what led Reagan to propose the perfect counter budget weapon — the MX missile or "Peacekeeper" (Johnny Carson put that label in its proper place with his glib "soon they'll rename napalm 'crazy foam'.")

Let us assume hypothetically, what Reagan would have us assume as fact — that the ICBM's are vulnerable to a first strike and that the United States must be certain that enough of its ICBM's will survive to strike a retaliating blow (remember we are assuming that we have neither an air nor sea nuclear arsenal with which to retaliate ad oblivion). Reagan contends that his 100 MX missiles, carrying 10 warheads each with an explosive yield of more than 30 times that of the bomb that destroyed Hiroshima, would, if deployed in a manner known as "dense pack," be defended from Soviet missiles by the Soviet missiles themselves. Supposedly, the first exploding Soviet missiles would create a nuclear hurricane which would "knock" the other incoming missiles off course, allowing the surviving MX missiles tucked safely in their canisters, to come out like knights in shining armor (96 tons worth) and strike with a retaliatory coup de grace. This theory is known in Cain and Abel tradition as "fratricide."

Let us swallow, for a second, the intellectual side of our nature and assume that this theory is plausible, and assume also that the Soviets could take no counter measures (such as beefing up the warheads or practice what is known as 'pin down' — that is exploding a sufficient volume of warheads above MX silos making it impossible for the mighty MX to get through). Let us also swallow the ethical side of our nature and not bother with the idea that such new 'fixed silos' are in violation of the SALT II treaty which the Soviet Union abides by, even though it was never ratified in the U.S. (silly idealism).

If we can assume all these points without gagging on their hypocritical moronities, there is still one question which remains. Why should we deploy a new round of missiles, costing some 300 million dollars apiece? If ICBM vulnerability is our main concern (and so the jellybean cowboy would have us believe) why not base our prodigious Minute Men Arsenal in dense pack formation instead; and then hope for the best. They would be just as vulnerable or invulnerable as the MX in their Cheyenne wheat field silos and quite a savings for the U.S. defense budget to boot.

There is a fundamental fallacy in logic or motive here. And after reviewing Reagan's statements concerning Soviet superiority (not the content of such statements — which at best leads to a jaded attitude of wondering when, exactly, our President does tell the truth) and media hype concerning this issue, one can trace the broad outlines of a spectre that retired Rear Admiral La Rocque put into words — the President wants to "fight successfully a nuclear war." But before being hung to dry as impertinent radicals let's qualify that statement — the President (hopefully) wants to give the appearance of being ready and able to fight successfully a nuclear war. And for that motive the MX missile is highly qualified — a first strike weapon, par excellence, to put the squeeze on the Russian bear even tighter.

Reagan is sincere when he maintains he needs to 'take' the MX to the Geneva disarmament conference. Such a weapon (which will surely be seen by the Soviets as offensive) is his "bargaining" chip, an ace in spades for the negotiation tables. But bluffing (again, hopefully) the Soviets with Moscow directed missiles into a disarmament agreement which may or may not be fair (my opinion is Reagan will settle for nothing less than nuclear superiority, which he has proven in his defense policy thus far) could well be prodding a sleeping bear. One has to wonder if the hands were switched and the Soviets attempted such a trump — would we not grasp for an ace of our own and up the "anti" accordingly? It is ludicrous to think that the U.S.S.R. will swallow all nationalistic pride and be blackmailed as it were, at the negotiation tables. The result of Reagan's (or Wegener's) Si Vis Pacem Para bellum — if you want peace prepare for war — attitude,may be an exponential escalation of the arms race.

If Reagan wants nuclear superiority he has it now without MX. If he wants bilateral disarmament on equal levels he should start behaving in a less bellicose manner and in a more statesmanlike one.

And if he wants a "successful" nuclear war, well . . . para bellum; para bellum.

Your Turn

Dr. Hyde?

At the close of this semester, I am beginning to have doubts about the educational value of some of the classes being taught at Longwood. As I understand it the main purpose of higher education is to prepare the students for a job in a working society. This, I assumed, would entail hard work and perserverance and I was sure even with these attributes, certain setbacks. But "to strive, to seek . . . etc . . ." I was in short ready for the worst. I was not ready, however, for Dr. Helms' American History class.

The first day of class I was shocked to hear one student ask if he really had a 75 per cent failure rate! No, he said and smiled only 65 per cent. But "to strive, to seek . . . etc."

I failed his first test with a 33 — a disaster. I took it in stride though and shrugged off the warnings of my friends who called him Dr. Hyde and said at one time he had been on probation. I studied about 15-17 hours for the second test and thought that this would assure at least a passing grade.

After the four weeks it took Dr. Helms to grade the tests he handed them back. When I went up to get my paper he laughed in my face with his usual "I got you" grin. I received a 0 on the paper because it was written in pencil. He suggested to one girl who had failed that she take valiums if she was nervous around him (which a lot of students are). I am not complaining as much about the grade (which I realize was due, in part, to my own carelessness), but about his malicious attitude towards the students. If he wishes to fail students on a nit-picking grading system that is his privilege, no matter how counter-productive it may be. What I do object to is his treating students as less than human. We pay nearly $3500 tuition a year to have the privilege to grow and learn in environment conducive to education. Dr. Helms, I think, should become a part of that environment.

Casting Stones

In reference to Mrs. Boogan's letter I wish to make a few points. I found your version of Corinthians unrestfull. If all of those people are not going to heaven, it's going to be mighty lonely. I know St. Augustine won't be there (he had illigitimate children spread throughout the known world). I do not wish to judge for Jesus himself said Judge not that you shall not be judged. But since you choose to ignore this point, so will I. I venture to make the following assumptions. You seem to embody the true fundamentalist spirit (narrow minded, outspoken, self-righteous, hypocritical, etc.) If God had wanted us all to be programmed, I'm sure he could have done better than Jerry Falwell and Billy Graham. He wouldn't have bothered to let us reason for ourselves. Also if you must wield a Bible, at least use it in its true spirit. It is a guide not a chopping block. So fundamentalists of the world, line up with your swords and stones and let he who is without sin take the first slice at the rest of us.

David Gott

To Student Activities Committee,

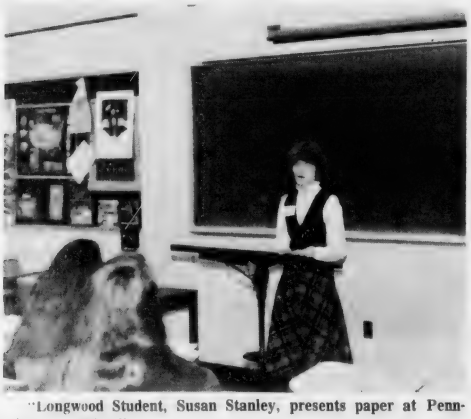
The Longwood Concert Band and Jazz Ensemble would like to thank SAC for their more than generous support. Funds received have gone to purchasing items which have been in need for some time and it is this kind of backing that enables these two groups to smoothly function. Once again, Thank you!

Sincerely,

Peter Tideman

EDITOR'S NOTE:

During the question and answer period to Henning Wegener's lecture, Dr. Haltzel made a sweeping reference to Cyrus Vance's "generous" disarmament proposals to the U.S.S.R. in 1977. I suggest that Carter's proposals (via Vance) were specifically political in nature and that he had no real hopes of the Soviet Union's accepting them. Carter's proposals were first, a complete departure from the Ford-Kissinger SALT position, which up to that time formed the base for negotiations. Second, it was hardly generous. The Soviets, if they would have accepted the proposals would have had to stop deploying all SS-16 missiles while the U.S. would have given up (at that time) the only on paper MX.



The Soviets would also have had to scrap half of their "heavy weight" SS-9 and SS-18 missiles, while the U.S. allotted itself the right to deep the debatably "non-strategic" Cruise missile. Both sides would have been limited to 550 missiles equipped with multiple warheads, which happens to be the exact number the U.S. had in its arsenal at that time.

Papers At Penn.

Ten students and two faculty from Longwood College participated in The Pennsylvania Sociological Society Annual Meeting held at Millersville State College, Millersville PA November 12 and 13, 1982. Four of the students, majors in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, submitted papers in the Student Paper Competition. Two of them, Robert G. Flippen and Susan Stanley, were among the finalists in that competition, and two, Beth Licari and Carla Dee Proffitt, were among the semi-finalists. The students' papers were the results of research required in their sociology or anthropology courses.

The Longwood students, and the titles of their papers are: Susan Stanley, "Handicapped Services and Student Volunteerism"; Robert Flippen, "Social Interaction at a Virginia Mineral Springs Resort"; Dee Proffitt, "Juvenile Delinquency through the Eyes of an Intern"; and Beth Licari, "The Integration of the Prince Edward County School System". In addition, Dr. Chet Ballard,

Federal Cut impact on Farmville

By GEREE LYELL

Dr. Chester Ballard, associate professor in Longwood's Sociology-Anthropology department, has recently been granted monies by the college's annual funding program to research the effects of federal budget cutbacks on the town of Farmville.

Dr. Ballard commented: "We had decided on a concentrated area (Farmville), because of our lack of manpower and because our objective was to do a 'community wide portrait' of how cutbacks affected all aspects of life."

The year-long project was started in August and has been worked on daily since. Assisting Dr. Ballard is senior, Keith Lucas, a business major, and Mrs. Myrna Ballard, also an instructor in the sociology dept. As the working researchers, Dr. Ballard and his assistants have also been aided by an advisory committee consisting of eight members of the area government and community.

"I feel that this research will be a helpful thing to all of the community," said Dr. Ballard. "They will come together because of the volunterrism involved in the research interviewing. I feel the reaction of the townspeople so far has been very favorable, they seem excited about someone piecing together both the positive and negative aspects of federal cutbacks."

The college executives are also happy because Dr. Ballard's project puts into action President Greenwood's plans to get the community more involved with the college. Greenwood feels that Longwood can be a resource for the community and is encouraging its involvement in many projects.

As for the actual research, it has been conducted in the form of interviews (about 100), with both Dr. Ballard and Keith Lucas doing the interviewing. Each specialized sector of the community will have several prominent people interviewed. Areas such as town government, industry, agriculture and education will be covered. Each of the 100 interviewees will receive a copy of the final project and it will also be sent to the other communities.

In late October, Dr. Ballard will be hosting a "Round Table" discussion of the project at the annual meeting of the Association for Humanist Sociology in Washington, D.C. He said, "I'm very proud and excited to be able to share my work with other professionals and hope that when fully completed, our project will truly be a success."

Longwood Supports Farmville

By KENT BOOTY

Longwood College accounts for nearly one-third of the Farmville community's total business volume, according to a student survey.

Longwood's students, faculty and staff contribute more than $18 million annually — roughly 31 percent of the business volume — to the local economy, the two-year study by students of economics professor Anthony B. Cristo indicates.

Known simply as the "Impact Study," it contains findings that are the result of research by students in three of Dr. Cristo's classes. The study was recently printed in the form of a 48-page booklet.

"I think the students were surprised by the results, but I wasn't surprised very much," Dr. Cristo said. "I knew the impact (of Longwood on the community) would be that large. The students were amazed. They had no idea the impact would be that much."

The idea for such a study was first discussed in March 1979 during an Economic Seminar class taught by Dr. Cristo. After receiving approval by the administration and funding from the Longwood College Foundation (to cover the preparation and mailing of questionnaires), the professor and his students began distributing surveys that September.

The surveys were distributed to students, faculty and staff. Originally, they also were distributed to businesses, but this phase had to be dropped since merchants had difficulty in determining what portion of their income was directly attributable to Longwood. The survey-takers found that the information could be obtained through other means.

The original survey had to be revised, Dr. Cristo said, to ensure more accurate data.

"The first year was trial and error; the second year was the finished product," he noted. "We didn't get exactly what we wanted in the first survey, so we narrowed the brackets. It was much easier to see the results in the second survey."

The students had some outside help. Dr. Kuldeep Turna, another economics professor, developed a computer program to aid in compiling the data. Robert Hazlewood, Farmville town treasurer, and the Piedmont Planning Commission also provided assistance.

The study details the College's significant impact, both economic and non-economic, on the Farmville community. Among its findings are:

— Longwood accounts for $3 million of the total business property in the community.

— College-related bank deposits account for over $1.4 million annually.

— Longwood contributed approximately $1.3 million to the revenues of the town of Farmville and Prince Edward County.

— It is estimated that 927 jobs — approximately one-third of all jobs in Farmville and vicinity — are directly attributable to Longwood.

"The non-economic impact of Longwood on the community is equally significant," Dr. Cristo said. "We found that a lot of students, faculty and staff visit Holly Manor nursing home, give blood, work at the polls on election day, and so on. I was amazed at what the students do; their activities make the community richer."

Twenty students, all of whom have since graduated, took part in the study. The first student chairman, David Wall, was graduated in 1980; the second, Mark Gagnon, in 1981; and the third, Dallas Bradbury, this year. "I had to appoint chairmen as they graduated," he said.

The class that originated the study also developed the market basket survey, which is a monthly survey of basic items in local grocery stores. One of four market basket surveys in Virginia, it is the only one conducted by students.

About 300 copies of the Impact Study will be distributed to major colleges and universities in the Southeast, Dr. Cristo said. Copies will also be distributed to members of the Board of Visitors, the Longwood College Foundation and Longwood's Lancaster Library.

"We're going to keep checks on the economic impact," predicted Dr. Cristo. "In three to five years, we'll look at the growth or decline of Longwood and its impact on Farmville. If I'm still here, I'll certainly take part in another survey."

Though the student survey-takers are gone, they haven't forgotten about their work. "The students are anxious to get a copy," Dr. Cristo said. "Their interest in this project is undying."

Renaissance Dinner

"Pass the salt, please," asked the young girl sitting in the dining hall. The gentleman beside her held the salt beyond her reach and looked at her expectantly. The girl was puzzled for a moment, then remembered. She was not sitting in Longwood's D-hall; instead she was a part of a huge feast during a much earlier century. In order for her to receive the sodium chloride to sprinkle on her food, she must first kiss the male who offers it.

This is one of many medievil customs brought back to life this past weekend in Blackwell Dining Hall as the Department of Music presented the annual Renaissance Christmas Dinner. The members of the audience enjoyed an evening of good food and good fun. The Camerata Singers, donned in costumes of the period being represented, performed many selections from the 16th and 17th centuries in the highly decorated Dining Hall.

The Hall was filled with the beautiful colors of the costumes, greenery, table settings, and burning candles. The warmth of the season filled the Hall, bringing smiles, laughs, spontaneous, applause and standing ovations. The warmth in the room came from a combination of beautiful sound of singing, the savory smell of well prepared food and the courteous hosts and servers.

election day he found out that the position actually was contested. David Detimore had also applied late and chose to run for Campus Life Chairman, also which he won.

And now to interpret the questions that come out of all this. Why, if David Detimore was allowed to run for a contested post, (Campus Life Against Tom Cumber) was Derick Wolfe, not allowed to run for contested post (President against Trica Boyle)? Or conversely, why, if Derick Wolfe and Tom Cumber were allowed to run only for - uncontested seats was David Detimore allowed to run for a contested one? And just who did turn in his petition first? Fetimore or Cumber?

So after the commercial break of as-the SHA turns, we find that Lisa Swackhammer, Chairman of the Election Committee, has a lot of nasty questions to answer. Now Lisa is easily the hardest working member of the SGA and she was kind enough to write an office statement to the Rotunda, attempting to explain the situation. She stated that "the SGA felt that the open position should be filled if possible and the others left as is. In short, if you suddenly found yourself with one too many thoughtless deadline missers as Lisa did, would you run him against one of the thoughtful deadline makers or another thoughtless deadline misser.

It would seem that Cumber really has no cause to argue and he was not bitter about that aspect of the election. "That doesn't bother me because I came in late too". But one would think that while the election committee apparently has done no wrong, they would have at least told Cumber that he had some competition.

The big problem is what about next year. The general opinion of complaintants this year is that publicity was definitely lacking. Both Cumber and Wolfe partially blamed this fact for their failure to turn in their petitions on time. "I didn't know what dates the petitions were due because that was so obscure itself," stated Wolfe. Conflicting accounts in The Rotunda seem to have led them astray as well as the lack of other publicity. "I'm an R.A. and usually I would get some kind of flyer to post in my dorm. But I received no flyers in the mail so I didn't know when the petitions were supposed to be in but I guess they don't have to put up flyers

Student Thanks

I wish to take this opportunity to thank the faculty and students of Longwood for making my semester here as a transfer student, a most rewarding experience. This fall I was most proud to represent the college as a finalist at the Pennsylvania Sociological Conference and to pursue my life's ambition in the field of historical archeology. Special thanks go to: the faculty and staff of the Department of Sociology and Authropology, for their patience and tolerance; Dr. James William Jordan, for his guidance and inspiration during my archeological internship; Cindy Corell, for her in-depth coverage of my project at Hampden-Sydney; Donna Dix, for chauffeuring me and my workers to and from the site after I was declared "unauthorized" and the twenty-two student volunteers who experienced the drudgery and excitement of archeological fieldwork.

It is with a heavy heart that I leave my hometown and Longwood to return to the anonymity of Washington, D.C. to complete my undergraduate career at George Washington University. I will, however, take with me, memories that I shall always cherish. Thank you.

Bob Flippen

To the Student Body:

Thanksgiving Day is over for this year, but it is my belief that gratefulness is never out of date.

For two and a half hours each Tuesday evening this fall it has been my delight to attend a class in "Creative Writing," instructor: Mr. Douglas I have enjoyed the times listening to, talking with and exchanging of ideas with the sixteen young adults in the class. Mr. Douglas has stretched our minds, whetted our imagination and led us into creating that that we never knew was in us.

The two ladies on the desk in the 'Rotunda', Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Ransom have invited me into their office and shared talking time with me each evening while I waited for my son to come from his class. For this special friendliness I am saying a special "thanks".

Ones impressions about a place are determined, to a great extent on the attitude of the people you come in contact with as well as the general atmosphere. I am offering 'thanks' to Longwood College for letting me, a senior citizen do what I like very much doing — trying to keep my mind alert.

If anyone wishes to learn to be mentally creative in a relaxed atmosphere, where a 'bag of tricks to the trade' are offered but not forced on you; sign-up for Mr. Douglas' "Creative Writing".

A grateful learner,
Mrs. Mary A. Carlos

Posipanko, Foster, Case Reap Post-Season Honors

Longwood soccer coach Rich Posipanko and two of his top booters, junior Darryl Case (CINCINNATI, OH) and Bill Foster (NEWPORT NEWS), reaped a bundle of post-season honors over the weekend.

Posipanko was named Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association "Coach of the Year" and Foster was named "Player of the Year" at the VISA post-season banquet Sunday afternoon in Farmville. In addition, Case and Foster have been named first team All-South in Division II.

Guiding Longwood to a 15-4-1 record and a state title this season, Posipanko has compiled a career record of 39-25-5 in his four years at Longwood while building a winning program from the ground up. He is the first Lancer soccer coach to be so honored.

All-VISA this year and last, Foster was a co-captain and leader from his midfield position for the Lancers. Posipanko and Foster were chosen as coach and player of the year by coaches from the 13 VISA schools.

Case, an All-American in Division II last season, is making his second appearance on the All-South team. He and Foster were picked by Division II coaches from an area which includes 12 states and the District of Columbia. Case was a standout defender from his back position for the state champion Lancers, and like Foster, was All-VISA the past two seasons.

This year's Division II All-American selections are expected to be announced soon.

Wegener Speaks

He then began to speak on an area he called "Time Sequences.": "Security is the end product of everything being solved simultaneously, but we are not able to negotiate all factors (i.e., nuclear, chemical and conventional) at the same time." Now, when speaking of disarmament, we actually mean specialized parts, ICBMs (intercontinental ballistic missiles) for example. We are now using the principle of graduality, that is, gradually dealing with each nuclear weapon type. This leads us to a problem, that is the interdependence of munitions. "When reductions are made in one area, the counting then increases numbers of non-regulation arms, causing only a shuffling of numbers."

He then began to speak on verification. "We must look into compliance (with treaty) or else we do a disservice to the disarmament cause. Suspicion is poison to disarmament." We should also, he feels, watch non-nuclear-ordained countries carefully.

Wegener spoke on the negotiations taking place now. Between the United States and the U.S.S.R. there is a proposal of a partial test ban of nuclear weapons. (There is already a non-atmosphereic test ban in effect?)There is currently no ban on sub-terraineal testing.

Again he spoke on chemical warfare, saying, "Chemicals used in warfare have legitimate civilian uses," which obviously presents a restriction problem. "For a comprehensive credible ban on chemical arms: all party countries must declare their stocks, allow inspectors, and a survey for the further non-production must be done."

Wegener then made a direct comment on our Cruise and Pershing missiles, saying, "Europe is against the Cruise and Pershing missiles, but they are necessary to match Soviet strength. We need higher public awareness so we can back our government's policies and thus give them credibility. We must take some steps to preserve our freedom."

A new topic arose out of those comments, and he then began to speak on preservation. "Preservation of values, our way of life, is the purpose of defense. If we allow our defenses to slip, we allow the opportunity for blackmail, and ultimately slavery by the Soviets."

Deterrence became his next topic of discussion.

Wegener believes that deterrence is the only method by which we can prevent war. Unfortunately nuclear weapons are, by their very nature, ambivalent as "tokens of life and preservers of peace. We must all be ready to stand for our freedom, but with the knowledge that the weapon we have is so terrible, no one will call the shots." Deterrence also acts as a means of preservation for those non-aligned, non-nuclear countries.

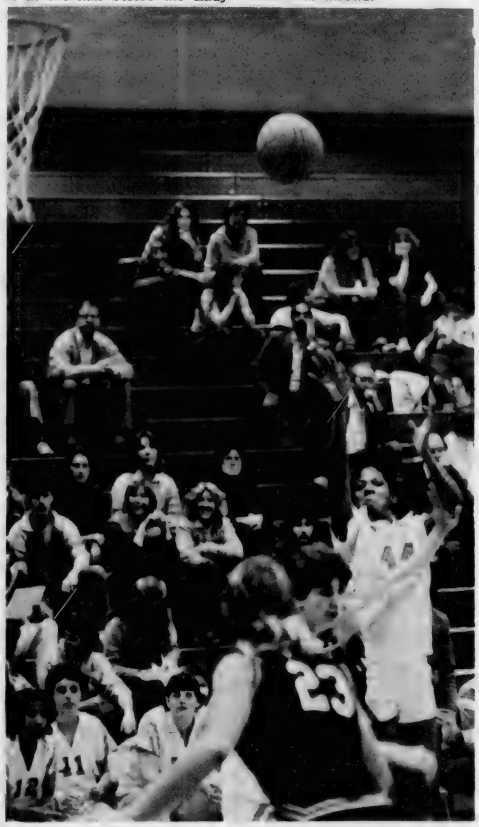
Wegener's final comment before accepting questions from the floor expressed his feeling that the idea of actually preventing war as opposed to gearing up for it as so many nations appear to be doing, seems to have been lost at the present time.

Road-Weary Lancers Return Home to Face Lynchburg

Stung by two losses in the Mason Cup Tournament at George Mason over the weekend, Longwood's women's basketball team returns home this week for a game with the Division III Lady Hornets from Lynchburg Friday night at 7:00 in Lancer Hall.

Longwood, now 1-3, will be making only its second home appearance of the season. The Lynchburg game will be a special night with members of the Farmville Junior Women's Club being guests of the athletic program and with music provided by the Longwood Jazz Ensemble. Tickets are $1.50 for adults and 50 cents for non-Longwood students (college age and under).

BEV POWELL NAMED ALL-TOURNAMENT



Despite lossees to Hampton Institute 69-49 Friday and 70-66 to Liberty Baptist in overtime Saturday, there was a bright spot for Longwood in the Mason Cup Tournament. Sophomore Bev. Powell (SILVER SPRING, MD) was chosen for the All-Tournament team after scoring 24 points and grabbing 13 rebounds in the two games.

Also playing well for Longwood in the tournament were Bev's sister Robin, who had 13 points and six assists against Liberty Baptist, Mariana Johnson (FARMVILLE) who had seven points and 11 rebounds against the Lady Flames and senior Cindy Eckel (S. PLAINFIELD, NJ) who had 14 points and nine rebounds against Hampton Institute.

Longwood was up 14-0 over Liberty Baptist early and led 33-24 at the half before the Lady Flames rallied behind 18-20 free throw shooting. The game was tied at 60-60 at the end of regulation before Liberty Baptist won in overtime.

B. Powell hit six of 11 from the floor and two of three from the line to lead the Lady Lancers with 14 points. Junior Kim McConnell (FREDERICK, MD) chipped in 11 points, hitting five of six free throws.

Longwood's Men's Basketball

The Longwood men's basketball team had some trouble executing against the Otterbein Cardinals last Thursday night managing a 67-63 victory, but were clearly dealing during the middle of both halves, Saturday night in an upset of Radford, 73-70.

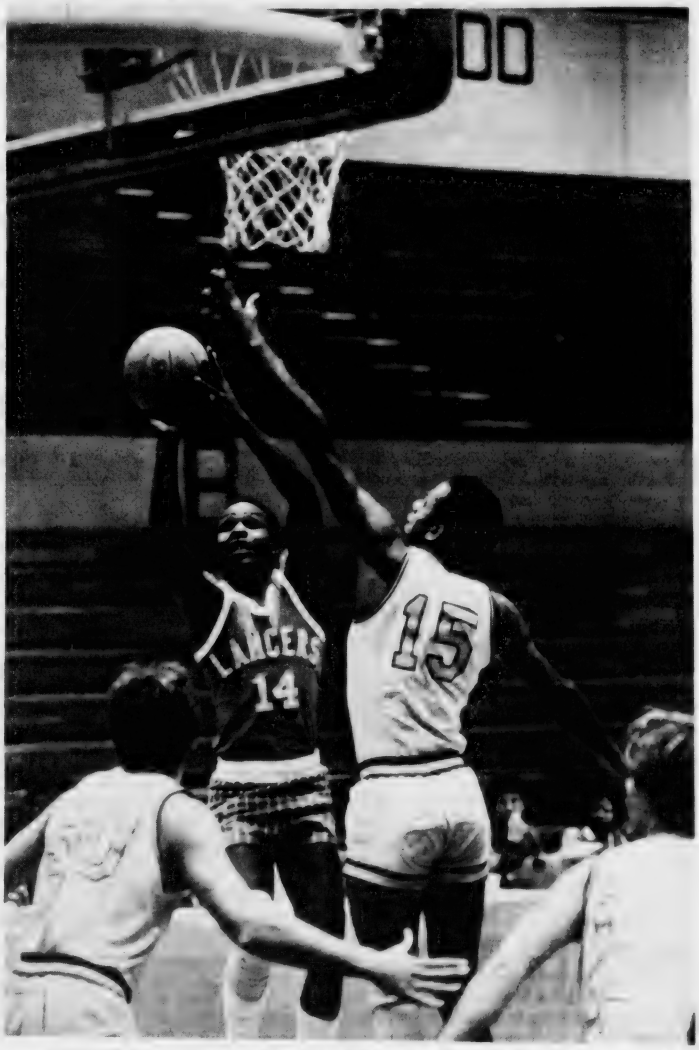
The Wednesday night game was a conflict in styles, Otterbein trying to play a control game and Longwood trying to run. By patient offensive and tenacious defensive play the Cardinals were on top early with a 5-3 lead. But they would not get it back until late in the game after Ron Orr tied it up with a short hook shot that he continually put in the face of the defenders all night. The next couple of baskets came from conversion plays, the first time from a steal by Joe Remar. Remar hit Kersey on the run and it was all over with the usual high-flying, death-defying, full speed, one-armed slam dunk that made the fans happier than a pervert in a harem. Otterbein threw a brick the next time down and John Weber whipped the rebound down to Joe Remar on the other end, who got a pass, although deflected, to Ron Orr for another two points.

Orr and Remar carried the game, offensively, for the Lancers, especially since Jerome Kersey picked up three fouls with more than 10 minutes left in the half. Remar was good from both inside and outside, whether he was shooting from the fast break or the set play. And Orr's hook was unstoppable, which is not surprising when you observe that Orr seems to have the reach of a crane (not the bird, the construction machine).

Longwood slowly built a lead throughout the rest of the half, although play was kind of sloppy and the Lancers' lead should have been larger. Although Otterbein was smaller and slower than the home team, they were disciplined and aggressive and turned many Longwood mistakes in handling in to steals and consequent breaks that kept them in the game. The lead peaked at 10 points when Ron Orr took a full court pass from John Weber and slammed it home to create pandemonium in Lancer Hall. The halftime score a minute later was 32-25 Longwood.

Otterbein quickly pulled within two in the first two minutes of the second half. Short jumpers by Ron Stewart and easy layups by Mike McKinney provided most of the Cardinal points as intelligence kept Otterbein apace of Lancer talent.

After successive exchanges at baskets and turnovers for several minutes, Otterbein tied the game at 55 on a McKinney jump shot. Longwood got back ahead when Orr followed a Kersey drive for a layup and Otterbein tied it again on two free throws due to a technical on Coach Luther for saying something the ref didn't like. Otterbein got the lead, now late in the game when Jerome Kersey got a defensive rebound and started dribbling up court. But it's a long way for the ball to bounce when Kersey dribbles and he lost control, then dove, along with Mike Testa, for the loose ball, but Otterbein's Ron Stewart grabbed the ball standing up and strolled in for the giveaway layup.



Down 61-60 with less than a minute remaining the Lancers could ill afford to miss this next attempt as that might enable the Cardinals to run the clock out. Jerome Kersey rebounded a Lonnie Lewis jump shot and was fouled on his second follow attempt, tying the game when he made one of his free throws. After the Cardinals choked on their next possession Lonnie Lewis put the Lancers up for good rebounding his own shot and laying it in. Joe Remar stole the ball on the Cardinals' next try and laid it in for the insurance points and Otterbein choked again. Another basket exchange and the game was over, Longwood preserving the victory, 67-63.

In summing up this year's Radford team, Coach Luther said he was "scared to death of them." He said he had seen them play Division I Richmond and thought they should have won. But have no fear, coach. For this one, Longwood conquered another phase of the basketball - world — jump shots. Add in solid bench play and a good defense, especially by the guards and you have why the Lancers pulled off their best victory yet this year, 73-70.

Midway through the first half, Longwood was playing nearly perfect basketball and with about five minutes left in the half, John Weber sank a short jumper to give Longwood its biggest lead at 31-14. But Radford brought it to within six by the end of the half, 34-28.

Longwood kept Radford about ten off the pace until the Highlanders started fouling them. In Division II ball, foul shots are not so taken for granted and while Longwood missed half of their 30 second half foul shots and Radford pulled to within three with a minute left, 71-68. Two Kersey foul shots put the game out of reach, though, with Radford only getting one more field goal before the game ended 73-70.

Again, Orr and Remar led the way for the Lancers, scoring 26 and 16 points respectively. Next up will be U.D.C., probably the biggest bundle of raw talent ever to visit Lancer Hall. And taking into consideration the styles of both teams, it promises to be a show.

Longwood's Joe Remar scored 27 points in 70-65 win over Mansfield State Saturday night with 1,053 career points, Remar is Longwood's all-time leading scorer.

Grapplers Now 4-2-1

By RONNIE BROWN
Student Assistant

Paced by four strong performances last week, the Longwood wrestlers upped their mark to 4-2-1. The grapplers defeated the Hornets in Lynchburg 43-7 Wednesday and clipped Newport News Apprentice 27-21, while tying Division I George Mason 22-22 and losing to Hampton Institute 30-17 in the Liberty Baptist Tournament Friday and Saturday. Coach Steve Nelson's squad will remain idle until after the Christmas break when they participate in the Newport News Tournament on January 14 and 15.

In the Lancers' defeat of Lynchburg, Charles Campbell (ALEXANDRIA), a 150 pounder, Dana Dunlap (FAIRFAX), a 167 pounder, Joe Bass (ALEXANDRIA), a 177 pounder, and Mike O'Hare (MIDLOTHIAN), a 190 pounder, each recorded pins, while Steve Albeck (SPRINGFIELD), a 142 pounder and Tim Fitzgerald (ELON COLLEGE, N.C.), a 118 pounder won major decisions.

Although the grapplers came in seventh in the LBC Tourney, Coach Nelson was pleased with the team's performance.

"I thought we wrestled fairly well considering how competitive the tournament was," said Nelson. "We showed that we are one of the top small college teams in Virginia."

David Dodd (HIGHLAND SPRINGS), a 158 pounder, Dunlap and Campbell each had good outings. Sophomore Charles Campbell, who has compiled a 6-2 record thus far, was 4-0 last week with three pins and a 6-0 decision.

One of the highlights of the tourney was the comeback against George Mason. The Patriots had won the first four matches but the Lancers won five of the last six weight classes to get the 22-22 draw.

Nelson is hoping the team will wrestle with the same intensity next semester as it has this year.

"I'm very pleased with the way the season is shaping up," noted Nelson. "We are going to let our injuries heal and try to stay healthy next semester."

NOTES

By CHRIS YOUNG

What do you get if you take a Diver's flag, a lion wearing sunglasses, three animals, one businessman (who doubles as the world's best guitarist), the Roanoke Civic Center on a Halloween Eve, a full moon, and 120 decibels?

Absolutely nothing.

But if you multiply it all by 10, you get Van Halen.

Boy, do you ever get Van Halen!

Van Halen was in Roanoke Saturday, and if you missed it to go trick or treating, you missed the real treat.

Van Halen opened with Romeo Delight from their third album, Women and Children First.

Eddie was perfect, brother Alex Van Halen (drums) was perfect, Michael Anthony (bass) was perfect, the stage was perfect, and David Lee Roth was, to put it very bluntly, himself.

Halfway through the second verse, he forgot the words, but did that stop him? Heck no! In typical David Lee Roth fashion, he screamed out, "I forgot the f— — words!!" By the end of the first song, you started to take in the stage.

Wow! What a stage!

Starting at the bottom, on the floor, you see huge rays of orange and white painted on the floor. Moving up, you are overwhelmed by the speakers. Thousands of them! On a flaming platform between the bass and guitar speakers were the drums. Actually, "drums" is an understatement. I think Alex's kit contained half of Ludwig's 1982 stock, and half of the props from Star Wars.

(Alex is noted for having the biggest and the baddest drum sets in the land, and even though he isn't the baddest drummer in the land, he can still do a job on them drums!)

Behind the drums was a huge curtain on which was painted Van Halen's 1982 logo, a lion wearing reflecto shades, which are reflecting two big Van Halen flying wedges!

Now to the lights!

When I first saw Van Halen in 1980, they had what was considered the biggest light show ever taken on tour by any band.

It had 11 follow spots (six of which were directly over the band), and thousands of other lights. Just name your favorite color, and I'm sure it was there.

In their new light show, Van Halen added seven more spotlights, and took away a couple of hundred other lights.

Instead of the typical rectangular light design, they rearranged them into a shape similar to their logo. They were also in smaller groups.

Most of the groups were hydraulically controlled, and could be raised and lowered.

There were eight spotlights (16 total) run by eight men who literally rode the hydraulic lights.

All of this had a Van-tastic effect!

Eddie's new front line consisted of his favorite homemade red guitar and three new editions, one of which he used more than "old red."

The one he used the most was a Kramer, which was custom built for the Ed. It looks almost identical to his red one, but has a neck shaped like one from a Gibson Explorer.

The second new edition was a beautiful Kramer custom double neck. It was yellow with a black line design, similar to all of Eddie's guitars.

He used the bottom neck (six strings) to do Cathedral from Diver Down.

From Van Halen II, they played Dance the Night Away, Somebody Get Me a Doctor and Bottoms Up!

Winter Concert

On Wednesday, Dec. 8, the Longwood College Concert Band will present the President's Annual Winter Concert at 8 p.m. in the Lankford Gold Room. The program shall include several works for the Christmas season as well as concert pieces by composers such as Mozart, Clifton Williams, Francis MacBeth, and Charles Carter. There is no charge for admission and all are invited to attend.

One of the surprisingly best moments of the concert was a space age bass solo by Michael Anthony. It was incredible.

Another one of the best moments was a "call and answer" session between drummer Alex and virtuoso Eddie.

Except for a half caliber mixing job, I'd have to say that this is the best concert I've seen in a long time.

for that." So not only did Wolfe not see information in that form, nor did his hall which he had wanted to get interested in the S.G.A.

Next years president, Trisha Boyle expressed concern for this problem and indicated that apathy and lack of publicity need to be dealt with in order to insure effectiveness for the S.G.A. "It's hard to get people excited about something they don't know." She added, "I think how we have elections could be changed for the better."

But one last complaint exists about the way the elections were run that has no answer. Just how did every individual seat clear down the line of the ballot, with two exceptions, manage to have just one occupant. One could think that there would be many candidates for the higher offices while the lower ones might just be abandoned, unless of course candidates were cycled to the appropriate open office, which seems to be the case. (However there is no proof for such an assertion other than the obvious one stated above). While a system like this may be highly beneficial to those involved and may provide the S.G.A. with a full compliment of officers, it is highly unethical. And if it happens in the future, it will be obvious.

Longwood or Bongwood?

A Look At Longwood's Drug Culture

"It takes a clear mind to make it."

Editor's Note:

The following is an article completed one year ago by Jodi Kersey who was previous editor of The Rotunda. She is currently employed by The Richmond Times-Dispatch as an advertising layout assistant.

"Does it take a clear mind to take it or a clear mind not to take it? — It takes a clear mind to make it."

Jackson Browne

When he graduated in May, he completed his tenure as a successful drug dealer on the Longwood campus. Not one single mishap. This average sized all-American male picked up his degree and left Longwood having done what all the other students have to, to graduate — almost. "We are talking covert," was his first word concerning his daily activity. Sitting in his dorm room in jeans, blue striped oxford and preppy glasses, one out of about 20 Longwood candymen described his routine as a campus drug dealer.

Our generation may appear more conservative when viewing our college campus. The surge of interest in conservative preppy clothes and success oriented students may cause one to feel that today's students are less likely to buck conformity. However, Mike feels this is wrong. "Using drugs to me is as common as going to lunch. I would think at least 50 per cent of the Longwood students smoke pot, it's a real subculture."

Mike's experience with drugs was not always this knowledgeable. One of the first clues that one receives about this drug dealer is that he has never been down and out, forced to sell drugs because he needed the money or needed to supply his habit. "It all started in the summer of '77 when I was in high school. A guy gave me a bag of pot. I didn't even know what it was. I kept it until some friends started talking about something called "pot" and it fit the description of what I had. My friend told me to divide it into four parts and I could get five dollars a piece for nickel bags." After selling the marijuana that first time, Mike found what he continuously refers to — a market.

Life as a small time drug dealer went on from there. He sold drugs that summer from the pump room where he was a lifeguard. The unique aspect was that he never used any type of drug himself. He was simply being a businessman — he had found a market for a product and was taking advantage of it.

However, this soon changed after Mike experimented with marijuana. "I found out that I could sell three bags and keep one for myself." Hence, the idea started of selling to others to supply himself also. It was a perfect set-up.

Mike continued dealing when he came to Longwood. He had a connection about 20 miles out of Farmville and operations have run smoothly for four years. He had only this one connection and he met him when he needed to replenish his supply for the campus. Everything ran like clockwork. His connection only had about six dealers working for him. "This guy (the connection) lives out in the woods and keeps to himself." Being covert is stressed again. "I wouldn't want to work for a lot of different suppliers," said Mike. "There has to be a great trust between you and your connection and you have to keep up with what is going on in their life." Mike talked about how your supplier may be busted and if you don't keep in touch and be careful, you could be set-up and caught. Dealing drugs carries a great amount of risk — caution is the key.

"You want to be sure that what you are selling is good stuff," continued Mike. He doesn't have to concern himself with that issue too much. He is considered the connoisseur dealer on campus. He sold essentially to the same group of customers on a consistent basis. Because he sold what is considered the best in marijuana, he doesn't have to advertise — his business is operated simply and quickly with everyone used to the routine. He commented that he didn't sell "bull shit pot" but mostly the best — Jamaica, Hawaiian, not to mention the "chemicals."

Mike kept out of sight and operated his business for four years on campus. "I just can't believe these other guys on campus who deal. They are so slack. I call them stupid dealers supplying stupid people. You can hear them in the dining hall — 'Hey, man, that was great. I was high in no time.' And then, they yell back 'Don't worry — I'll be getting more soon'." Mike doesn't desire the limelight of being a drug dealer. He wouldn't want people to know him that well. Being well known can, ironically, be a very undesirable situation for a dealer.

> 'I don't see how straight people make it through a day'

Mike assessed the major problem. Of course, all jobs have their drawbacks. His is the paranoia from the risk involved in dealing. "Sometimes when I'm driving to meet my connection, I get so paranoid. I pull over to the side of the road and wait because I feel like someone's following me. It's the adrenalin working." Mike tries to overcome this fear by taking a different route every time he goes.

Possession is another huge worry. "I try to keep everything out of my room and car. Everything is kept off campus at a safe place where I can easily get to it." He worries that he could be busted. He is used to watching for the signs of policemen or narcs as he calls them. Mike knows of too many cases where people were busted and he doesn't want to be one. "The heat in Farmville is terrible," Mike continued. "It has gotten worse over the four years. I know a guy in Maine who sold pot to a towny and then the towny swore out an affadavit at the police station and he was busted. Townies are uncool."

"You have to remember that possession is nine-tenths of the law and the risk is too great to keep anything on campus. Like those guys, they certainly couldn't say nine bags was their stash. Their room spelt distribution." The important thing here is to keep priorities in line so you are clear. "I always attend classes," says Mike, "I keep my grades up and obey all other rules and laws on and off campus so I'm never suspected."

Does Mike feel a moral responsibility to any of his customers when he knows they are using great amounts of pot or cocaine or any other drug? "You can't say what is too much or too little for any person." The only thing he is concerned with is satisfying his customer and having no enemies. If using pot, cocaine, speed or any other chemical is as common to you as it is to Mike, he could have supplied you. If it's marijuana you want, you'd be paying about ten dollars a gram. Therefore, an ounce "bag" would cost about eighty dollars. Mike sells to essentially ten people on campus who want the best pot they can buy. A friend came by to borrow incense and another came in for one red pill. "With your help, I might make it through exams." Mike keeps up with the business on a day to day basis. "You have to be diplomatic. If a customer doesn't like what he is given, I would rather give extra than cause a hassle. Drug dealing is a matter of pride — you don't want anyone saying you deal shit."

What do Mike's family and friends think or know about his part-time work at college? His friends are those others who also use pot. "Dogs know dogs", explained Mike. "I can tell if a person uses anything. You couldn't use drugs on a daily basis without your friends knowing it." That is why Mike's friends are also drug users. "I don't see how straight people make it through the day." And his family? "They have no idea what I do. Once, I got kind of lax my junior year and my father found a half bag at home. He gave me a lecture about how I could drink all I wanted but to not use marijuana."

Mike said he will probably continue dealing after college. He will be leaving Farmville because it is too small a town. Mike has only cleared enough money to have the drugs he wants and have an adequate amount of spending money. But somewhere else bigger than Farmville, who knows? He has been a major figure in the drug sub-culture on the Longwood campus for the last four years. What were Mike's last words concerning his stay at Longwood with his business? "It takes a clear mind to make it — I love that song."

Campus Drug Survey

Last semester the Rotunda conducted a survey of 100 upper classmen (Juniors and Seniors) on campus. They were asked questions pertaining to their views and habits concerning drug usage. The following percentages indicate the number that answered affirmatively.

Do you use "speed" to party?	40%
Do you use "speed" to study?	60%
Have you tried or regularly use marijuana?	77%
Have you tried cocaine or harder drugs?	37%
Do you think recreational drug use is acceptable?	75-80%

A Home Grown Boy

By JOE JOHNSON

We rode up route 15 in a jacked-up Dodge 4-Wheel pickup ladened with mud and debris. A Remington 12 gauge on the back window and a half-empty 22 Automatic stashed under the passenger seat. David was rattling on about this year's crops. "Protection", "Bummer weed", "91 day wonder". He was worried about the cops today. There had been a big bust Thursday, the Virginia state police uncovering one of the largest fields of Marijuana in Buckingham county, $50,000 worth — the fifth field discovered in one month.

"The cops aren't dumb, they know what's going on around here. That joker who got busted...he was a dumb ass...160 plants in one area. I mean good God who could imagine they wouldn't be seen. I can't image who would be that dumb. That - naive."

David isn't. A Longwood student he has for four years now cultivated some of the best grass in the area. Virginia Sensemillian and he know the workings of the long arm of the law and how to avoid it. "They take infra-red photos from helicopters that show the different amounts of heat coming off each plant and pot's hot. Once you see plants from the air, you don't forget - what they look like.

David turned left on a gravel road and up behind a log cabin type ranch house. This was the environment he loved. The outdoors — Forest, trees, sunshine, clouds and grass. He's never studied Thoreau, but is intrigued with canoeing and botany just the same. He is an ana chron ism of sorts with outdated wild shoulder length hair and Dylan scraggle creeping like the Kudzu vine up his cheeks.He's also a paradox — Esher prints hang on the same wall as a John Wayne poster — "the Duke" and a Loth's Hickory wood burning stove provide heat for this agrarian who sleeps on a waterbed.

We walked down a worn path behind his house, lined on either side with Spruces, pines and cedars. David carried a 10-gallon water bucket in one hand, leaning with the weight and looking for all the evergreen like the reincarnation of his namesake — Henry David "You've got to be smart in a lot of ways when you start planting. Pick a place that's sunny enough to keep them alive but enough bush around to shelter them from helicopters — particularly the blue ones". He dipped the bucket over a familiar batch of 5 leaved plants. "This is sens — the best you can get anywhere, except maybe Hawaii — used to be Columbian was the big thing — the imported weed. Then people started getting smart, using the seeds from some of the best dope they smoked and planting them. But it didn't really come of age till about a year ago. The Feds started cracking down on the Miami and Norfolk area. The big import areas for grass and when they slipped the ring on them they cut a lot of dope lines".

Supply and demand took effect and Virginia Sensemillian grew up and out. Just how many Davids were there in the nation in Prince Edward County?

"My God, I have no idea, in Prince Edward County alone — about 100 — everything from professors growing it in their windowsills to folks growing it in the field...if it's not grown in Virginia it's not here, except for the small stuff — a few ounces from other university's like Tech or Madison.

Farther down the path we stopped at a small clearing — slim, bright green stemmed plants — a little more than 4 foot shot upward topped with a tight cluster of "buds". The best part of the plant — according to David buds are the epitome of dope. The one toke weed which sends you sailing to heaven with a Bozo the clown grin. They resemble shrunken magnolia cones dipped in sugar crystals — Actually THC crystals and let off an odor which lends credence to their sobriquet — "organic skunk weed." The smell of burnt cedar was evident within a foot. An ounce of these cream of crops go from between 140-160 dollars on the street. But for David they're free which is the way he likes it.

By his own admission the 25 plants he cultivates (ranging in size from 3-8 ft.) could have a potential street value of $35 00. (enough to pay off his tuition for 2 years as a day student at Longwood). Money however, is not his main concern and dealing takes a back-seat to what is conventionally described as the "recreational" buzz.

He started smoking pot at age 16 for the same reason men climb mountains "because it was there." Not in the sense of challenge, the challenge by that time had become in-stitutionalized. Drug usage was as quintessentially American to him as apple pie or the afternoon highball. At the tail end of the baby-boom generation, David, as so many of his peers, picked the remnants of what was left in the wake of O'Leary's mind expanding, flower power, children of the 60's sun era. Mind blowing took the place of mind expansion and his reasons for "catching the buzz" may serve as an epithet for the 70's and 80's — the comfortable numb.

The escapist attitude goes a long way towards explaining this "walking contradiction." At age 16 pot for him was no longer a symbol of rebellion. It was another paradigm of the American way of life. "Because it was there" refers to a choice in lifestyles, necessarily neither antisocial nor asocial.

"I made a level headed decision — weighed the pros and cons and decided to try it. At first it wasn't daily use, shit the first couple of years I only smoked it about 10 times a year. I guess it was about 3 years ago when I had the steady supply that's when I got into it big time, 3-4 times daily. But I've slowed down lately, now it's no big thing not to get high for a few days at a time. I'm not a stoner — a burn out — like a lot of kids around here...and I guess pot did it to them. It's just like alcohol — There are drinkers and there are alcoholics, you can control it or it can control you, and when that happens you got to stop. I feel sorry for burn-outs — I've seen some stoners get it together you know — get active in life again. Most just live with things the way they are.

But me, I'm up on current events. I know what's going on. When I graduate (this spring) I'll have a good background and well, not to brag — but a fairly healthy resume. I've worked in construction, and had a desk job in technical engineering with an engineering firm, a couple of routine restaurant jobs... I've got a double major now and make A's B's and C's. Hell, I'll be valuable to somebody and I plan on getting a good paying job. Dope just makes things a little easier...more laid back, like that Cheeg and Chang lyric "all your cares go up in smoke." The important thing is not to let them stay up forever. Everybody's got responsibilities, take care of your job — be it studying or laying bricks or whatever and then relax...with a toke or two."

Escapism tempered with obstinate practicality is the philosophy which guides this weird amalgamation of Horatio Algiers and Old MacDonald. He approaches pot growing as a business concern and the threat arrest is enough to send him into paranoic tangents. "I've never even come close to getting busted, thank God...and don't plan on it.There's too much to lose...getting busted... ....Jesus...never never never!"

And still David plays the odds with the infrequent deals on Longwoods' Campus and off — "just to help out friends, not for any major money. If I thought, for a second, somebody was on to me I'd split — but the people I deal with are tight — you know — real close and they wouldn't say a word."

He draws a clear line of distinction between himself and "punk" dealers on campus. "The kind that get bust ed. They're too small time to know what's going on, yet big time enough to wind up in jail. They deal in heavy drugs — Acid, Crank, Coke, Speed. The drugs they think are safe because they're small quantity and easy to carry. They're just kids trying to pick up a few bucks on campus and they're usually not too careful."

His opinion on "Heavy" drugs is ambivalent. David has run the gamut of drug use, with the exception of Heroin and still remains faithful to his crop cannibis The planting of which according to him, is something of an art, and he has developed an encyclopedic knowledge on the ins and outs of pot growing and harvesting.

You just can't plant a shit load of dope. You have to space the plants out about 20-30 ft. and dig a pit for each of them... you are harvesting a plant — not a crop. The potency is so much better if you care for one plant, than if you get 10-12 rag weed plants. Quality not quantity — if you get 3 pounds of dope and you have to smoke so much of to get off it makes your mouth taste like cigarette butts then you're defeating the purpose. Nurse them along individually like they're your babies — watering with at least 5 gallons aweek. Study their cycles and know when to pick the sun leaves for the most potency. To do it right, you can't learn it over night — it takes years of experience."

The 10 gallon bucket was empty now and we watched as the water sucked noisily downward to-wards the roots of a mature, pot stem. It was getting hot and the sun played on the surrounding leaves in a cacophony of light-nature's discotheque. David was sweating, the droplets adding to the already poured water. He looked upward into the light — was it to watch the sun, the clouds — the environment he loved; or to watch for passing helicopters?

THE DEAL

Speed Freak

By CANDACE WARREN

Greg is a twenty-year-old Longwood College student living in Cox dormitory. One gets the impression that he is intelligent, bright, ambitious, witty, and strikingly ordinary. However, there is one characteristic about Greg that seems at odds with his other traits. Greg sells drugs.

Greg is intelligent enough not to disclose his identity to prospective customers, only to regulars. Greg makes contact with people who he hears are looking for something he can supply. In this case, a person expressed an interest in purchasing amphetamines and was called three days later by Greg. When Greg discovered that the person was not interested in drugs, only an interview, he cooperated readily. He seemed thrilled at the prospect of possibly seeing his words in print.

Evidently, Greg markets various types of "mood-modifiers" at Longwood but specializes in speed; amphetamines. He always keeps a "few dozen pills" on him to sell or for personal consumption. Half of his "stock" is to sell at a substantial profit; the rest is for his own use or for close friends. When asked how he got started in the business, he says, "I started popping when I was in high school. When I came here (Longwood) I always brought a bag back with me after every trip home. Pretty soon my roommates and suitemakes figured out that I was speeding. One night just before exams my roommate came up to me and asked if he could buy a twenty-twenty for a dollar. Later on that week my suitemate said he'd give me ten bucks for a twenty-bag of beauties; I took it. It's been down hill ever since." Greg does not worry too often about getting caught. "A lot of people need me, depend on me. A lot of people would be real upset if I couldn't help them out. A few of them would be really, really upset." Greg laughs but refuses to elaborate on his ambiguous statement.

In regard to his personal consumption of amphetamines, he shruggingly replies, "I take two or three hits a day depending on how good the stuff is. I take them to study, sure, but mainly to just keep me going." When urged to continue on the positive effects of speed for himself, he hesitated and then added, "Well in bed they do effect me. At least that's what they tell me. It sort of gets my blood going if you know what I mean." He laughs.

Greg foresees no future complications as a result of his practice of selling and consuming amphetamines, either to his health or legally. He plans to "shut down" after he graduates. "Up front, I need the money right now but when I get out (graduate) I hope to be making enough to support myself without needing to sell speed or whatever." His actions do not bother his conscience or conflict with his morals. "No, I don't have trouble living with myself. I feel like I'm doing a lot of people a favor. A lot of term papers and test grades are better because of me. I'm needed around here; people depend on me."

And Youz Takes Your Chances

The commonwealth attorney for Prince Edward County, Billy Watkins, is an easy going man by most standards. But when it comes to drugs his speech becomes tougher and less languid. "Farmville doesn't have much of a problem with drugs, last year (81-82) we had 20 arrests for possession. Only one arrest was made at Longwood College, that was for possession with intent to distribute . . . but to my thinking that's too many!"

He has valid reasons for that stern assertion. If a citizen is caught with one-half ounce or less of marijuana as a first offense the minimum penalty is probation with a parole officer for 12 months. If he is caught with more than one-half ounce but not more than 5 lbs. he faces imprisonment of not less than one year and not more than five years. Anything past 5 lbs. is an offense warranting not less than five years but not more than 30 years of imprisonment.

The hard drugs bring tougher penalties — the distribution or manufacturing of amphetamines is an automatic felony with sentences ranging from not less than five years to 40 years imprisonment and a fine of not more than $25,000. Any other habit forming drug — morphine, codeine, opiates, cocaine, or other narcotics bring the same penalty.

"College students shouldn't feel invulnerable — a felony or petty larceny (minor possession) goes on a record for the rest of their life. No one can be employed in a professional status job with such a mark against them and if they're convicted of a felony — they'll spend time in jail and lose all rights as citizens."

Marijuana and Coke at Longwood: Medium Rare

By CANDACE WARREN

When I first began researching for this report, I had very little insight into drug usage at Longwood College but was well versed in the use of drugs at other colleges and universities, scattered here and there in the eastern seaboard states. As I delved into the matter concerning the use and abuse of certain "mood modifiers" at Longwood, I found that Longwood was comparitively average or just slightly lower than average compared to most of the other educational institutions I was familiar with.

Interviewing a sophomore at Mary Baldwin College, I was told that she had "rarely" seen any form of drug in her two years at Baldwin, a school primarily attended by a wealthier class of girls. However, when speaking to a freshman acquaintance who also attends Mary Baldwin, I was informed that she had."...never seen so much dope and had never even seen cocaine" until she got there. One example the freshman gave of cocaine use at Baldwin involved a girl from Texas, the daughter of an oil tycoon, who was regularly flown in and out of Staunton on her Dad's private jet. The girl kept a storehouse of cocaine in her underwear drawer, snorting three of four times daily and presenting it to her friends as gifts.

Ferrum college, as told to me by a junior, rests in the center of the largest "pot patch" in Virginia. Because of the area's notoriety for cultivating and experimentative horticulture, some of the finest strains of marijuana are grown in the vicinity of Ferrum and consequently many students sample and seemingly thrive off the area's favorite evergreen. The growers of the "weed", in order to gauge the effectiveness of their product, use the college students as their device for testing the potency of the grass, often offering it at a ridiculously low price and in some instances free. Coke is available but used only rarely due to the high price tagged on so little product.

The University of Virginia, well known for its diversity in many fields, did not disappoint me when I researched their habits relating to "mind altering substances." A campus-based cult, in fact, regards the marijuana leaves and their formation is a divine symbol and in essence, worships the plant as a sacred tool to help them find and converse with various religious figures in the nether world. Cocaine is the common denominator for many white, wealthy, male students attending the University. While talking to one of the aforementioned students, I was told that cocaine did for him what "wheaties did for Bruce Jenner." Averette College, a smaller private college in Danville, bore many similarities to UVA in its diversity of drug use. One student remarked, "There's pot in every room, everybody does it just about. Coke is easy to get but it's not an everyday thing like pot or speed. We eat speed like they were M&M's."

Longwood, surprisingly enough to me, ranks about five or less on a scale of one to ten in reference to drug use. Some dormitories reek of sweet acrid smoke which seeps through cracks on and under doors shut tight against inquisitive noses. Other dorms, however, seem free of pot and make do with brew. Coke, as I have seen it, is scarce. Speed or the use of other stimulants, however, is widespread and increases tremendously before exams or just prior to a rash of testing. As the weekend approaches, many students increase their intake of stimulants to make the most of the little time they have. As one senior explained to me, "There is pot and a little coke floating around here (Longwood) but you have to know who to look for to find some." As a freshman, I probably have not seen or experienced the full impact or role that drugs play on Longwood's campus, but from what I have seen Longwood is a reasonably "straight" school.

Gizz/Ms. Kids Make LC Players Look Handicapped

By CINDY CORELL

Tony Perini, a well-known local restaurant owner, is an avid sports fan and often participates in a variety of sports. So when he was in Lancer gym last week and Frank Brasile, a Therapeutic Recreation professor, asked him to play some basketball Thursday night, he agreed quickly. What he didn't know, though, was that he'd play in a wheelchair!

The University of Illinois wheelchair basketball teams, both men's and women's were on hand Thursday night in Lancer Gym for an exhibition game against our own Longwood All-Stars. Wheelchair All-Stars, that is, most of which had never attempted anything like this before Thursday.

The Gizz Kids (men) were organized in 1948 at U. of I. by Tim Nugent, current director of the Division of Rehabilitation-Education Services. The Ms. Kids were organized in 1970, one of only 15 women's teams in the nation, whereas there are 150 men's teams. These players have some sort of disability that does not allow them to play most active sports in the same manner as an able-bodied person. The Gizz Kids, having won the National Championship for wheelchair basketball three years, and the Intercollegiate Championship in 1978, they are currently ranked second in the Intercollegiate League. The Ms. Kids are currently ranked second nationally having won the Nationals in 1978.

Thursday night the Ms. Kids and Gizz Kids combined on one team because of an abundance of injuries to the players.

The players began warm-ups at about 6:45 for the 7:30 game. The Illinois players, dressed in dark blue sweatsuits, practiced in an orderly fashion, while a collection of Longwood students, professors and administrators, wearing many colors of sports clothes, including jeans, fumbled on the other side of the court. They struggled in the chairs, ran into each other, dropped the ball, and occasionally threw the ball out-of-bounds. Some got used to handling the ball; some got used to motivating in the specially built, light-weight wheelchairs. None coordinated both efforts at the same time. By this time the other team had stopped warmed up; they were showing off some hot dog shots which included wheelies and over the shoulder shots.

The buzzer rang at 7:30 and about 350 people were in the stands. The players were introduced, and a baseball coach, a vice-president for Academic Affairs, a director of Housing and two women who work with Therapeutic Recreation majors, went against a combination of men's and women's teams in wheelchair basketball.

In the first second, a Longwood player came out of his seat — technical foul — they got the point. Nine seconds later, the score was 3-0, at 11-0, Illinois favor, Mike Haltzal yelled, "Okay, team, regroup." They didn't listen. At 25-0, Illinois favor, Longwood coach Frank Brasile, who received his Master of Science degree at U. of I. and was a coach of the Gizz Kids from 1974 to 1978 was put into the game. Illinois spotted Longwood 35 points. Minutes later they ended the half, 36-35, Illinois favor.

During halftime, the Illinois team relaxed with some wheelchair square dancing. Following that, some assimilated architectural barriers were brought out, and the Illinois team members performed their feats of overcoming these everyday barriers such as curbs, steps and ramps. During this time, Longwood coach Brasile talked strategy and the 15 players who had already seen action rested.

The second half was a bit more challenging for the Illinois team as they spotted the underdogs 40 more points. The game went on much as before with the exception that Longwood did manage to make six points on their own, bringing the game to a tie, 81-81.

After the game, Illinois Coach Brad Hedrick asked the audience to stick around for another exhibition. While the Longwood All-Stars sat back in the chairs alongside the court wiping sweaty foreheads and resting tired arms, the wheelchair athletes headed out on the court again for an exhibition of wheelchair football, an intramural sport at U. of I. Then some individual athletes played wheelchair tennis and ran (wheeled) track around the court.

As well as seeing some excellent basketball plays and incredible ball handling, the audience had an opportunity to see an exhibition that many had never seen before, and described as "neat", "fascinating," and "unbelievable." As one student put it, "I found it interesting how these people compare to normal (able-bodied) athletes. You never think about these everyday difficulties for the handicapped until you see something like the exhibition at halftime tonight." A Physical Education professor noted how she could see individual plays developing by the Illinois players. "It's amazing what we need is some athletics for our handicapped."

Cause and Effect:

Amphetamine Use by College Students

By CANDACE WARREN

Bennies, Dexies, Speed, Pep-Pills, Diet Pills, Uppers, Lid-Poppers, 20-20's and Valentines. The aforementioned street names refer to the artificial stimulants, amphetamines, used by one out of four college students at one time or another in their college career for various reasons, and resulting in a multitude of complications and health hazards. An ever increasing number of college students has turned to amphetamines hoping to produce a sense of heightened euphoria, elevated alertness, and a higher level of mental and physical energy. The most commonly ingested amphetamines are pharmaceutically labelled dexedrine, desoxyn, methamphetamine, and methadrine. The only legitimate medical use of amphetamines is for the treatment of sleeping sickness and hyperactivity in children. From this, one may surmise that amphetamine use in college age students is not medically feasible.

The prevailing causes for amphetamine usage in college include increased alertness in class and the ability to stay awake late into the night cramming for tests or exams, ultimately improving grades and increasing class participation. Academic excellence is not the only motive cited by college students for amphetamine inducement. Improved and prolonged performance and endurance on the sports field, court, or bedroom are often the reasons given for the ingestion of the synthetic stimulants. By introducing increasing amounts of "uppers" into the body, the brievity of the weekend may be maximized by not wasting time sleeping and eating, practices necessary for survival.

Unfortunately for the user, the thrills and benefits come to an abrupt halt and reality sooner or later catches up with him. The risks of amphetamine abuse are frequently ignored or entirely rejected, especially by young individuals whose primary objective is a thrill for the moment with no thought for the future. To stay "high," the user must induce more and more of the drug into his system, not realizing that the seemingly "magic energy" he is experiencing is the expenditure and eventual depletion of his bodily resources. Amphetamines produce rapidly increasing levels of tolerance and addiction more rapidly than any other drug which affects the central nervous system. Repeated "speeding" may result in: depression, fatigue, nightmares, irritability, liver disease, hypertensive disorders, chronic chest infections, exhaustion, impotence, and in some cases, cerebral hemorrhage. The phrase, "Speed kills," refers to the loss of contact with reality resulting from the use of amphetamines and possibly leading to paranoia and destructiveness. Dr. George Snyder, a widely recognized drug authority, has proved in his extensive research that, "More people die from amphetamine-caused violence than from the actions provoked by any other drug affecting the central nervous system."

Down Home at Longwood

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

After ten years on the road together, singing in towns along the East coast, south and midwest, a degree of professionalism is expected. Robin and Linda Williams, a husband and wife team, brought not only professionalism, but a novel sample of the new trend in music, Rockabilly. Rockabilly for the Williams' is a down home sound about down home things, a country based sound but with a footshuffling upbeat. Their cocker spaniel, Jake, who wandered about the Gold Room in Lankford, during their concert Wednesday, made their act a charming trio.

The talent between the pair was evident as they sang not only old country-western classics but their original songs. Robin played the guitar and a harmonica simultaneously, when he wasn't belting out lines about old timers in small towns.

Linda played the guitar, too and she picked a banjo with footstomping fervor.

The duo effortessly harmonized, both instrumentally and vocally and created a relaxed, familiar atmosphere. In between songs, they shared jokes and anecdotes of their time on the road. Their songs ranged from the traditional flatfooting cowboy songs, to tender ballads and even to black gospel spirituals done accapella.

The couple lives in Middlebrook, Virginia, after having moved from Country Music Capitol, U.S.A. — Nashville. They have five albums released on a small label, and they're working on their sixth. Robin and Linda Williams have succeeded in bringing their audiences the newest trends paired with the classic sounds of country music through their versatile talents and vibrant style.

On Unspeakable Words and Other Evil Manifestations

"There were words in the Brett language considered so corrupting in their effect on others that if anyone wrote them or was heard to speak them aloud, he was fined and thrown into prison. The King of the Bretts was of the opinion that the words were of no importance one way or the other, and besides, everybody in the country knew them anyway; but his advisers disagreed, and at last, to determine who was right, a committee was appointed to examine the people separately.

At length everyone in the kingdom had been examined, and found to know the words quite well, without the slightest damage to themselves. There was then left only one little girl, a five-year-old who lived in the mountains with her deaf and dumb parents. The committee hoped that this little girl, at least, had never heard the corrupting words, and on the morning they visited her, they said solemnly: "Do you know the meaning of poost, gist, duss, feng?"

The little girl admitted that she did not, and then, smiling happily, she said, "Oh, you must mean feek, kusk, dalu, and liben!"

Of course the point behind this short narrative by William March is that words are symbols for thoughts and since everybody has "corruptible" thoughts their will always be a word or symbol to describe it.

Most everyone knows what the acronym for fornication under consent of the king means. No one would be silly enough to say that the mere mentioning of this act in different terms such as "making love" is obscene. The point they find obscene is the crude connotations lurking behind that other word — that acronym — the idea that its guttural sound demeans the highest index of human intimacy.

This isn't bothersome in and of itself. The recognition of a words connotative power is a very handy thing and like most of my comrades in pens, I use it reverentially. A problem only comes about when a writer or reporter wishes to invoke words with demeaning and crude connotations because the situation calls for it. Then the cries of innocence are heard and the censors start grapping for scissors. Immoral! Indecent! Clip! Clip! Clip!

And of course what was written was by "public" standards indecent. It was meant to be; because the person who said it was indecent and obscene — not the reporter whose sole ambition was to get the story, intact, unwatered and unwhitewashed to the people. If it strains their moral fiber the audience should direct their chagrin to the original source of blasphemy, not the harmless conductor.

The desire of such an audience is a curious thing. They have a picture of the world they live in and the appearance it should have. What they see as representational of themselves (ie press) cannot become infected with the things they deem obscene, immoral or indecent. Even though they may think, breath and speak these very items they cannot bare in print. The facade has become something of an ideal which certain Longwood students deify and pray may never be changed. That the quo remain status and the official lines broadcast waves of their own cosmeticized image is their apostle's creed.

The SGA proposal was but a small manifestation of the latent hostility which is directed towards publications that do not kneel to the same deity. The Rotunda serves a college community as a microcosm of the 4th estate — in the U.S. — a free press. And as such will do specifically what is inherent in those words 'Free and Press' — it will get the story to the people, and will do so without hindrance.

Student Senate Negates Elect-Editor's Proposal

By MIKE LYNCH

In a Student Senate meeting on December 8, the Student Government Association overwhelmingly voted to negate a proposal calling for the election of editors of campus publications by the SGA executive council. The proposal had been placed on a run-off ballot for recording secretary of the SGA and won the students approval by a 2-1 margin.

"It did not actually come forth from the Student Government" said Sheri Stevens, then President of the SGA, explaining why they would retract a proposal that had the students support. That seems simple enough but what is not so simple is why the SGA would allow the amendment to be proposed in the first place. Sheri Stevens said this happened "through human error." She allowed that the matter was discussed at an Executive Council meeting but "it was never meant to be brought before the students."

The reason for the Executive Council discussion was response to student complaints about The Rotunda. Recently, under the editorship of Joe Johnson, the paper had changed it's masthead from a fairly standard style to what looks like an oriental new-wave band logo. People thought that was strange but the masthead drew no direct complaints to the paper. What really got people more than just a little perturbed was the front page spread on the mysterious Walt, this year's winner of the Cox door defacing contest, and his infamous LDGS. Of particular concern was the use of abusive language in the article when Walt, at one point, described a couple of students recitations of affection for him.

According to Stevens, many people think that the paper is biased. The major complaint is that they do not feel the language was properly edited, especially in the instance aforementioned. Sheri pointed out that since the paper is mailed to colleges and high schools throughout the area it represents the school.

In response to these complaints and the subsequent elect-editors proposal that mysteriously appeared on the ballot the Publications Board was re-established, largely through the efforts of Johnel Brown and Joe Johnson, Feature Editor and Editor-In-Chief of The Rotunda, now members of the revitalized board. It is through this board, which is basically separate from the SGA, and not from the SGA, that control over the editors of campus publications will occur. Before this time, the Publications Board had a constitution and recognition but no people had served in many of its posts for quite some time.

The Board had its initial meeting last semester, citing Joe Johnson for violations of the obscenity code, agreeing to discuss the matter at a special session and preparing a rebuttal to the elect-editors proposal for the Student Senate meeting that night They did not have to enact that rebuttal, though, as the Senates first action was to negate the proposed in questions.

So it would seem that instead of trying to control the editorship of The Rotunda themselves, which caused them to drop the matter entirely in order to save face, the SGA should have directed its attention towards what was, at the time, a token Publications Board. But since an effective Publications Board has been formed anyway, it would seem that all the problems wrought by this affair have been solved. All except one, that is. For just who was it that made sure the proposal would be on the ballot? Just who was that evil scum who ignored the SGA's wishes to keep the issue to themselves for the time being and allowed the voters (a massive 10 per cent of the student body) to show that they would rather have martial rule over the paper than let that left-wing gay-lover of an editor control it? Who knows who did these twisted things? The SGA knows. And they have made certain that no one on The Rotunda shall find out. Typical

A Therapeutic Recreation major noted that some of the emotional barriers were broken between the two populations (handicapped and able-bodied.) "The people here tonight who have never been exposed to this type of thing," observed sophomore Mimi Dreher, "may now have a totally different regard for handicapped persons they see on the street. There's a good chance that they may see that they are just people who are disabled in some way — not freaks — and they want to be treated normally."

One of those students who doesn't know a great deal about the subject, unknowingly, backs up this thesis. A junior Business major in the bleachers offered, "I have seen several of these games, and I really enjoy them. It's better when it's two real wheelchair teams, but it's a lot of fun." Other spectators noticed a comparison to real games, too. "In the last ten seconds there is a real anxiousness, just like a college game."

The Longwood All-Stars had some of their own experiences. "The most difficult part," said Tony Perini, "was trying to get used to dribbling and roll around at the same time. The second most difficult was playing an aggressive team who knew what they were doing. We were definitely the handicapped team out there," he quipped. "The urge to get up and run was tremendous!"

This exhibition game fulfills several purposes, according to Coach Hedrick. "Hopefully this exhibition tour will have some impact as far as program development goes in different parts of the country." The purposes are 1) to increase public awareness of this type of athletics and 2) to demonstrate that the participants are athletes first, not just handicapped individuals."

These are very accomplished individuals who are training five days a week, under strict conditioning schedules. To compensate with this culture's strong emphasis in sports, this program gives these athletes a chance to project positive attitudes to the public. 2) The program gives handicapped persons an outlet to perform and excel in an activity they enjoy and gives the public a form of honest entertainment, and 3) this tour generates revenue for other programs for handicapped students. This program is fully self-sustaining and receives no subsidy outside their program.

The tour includes both exhibitions, such as Thursday's, and games with other wheelchair basketball teams. "It covers an area," said Hedrick. "Often an exhibition comes first, to help the able-bodied relate. The everyday Joe Blow has a slanted view, a concrete, but stereotypic perception. The fact is that the perception is situational, relevant. We are all disabled in behavior of necessity or interest.

9-4 Lancers Begin Stretch Run

Playoff Berth A Possibility

Longwood's 9-4 men's basketball team would like to find itself in contention for a berth in the NCAA Division II Playoffs when the end of February rolls around, but if the Lancers hope to reach the playoffs they can afford new losses the rest of the way.

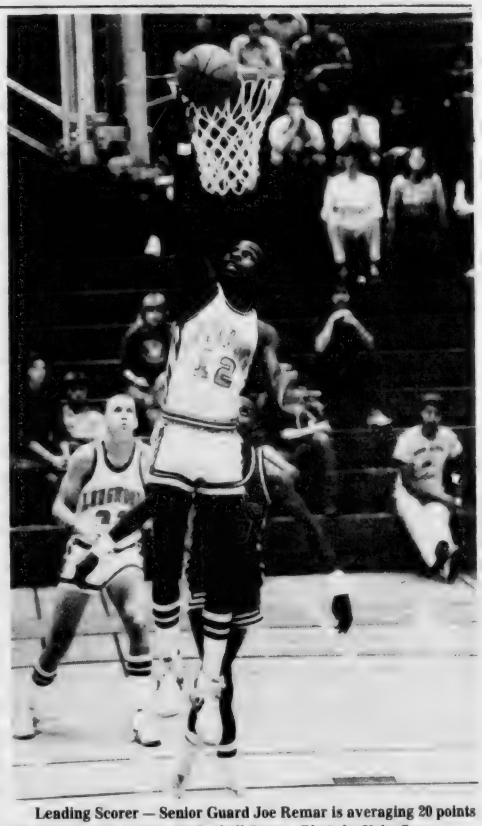
With three wins in their last four games, Longwood visited Radford last night and hosts Atlantic Christian Wednesday at 8:00. Upcoming are games with Liberty Baptist, Virginia State and Randolph-Macon. There are no "sure wins" left on the schedule, according to coach Cal Luther. The Lancers entertain Liberty Baptist next Tuesday (Jan. 25).

"I still think we have a chance at being considered for a berth," said Luther, "but, there's not a single game left that you can say is a sure win. Obviously, we can't lose any more."

Three of Longwood's four losses have come against highly regarded teams — District of Columbia, Central Connecticut and Virginia Union. The Lancers can definitely build a case for having a strong schedule, but the most important factor in playoff consideration will be overall record.

Last week Longwood dispatched visiting Averett 86-48 and it was Freshman Lonnie Lewis and senior Ronn Orr who provided the offensive punch. Orr, who carries a 17.5 ppg. average, scored 19 and Lewis poured in 17 with many coming from Long range.

Lewis, a prep standout at Henrico High School, has scored 12, 14 and 17 points in his last three outings since moving into the starting lineup. His long range scoring has given the Lancer offense and added dimension. The 6-3 forward is also hitting 50 per cent of his shots from the floor and 85.7 from the line.



While senior guard Joe Remar and junior forward Jerome Kersey have always been solid scorers for Longwood, the duo also contribute in a variety of ways to the Lancers' success.

Remar, Longwood's career leader in scoring, assists and steals, is averaging 20 points, 4.8 assists, 2.8 steals and only 2.8 turnovers while shooting over 60 per cent from the floor. The Lancer co-captain has 1,271 career points, 457 career assists and 176 career steals.

Kersey, a pre-season small college All-America pick, is scoring 14.4 poinrs with 10.2 rebounds per game, but he's also averaging 3.2 assists (he had eight in one recent game). 3.4 steals and 1.7 blocked shots. Kersey also has 13 dunks and Remar, though a mere 6-1, has slammed nine through the nets.

Freshman Stan Hull has shown marked improvement recently and will get more playing time according to coach Cal Luther. The 6-2 guard is a graduate of Heritage High School.

In a preliminary to Wednesday's contest between Longwood and Atlantic Christian, the Longwood junior varsity, coached by Ernest Neal, will take on powerful Fork Union. A standout on the Fork Union squad is 6-10 junior Chris Washburn, a 230-pounder who is rated as one of the best high school centers in the country. He's a native of Hickory, North Carolina.

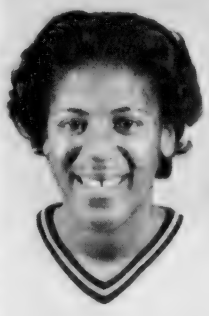
Holmes Makes All-Tournament Named Longwood Player of Week

Sophomore forward Florence Holmes scored 23 points and hit the field goal which brought on overtime in Longwood's 76-72 win over Alderson-Braddus January 8, and for her performance, Florence has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 7-14. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.



Longwood's leading scorer (12.6) and rebounder (6.7), Holmes also played a key role in Longwood's 73-55 win over Maryland Baltimore County Thursday night at Hampden-Sydney's Fleet Gymnasium. The 5-9 cager scored 17 points against the Lady Retrievers.

An All-State performer last season as a freshman, Holmes was picked for the All-Tournament squad at the Davis & Elkins Mountain Classic January 7-9. Holmes turned in one of the top performances of the tournament against Alderson-Broaddus with 23 points and 10 rebounds. She also scored six of Longwood's 10 points in overtime.

Coach Jane Miller said that Holmes' all-around performance makes her a leader not only on the Longwood team but also in the VAIAW Division II.

Longwood's top free throw shooter (21-25 for 84 per cent), Holmes averaged 13.3 points and 9.7 rebounds last season as a freshman. She had 25 points and 16 rebounds in one game. A 1,000-point career scorer in high school, she was named All-District, All-Region and All-State in her senior year at King George High.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Major Holmes of King George.

Case Repeats As All-American

Longwood junior Darryl Case has been named to the National Soccer Coaches Association of America 1982 McDonald's All-America Soccer Team for the second year in a row. The Madiera High School graduate was named a second team All-American in NCAA Division II.

The most honored soccer player in Longwood history, Case was the only booter from a Virginia college to be named an All-America in Division II. He has now been named All-Conference, All-State, All-South and All-America two years in a row.

A standout on defense from his back position, Case helped Longwood compile a record of 15-4-1 and win the state title for small colleges (VISA). He used his outstanding speed to good advantage as the Lancers limited foes to 1.11 goals per game.

"Darryl had an excellent season for us once again," said Coach Rich Posipanko, South Atlantic Region Coach of the Year. "He has the ability to cover a lot of territory on defense with his speed."

Lady Lancers Even Record Face Three Games On Road

Sparked by the outstanding play of Florence Holmes, Cindy Eckel, Robin Powell and Mariana Johnson, Longwood's Women's basketball team dispatched Maryland Baltimore County 73-55 Thursday and VCU 53-39 Saturday to raise its record to 5.5.

This week the Lady Lancers visited Radford last night, play at Guilford Thursday at 6:00 and at Pittsburgh-Johnstown Saturday at 2:00 in what promises to be a tough three-game stretch.

Longwood played well both offensively and defensively in last week's victories. As a team the Lady Lancers shot 48 per cent from the floor against UMBC and 44 percent against VCU. Coach Jane Miller's squad also reduced its points allowed average to 57.6.

In the victory over UMBC, Holmes scored 17 points, Johnson 16 and Powell 15 as Longwood pulled away in the second half after leading 32-29 at the break. Both Johnson and Powell reached new career highs in points. All three Lady Lancer cagers shot better than 50 per cent from the floor, making 16 of 22 shots between them. Site of the tilt was Hampden-Sydney's Fleet Gymnasium.

Saturday, in Longwood's first home game of 1983, senior Cindy Eckel scored a season high 14 points (she now has 850 career points) and Holmes added 12 as Longwood outscored VCU 19-5 in the last 11 minutes of the game to win going away. The win was Longwood's first over the Rams since 1978 when the Lady Lancers took a 55-53 decision.

Holmes continues to lead Longwood in scoring and rebounding with averages of 12.6 points and 6.7 rebounds per contest. Johnson, who has recovered a slow start shooting-wise, is scoring 6.8 ppg. and pulling doen 5.8 rpg.

Gymnasts Win One of Three

Longwood's gymnastics team opened its season with a tough two-day road trip last week and managed a victory over Western Carolina Friday before suffering a pair of losses at Auburn Saturday afternoon. Veterans Kelly Crepps and Dayna Hankinson were the top performers on the trip for Longwood.

This week the Lancer gymnasts travel to Maryland Baltimore County for a tri-meet with the Retrievers and Pittsburgh-Johnstown Friday night at 7:00 and Saturday Longwood will be at Navy with Ursinus and West Chester.

Longwood opened its 1983 season with a 144.05-139.80 victory over Western Carolina Friday night as Crepps finished second all-around with a 30.60 and Hankinson won beam (8.1) and floor (8.55). Freshman Lisa Zuraw, who injured her ankle over the weekend, won vaulting with an excellent 8.8.

While the Lancers got a victory, they lost the services of freshman Kim Kenworthy for an undetermined period of time. Kenworthy suffered a severe ankle sprain and possible stretched ligaments during warm-ups Friday night.

After arriving at Auburn at 4:30 in the morning Saturday, the Lancers finished third (151.45) behind Auburn (166.55) and East Tennessee (162.30) Saturday afternoon. Both Auburn and E. Tennessee are Division I teams.

Crepps tied for first in vaulting with an 8.7 and Hankinson was third in beam with an 8.35 for Longwood. Freshman Allison Berry was fourth in beam with an 8.3.

Coach Ruth Budd felt her team performed poorly in the two meets. "We can do a lot better," said the veteran coach. "Not having a spring floor at Auburn hurt us in floor exercise, but we were terrible in bars both days. We have our work cut out for us in the coming weeks."

Grapplers Capture Third in Newport News Tourney

Longwood's wrestling team earned 59.5 points to take third in the Newport News Tournament Friday and Saturday. The Lancers travel to Williamsburg Wednesday to meet the Indians and participate in the Washington and Lee Tournament Friday and Saturday, January 21 and 22.

Coach Steve Nelson's squad placed in six of the ten weight classes in individual competition. Despite the lay off over Christmas break, Nelson thought his wrestlers performed well.

"Considering we had only four days of practice before the tournament, I thought we wrestled competitively," noted Nelson. "The second half of the season is like starting over and I expect the wrestlers to improve."

Among the Lancers' top performers were Tim Fitzgerald, a 118 pounder, Steve Kidwell, a 134 pounder, Chuck Campbell, a 150 pounder, and Steve Albeck, a 142 pounder. Freshmen Fitzgerald and Kidwell each were 2-1 and placed third. Soph. Chuck Campbell placed second with a 2-1 mark and is now 8-3 overall. Another sophomore Steve Albeck was not seeded in the tourney, but managed to run up a 3-0 mark, and 7-5-1 overall, to win the 150 weight class.

Albeck recorded wins of 17-6, 6-2 and 7-3 over his opponents from Elizabeth City State, Gloucester Community College and Chowan respectively to take the title.

"It was his best performance ever considering the lay off," said Nelson. I hope he will continue to wrestle aggressively."

The Lancer Grapplers roster is trimmed to 14 due to injuries and wrestlers leaving the team.

The Best and Worst of 1982

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

1982 was a lukewarm year for the motion picture industry, which gave us a fair amount of pleasing cinematic glimpses as well as an equal number of disappointments. "E.T. — The Extra Terrestrial" warmed the hearts of millions, while "Blade Runner" put thousands to sleep. "Star Trek II The Wrath of Hahn" left us in blissful suspense while "Porky's" brought high school immaturity to the screen for the slow minded movie-goer. - "An Officer and a Gentleman" helped lift Richard Gere's career up where it belongs, while "Annie" dropped director John Huston to new depths. In short, 1982 had more than its share of bad films, and in my opinion was saved only by the Christmas re-runs of "It's a Wonderful Life." But even in this polarized film year, one movie stands alone as the worst, and one as the best of 1982.

The worst film of 1982 was "Monsignor". The publicity for this movie contained the quote "Forgive me father, for I have sinned", which seems to foreshadow the transgressions of director Frank Perry. Perry's finished product is like a starving dog, trying to decide which bowl of food to eat first. Is the movie about a young priests wartime experiences, his dealings with the Mafia, or his romance with a young, would-be nun? Perry doesn't seem to have an answer. Instead, he awkwardly pushes all three plots together and attempts to cover his indecisiveness with jolting scene transitions that startle the audience.

Not all of the sins are Perry's though. An equal, if not greater number belong to the film's star, Christopher Reeve, best known for his portrayal of Superman. Reeve's character is introduced as a warm hearted, dedicated young priest who, although he is not above wrong doing, seems to have a conscience that will make him think twice before doing anything illegal. However, after the first thirty minutes of the film, Reeve abandons this type of characterization for a performance whose ambiguity and inconsistencies make it unbelievable and boring. In parts of the film where the emotions of the priest could enhance the plot, Reeve shows only a blank expression. His acting is very plastic and reason enough for avoiding this film.

The best film of 1982 is "The Verdict". From its very base components to its final editing, this movie is excellent in every way. David Mamet's screenplay is the best since Pinter's "The French Lieutenants Woman." The dialogue is superb and holds the attention of the audience without cheap gags or over worked violence. Director Sidney Hurnet take this screenplay and molds it into a fine motion picture, in which he uses slight, but noticeable detail to highlight the contrast between the films, two law camps. Aiding Humet in this task is a superior supporting cast that includes Charlotte Rampling, and veteran film actors Jack Warden and James Mason. A particularly good performance is given by Milo O'Shea as a contemptable courtroom judge.

The real acting laurels go to the film's star, Paul Newman. As lawyer Frank Galvin, Newman outshines his previous performances by bringing new depth and insight to a character. His emotional reactions run the gamet from the bewilderment of a man without hope to the intensity of an attorney determined to win an impossible case. Newman's acting reaches its peak during the final courtroom scene, when he delivers his stirring final summation to the jury. During this brief segment, he promotes the true spirit, rather than the letter of the law.

At the 1980 Academy Awards, Dustin Hoffman received the best actor award for "Kramer v.s. Kramer". At the time I could not help but think that this recognition was more of an apology to Hoffman for the Academy's failure to recognize him for his other, more superior films, such as "Little Big Man" and "The Graduate". In 1983, Paul Newman is destined to be nominated for the Academy's Best Actor award. If he should happen to receive this award, it will not be for the same reason as in Hoffman's case. Even though he has starred in such films as "Cool Hand Luke" and "The Sting", "The Verdict"" is by far Paul Newmans best work.

These two films, "Monsignor" and "The Verdict" are as opposite as it is possible to be. One is the product of a spasmodic directing attempt, while the other epitomizes great directing. One has a leading actor that fails to make us believe what he is doing, while the other has a star whose performance, makes you cheer. One reminds us of all the disappointing films of 1982, while while the other rises up, lending a small hope to the patrons that maybe it wasn't all so bad.

Nuclear Waste Meets Opposition

By JOHNEL BROWN

Hospitals, power plants and research centers all generate low level nuclear wastes. Presently federal law requires that each state either a) dispost of its own waste within the state, or ideally b) join into a compact with other states for a central dumpsite.

Virginia is dumping 90 per cent of its low-level wastes in Barnwell, South Carolina, and the rest in Hanford Washington. The facility in Barnwell will cease operation in 1992, therefore Virginians must choose an alternative.

Procedures are underway to locate a dumpsite in Virginia to receive the nuclear wastes from eight other states. Low-level nuclear wastes include contaminated clothing, trash and other exposed tools and chemicals. There was a meeting in the Gold Room in Lankford. Wednesday night, Jan. 19, as Bob Testin of the Virginia Solid Waste Commission and Stuart Donaldson of ERM consultants faced a defensive, objecting audience of nearly 150 people including townspeople and students. The crowd was gathered to learn more about the proposed disposal of low-level nuclear wastes in Southside Virginia.

Mr. Teshin was caught a bit off guard by the size of the audience, as the meeting was initially planned to be a conglomerate of "civic leaders" and the "important decisionmakers" of the counties in question. According the Mr. Testin, specific public hearings were scheduled for later dates, and that the Wednesday meeting was not to become a public forum. Despite any original intentions, people from Prince Edward, Charlotte, Buckingham and surrounding counties were determined to be heard.

And heard they were.

Stuart Donaldson, of ERM consultants, is employed by the Solid Waste Commission to research and analyze the notion of disposal in "appropriate" sites.

Mr. Donaldson explained that the selection of a dump site for low-level nuclear wastes was a long-term process and included technical and political aspects and public input as partial criterion for the final choice. The selection of a site includes three major phases. The first of which is not complete but consists of spotting potential areas, considering public health interests and identifying unsuitable areas for the dump site. Statewide maps provide the screening for unsuitable areas on the basis of geological or geographical inadequacies, or densely populated areas. By the end of the first phase, the candidate areas, or sites of "higher probability" are left.

Phase II includes further screening with more technical criterion to be considered. Mr. Donaldson pointed out that this is a crucial stage and that public safety and environmental standards are the focus point. "Wastes might conceivably seep out" according to Mr. Donaldson, therefore it's vital to consider aspects like the permeability of the soil. The result of Phase II will be the selection of 6 candidate sites. This phase is projected for completion by April 1, of this year.

Finally, Phase III will go through intensive litigation to arrive at one primary site with 3-4 alternate sites.

Mr. Donaldson composed a questionnaire that was distributed to a select group of "public leaders". The questionnaire was designed to ascertain public attitudes and sentiments regarding nuclear generation and disposal, and it became the focus of objections at the meeting.

"This questionnaire is biased...it asks questyions like 'Why do you hate your mother'..." Charged Cpt Charles Baron, chairman of the Citizen's Hazardous Waste Facility Committee of Prince Edward County. Cpt. Baron continued to outline the specific slant to each question, pointing out that there were no qualatative answers for the vague questions.

"Who the hell made up this questionnaire that lives in these counties?" Commonwealth Attorney for Charlotte County, Edwin Baker demanded. He said that due to the bias of the questions, Charlotte County refused to submit answers.

Mr. Teshin defended that the questionnaire was only to gain insight to public feeling and to the potential problems. Mr. Baker moved again, "You've already created the problem. We're trying to end it!"

Mr. Testin, offended by the heated objections reacted."Look, we're out here to take your heat, but also to get your input."

The audience was defensive and seemed ready for attack.

"We don't want it! (a nuclear dump site). "The first I heard about any of this, they were planning on putting the site in the middle of my farm."

It was a case of the farmers and people of the good life versus the "Government officials in three piece suits with Briefcases." The combination was a volatile one and represented the beginning of a long upwards haul for both the citizens of Southside and for the Solid Waste Commission.

Cuts and the Prevailing Attitude

By DAVID AREFORD
and CINDY CORELL

Most every Longwood College student has, at one time or another, ventured past the Rotunda's Joan of Arc, into East Ruffner, maybe just as far as the Registrar's office, maybe even farther to the Payroll Office to pick up a check, or the more common experience may be a quick trip down the hall, to the left, where the restrooms are tucked away. As they hurry along, caught up in the personal routines of being a college student, they tend to overlook the blue, lurid lettering that graces the yellow doors of the main hall of Administration. This is only one of many halls which house the administrative staff of Longwood College, and their complex workings.

Last Friday, the executive committee of the Longwood College Board of Visitors met in a day long affair which included 22 agenda items. Dr. Verna Armstrong, Vice President of Business affairs was called on to present one of the more important topics: the issue of budget cuts. What are these cuts and to what extent will they affect Longwood college? How will the administration, housed beyond the Registrar's Office, Payroll Office and restrooms, deal with such cuts? Can Longwood College students look beyond the perimeters of their personal routines to realize the crucial role that these administrators play daily in guiding and promoting their college?

The evening before the executive committee meeting, The Rotunda met with Dr. Armstrong to discuss her presentation in an interview that also touched on other areas important to the college.

Dr. Armstrong, interrupting her preparation for the meeting the next day, cleared a space at her work table for us, jumbling a collection of computer data, official reports, and micro-cassettes, to the rear of the table. She began to explain the situation.

Longwood College is facing the fact of a 5 percent budget cut to state institutions for the fiscal year 1982-83, and more recently, Governor Charles Robb, in his annual State of the Commonwealth speech, proposed an additional cut of 6 percent for the fiscal year 1983-84.The 5 percent cut cost the college $308,900.00. The main part of Armstrong's report to the committee was an update of ways the college is meeting this cut.

Steps toward meeting the 82-83 cut include the delay of filling positions, the minimizing of long distance phone expenses, the delay of equipment purchases, the cutting of administrative operating budgets, and the conservation of energy. Armstrong points out that there has been no employer layoffs, and that the retention of faculty is a major goal. She also makes a point of mentioning that the budgets of academic departments and student affairs have not been reduced, and that there are no plans to do so.

Dr. Armstrong could only speculate on the extent of the 6 percent cut and its effects, but she did estimate that the 6 percent cut would actually mean nine or ten percent because the total cut encompasses not only 6 percent off the top but also the subtraction of monies appropriated for salary increases and student financial aid. Thus, as a result of this proposed cut, Longwood College could possibly lose as much as a half-million dollars.

As of yet, Gov. Robb has given no suggestion to state funded colleges of how they might deal with the proposed cut, should it pass. The House Appropriations committee, in their analysis of Robbs plans, came to the conclusion that he is cutting without any idea of how Virginia's college and university system will work, and is reducing for the sake of reducing.

Armstrong could only say, "We feel that it will be really, really tough if this gets through the legislature. We're talking about a lot of money not being made available to the college, and " she sighs, "it is going to call for some interesting actions...we will have to look at all the goals that we have for the college as well as the continuing of activities...it would come down to some good hard decisions. Obviously we can't do more with less money."

It will take the college several months to analyze and even begin dealing with the 6 percent cut. Armstrong can only provide general information.

Throughout our interview, though, we were struck by a prevailing attitude that we think deserves analysis. It is not only the attitude with which the administration will deal with the current cuts, but it is one that has and will surface in all public dealings of the college. It seems this attitude, (or could it best be called a philosophy?) was a result of the inauguration of President Janet D. Greenwood, and her appointments of new administrators, what we would like to refer to as the Greenwood Army, all united under the cause of promoting of Longwood at all costs.

What then is the fine line between Longwood's P.R. — the language of the Greenwood era, as a recent Richmond Times-Dispatch editorial termed it —

Gifts to Longwood Reach All-Time High

Total voluntary private gift support to Longwood College and the Longwood College Foundation, Inc., reached a record $1,058,909.77 in calendar year 1982, according to an announcement made today by Donald Lemish, vice president for Institutional Advancement.

"Two major bequests to the college provided new endowments totaling more than $750,000. Also, three new scholarship endowments were funded during the year," said Hunter Sledd, Jr., president of the Longwood College Foundation.

The record voluntary support figures represent a 180 per cent increase over the previous high year of 1978 when the college received $377,916.91 in gifts and bequests.

"We are deeply grateful to the many volunteer alumni, friends and students who made 1982 such an outstanding year. The Board of Visitors, Foundation directors, faculty, alumni, parents and students all worked with the college staff in fundraising efforts. And it is obvious that the involvement of these people in an organized effort by staff has proved most beneficial to advancement of the college," Sledd emphasized.

Lemish pointed out that a very significant increase was experienced in the total Annual Fund and in the parents and alumni support areas. Total annual alumni gifts reached a record of $81,149.54 from 3,257 donors. Donor participation represented 28.1 per cent of the 11,559 alumni solicited. The dollar increase was 102 per cent over the 1981 total of $40,114.26.

Gifts were received from 640 parents totaling $18,490.84 compared to $9,958 in 1981, representing an 85.6 per cent increase. Faculty and staff who are not counted as alumni provided 247 contributions for $15,259.81 compared to $9,503.86 the previous year.

"Our total annual fund reached $260,486.86 from 4,377 donors, a phenomenal increase over 1981," exclaimed Lemish. The total 1981 annual fund was just over $180,000 from fewer than 1,800 donors.

"I believe these incredible increases can be attributed to positive feelings about the college by a majority of alumni and friends," Lemish said, "and to the very professional leadership of our Annual Fund Director, Miss Alice Martin.

Food Prices Hold The Line

The Farmville area market basket cost 16 cents more this month than it did in December. But this month's figure of $60.39 is 51 cents less than the cost of the market basket in January 1982.

And, for the second consecutive month, Farmville's market basket is not the highest in the state. The Richmond market basket cost $61.03 this month.

Among the 40 items included in the local market basket, 15 items increased slightly in cost this month, 11 decreased, and 14 items remained unchanged from December.

The items with slightly higher prices were flour, bread, pork chops, fryers, tuna fish, milk, eggs, bananas, oranges, cabbage, potatoes, corn, cola drinks, shortening and grape jelly.

Price decreases were noted for soda crackers, round steak, hamburger, bacon, hot dogs, frozen haddock, frozen orange juice, celery, lettuce, peas and coffee.

Prices remained unchanged for corn flakes, cheese, ice cream, evaporated milk, frozen green beans, apples, carrots, onions, peaches, tomatoes, tomato soup, peanut butter, margarine and sugar.

As month-to-month changes in food prices have become less, the difference between the high-priced basket and the low-priced basket also has become less. This month, the difference between the high and low baskets was $6.72.

Dr. Anthony Cristo, who directs the local market basket survey, states that "bargains may still be found, but consumers are going to have to search more diligently to find them."

The Farmville market basket study is an ongoing project of the Economics Seminar Class at Longwood College, taught by Dr. Cristo.

Missy Seay, Artist of the Month

Mary Churchill Seay, a Sophomore Art Major, is Longwood College's Artist-of-the-Month for January 1983. Missy transferred from Meredith College in Raleigh, North Carolina, to pursue a B.F.A. in Art, probably in painting and drawing.

The faculty of the Art Department awarded this honor for her untitled acrylic painting because of the outstanding design and execution of her spacial illusions.

Missy has always had a strong interest in drawing and painting, since she first was able to pick up a crayon. Evidence of this early interest still exists on the back of her mother's closet door as she first began wall murals at the age of 3. Throughout her junior and senior high school, she took private lessons to help satisfy her artistic interest. In her junior year, Missy's art teacher was Petie Grigg, a former Art Major and graduate of Longwood College. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M.L. Seay of Richmond, Missy was graduated from Douglas Freeman High School.

Her painting will be on display in the Bedford Building throughout the month of January. The public is cordially invited to visit the Art Department of Longwood and view this work of art as well as other students' work.

Back Doors to Open At Longwood

The Back Doors and special guest, Chris Bliss, will perform Friday, February 4, 1982 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, as the major concert of Longwood College's annual Mardi Gras weekend.

The Back Doors is a group touted to be an ewxact reenactment of the legendary rock and roll group, The Doors. The lead singer, Jim Hakim, imitates the late Jim Morrison, who was the lead singer of The Doors.

Jim Hackim has recently been named the major contender to star in the film Morrison, about the legendary rock and roll star. The Back Doors will provide the studio soundtrack for the film.

The special guest for the major concert, Chris Bliss, is a juggler who just completed a 31 city tour with the group Asia, this summer. His act includes comedy with the added attractions of light shows, music and a style of choreographed juggling.

The concert is sponsored by the Longwood College Student Union and tickets are $5.00 for students and $6.50 for General Public. Advanced tickets for the reserved seats may be purchased in the Student Union Office, Lankford Building.

Webber Discusses Computer

The next Faculty Colloquium Lecture at Longwood College will explore what happens inside a computer that enables the machine to produce the desired result.

Dr. Robert P. Webber, associate professor of mathematics and computer science, will discuss "Input-Output Operations on a Computer" on Wednesday evening, January 26, at 7:30 in the Wygal Building. The lecture is open to the public at no charge.

In his lecture, Dr. Webber will concentrate on input and output operations on the Radio Shack TRS80, one of the popular microcomputers on the market.

"People who program computers using high level languages such as BASIC or FORTAN, or those who use program packages written by others, miss an appreciation for what happens inside the computer," Dr. Webber said.

On the other hand, the assembly language programmer "becomes intimately acquainted with the inner workings of the machine."

He will use original assembler programs to put the computer through its input-output paces.

Dr. Webber holds the Ph.D. in mathematics from the University of Tennessee. A member of the Longwood faculty since 1972, he is the author of college-level textbooks on PreCalculus and Mathematics for the Consumer and has presented many papers at national and regional meetings of professional organizations.

To the Editor,

I would like to use this space to respond to Mr. Allen Aitken's letter to the Editor, entitled "Dr. Hyde." In this sniveling excuse for his own failure to achieve, Mr. Aitken manages to slander one of the finest professors at Longwood, Dr. Helms.

Mr. Aitken claims to have studied 15-17 hours for the second exam in Dr. Helms American History class. Really Allen, you should know that it's not how much you study but how well you study that counts.

Mr. Aitken then quotes Dr. Helms, out of context of course. As telling a young lady that if she was nervous around him "to take valium". A serious charge, as Dr. Helms is a Doctor of Philosophy, not medicine. I am confident, however, that if put in its proper context it would show Dr. Helms to be kidding.

Poor, poor Allen. He goes on to conceed that his score of zero for writing in pencil was "due in part" to his own carelessness. What Allen fails to point out was that he was told at least four times of the written rules applying to the test. First at the beginning of the course; second on the course outline which he was told to bring to his tests; third Dr. Helms told him just before he took the test, remember; fourth, at the top of the test itself. No, Allen the zero you received was not "due in part" to your carelessness, but rather was due totally and entirely to your carelessness. Suppose you graduate someday and apply for a job somewhere and the employer states that you can't use pencils (once, not four times) and you do, what do you think your chances are for getting that job? Employers want staffs who can take directions correctly.

Mr. Aitken then goes on to make the silliest of his accusations. (For effect imagine soft violins playing in the background, as tears swell up in your eyes). He states that Dr. Helms treats students as "less than human". I have had Dr. Helens for a number of courses and never have I been treated as "less than human", No I've never been tarred and feathered. keel havled, flogged, bended, folded, spindled or mutilated. I have however, because of Dr. Helms political prominence been able to meet then Atty-Gen. Marshall Coleman, then Gov. John Dalton, then Rep. and now Sen Paul Trible and Sen. John Warner. As far as Sen. Trible was concerned, Dr. Helms brought him to see us. If this is how Dr. Helms inhumanly treats his students, I can't wait to see how he humanly treats them.

Mr. Aitken then states that Dr. Helms should become part of the environment conducive to education in order for his students to learn and grow. In light of this statement, I would suggest to Mr. Aitken that he repeat this course at his local community College or with an easier professor. For what Mr. Aitken simply lacks the ability to understand is that Dr. Helms is truly the personification of these elements.

Trisha Boyle, New SGA President Adheres to Time Honored Philosophy

the students. The position was not very effective in the past because it wasn't well-organized. At the end of my freshman year a reorganization of SGS began, and it's definitely helped. This year we're going to work on internal organization, promoting awareness of student government and combatting apathy."

Two of her goals are establishing an Appeals Board for elections, which would handle election-related complaints, and having the Student Senate meet weekly instead of twice a month.

As SGA president, Trisha oversees both the 10-member Executive Council and the 42-member Senate. Four committees — Campus Life, Residence Hall Life, Student Union and Legislative Review — report to the Senate. The first three committees initiate most activities and suggest policy proposals to the Senate, which then makes its recommendations to the president.

Interestingly, all of this year's SGA officers are junior class officers. The other SGA officers are Lynda Whitley, vice-president; Cole Shanahan, corresponding secretary; Carolyn Tinsley, recording secretary; and Judy Philbrook, treasurer. "It's not a clique, as some people think; it's just that the same students do everything," said Trisha. "When the administration wants something done, it knows who to turn to."

Another coincidence lies in the fact that three of the past four SGA presidents have been members of Alpha Gamma Delta. They include Cherie Stevens, Trisha's predecessor, and Tammy Bird, who was president two years before Cherie's term.

Trisha, who wants to teach high school business, enjoys the closeness between faculty and students at Longwood. "If you miss class one day, the next day the instructor will ask you 'Were you sick? We missed you.' I like that."

Although Longwood's SGA has traditionally been strong, Trisha pointed out, it was hurt in recent years by apathy and misunderstanding over its reorgainization. "Since the restructuring, we've been somewhat weak because we haven't gotten ourselves organized. We can become much more effective."

Trisha Boyle is just the person to set matters right again. She doesn't mind hard work.

Trisha Boyle, Longwood College's new Student Government Association president, believes in an old-fashioned virtue — hard work.

"I'm a carbon copy of my father; he's a go-getter," she said. "There's a lot to be offered, but no one's going to hand it to you. You've got to work for it. Being the youngest of six children, I've had to fight for everything."

That philosophy has carried her a long way. A business education major from Virginia Beach, Trisha has held a variety of SGA, class and sorority offices at Longwood. She was freshman class president, served as Alpha Gamma Delta's recording secretary last year and this year is its rush chairman, and she is currently the junior class secretary.

Also, she is a Longwood Ambassador (a student public relations organization), was the Oktoberfest "Festmeister" and was a resident assistant last year. "I've had my hand or foot or mouth into everything here," she laughed.

Trisha, who took over as SGA president this month, defined her role simply: I'm a liaison between the administration and

Dear Editor,

I would like to express my heartiest dissatisfaction on the previous editions of our school paper. I am appalled at the front page articles that you continue to put in print.

Let me first say, that I am not appalled at the issues themselves, but appalled at the fact that you headline them and place them on the front page. "Longwood or Bongwood", "Longwood's Gay Society" and Abortion are the major issues that you have focused on just recently. I realize these issues do exist in our society today and I am not alone when I ask you — Why are you blowing the matters out of hand? Drugs were a controversial issue in high school it's only natural that drugs would continue to exist in college. Do you think that if you print these "eye-catching" articles that more people would read The Rotunda? If so, think again. I have never heard more people groan and put the paper down. I as well as many others I know would much rather be informed on how the basketball team is doing, how successful the mixers we have are, or any other special attractions that have or have been on Longwood's campus. Stop pressing so hard on all of the problems of our society today and reflect on some good aspects of campus life. I feel sorry for you Mr. Editor — You are beating a dead horse.

Stallone Film Bleeds Audience

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

Hollywood rarely misses a trick. Pick any subject, from the creation of the earth to nuclear energy, and you can bet that someone over there has made a film about it. Consider, if you will, the Vietnam conflict. Movie studios have turned out dozens of films depicting the havoc and bloodshed of the era, such as "The Deer Hunter" and "Apocalypse Now," most of which allude to the idea that American involvement in the struggle was a mistake. "First Blood", released by Onrion pictures, makes a similar statement and goes one step further by examining the plight of Vietnam veterans in this country. This is admirable, but there is one problem: it doesn't do it very well.

The film's plot, based on a novel by David Morrel, has something for everyone in the "Smokey and the Bandit" crowd. Sylvester Stallone plays Vietnam veteran Jack Rambo, who singlehandedly takes on the entire police force and National Guard of a Washington community named, ironically enough, Hope. The police department of the town, lead by Sheriff Will Teasle, played by Brian Dennley, is made up of every redneck extra the studio could find. After being arrested and abused by this undertrained, overpaid group, Rambo escapes, and with the aid of various weapons, both stolen and of his own design, proceeds to either kill or disgrace each of them. To the rescue comes his former commander, Dolonel Troutman, played very poorly by Richard Crena. After several hours and at least five arsenals of ammunition, Rambo is taken into custody and the conflict is resolved.

Ted Kotcheff evidently directed this movie over the telephone, if at all. He takes up too much time with a very juvenile array of car crashes and explosions that make "The Blues Brothers" seem like a Day Care documentary. The majority of the scenes are set up in a very awkward manner and point to either his lack of ability or lack of experience as a director, whichever the case may be.

Another of the film's severe problems is its screenplay. Its dialogue reads like a re-run of "The Dukes of Hazzard." for example, when Sheriff Teasle first confronts the shaggy maned Rambo, he utters such less than memorable lines as "We don't like guys like you around here." and "If you're looking for trouble boy, you've come to the right place." The audience responded with laughter. Need I say more?

Despite its problems, I found certain parts of "First Blood" very entertaining. The credit for this goes to the film's star, Sylvester Stallone. He is, by far, one of the best physical actors since Marlen Brando. Stallone has very few lines in the film, but the bodily aspects of his character yield the best acting job of the entire film. Although this is not his best performance (personally, I think his best was the 1977 film "FIST", which he wrote, directed and starred in), it is very refreshing to see him explore areas other than the boxing ring.

After a string of excellent films about Vietnam, it is saddening to see Hollywood come up with a film as disappointing as "First Blood" especially since its its message, that of America's ill treatment of its Vietnam veterans is unique and importa t

Murphy Average but still Effective

In an age where mediocrity has stagnated, where the final desperate jabs against the conservative American success ethic are over for the time being, Eddie Murphy fits right in. King of the most recent "Saturday Night Live" court, Murphy is a prime example of the fact that although American entertainment today is of good quality, it is not top notch.

His album, Eddie Murphy, on the Columbia label, is good, but not great, just as "Saturday Night Live", the newest Ford Mustang, the Go-Go's and the current World Series champs are good, but not great. Like everything else on the contemporary American scene, Murphy's comedy is hybrid. His most obviosus borrowings are from Richard Pryor in the form of overabundant abusive language and his attempts at distinguishing black American culture from white. "When I go to the movie, I'm going to the white theater 'cause black people be talkin to the screen. 'What the f...you gonna do now! You done dropped your pistol when you broke through the window!"

He does other routines developing on the racial barrier but he is never as convincing as Pryor was before he burned out (no pun intended). This is perhaps because Murphy was brought up in the middle class and not in the poor where most of the material that has inspired past comedians, black and white, has come from.

In addition to this style, Murphy is capable of working with the old Bill Cosby style of personifying his friends and relatives. Going from drunk fathers to cold grandmothers to scared girls, Murphy gets a fair amount of laughs but never threatens to bring the house down as his predecessors did routinely.

Where Murphy is best is not when he tries to relate his audiencre to characters out of his own experience but when he talks about something we are all familiar with. Take the new voice systems that have replaced buzzers in cars; "I put the key in the car and the car said, 'Hey man, somebody stole your battery! I say we go get the mother —!"

If I had my choice I would make Murphy live in Harlem for about ten years and bring back Pryor, for whom all the foul language is a useful device. I would bring back George Carlin to describe a Hell's Angel gone preppy. I would bring back Woody Allen to cast his own neurotic self in to the character of Billy Graham's hatchet man. But this can not happen and for now we will have to accept Eddie Murphy as the top comedian around. But one thing makes that acceptance easy. That is his comment about one particularly evil man. "Now what's your rationale for shooting the Pope. I guess the guy figured, "Hey look, I want to go to Hell and I don't want to stand in line with everybody else. I want to take the Hell Express."

Even in mediocrity, we are sometimes capable of Brilliant flashes.

Incidentally, both sides of the album are ended by studio songs and not by comedy routines. Don't bother listening to the songs.

Coda Back to Basics

By CHRIS YOUNG

A coda is "a closing section in a musical composition that is formally distinct from the main structure."

Led Zeppelin's "new" album is called Coda, and as the title suggests, I guess that's the last we'll hear from Zeppelin as far as new material and the whole band is concerned.

This album is Zeppelin in the form we know and love. Their last album, In Through the Outdoor was a step in a different direction for Zepp. It was a more modern "sound like` everyone else" album.

Coda is back to the basics. It consists of material previously recorded, but never released.

One strange thing about this album is that it contains some material that was written by other people (such as Willie Dixon). Usually Zepp does their own stuff.

The album starts out with someone else's cut, called We're Gonna Groove. The beginning of it sounds like a garage band with a quick drummer and a guitarist playing his two favorite chords. Of course, Zeppelin can get away with this, and they also do an excellent job of it.

When Poor Tom comes on, you stop and just listen to the drums. Unreal! It's a wonder anyone can keep a beat that difficult throughout the whole song, but gone and not forgotten, John Bonham does it.

Coda has a lot of great drumming. In fact, the whole album seems to feature Bonham. (This is a good album for beginning to listen to if you want to hear what they'll never sound like).

I Can't Quit You Baby. This is the Dixon song, and it's not the same one as on Led Zeppelin III. This is downright Blues, and features guitarist Jimmy Page at his all-time best. If you ever hear this song, listen to Page and cry!

Walter's Walk is one of those songs that is good, but it just doesn't reach out and grab you.

On side two is the song that's gotten the most air play from Coda. It's called Ozone Baby, and it moves. It features Page playing a Sub Octivider, and excuse me for being dumb, but I have no idea what it is.

Darlene is a little hard to understand, and it misses the touch of the sub-octivider!

Contrary to what CREEM Magazine says, Bonzo's Montreux is the high point of the album. It's a pretty simple drum solo by John Bonham, but man, is it powerful! This guy is the undisputed king of the bass drum.

Closing out Coda is Wearing and Tearing which has also been getting a little air play. It suffers from bad recording, as does the whole album.

One great thing about this album is that it doesn't have that perfect studio feel. It has that great live feeling.

Zeppelin is one fourth gone (John Bonham) and as the cliche says, all good things must come to an end. It's just a shame that it all had to end because of the death of an excellent musician and a founding member of the band.

Witch Hunt At Longwood

January 17, 1983: 10:10 a.m. — A Monday. A prevalent notion is spreading amongst Longwood students concerning witches on campus. Some passing words from a friend are "Did you hear about the witches?" No one is quite sure what to make of it all. Theories abound, one of the more persuasive — that a troupe of Hamsters too drunk to walk are spreading vicious rumors about Longwood females. A possibility — I disregard no hypothesis until all the evidence is in.

10:50 a.m. — I am down in the bowels of Lankford building near the post office and have just seen verifiable proof — a poster "Witchcraft — The Path of Wisdom, 6:00 p.m. French Lobby Room — Presented by the Department of Philosophy". This is too hot for me. I am thinking about calling Darwin McGavin of the "Nightstalker" series, but remember he is dead — perhaps an evil portent. I will go it alone.

6:30 p.m. — I arrive fashionably late. The French lobby is well lighted, 20-30 Longwood students and faculty members are massaging each other's backs and giggling. A small mousy woman in a long plaid kilt and a black blouse is speaking. This is Lady Yvonne Frost, according to the posters. One of the two leading witches in the U. S. The other leading witch is her husband, Gavin Frost.

He is sitting in a sweat suit and smiling — There are no cackles.

6:34 p.m. — I sit down near the front. I hope Yvonne doesn't notice the wooden crucifix, bottle of Holy Water, and silver bullets which are bulging my pockets outward. She might smell the garlic around my neck but there is nothing I can do. It's too late now.

6:36 p.m. — The lecture begins: Founders of the church and - School of Wicca in Newborn, N.C., Yvonne and Gavin Frost set Witchcraft as the cornerstone of their faith. Witchcraft or as the Anglo-Saxon word it is derived from implies — wise craft incorporates everything but the kitchen sink — poly-theism, monotheism, para-psychology, astral entities negative forces, positive forces, dawn power, raised power, Auhnks and black stars, but I am suspicious. They don't act like witches. There is no incense, no eye of the newt, no warts, no steaming potions. Gabin is a flesh and blood jolly Jack Frost — a close trimmed Santa Claus. Yvonne could pass for a latter day Barbara Walters. There is no real hiearchy to their religion and only one real code "And it harm no one. Do what you will."

The Frosts say "Witchcraft is about living the most decent life you can. In accordance with what's natural, that's what it's about, not blue balls of fire."

"Lies, lies," I think and finger my silver bullets.

6:48 p.m. — The lecture contin-ues: An English man, Frost first got caught up in witchcraft in 1956, the year the English witchcraft law was repealed. He has a Ph.D. in mathematics from London University and was vice-president in charge of international sales for Emerson Electric in 1972 when he and his wife began making witchcraft the focus of their lives.

They raised hogs in Newburn, N.C. for a while (Newburn is where the first amendment guaranteeing freedom of religion was written — a fact the Frosts frequently mention) and finally started the Wicca Church. They received tax exempt status and began writing books and offering correspondence courses such as "Basic Witchcraft" $100) or "Pr actical Sorcery" ($140). Their latest how-to book on the occult is "Astral travels, Your Guide to the Secrets of Out of the Body Experience." According to this 240 page rhetorical reader resembling a fad diet book, a person can learn to travel forward and backward in time, perform exercises and improve on individual sex lives. They also make a few interesting assertions from their own experiments in this area. (90 per cent success rate, thus far) such as 1) There is no hell (they assigned 2,000 people to find it during a controlled out of the body experience (OBE) and they couldn't). 2) Celestial entities known to laymen as souls, weigh exactly 2 ounces. (During an OBE, a person whose soul was flapping here and yon laid his body on a scale. In each case it was found to weigh 2 oz. less when the soul was in flight) 3) As an astral entity travels toward the future its environment becomes brassy and malleable, changing constantly. Conversely as it travels toward the past its environment begins to fade out and becomes less definite.

Their theological system is unconventional in the extreme. They believe in a non-identifiable Prime-Mover which corresponds roughly to an omnipresent being (someone kept yelling Spinoza!) Underneath or above or in the middle of this Prime Mover There are a host of lesser god figures, which exists as a result of our belief in their existence. Our pyschic energies fuel and up this chain of god entities. When a human concentrates by prayer or meditation on one of these images he is adding that much more energy to it.

Magic, if one can call it that, is simply the tapping of potential energy stored in these god or messiah concepts. And to do this, one uses the greatest tool any witch has — the mind.

"Sure . . . in the mind", I think. That's what they want you to believe. I wonder if Holy Water can really burn them.

7:05 p.m. — I shift in the chair, my hand is on the crucifix. I recall a scene from an occult movie in which a person tries to ward off an evil witch with a paper mache crucifix. She dies because it is not made of wood. I dig my fingernails into the cross. Just to make certain. Gavin is discussing entropy with philosophy Professor Dr. James. What has witchcraft got to do with entropy? I wonder. Or for that matter the other terms being thrown about — clairvoyance, telekinesis, telepothy. Has mysticism given way to empiricism? Has empiricism given way to mysticism? The phrase "All in the Mind" keeps bouncing around my skull.

7:15 p.m. — Discussion has turned to the uses of magic. The Frosts' profess an interest in long range healing. Using a photograph or lock of hair from the "client" in question and performing the necessary rituals to "tap" the latent energy resources for healing purposes. Their pet disease is arthirtis; one that they claim is pychosomatic. Yvonne says "this isn't Lourdes, it's New Bern or Farmville . . .We don't need pilgrims on crutches" Witches heal?

7:30 p.m. — The lecture is coming to a close. I wonder if anyone has been converted. The Frosts do not proselytize, yet still have 2,500 students enrolled in their courses and by their own estimates have reached about 20,000 people. They run ads in such magazines as Psychology Today and the National Enquirer. Which makes one wonder if witchcraft is a grossly underrated untidy religion with such concepts as reincarnation, levitation and faith healing rolled into a messy metaphysical bundle; or is it a giant, good natured hoax? I reach to shake Yvonne's hand — It's smooth and waxy. I remember Yvonne saying that she is looking forward to being reincarnated as a dolphin which she thinks is a higher life form. I have a difficult time picturing her as a dolphin. But then I have a difficult time picturing either of them as witches.

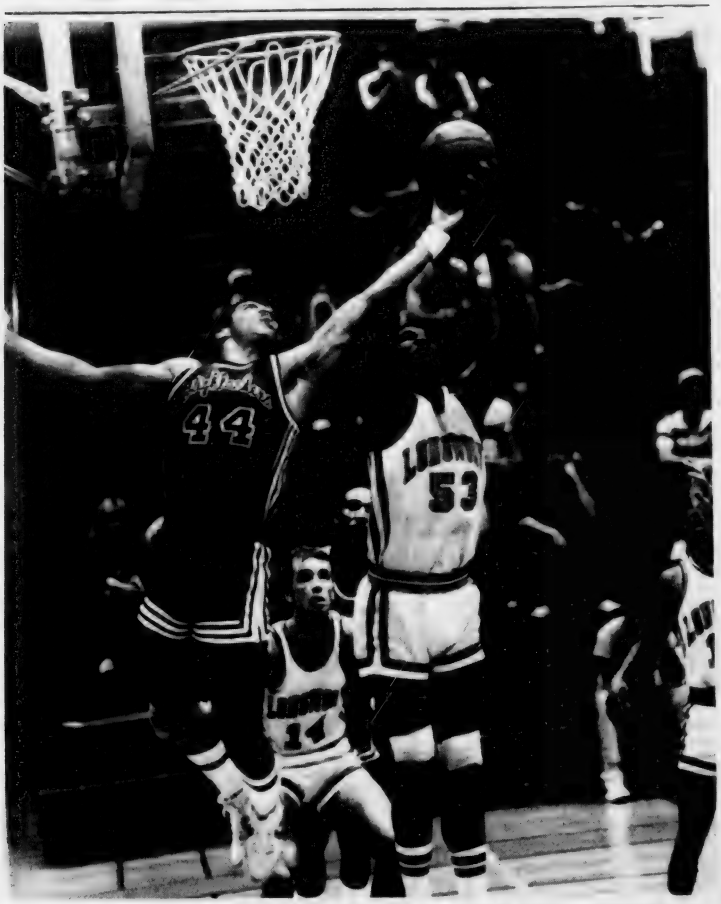
A Look At Corporate America—Nestle's Promotion of Infant Formula

By JUDY PHILBROOK

If there is a demand for a product one manufactures, one should be able to sell it, right? The Switzerland-based company Nestle feels that their infant formulas are supplying a demand in Third World nations, and that they should be able to sell the products to anyone who wishes to buy them. Churches, organizations and the World Health Organization disagree with this theory. They feel that Nestle infant formulas are hurting the consumers, so the formulas should either be taken off the market, or sold only through use of much public education and less advertising. But the question is does Nestle have a responsibility to these consumers? After all, the product is perfectly safe if used correctly. Nestle is within its rights to promote their product — aren't they? This paper will discuss the great debate over infant formula promotion by Nestle and other companies in Third World countries.

"As many as 10 million infants annually are victims of diseases related to bottle feeding." These babies are dying from malnutrition and starvation due to formula that is watered down. The starvation process begins upon birth. Mothers are bombarded with posters that promote infant formulas as well as receiving advice from doctors who are unaware of infant formula problems. The mothers leave the hospital confident that this "modern convenience" will properly feed her baby. If she lives in an impoverished community (which the majority of families do in Third World nations) she can receive free samples of Nestle's Lactogen from a "nurse." The mother tries the formula on her baby and finds it to be well received. She then goes out and spends a whole day's wages on one container of formula. Because the formula is so expensive, she dilutes it to make the formula last longer. Most of the women in these communities don't have refrigerators and may not even have heard of refrigeration, so do not realize the dangers of leaving the formula out in the rooms. In such communities sanitation is very poor; water is polluted, houses are unclean, and sterilization of baby bottles is nonexistent. Water added to the formula contains enough bacteria to make the child sick. Also, when extended, the formula loses its nutritional value per serving so the child does not receive all the necessary nutrients to satisfy daily feeding requirements. This "liquid gold" is also a liquid death.



Those are just some statistics of infant disease. So why do mothers continue to use the products if they are so harmful to their babies' health? The answer is one of the greatest promotional campaigns ever conducted by a multi-national corporation — mainly Nestle of Switzerland.

Let us go back to the scene of the first promotional "push", at the hospital. Those posters are put up by Nestle sales representatives, and the doctors are too busy to understand or to take time to find out the type of environment the mother comes from. The mother who believes anything "modern medicine" has to offer starts feeding her child the formula.

Next scene is in the market. The mothers gather around a "nurse" who is telling about the benefits of formula use. This "nurse" is actually a Nestle salesperson dressed in a professional uniform. Because of Big Night — Longwood senior center Ron Orr scored a career high 28 points against Radford last Monday.

Lady Lancers Have Tough Road Tilts

Now 5-8 after three losses on the road last week, Longwood's women's basketball team will return home Thursday to host Liberty Baptist after playing at William and Mary Tuesday. Topping off a busy week will be a trip to Richmond Saturday afternoon to play the Division I Spiders.

With a 4-0 record in games played in Lancer Hall and a 1-8 mark on the road, Coach Jane Miller and her team are looking forward to playing seven of their last 12 games at home.

In action last week Longwood fell to Radford 57-43 Monday, Guilford 60-50 Thursday and the top rated Division III team in the country Pittsburgh-Johnstown 66-50 Saturday afternoon. The Lady Lancers continue to play solid defense, giving up just 58.4 ppg. but have been unable to generate enough offense recently.

The top two career scorers on this year's team topped Longwood in point production last week. Senior Cindy Eckel upped her career point total to 883 with 13 points against Radford, 13 against Guilford and seven saturday. Leading scorer Florence Holmes who has 460 career points in two years, had totals of 13, 17 and 12 in the three games last week. Holmes is averaging 12.9 ppg.

Senior center Barbara DeGraff had a good week with 25 points and 21 rebounds in the three contests.

An added attraction at Thursday's home contest with Liberty Baptist will be an appearance by the Cumberland High School Band. The Dukes will play before the game and at halftime, plus during breaks in the action.

Gymnasts Get Four Wins

Despite competing at less than full strength because of injuries, Longwood's gymnastics team defeated four of five opponents in a pair of meets over the weekend to bring their season record to 5-3. The Lancer gymnasts host rival Radford, the defending state and regional champ, Friday night at 7:00 in Lancer Hall.

Friday Longwood defeated Maryland Baltimroe County and Pittsburgh-Johnstown in a tri-meet at UMBC. The Lancers scored 137.45, UMBC 134.10 and Pitt-Johnstown 126.90. Leading the way for Longwood was soph Dayna Hankinson with firsts in beam (7.5) and floor (8.3), Gray Stabley with a third in all-around (29.75), a second in floor (7.9) and a third in bars (7.6). Freshman Judy Wagner was third in vaulting (8.3) and Allison Berry was third in beam (6.8).

Saturday Longwood (139.95) was second behind West Chester (157.20), but ahead of Ursinus (111.50) and host Navy (108.65).

10-5 Lancers Face LBC, Trojans

After losing to Radford 78-70 on the road and beating Atlantic Christian 77-66 at home, Longwood's men's basketball team hosts Liberty Baptist Tuesday and Virginia State Saturday in action this week. Both games tip-off at 8 p.m.

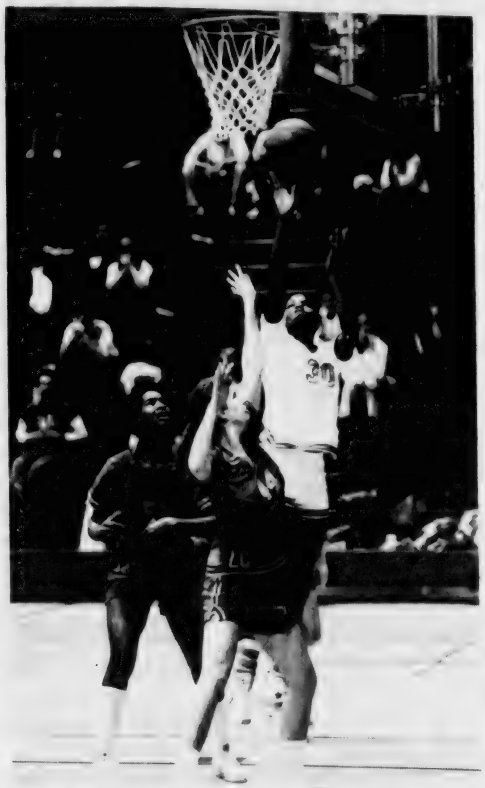
Liberty Baptist (12-5) beat Morgan State 68-51 Saturday after losing to Radford 71-63 earlier in the week. The Flames are a dangerous team as evidenced by their 59-57 road win over last year's Division II runner-up Florida Southern in December.

The Trojans, despite a recent slump, remain a formidable foe with 2,000 point career scorers Darrell Stith and Julius Norman.

Following this week's action, Longwood hosts Guilford Monday night and visits nationally ranked Randolph-Macon Thursday (Feb. 3).

Longwood trailed visiting Atlantic Christian 51-50 with 11:40 to go Wednesday night when senior Joe Remar and junior Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersery took over. Starting with an alley-oop pass from Remar, Kersey had two thundering dunks and a free throw. Then the 6-7 forward fed Remar for a dunk and the 6-1 guard followed with a fast break layup. When the dust had settled, the Lancers were on top 59-51 with 8:56 left. The Bulldogs never recovered.

Remar, averaging 19.9 ppg., finished with 24 points and six assists while Kersey bagged 19 points, eight rebounds, six assists, two blocked shots and four steals. Senior center Ron Orr scored 14 points and pulled off a game high 13 rebounds.



Orr had scored 28 points, Remar 15 and Kersey 11 with 13 rebounds against Radford.

What looked like a big Longwood victory in the first half turned into a nightmare in the second half. Playing their best half of the season, Longwood led 43-30 at the break. The Highlanders, using their superior depth, stormed back to take the win 78-70 as foul troubles hampered Remar and Kersey in the second half.

Freshman guard Frank Tennyson is a very effective free throw shooter as evidenced by his four for four performance on two one-and-one's against Atlantic Christian. The 5-9 cager also has a unique style of shooting from the charity stripe.

Starting from a deep knee bend, Tennyson rises with the ball cocked to shoot and releases it as he stands up straight. He has hit 15 of 20 for a percentage of .750.

The Longwood College Jazz Ensemble, under the direction of Allen Butler, will provide entertainment at halftime, before the game and during breaks in the action at both the Liberty Baptist and Virginia State home basketball games this week.

Top Scorer Florence Holmes is Longwood's top scorer this season with 12.9 PPG average

Grapplers 3rd in W & L Tourney
Host Tri-Match Saturday

By RONNIE BROWN
Student Assistant

Currently 4-3-1, the Longwood wrestlers dropped a 40-9 decision to the Indians at William and Mary Wednesday and placed third in the Washington and Lee Invitational Saturday. The Lancers host Lynchburg and Loyola in a tri-match Friday. Action begins at 2:30 in Lancer Hall.

Coach Steve Nelson's wrestlers were the favorites going into the Washington and Lee Tournament, but because of an injury to Chuck Campbell and an abbreviated roster the Lancers were not at full strength.

Freshman Terry Hale won top honors in the 126 weight class as he turned in a perfect 3-0 mark to pace the squad. He won a 13-5 decision over his opponent from W&L and scored pins at 4:29 and 4:00 to win over wrestlers from Pfeiffer and Elon respectively.

Coming in second were freshman Tim Fitzgerald, a 118 pounder, and soph Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder. Sophomore Steve Albeck and senior Joe Bass each won third at 142 and 177 respectively. The Lancers combined for 52.75, while W&L earned 53.25 and Elon won the Championship with 72.25 points.

Nelson previously noted that the second semester is similar to a new season and it would take time to adjust.

"We did not wrestle with the intensity we had before (November 22 match at Elon)", noted Nelson. "After being knocked out of contention for the title, it was hard to wrestle for second or third."

Albeck Player of Week

Sophomore Steve Albeck turned in a 4-0 mark at 142 pounds last week for the Longwood wrestlers last week and the Lancer grappler has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 14-21. Player of the week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Albeck, the team captain, won three matches in the Newport News Apprentice Tournament to take the title at 142 January 14-15 and Wednesday night in a 40-9 loss to William & Mary, he defeated his opponent 6-5 for his fourth straight win. With an 8-5-1 record heading into the Washington & Lee Tournament last Saturday, Albeck has helped Longwood compile a 4-3-1 record.

"Steve is wrestling extremely well," said Lancer coach Steve Nelson. "He was unseeded in the Newport News Tournament and surprised everyone by upsetting three opponents to win the only championship for Longwood."

Albeck, who was also a standout grappler last year as a freshman, is a graduate of West Springfield High School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Albeck of Springfield.

Northern Virginia Grapplers Play Key Role In Lancer Success

By BECKY DUNK

In four short years, the Longwood College wrestling team has gone from the outhouse to the penthouse. Currently ranked ninth in the state — the second highest ranked small college in Virginia — their 4-3-1 record displays a great amount of improvement over their first record of 1-9. Under the leadership of Coach Steve Nelson, the Lancers appear to be headed for their first winning season ever.

Why has the team improved so much in four years? "Recruiting has made a big difference in the team's success," says Nelson. "We're recruiting mainly Virginia athletes who come from good high school programs. We're very fortunate to have quality athletes."

Twelve of the fourteen guys on the team are freshmen or sophomores. "We're a very young team," says Nelson. "Last year's squad consisted mostly of freshmen and half of them are still with us."

"Wrestling is a very demanding sport," he adds. "A lot of the older guys have to leave the team as school work gets tougher."

A large part of the team's success is due to the squad's middleweights. Four of Longwood's top middleweights are Joe Bass, Dana Dunlap, Chuck Campbell and Steve Albeck, all Northern Virginia residents.

Joe Bass, a senior Business Administration major, wrestles at 177 pounds. He wrestled three years at Mount Vernon High School, and one year at Chowan College before coming to Longwood. Bass won the district wrestling title his senior year at Mount Vernon.

"I came to Longwood with Coach Nelson, who was then the coach at Chowan," says Bass. "When he got the coaching job here, he talked me into transferring."

Bass, with a 10-4 record to date, is an avid wrestler who has shown considerable improvement this year. According to Coach Nelson, "He's a quality wrestler . . . very difficult to beat. He's the toughest 177-pounder in Virginia. Joe will hold Longwood's record for the most wins after this season."

Dana Dunlap, a sophomore Earth Science major, transferred to Longwood from Northern Virginia Community College. A 167-pounder, Dunlap's reocrd presently stands at 5-5-1. He wrestled four years at Robinson High School in Fairfax, where he won the district wrestling title three times. He was also second in the region one year.

"Dana's a physical wrestler with a lot of ability," says Nelson. "He wrestles in many close matches. He's a good, solid wrestler."

Chuck Campbell, a sophomore Earth Science major, has a 7-3-1 record this season. "My high school coach suggested that I come to Longwood," says the 150-pounder. "He told me they had a good wrestling program, so I checked it out and decided to come here."

Campbell wrestled four years on the squad at Thomas Edison High School in Alexandria, and was team captain his senior year.

"Chuck is a very competitive, aggressive wrestler," says Nelson. "He has an awkward style, but he's very effective with it. Chuck is also an excellent pinner."

Campbell's status for the remainder of the season is questionable due to a knee injury which is keeping him out of action.

Team captain Steve Albeck, a sophomore Business major from Springfield, holds an 8-5-1 record this season. (He is 4-0 since January.) The 142-pounder came to Longwood from West Springfield High School, where he won the district title twice. Albeck was also chosen outstanding team wrestler his senior year.

"I came to Longwood after talking to the coach. He convinced me to come here," says Albeck. "I was really just down here visiting. I hadn't intended to stay."

According to Coach Nelson, "Steve is the most polished wrestler on the team. He's a very physical wrestler with good technique. Steve wrestled best during the second half of last season, so we're looking for his record to improve."

Nelson hopes to send at least seven wrestlers to the regional tournament this year, including Bass, Dunlap, Campbell and Albeck. They all participated in regionals last year, with the exception of Campbell who was held back by a broken hand.

As for the remainder of the season, Nelson is very optimistic. "We're definitely on the road to a winning season," he says. "We placed in a tournament for the first time last week end. The guys were really excited. They want to win. If they are consistent and stay healthy, we will finally have a winning season."

pressure from The Infant Formula Action Coalition (INFACT) and the World Health Organization Nestle has taken their people out of the white uniforms and put them in colored uniforms bearing the logo Nestle.

Nestle uses extensiive promotional tactics in the markets also. Giant inflatable plastic replicas of the formula tins are given out. According to the INFACT NEWSLETTER, Summer, 1980, shops and pharmacies use tins of infant formula and feeding bottles as major display items in windows. Plastic bags with handles bearing colorful pictures and slogans are given away. Pens, pocket calendars, writing pads and prescription blocks are other free items used by the formula manufacturers to promote their products.

According to the same newsletter, "infant formula agents were said to give bonuses for large quantity purchases. Bonuses could be given as a discount on the price (2.5 per cent to 5 per cent depending on the quantity purchased), or in the form of gifts."

Because Nestle controls about half of the billion dollar infant formula market in the Third World, an international grass-roots consumer boycott and the "largest non-union initiated boycott in U. S. history" was initiated. Groups such as INFACT and the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility (ICCR) have launched campaigns of their own to force Nestle to curb marketing strategies of promoting the infant formula within the Third World. The groups are asking churches and other supporters to boycott Nestle products sold in the United States and abroad. They also ask for consumers to write Nestle, which has a branch in White Plains, New York, as well as their Congressmen, voicing their concerns of such marketing tactics. This campaign started in 1978 and has been growing steadily since.

In 1980 INFACT was able to obtain a Nestle memorandum written by E. W. Saunders, Vice President of Nestle Nutritionals. The document stated that Nestle chose to fight in the public relations arena, rather than face the growing international consensus that babies' lives must come before corporate profits. Nestle first mailed over 300,000 expensive packets to U. S. clergy and community leaders, under the direction of the world's largest public relations firm, Hill and Knowlton. When that did not stop the boycott, they replaced the firm with Daniel Edelman Company which promoted a low profile strategy. After the World Health Organization and UNICEF published extensive recommendations in October 1979, Nestle distributed hundreds of thousands of press releases claiming they were abiding by the international recommendations. The entire memorandum pamphlet put out by INFACT was truly propaganda to gain public support of the boycott.

The World Health Organization adopted a code restricting the marketing procedures of infant formula manufacturers to protect consumers throughout the world in 1980-81. The only nation to vote against the code was the United States, in what became one of the first embarrassments of the Reagan administration. (The final vote was 118 to 1.) Now 95 groups in 65 countries monitor enforcement of the code. The World Health Organization probably was not surprised by the United States' dissention. Ernest E. Lefever, President Reagan's 1981 nominee for Under Secretary of State for Human Rights (whose Ethics and Public Policy Center benefited from gifts totaling $25,000 from Nestle) said that the United States' delegate would reject the "compassion-coated revolutionary rhetoric and vote against the code . . ."

In 1981 Nestle stated they supported the code in theory. On June 10, 1982 The Washington Post wrote an article saying that Nestle is the only company that has said it will try to comply with the voluntary rules for marketing infant formula (which includes a ban on all advertising and on providing sample cans of formula, directly or indirectly, to mothers). Sales and marketing people for formula companies are banned from contact with the mothers. The June article stated that the company had done so by issuing its own interpretation of the code, which critics have attacked.

Thus the debate over infant formula promotion continues. Nestle feels that they should be able to handle their marketing strategies the way they wish, provided they comply with the nation's laws in which they are selling. If the nation has no specifications, Nestle should be able to sell as they please. The company has adopted some changes in marketing strategies, but not enough according to INFACT, WHO, and many other organizations. Future promotion tactics are the issue; will there be a compromise to suit all concerned parties? While the debating is going on, the mothers continue to feed their babies the infant formula, leading to further tragedies. Advertising has always been conducted by those who could afford it. The continuing issue is does Nestle have the responsibility of all the deaths so that they should curtail profits and admit guilt? If more groups call for positive action on Nestle's part, Nestle could be forced (through public international pressure) to "pull back the ranks." This would be a victory for consumer groups which could set a precedent for future promotional issues of potentially "dangerous" products.

and what these administrators as individuals, actually think? Or are they actually brainwashed automatons that sit in their separate offices reciting goals such as computer literacy and world consciousness which make up the Greenwood Creed? We may never know the personal light of these multiple rays of the "human sunbeam," as the Richmond Times-Dispatch dubbed Dr. Greenwood, because they are always subdued by her dominating and all-powerful light.

We feel it's important to raise these speculations in our efforts to analyze this interesting situation completely. But the administration of Longwood College may simply be an example of people united behind a common cause; their light is not subdued by the "sunbeam," but they voluntarily add to its brilliance.

resulted in personal contact with more than 5,000 alumni. Enough cannot be said for the outstanding efforts of the Ambassadors who did all the telephoning and Alice (Martin), who organized the student Ambassadors and serves as advisor to the organization," said Lemish.

Miss Martin also organized a parents phonathon using a group of parent volunteers under the chairmanship of Longwood Parents Advisory Committee vice president Ross Hotchkiss from Richmond.

"Establishing a strong base of private gift support is not an overnight process," said Lemish. "Steps forward to establish private gift support programs have been made by the Foundation, its officers and past and present staff. Also, the programs and communication efforts of our Alumni and Public Affairs staffs have enhanced our ability to gain private support."

Gymnasts win

Hankinson and Stabley were standouts once again. Dayna won floor (8.5), tied for second in beam (7.55), tied for third in vaulting (8.60) and finished third all-around (30.50). Stabley was fourth all-around (29.60).

"I feel we improved this week," said coach Ruth Budd. "We were missing several of our top gymnasts, but we pulled together as a team. Everyone contributed to our performances over the weekend."

Freshman Kim Kenworthy has been lost for the season because of an ankle injury. Lisa Zuraw, another freshman standout, was out of action with a shoulder injury, but should be back within a week.

Budd says she hopes her squad will be in top form for Friday's meet with Radford. The meet will be one of only two appearances by Longwood this season.

Armstrong, referring to recent misunderstandings over the heating of residence halls, "Before we have any students purposely uncomfortable, we will cut off the heat here (in the administrative offices) completely.

It is behind the helpfulness that radiates from the staff and administration. When Dr. Armstrong says "we are all working really hard. We're here because of the students and we're just committed to do what we can for the students, and cuts or no cuts, we're still going to move ahead," we believe her. The administration is in East Ruffner and is functioning whether the Longwood students know it or not. What some individuals think of their functionings is a different story.

W & L Glee Club

The Washington and Lee University Glee Club will perform Friday, January 28, at 8 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium. They will be performing selections from the repertoire they will present on their spring tour, which follows the concert Friday night.

The Longwood College Concert Choir will join the Glee Club for the last number, "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure. There will be a soloist from both choirs on this selection.

Dr. Gordon Spice is the director of the W&L Glee Club, and the L.C. Concert Choir is directed by Mrs. Pauline Haga. The concert is free of charge, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

VOL. LVIII LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1983 NO. 15

Departmental Advisory Committees Formed

By MIKE LYNCH

Future shock was the theme that commanded the interest of the listeners to Gil Davenport, Senior Vice President of the City National Bank of Los Angeles as he spoke on how just as five-year-old kids can wipe out their parents at Pac-Man these same kids will grow up to perform computer functions that their elders won't even be able to comprehend. His reasoning was something about how they picture the screen and his overall message in relation was that if we don't get on the ball quickly and acquaint ourselves well with the computer we will soon be left behind by people younger than us.

"How many of you have ordered something without checking the size, shape, price and other features of the product," Mr. Davenport said, scoring his main point while everybody ignored their Slater dessert to catch it. "It's the same for college students." His following comment built on that theme, that college students should be tailored to fit the job they seek as closely as possible. He especially pointed out the problems imposed by the vast acceleration of technology, noting that the more acquainted the student is with computers, the more assured he will be of employment.

Gil's audience was perhaps the most impressive group ever to assemble at Longwood College. Among them was a state senator, the President of the Virginia Education Association, two Professors Emiritus from North Carolina University and William and Mary College respectively, a newscaster, a physics expert from the Los Alamos National Laboratory and the guy who tells them what to do on that big kyanite mountain up route 15. They were here last Friday to attend the Orientation Meeting of the newly formed departmental Advisory Committee of Longwood College.

Here's what that means. A Departmental Advisory Committee is a small group of professionals from outside this institution who render advice, assistance and knowledge to the college department that it applies to. For example, Mr. Davenport's field of knowledge is quite obviously the business world so he is on the Advisory Committee to the Department of Business and Economics. In the future that committee will meet with the Business Department from time to time and hopefully assist them in any type of improvement. "We seek your advice, we seek your expertise and we seek your knowledge of the world outside the Longwood campus. We are asking you to help our academic departments in the college answer the question where are we, where do we need to be and how do we get there," stated Longwood President Janet Greenwood in an introductory address to the participants.

The meeting, last Friday, did not involve solving any problems right then but merely got the participants acquainted with the College and its basic intentions, problems and goals. But if what went on is any indication of future results, the possibilities are endless.

Six speeches were given at the meeting, including the luncheon address by Davenport and five others by Longwood administration. Thomas Rust,

An Interview With Toby Thompson

It seemed particularly appropriate that an interview with Toby Thompson should take place in a country bar named the Pioneer Inn. Although he doesn't look like the type — a meek looking man of about 5'8" with blonde thinning hair and a preference for wool mittens — Toby Thompson has spent a number of the best years of his life in, around, and consuming at some of the best bars in America. Of course that's not exactly what he does for a living, for a living he writes...about the great American bar, about other writers, about movie stars like Raquel Welch or Jackie Gleason about...well how far can you count.

He came to Longwood last semester as a journalism professor and The Rotunda's advisor, replacing William C. Woods who is currently on leave. Mr. Thompson professes a certain affinity for the location and, it seems, even though he's been to some of the most movin' bars in the country he doesn 't mind sitting in a nearly vacant Pioneer Inn and nursing a Lowenbrau, while delivering a few candid comments for The Rotunda about himself and journalism in general.

Rotunda — You've been published in The American Film Magazine, Playboy, The Rolling Stone, The Village Voice, The Outside Magazine, The Rocky Mountain Magazine and the Washington Post magazine. You've been contributing editor to the Washington Magazine since 1986 and have had articles printed in many numbers of newspapers across the United States. How did your obviously successful career begin?

Thompson — I was in the writing program with Peter Taylor at U.Va. enrolled in the short story program there. As a matter of fact I was the first person to do a short story as a master's thesis for U.Va. I was very much interested in writing and in fiction. I had absolutely no interest in reporting at that point. That was around 1968 when I graduated with my degree and I had nothing to do. At the time I was obsessed with Bob Dylan. I really loved Bob Dylan becaude he was this synthesizes of a literary figure and cultural idealists. He was the great poet of our time. He symbolized for my generation the incredible impact that a writer could have on the culture and art. So, I didn't have anything to do then and I had some money and I decided to ride out to his home town in Minnesota. I had this notion of finding a story because nobody had ever written about his hometown — where he came from. I called one of his uncles before I went out there. I remembered that Bob Dylan's real name was Abraham Zimmerman and called one of his uncles, a zimmerman and said "if I came out there would you talk to me" and he said "Sure I'll talk to you, never been anybody out here...Yeh I'd be happy to talk to you."

I got in my car and drove straight out there. It was Hipin, Minnesota; it was small town America, very much like Farmville as a matter of fact. Dylan had a very small town-like childhood. Anyways, to make a long story short, I did write an article about that. I found all these people from his childhood, parents, relatives, old girlfriends; including this one wild blonde haired girl named Echoe. We had this romance. It was really Freudian because Dylan was my hero. She was this other side of the tracks creature with long swedish blonde hair — I mean Echoe — talk about a poet's muse. She wrote me poems while I was there. At the end of the visit she wrote me this poem like "You drove me near, You drove me far, You came to town in your little car" — I had this volkswagen— "You stood on your head in my hometown bar" — which I did — and "Hey Toby where you are!" or something totally corny like that. It was really charming and it was a great story. Nobody had ever done it.

I came back to Washington and I wrote this thing up thinking "Esquire" or "Harper" or something like that. I finished it and sent it around to a couple places like that and they didn't want it. Then I sent it to "The Village Voice" and "The Village Voice" in 1969 was the hip newspaper in America. It was what Rolling Stone was going to become; but different, the "voice" has always been different...it's a really great newspaper in a lot of ways. They bought it immediately and it was 60 page article so they published it in 6 installments. I was in "The Voice"serialized, for 6 weeks with this article about, at the time, one of the most fascinating cultural figures. And in one of the most fascinating underground papers I got twelve book offers from that publication. I immediately got a book contract from it and I wrote the book which was Positively Main Street.

Rotunda — You've written two other books besides Positively Main Street.

Thompson — Right, three books all together — The second one was called Saloon which was a book about old bars all over the United States. I spent four years on the road researching that one. It was another book about America — searching for the great American Bar. I really believed there was this place where you could go, where it would all come together. The third book was called The Sixties Report which about the 60's. All three were non-fiction novels.

Rotunda — You seem interested in an all-encompassing view of American Culture...How do you see Farmville fitting into that?

Thompson — Farmville's Fascination for me is as a small town whose influence by the media has been minimal. Everybody of course watches TV and listens to the radio to a certain extent; but the media has not had the incredible changing influence here that it has had in other places. I think that the concepts of neighborhoods are the things that will save us in this country. The sense of community that is necessary for survival in this day and age can be found in small towns. Not that in some cases it isn't a stultifying environment — that there isn't a heckuva lot to do culturally. But the good aspects of it like having breakfast at Walker's Diner...or running into people on the sidewalk that you don't get in larger towns is absolutely fascinating...people can sit and talk. It's a very personal kind of communicative thing. And you miss that a lot of times in larger towns and you certainly miss it in surburban environments. If I had a real villian in my work its surburbia — that geographical phenomena that separates people from one another; that causes them to live their lives in automobiles or in shopping malls; that keeps them from walking down Main Street and running into one and other, that forces them into a stultifying existence.

Rotunda — How do you percieve Longwood — as a community or...

Thompson — College, unfortunately, for our culture is a really anarchronistic experience. When Thomas Jefferson created the University of Virginia he created it as an academic village Where people would live together and study together for X number of years and really expericnce civilization in a small communal way. When people go away to college particularly college as opposed to a larger university, they are suddenly put together on a human scale as opposed to the suburban existence that most Americans live in. They learn how to interact, they learn the responsibilities of living in a small community. And I think that that is absolutely, incredibly invaluable. I think this is the reason that people in later years have a tremendous nostalgia their college days. We are an extraordinarily lonely society; and the older we get, the more lonely we seem to get; you think about a survivor in suburbia or in the great middle class; it is someone who has learned to live with vacancies and this terrible sense of emptiness — there is a sense of communal responsibility that exists in college, very often only in college for most white middle class people.

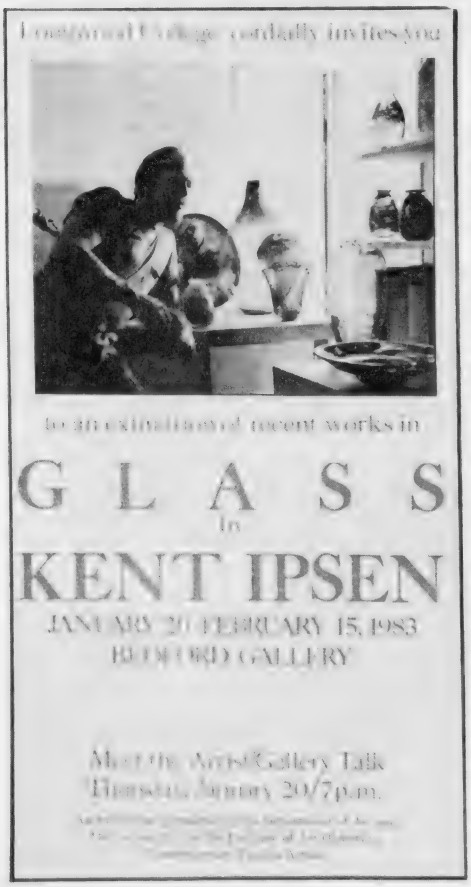
Rotunda How do you see the college newspaper fitting into this sense of communal responsibility.

Toby Thompson in his office with muse; Bob Dylan poster, in the background.

Thompson — There has to be within the community certain people or organizations whose job it is to tell things the way they are. This is one of the functions it seems to me of the college newspaper. Particularly in so small a town as Farmville Virginia. The Rotunda is the forum for news at the Longwood campus; for the communication of ideas and to simply let people know what's going on. The college newspaper in terms of responsibilities must feel as if it's free to print things that are actually happening within the community. That's not to say they should fall prey to the dilemma of large newspapers of always printing the worst possible face of things. But at the same time they shouldn't ignore it. Reporters for college newspapers should have the ability to go into unchartered regions where the rest of the communal body is not comfortable. It's a responsibility to the community to ferret out material that the community may not have the chance or inclination to discover for itself.

Rotunda — The Rotunda has been criticized as being representative of Longwood in a negative manner and as generally bad public relations for Longwood. Do you think such criticisms are justified?

Thompson — I think that The Rotunda should be representative of Longwood. If it becomes a public relations vehicle, then it's not likely to be representative of Longwood. Longwood is a human community just like any other and it's going to have great virtues and strengths and some failures and things that need to be shored up.



I think that traditionally colleges have used things like their school bulletin for P.R. I know I get something from U.Va. as an alumnus that is just pure propaganda for getting contributions. If a college wants to have that kind of publication then it should be run and staffed by public relations people and should be geared towards getting contributions from alumni. If the college wants a true newspaper run by students for the student body then that's what it should have. In terms of my role as an advisor, I can only advise. I am not a censor; I'm a professional journalist and teach journalism to many of the students who write for the paper. If the administration is looking for a P.R. person then they should hire a public relations person; but they're not going to get any professional journalist to act as an advisor and be anything but a professional journalist.

Rotunda — This sense of community you refer to, is that you idea of America's saving grace?

Thompson — The thing that fascinated me about these old saloons after the hysteria of the 1960's was that they were places where people could come together and talk to one another. There was a sense of order; it was a very small town environment. There was not a whole lot of screaming music going on; nobody was taking drugs.

I think one of the most encouraging movements in recent years is the movement back into the city from suburbia. Suburbia is really a post-World War II phenomena. After World War II people had money; they were buying automobiles; they

Glass Exhibition

Works by Kent Ipsen, one of the most outstanding glass artists in the United States and Professor of Art at Virginia Commonwealth University, will be featured in Bedford Gallery thru February 15.

Responsible for establishing the glassworking departments at the Chicago Art Institute and VCU, Ipsen's accomplishments also include featured works in six publications. His work has been included in juried exhibitions and numerous invitational group shows in the United States, as well as Europe.

Work will be purchased from this exhibit for the Collection of Art Objects by Contemporary Virginia Artists, Longwood College. This collection, now a total of 69 works, includes paintings, prints, drawings, ceramics, sculpture, and a mosaic, by some 50 different artists. The works in the Collection are placed in locations throughout the campus where the greatest number of students and others in the college community will see them.

"Glass by Kent Ipsen" is sponsored by the Department of Art and the Committee for the Purchase of Art Objects by Contemporary Virginia Artists.

Citizens Against Nuclear Waste

By JOHNEL BROWN

What to do with nuclear waste is a problem facing all of Virginia now — a problem that must be resolved quickly. Virginia ranks ninth in its production of low-level nuclear waste. Federal law requires that all states make provisions to dispose of their own waste, or form an interstate compact for regional disposal by 1986.

Presently, Virginia transports 90 percent of its low-level waste in Barnwell, South Carolina, but must find an alternative since the Barnwell facility will close in 1992.

Low-level nuclear waste seems to be a confusing concept. Low-level as opposed to what? High-level? Low-level nuclear wastes consists of exposed clothing or equipment used in research, contaminated water, oil and gases. The low-level waste is radioactive and is potentially dangerous for thousands of years.

One of the major concerns expressed by citizens, is the containment of the wastes. Although the federal government specifies "Type A" and "Type B" containers, the ground is the ultimate "container" and must provide the long-term housing of the wastes. It is for this reason that the rock and water tables, and the soil compartment are of vital geological consideration and research.

In reaction to the proposed siting of a low-level nuclear waste disposal in Prince Edward, the county Board of Supervisors appointed a committee to represent the citizens, Prince Edward County Technical Commission on Solid Hazardous Low-level Radioactive waste.

Retired Navy Captain Charles Baron is the chairman of the 17 member commission set up to evaluate the technical aspects of the dumping in Prince Edward. In addition to the 17 appointees, there are five active consulting members, including PhD's from Longwood and Hampden-Sydney. Drs. Fawcett, Ferguson, Lane, Gamborys and Scott are the commission's advisory council for research of more specific scientific data.

The commission is divided into subcommittees which meet separately, and report to the entire body. The commission, in turn reports to the Board of Supervisors.

The second collective meeting of the commission took place Thursday, Jan. 27 in the county's circuit courtroom.

The Committee on Potential Financial Impact reported two recommendations to the Commission. The first suggested the commission develop some general policy to compensate the locality of the dumpsite. The second motion from the committee recommended that the Prince Edward Board of Supervisors contact the Appomattox River Water Authorities about potential adverse economic and ecological downstream effects, and to solicit their support objection to siting in the Southside area.

The Commission is currently working to host a VEPCO representative and an authority from the dumpsite in Barnwell, South Carolina, as guest speakers to the Commission. On the same note, plans are in the working to send two members of the Commission with opposite extreme philosophical views to visit Barnwell.

The commission's next meeting is scheduled for February 10, where more technical developments are hoped to evolve.

Therapeutic Rec

By CINDY CORELL

Therapeutic Recreation, a program affectionately abbreviated T.R., is one of the newest programs for which Longwood students can earn a Backelor of Science degree. And following last October's accreditation for Longwood's T.R. program by the National Recreation and Parks Association (NRPA) this is also the first and only such program accredited in the nation.

"It affords the college a certain prestige," said Frank Brazile, program director and associate professor in the Health, Physical Education and Recreation (HPER) department. "It shows that we are recognized by our national organization as having a quality program," he added. "If someone is looking for a good program at a small institution, we have that to offer them. Also, it opens up the avenue for Longwood College to be recognized nationally in the profession."

Other advantages of this official approval are that this will enhance students hiring potential; the curriculum will become more competitive with more incoming students in the program and the already high quality of the program's faculty members will remain high and so the program grows, more quality professors may join.

The program was approved in 1976 by the State Council of Higher Education in Virginia and consists of about 100 majors and three faculty members: Brazile, Leandra Bedini and David Jones.

Students majoring in T.R. have the advantage of the wide range of applications of their major. These include working with the physically or mentally handicapped, the elderly, victims of substance abuse, or disadvantaged children. These students must volunteer 120 hours in an approved general recreation setting before their junior year and an eight week internship the following summer, plus a 16 week internship in their senior year.

This is one of the points that stood out in the examination of the program by the NRPA. Another important aspect that encouraged the accreditation was the obvious support of the program. "One of the strengths of the program that stood out," said Brazile, "was that the administrative support — from the president to the head of the department — as well as the college-wide support."

The NRPA officials were also impressed with the comprehensive and well-structured curriculum and the fact that 93 percent of the program's graduates are employed in therapeutic recreation or a closely related field.

LC Hosts Meet

Longwood College will host its annual Forensic Meet for high school students on Saturday, February 12. Invitations have been issued to over forty high schools from around the state. Competition will occur in after dinner speaking, oratory, impromptu speaking, extemporaneous speaking, prose reading, poetry reading, and interpretation.

The students in the Forensic Class will serve as the co-ordinators for the events. Those students are: Theresa Alford, Ronnie Brown, Robin Elder, Sherri Fitzsimmons, Leslie Goble, Allyson Issac, Faye Johnson, Steve McCurl, Nancy Paschall, Lisa Turner, Nancy Whelan, Steve Yeaman, Justine Young, Angela Morgan, Sherrie Cook, and Steve Morris.

Any faculty, staff, or student at Longwood that would like to assist in this meet would be welcomed. Please call the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts (392-9361) or Mrs. Anderson (392-5671). The rounds start at 9 a.m. and finish by 11:30 a.m. Awards will be presented at 12:45 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. This marks the fourteenth year that Longwood has hosted this tournament.

College Republic

The Longwood College Republicans held elections recently. New officers are: Ari Kelarakis, chairman; Brian Arnold, vice-chairman; Marianne Smith, secretary-treasurer; and Julianna Verser, membership chairman.

Dr. David Kramer to Speak At Longwood

David Kramer, dean of the College of Social Work and Social Work Education, Longwood College's partner institution in West Berlin, will visit Longwood on Wednesday and Thursday, February 9 and 10.

Dr. Kramer will give a public lecture on Thursday evening, February 10, at 8 o'clock in Wygal Auditorium. His topic will be "The Generation Gap in the Federal Republic of Germany and Alternative Ideologies."

One of the major subjects to be discussed by Dr. Kramer will be West Germany's environmental party, the "Greens," and the important role this party will play in the outcome of national elections on March 6.

During his visit, Dr. Kramer will meet with Longwood faculty members who are interested in participating in an exchange with the West German college. These exchanges could involve a semester or an academic year spent in Berlin, delivering a guest lecture, or contact and exchange of information with individual faculty members there.

48 Hours Defies Expectations

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

After reaching the height of television popularity as the kingpin of NBC's "Saturday Night Live," it is only natural to expect Eddie Murphy to follow in the footsteps of his predecessors and make the cross-over to motion pictures. It is also natural to assume that his movie debut would be a light comedy in which his style of humor is exploited and other well known actors take a backseat. However, Murphy's first movie, "48 Hours" (Paramount Pictures) is everything but the expected.

As the movie begins, false assumptions are quickly recognized. James Horner's soundtrack provides an errie backdrop for what proves to be the biggest display of violence since "The Long Riders." Prison guards are literally "blown away" as the faces of Albert Ganz and Billy Bear, played by James Remar and Sonny Landham, contort into maniacally pleased grimaces. In the hotel scene that follows, a police investigator, empty gun in hand, is mercilessly cut down by the same two murderers with the same crazed expressions. Throughout the theatre, the sound of anxious viewers wondering if they have stumbled into the wrong movie can be heard.

Enter police detective Jack Cates, played by Nick Nolte. Right away, Nolte makes it clear that he is out to do anything but play second string to Eddie Murphy. No longer the pretty face he was in "North Dallas Forty" Nolte brings a new, almost frightening intensity to a nundan, Dirty Harry-type character. His acting provides a stark realism that contrasts well with the films comic relief. Enter Eddie Murphy as jailbird Reggie Hammond. Murphy's acting is good, partly because of the fact that this R rated film allows him to spread into other areas restricted by television, namely sex, violence and profanity. His comedy is both original and humorous, but he has as yet to reach his full potential. As the film progresses, he seems to learn a few lessons from Nick Nolte, and the two act very well together.

Even with the team of Murphy and Nolte, the movie boasts another team that is largely responsible for its final success; that of director Walter Hill and cinematographer Ric Waite. Hill takes on the tremendous task of blending the film's intense dramatic moments with its comic relief. He succeeds in holding the audience in suspense without startling them with abrupt transitions of horrifying them with over-used slow motion shots. His effort is enhanced by Waite's expert photography, which adds a certain artistic touch to the film's more violent scenes. The expertise of Hill and Waite comes into full view in the movie's final confrontation.

All things considered, "48 Hours" is everything but what you'd expect. It is a comedy, but also a gripping drama. Eddie Murphy is prominent in the film, but not to the point that he overshadows Nick Nolte. These facts, along with excellent jobs of directing and photography, make it a film well worth seeing.

Sixty-Eight Cent Shelf

By WILLIAM R. LEAP

A little short on cash and tired of the same old tunes. Where do you go?

When your best friend's trenched out Springstein is just about more than your Sony will take, browsing and dreaming in the local record shop is better entertainment.

After about twenty minutes of taking in the new releases and drooling on your double knits, you know you got to purchase something. Hoping that no one is looking, you slither over to the sixty-eight cent shelf to try your luck. The first thing you yank out is this O.K. looking thing called Don Nix: Gone Too Long. Cream Records Inc. of Los Angeles puts it out. You got to ask yourself what kind of obscene name is Cream Records and who ever heard of Don Nix anyway. Play the record.

Nobody could have made it. It must be left over from the fallout of the fallout of the generation that never was. An abandoned cow chip of a Holstein dying of hoof and mouth in the Swiss Alps, Nix's Gone Too Long is worth far less than the cheap cardboard of the record jacket. An insult to the sophistication of even a smokey grinder's ego, Gone Too Long was scarcely gone long enough. Indeed, it might better have not gone at all.

It is sometimes better to let a record talk for itself. But in this case, a narrator with minimal sanity is prescribed. To spare the reader the agony of melodical rape, Gone Too Long is better read about than experienced.

Don Nix, an obscure artist resembling some kind of schizoid yippie from the atomic wasteland, is best left to the clinical texts of psychological abstracts. He opens his pathetic volume of self-depravation with a kinky little number he calls "Goin' Thru Another Change." With vocal talents borrowed from a drunken Greyhound stooly in Birmingham, Nix goes through a change all right, from a "maybe" to a "I don't think so."

"Feel A Whole Lot Better" sinks him lower than the tidy bowl man. Trying to blow a few disco rejects into a tabernacle choir for harmonic support might make Nix feel a whole lot better but it certainly inflicts the real music lover with a bad case of the Swine Flu and a hundred and four temperature.

The theme song, "Gone Too Long," attempts to tape together the night club sound of a Mangione piano, the driving backbeat of an ARS super hit single, and the acid rock lead of a Climax Blues Band "Gravey." The result sounds like a mutated cow with no legs grunting to jump over the moon while Nix howls in excitement at making the big times and cutting an album. By the end of the theme song, Gone Too Long rates a "trash it."

Side two fares even worse than the rest of the album. In fact, you might better just turn on Lawrence Welk and chug a brew as flip it over at all. The whole album is kind of like a nightmare, no matter how you try to forget it it keeps coming back to haunt you. Like the song says, it keeps me "Rollin' in My Dreams."

Cream Records of Los Angeles might better order a recall on Gone Too Long. Better yet, it might take Don Nix and his barnyard singers back to his "Forgotten Town" and lock him in his "Yazoo City Jail."

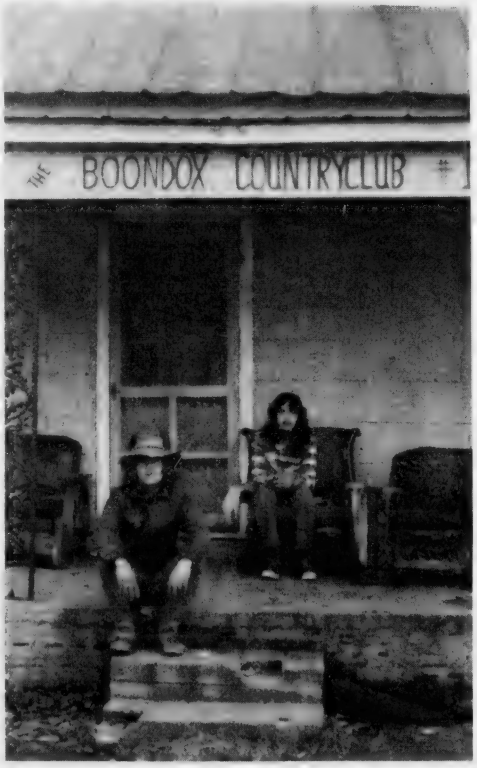
Lord Have Mercy on the Boys From Down in the Boondox

"Boondocks" — the word tells half the story; make you want to break out the old harmonica; takes you down home into the hinter land; the unchartered region rolling and rollicking in sweet sweaty breezes of nothingness, irreverantly loving every second of it.

"Boondocks" — a locale for noble savages perched on decrepit porches jaws pumped full of chew with bugged eyes watching the world whizz by and simply not giving a royal damn.



"Not many places left like that" said Mike Lynch, Asst. Editor to the Rotunda. He was talking about Farmville's boondocks — the boondox country club which was directly ahead of us at the intersection of Rt. 600 and Rt. 637 catacorner the airport road. We were parked opposite the club on a vacant dirt lot which had a single worn "Yard Sale" sign pointing straight to the ground. "I don't think I'm going in" said Mike, his eyes glancing slowly back and forth towards the Boondox and back at the steering column again. "Why not?" I asked.

"Well just look at that place," I looked at it.

Something resembling a porch reached out towards the street. Overhead a beaten and bent red rust powdered tin awning supported by four wobbling cast iron grape vine columns of no grecian heritage I ever knew bore the legend in 2'x2' red lettering. "The Boondocks Country Club No. 1." Below this a remarkable scene of dissemation and chaos lay strewn. The innards of a Cleveland Ford 351 engine rested rust glued to the crumbling cement base of the porch; like a perverted Rodin. Off to the right assorted half eaten chairs and sofas and filthy smudged plastic things were scattered giving the appearance that a vicious God had found some iniquity here or that men had labored for years to make this the appropriate representation of hell.

It had quite a history; the plyboard and plastic over the windows couldn't keep its reputation in those 4 walls. Anyone who had lived near Farmville for more than three years and didn't know of the Boondox existed in a cultural vacuum. It comes up in local conversation as frequently as dark cured tobacco or racial integration. Everyone has their stories . . .

"Hell! You going out to the Boondox? What dja got a death wish or somethin? Let me tell you a couple a years back that place was a huntin' lodge — normal folks used to go out there and do a little partying and then get down to tacks . . . like start cleaning their rifles or hittin' the field for game . . . but now ain't nobody knows what's out there. I say stay away . . . though hear tell twas a whore house at one time . . . but that's besides the point. Now ain't really no tellin' what mischevious vagrants or something might be a waitin' to cut your heart out and steal your money . . . an you listen to me that place ain't empty like you might suppose . . . I rode up there the other day in my pick-up and sure nuff there was that loud rack n' roll mess y'all call music just boomin' away. Probably a bunch a dope fiends out there shootin' stuff into their arms just as crazy and wild as hyenas with their tails on fire . . . If I were you I wouldn't mess with it none . . . stay aways what I say . . . stay away."

So of course I walked across its tire rutted grounds and up its cinder blocked steps and knocked on its creaking fly meshed screen door. I could hear ZZ top's Le Grange playing inside; then a muffled voice, the clash of tin pots clanking against each other, finally off to my right along the outside of the shack? house? club? home? A voice "Yeah, whatja want"

And there he was. Long black hair down to his shoulder blades and a beard that D. H. Lawrence would have taken pride in. Yu'll live out djere?" I said in my best imitation inarticulate southern drawl. "Yeh whatz it to ya?" I debated telling him that I was with the census bureau or that the car was hopelessly waddled in mud up to its rear axles or perhaps the truth that I was this nosey fellow from a Southern Women's College who was dying to find out what the inside of his shack? house? club? home? looked like and just how exactly could someone possibly exist in that architectural oblivion.

But I winged it instead.

I told him I was with the Washington Post.

"You're kinda young to be on the Post ain't dja?"

"Skipped three years in high school . . . late birthday and all that."

I showed him my camera and told him I was working on a story about the unemployed. "Just got in from Houston, I've been interviewing the tent people out there . . . it's really depressing."

"Zat so? . . . Ya gotta cigarette?"

I handed him a cigarette. "Ya gotta match?"

I lit his cigarette and watched the smoke roll out of his mouth as he sat back on the porch and grinned. A kind of sick grin, full of brown teeth and dental plaque.

"So whatja need to know?"

"Well, do you work anywhere around here?" I sat down beside him.

"Work?"

"Do you have a job?"

"Nope I haven't had a job now for upwards a year and half."

"What do you live on?"

"Food and drink I reckon"

"How do you buy food?"

"At a grocery store like everyone else . . . what dja think I'm not normal or somethin' "

"Where do you get the money?"

"I ain't got no money . . . I told you I didn't have a job."

"Well then how . . ."

"My brother he got all the money."

"Your brother works?"

"Which one you talkin' about?"

"You've got more than one brother?"

"Yep got three brothers."

"Do they live here?"

"Sometimes."

"Does your brother with the money live here?"

"His names Dale Hartley same as me 'cept my names Donny not Dale."

"Does Dale live here?"

"Not anymore, he's in jail."

"What's he in jail for?"

"Hittin his boss . . . but that ain't nothing new he's always hitting somebody, all my brothers like that . . . fightin' other folks or each other."

"Do any of your brothers live here now?"

"Jess Jimmy inside."

"Can I talk to him?"

"I reckon so . . . ya gotta 'nother cigarette?"

The inside of the Boondox is like the outside except darker. A close facsimile of a foyer has been stripped of all wall paneling exposing the bare muscle of insulation and wiring which leads to two overhead light bulbs in what they refer to as their living room. The wiring also leads to a J.C. Penny 8-track player with 4 car audiovox speakers stacked on one another and to a 35 dollar hand me down from a hand me down Zenith television set. A cast iron wood stove provides heat for the 5-room locus and two ancient refrigerators, parked inconspicuously in the kitchen cool 6 one gallon milk jugs filled with water swiped from a trailer across the street.

"We ain't gettin' no water from inside 'cause it's pretty bad water."

"Bad?"

"Yeah all red an' gritty."

Clothes and dirt are everywhere and something unmentionable has died a slow death in a rusty pan, brimming with grease, while simmering over their stove.

Jimmy Hartley is a modest reflection of Donny. His hair is lighter and his beard is shorter. He doesn't have Danny's problem with dental plaque because he doesn't have any front teeth. But that doesn't stop him from making proper introductions.

"What the hell does he want?"

"Says he a reporter," said Donny.

"Says he wants to ask us some questions."

He got cigarettes?"

I handed Jimmy a cigarette and began the inquiry.

"So do you all own this place?"

Jimmy laughed showing no teeth.

"Who owns this place?"

He laughed again.

"What's the fellows name? . . . said Donny smiling.

"Lives up in Richmond, Erbie . . . nah Erwin-Erwin Jenkins. His brother used to live here but died of a heart-tack while back. Reckon he knows we live down here; down sent us a notice saying he was gonna tear down the place cause the insurance on its too much to pay. But that was a few months ago and nothings happened yet. Them city fellows ain't too bright . . . they gonna hafta send more then a slip of paper ta get us ta move."

"How long have you been living here?"

"Reckon about two years . . . ever since old man Kayton threw us out of his trailer park down there on Osborne Road . . . that was a nice place won't it Jimmy?"

"Yep sure was, it was a helluva lot better 'n this place. This place at leasts 100 years old; ain't got no good water; no insulatin' an' the doorways is too low."

"Is it true that this place was a hunting lodge?"

"Shoot" said Jimmy pulling the brim of a cracked leather hat fringed with Indian beads and garnished with two huge orange feathers on either side, downward. He leaned back on the sofa on which the three of us were sitting. "Shoot . . . I remember this place since 8th grade when I left school . . . used to be a whorehouse; then hunters used to come in here from the city and bring their own women. Used ta have some good times up here didn't we Donny?"

"Sure did."

"But them hunters just dying out an' this place gettin' older an' older . . . Hell last time a hunter was here; reckon it was last years sometime. Couple a hunters came down pulling their own trailer; jess parked it on our lot ya know . . . didn't even come in."

"Don't get many visitors nowdays" said Donny. "Couple friends from the city or them Jehovah Witnesses, but that's about it."

"What do you do all day?"

"Sit here an listen ta music" Jimmy pointed to a sign hanging over the low entrance to his bedroom Hobo Heaven. "We just sit around and make do; it's a pretty good life ya know."

I took them outside on the front porch for a photograph, and tried to think of a way to wrap this story up. There was a certain irony to the idea that 2 miles farther up 637 was the Wedgewood Country Club; Farmville's very own snob's nob. But either these two raga bonds sitting on the porch steps like man and paw kettle without pitchforks didn't know what was up the road . . . or didn't care. "Hey" Donny hollered after I took the picture "Ya gotta nother cigarette?" "Sure."

The Board of Visitors Meeting
An interview with Thomas Rust

By MIKE LYNCH

When you want to cuss out the people who made the rules here, the Board of Visitors, headed by Mr. Thomas Rust, is who you go to see. The Board meets at the college four times a year, functioning as The policy making body of Longwood College. Thomas Rust became Rector of the Board of Visitors in July, 1981 after joining the board in July, 1980. Originally from Front Royal Va. Mr. Rust attended Herndon High School in Northern Va. Virginia Tech (B.S. in Civil Engineering) George Washington University (Master in Public Works Engineering) and now heads an Engineering firm, while also functioning as Mayor of Herndon. Mr. Rust talked with The Rotunda last Thursday, before the Board of Visitors Quarterly Meeting, in the Presidents office being sure to point out one guideline at the start. "First of all, this is me individually talking as opposed to the Board or anyone else."

Rotunda — From past comments, I'm under the impression that you view Longwood College as a growing institution. What are the major obstacles or strengths that will help or impede this growth?

Rust — I personally view it as a dynamic institution that I think ought to grow and ought to grow in size and diversity of programs. As far as what the major drawbacks are, I think they can be summed up in one word and that's just funding. For the school to grow and not change it's whole philosophy you've got to have money for dormitories, classroom space, equipment, etc...And that is obviously a limited quantity in the commonwealth and probably going to be for some time.

The major strengths I see are in the traditions of the school and the history of the school. It has an excellent reputation, it turns out fine graduates and it's just well thought of everywhere I go and I think that is the strength that we will build on.

Rotunda — When you enact policy what factors do you take into consideration?

Rust — It's my personal opinion, and I think it's generally carried out, that when we set policy we try to have a wide spectrum of the Longwood community involved in it. In other words we try to have input from the student body, input from the administration, input from the community and obviously input from the entire board. The policies are put forward by the administration after consultation with all these groups and generally the policies come, the real work of the board is done, from the committee structure. The board is divided into four or five committees, so a committee will come forward with a specific recommendation it has debated extensively among itself and then it's brought forward and the whole board is involved in the debate. But when we do enact policies we like to think that everyone has had input into it. Obviously that doesn't mean everybody gets what they want. Ultimately the board makes the decision.

Rotunda — How do you expect the five percent cut in the state budget to effect Longwood?

Rust — I think it's going to have a dramatic effect. We were able this year, by some pretty innovative things to lessen the impact of it and by just tightening up everything. I guess the single biggest thing we're looking into is the fuel cost. We did not have to let any people go or cut any programs. We sort of set aside the academics and the library and said those are going to be areas that we will not discuss. If the cuts keep coming I don't know if we will be able to do that. We're just going to have to look at everything. I think the cuts so far have been accomplished by a real tightening up and just being extremely cost conscious. But I don't think there is much more room there. I think the next series of cuts, potentially are going to get in to the areas that really hurt. The school and that's the people area. And that's basically what we are is a people business.

Rotunda — Have the governor, president and political policies in general been favorable to colleges recently?

Rust — Certainly Governor Robb has attempted to be. One of his platforms in his campaign was a strong statement on public education and higher education in Virginia. He did some things last year to help public education in Virginia; financial things. And I think it probably caused him a great deal of consternation to have to put these things in that effect higher education because I think he is committed to higher education in Virginia and I think he is going to do all that he can to help higher education in Virginia but these have just been tough economic times and he's had to make some just across the board cuts.

Rotunda — One final question. Do you believe Longwood College is on the right track?

Rust — Yes, I do. Very definitely I think we're on the right track. We've had some hard times down here, as you know, several years ago. And the things that happened were unfortunate. But I think that with the new administration, the new philosophy, the new outlook, the board is a hard working group of individuals who see good things for Longwood, are committed to Longwood and I think yes, we are on the right path. And I think that Longwood's future is very bright. And I say that as a VPI boy.

Liaison and Affairs Committees Meet

The Student Liaison Committee met with the Student Affairs Committee of the Board of Visitors on Thursday, Feb. 3, from 1:00 until 2:00 in the Board Room the following items were discussed.

(1) The first topic concerned the SGA, its internal reorganization and improved communication. A major project for committee members this semester is to try and come up with written policies for the organization of committees without written constitutions. The student government retreat, or "advance," of Jan. 9 & 10 to Palmyra was a success.

(2) Reports given by all class officers showed numerous activities have been successfully completed, and still others are in the planning stages. Freshmen are working on the traditional Freshman Production. The Sophomore Ring Committee has already begun preparations for next year's sales, and are currently working on Sophomore Week (Feb. 21-26). The Junior Class is doing something different this year by planning their own format for Convocation and Capping ceremony. And, the Seniors are planning a fund raising party to raise money for Senior Assembly, Senior Ball, and Senior Banquet.

(3) Discussions on the expressed lack of communications resulted in the purchase of an Electronic Message Center which is now in the dining hall. Student support was expressed towards the purchase as the informations runs at all three meals, reaching more students than the daily bulletin.

(4) A report on Residence Hall Life showed a survey is being developed to help programming for dorms (faculty are being encouraged to speak, groups are taking trips, etc.) Lighting in study areas has been improved, and the need for stoves is being investigated. All residence halls have been participating in activities sponsored by Staff, and Hall Councils.

(5) Major goals for Pan-Hell are scholarships and social service. Greeks want to show they're not only social sororities, but can work with the community too. Greek Week is March 23-27. The IFC wants to "show the administration Greeks can work together when they try." They are planning an Alcohol Education program. They would like drinking to be permitted in chapter rooms.

(6) In addition to the large entertainment program designed to appeal to all students, the Student Union is working towards more people involved in their program, and getting in the black financially.

In addition to these topics on the agenda, a few Greeks were present to show their support of alcohol in the chapter rooms. They want the power to regulate visitation and alcohol consumption to be given to the IFC. They had "no completely finalized" proposals, and were told by Board members not to start at the top, but to work with members of the administration on the subject and then bring their resolutions to the Board of Visitors.

This all happened, more or less. Names have been changed neither to protect innocence nor culpability. Not that either is exactly applicable to the situation.

Let me explain:

Myself and a short artsie friend named Toadis were taking a quiet stroll along Pine Street, along the sidewalk tangent to North Main and South Cunningham. At 12:30 a.m. the weather was obtrusive, nipping down our upturned collars and slipping like ice water up our bare fingers and wrist. Rough music from the dorms punctuated the silence more than broke it. We were heading to Par-Bils for mixer and the slight sojourn of lights and warmth we hoped to find there. Occasionally, like an incredulous liemotiv for this drama, a dark blue Longwood campus police car patrolled alongside us. Toadis asked, "Do they keep us safe from the outside or the outside safe from us?"

I ignored Toadis because he was always saying things like that, such as "What is the purpose of institution?" or "It's 12:00 midnight, do you know where your parents are?" He was a 24-year-old victim of Dada overdose as far as I could tell.

We were near the intersection of Pine and Redford, catercorner to the face of Lankford building when a beige Duster imitating Steve McQueen in "Bullet" or one of thos Hazzard County boys popped over the hill.

Roaring and screaming down Pine Street, sucking up the asphalt like a 747 during takeoff, down past Lankford it whined and shot through the little red sign marked "Stop" like a greased cannonball. We stood beside the red icon spinning silly pirouettes as the snaky lines of headlights screeched sideways in the road and then, champions of redneck lore, off into the night. The tinkle of broken glass sounded in its jet stream like a parting fart.

Toadis muttered something about mass hallucinations and "They outhta be hung." I nodded my agreement and we turned up Redford. Our knees were trembling from the weather and too much adrenalin with nowhere to go.

Our recurring motif — that dark blue campus police car — was driving towards us, down Redford. Toadis began to wave "over here," "over here." The car stopped and Toadis walked up to the Longwood policeman inside. He had the expression of a businessman who, having a thousand pressing matters, is interrupted by a wife that wants to know if her jewelry clashes.

He said, "Yes?"

Toadis said, "Listen, there's some guy driving like a maniac around here; he's in a beige Duster, I think."

The policeman looked at Toadis' unkempt blonde hair and reeded hat and "You've got to have Art" buttons and said, "Did you get a license number?"

"Well . . . no, he was gone in a flash . . . I mean he must have been doing 60 . . . Ya know, somebody could get killed."

"Uh hu . . . Well, we'll keep our eyes peeled." The policeman rolled up his window and drove away.

Toadis made a prediction, which I thought stemmed more from his arcane philosophies than any number of real experiences he may have had. He said, "Now, ten to one those two spend the rest of the night peeking into windows and busting Longwood students stupid enough to walk around with open beers."

It wasn't a very fair accusation. After all, consuming alcohol in public places was illegal and part of their job had to be pulling in the culprits of alcohol abuse. They were bound to set their priorities, though, and nab the idiots flying around campus in a beige Duster. As Toadis said, "Somebody could get killed!" Right.

We were waiting to cross Route 15 and enter Par-Bils when Toadis grabbed my arm. "Will ya look at that!"

Our big blue automobile was parked diagonally on the lawn in front of Frazer, its headlights silhouetting the figures of the two campus policemen to whom Toadis had just spoken. They were exercising full investigative privileges a la flashlights and an opened window on the bottom floor of Frazer.

We guessed what was happening at the window. "You boys are going to hafta calm down in here, we got folks outside that's tryin' to sleep . . . And don't let me see no liquor poppin' round neither. Not but a handful of y'all 21 and I'll lay even odds ya couldn't handle the stuff even if you were."

"Oh, that's sweet," Toadis said and turned to walk across the street. I held out my arm. A set of familiar headlights were streaming down Route 15 doing at least 60 — the beige Duster sweeping over the white crosswalk so fast that had it been a road runner cartoon the two safety lines would have been rippling and oscillating for minutes in the Duster's wake.

"So, when's Hitler's anniversary?" asked Toadis sardonically.

"Last Sunday," I said and shrugged. Toadis pinched the bridge of his nose with his fingers and began shaking his head. Absurdity has a way of doing that to folks.

Toadis was ranting on about the actions of the campus police as we headed back from Par-Bil's. "And look at the get-up they have — mace and clubs and snub-nose 38's and moldy bullets . . . Now you tell me — when was the last riot at Longwood? Huh! tell me that! What are they gonna do — shoot somebody for dorm hopping . . . and then, when they get a chance to use all that muscle, what do they do? They harass some drunken fraternity brothers too wiped out to focus, much less even talk!

"I know, I know," I said, nodding my head in sympathy.

We stopped in front of Frazer. A lone redheaded music major was standing outside the dorm in a thin nylon shirt with a white collar and was sipping a Miller Lite. He stood as someone who only vaguely apprehends reality and his cloudy eyes gave credence to our immediate suspicion that he was drunk out of his mind. Toadis started relating our story to him "And then these jerk-offs, etc," and warned him about drinking in public. The music major handed Toadis the beer and stumbled off towards the dorm, slurring some words, "You can never bee too careful" . . . or a close facsimile and walked inside.

Toadis was carrying the Miller Lite as we walked down the sidewalk past Curry when we heard a screech off to our left. Under the circumstances we assumed a beige Duster was parked over there to the left, and that we would soon be hailed with snide invectives. We kept walking forward, our eyes staring holes in the sidewalk. "Hey, boiy (as in Jackie Gleason in Smoky and the Bandit), what the heck do you think you're doing?" The invective assumption was accurate, the source, oh proud literary irony, was not. It was, to be descriptive, a blue uniformed and be-capped human, with a Sam Brown belt supporting his thumbs — an actual re-make of Mayberry R.F.D., featuring none other than Barney Pfeiff and his clone.

They didn't like the Miller Lite in Toadis' hand. They dragged him off into the squad car. He was yelling something about Fascism and Hitler's anniversary and trying to spill Miller Lite on the clone's single-striped pants. I heard an engine whine over near Stubbs dormitory, then a roar, then a familiar tinkle of glass. The dark blue car pulled away with Toadis in the back. I didn't know whether to laugh or cry. Absurdity has a way of doing that to folks.

Catching Up On Minority Issue

By CHRISTOPHER P. COX

Longwood College is trying hard to catch up with the modern world by accepting more minority students into its hallowed halls in an attempt to create a mixture of students more representative of the actual mixture of Virginia's citizens. The administration admits to falling far short of its goal, although it has made significant progress in the past year. However, even as the student body, faculty and administration become more realistically joined with the present, the biased attitudes of days gone by continue to linger.

The most obvious targets for these biased attitudes are those most obvious minority groups, namely those groups known as different "races" because the skin of these people happens not to be white or Caucasian. Never mind the fact that they all belong to the same race as the white majority, namely the human race; That is not enough reason to treat them as equals according to many members of the "white race." These attitudes are rarely expressed as blatant bigotry and even less often as open persecution; This distrust of difference is usually manifested in more subtle ways, such as shunning or acting reserved around the minority member. It is often so ingrained that it is not even done consciously, such as when a faculty member asks the most difficult questions of a minority student consistently and makes that student appear ignorant or foolish in class.

To help counter these attitudes, minority organizations have increased along with minority - enrollment. For the Afro-American student at Longwood there exists Omega Psi Phi fraternity, Alpha Kappa Alapha sorority, the Afro-American Student Alliance, The Basic Gospel Choir, and a bi-annual newsletter called "The Summit". Unfortunately, no other "race" minorities are represented by organizations in this campus, and the oft noted observation that even the well represented Afro-American students tend to stick together in cliques shows that total acceptance of these minorities still lies in the future. Longwood's environment regretably reenforces the negative attitudes; A student from Northern Virginia recently complained that he has suffered "culture shock" over break when he saw a Black businessman in a three-piece suit and remembered that Blacks were equals after all — here at Longwood he had grown so used to seeing Blacks as janitors and in other servile positions and had so few Blacks in any of his classes that he had forgotten that fact. To their credit, the administration has recognized the environmental factor and has launched a campaign to increase minority representation in the faculty and staff, but for the moment the problem remains.

Less obvious are the religious minorities, those adherents of faiths other than Christianity. Like the racial minorities they are underrepresented on this campus, but they generally seem to have fewer difficulties in being accepted here. Perhaps this is because they lack local places of worship and therefore have a low profile. They have to put up with a lot of slurs on their faith, though, because of their low profile: someone who likes bigoted jokes may not make a racial slur with someone of that minority present, but he or she cannot so easily see if a religious minority is present before making some crack about that faith. Such lack of consideration extends to higher levels as well: A Jewish student was angered to find that one night both of the main courses offered in the dining hall consisted of pork. A further difficulty for religious minorities is the fact that they have no official representation and no campus organizations; The so-called "Longwood Inter-religious Council" listed in the

Nestle's Reply

On October 14, 1982 the Nestle Infant Formula Audit Commission, chaired by former Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie and composed of eminent scientists, physicians, and clergy, presented its First Quarterly Report. The Commission announced Nestle's agreement to comply with the Commission's recommendations to improve the Instructions issued by the company in March, 1982. These instructions implement the WHO Code in all developing countries in which Nestle markets infant formula.

Senator Muskie said in his report that Nestle has "demonstrated a willingness to respond positively to the imperative of change in its marketing policies. In doing so, it has responded positively to the public interest as stated in the WHO Code."

The Commission countinues its strict audit of the company's compliance with the WHO Code and the Revised Nestle Instructions. You may wish to contact Senator Muskie at the following address: 1101 Vermont Avenue, N.W., Suite 900, Washington, D.C., 20004. And if I can assist further, please do not hesitate to contact me.

WUTA— Use It Or Lose It!

By JACK BARKER

Longwood College is lucky to have a radio station. Yes, we do have a radio station — WUTA 90.1 FM. Such a medium of broadcast on a campus has many advantages. Here are some:

(1) For small clubs — through WUTA you can announce functions, open membership meetings, the progress of your activities, and remind members of meetings and functions.

(2) For fraternities and sororities — Items such as Rush, service projects, officer elections, and progress reports on campus-community activities may be made known to the student body through WUTA.

(3) For the administration or the SGA — achievements, activities and deadlines may be announced.

(4) For the Student Union — Your varied upcoming functions may be announced over WUTA.

(5) For the individual student — some things available to you through WUTA are information, entertainment, and a chance to get involved.

Moreover, the station is growing. The long off-air layoff we had last semester was not due to laziness or lack of interest, but due to the fact that we were busy installing almost all new equipment. Everything new and functional at WUTA, it's looking good. And there's opportunity in that for any student who wishes to work with the station. Whether you have records or not is no longer an issue — because the station is stocked to the gills with gobs of the latest albums and bunches of 45's. So if you want to be a record spinner — there's nothing to stop you. We're just about ready to add more albums and somewhere in the near future, a raise in wattage is in the offing.

For those interested in disc jockeying (or perhaps giving a half-hour of your time now and then to do the news), WUTA's meetings are open to newcomers. The next meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, Feb. 9, at 1 p.m. (or, stop by the station just about any weekday from 3-4 p.m. to obtain information).

WUTA's range of programming is diverse. It includes gospel, hard rock, jazz, new wave, and country. Special features in the recent past have included live broadcasting of last year's Chi Walk and an interview with witches. So you see, our radio station has something for everybody. Let's enjoy — if we don't use it we may lose it, and what an incredible loss that would be!

Music Majors approve of the investment made by the SAFC (Student Activities and Fees Committee) in new band equipment.

Longwood Pageant

Thirteen young women at Longwood College have been selected from applicants to compete in the Miss Longwood Pageant on March 5. The Pageant will be part of the Miss America series, with the winner competing in the Miss Virginia Pageant in July.

The 13 contestants for Miss Longwood were chosen in preliminary competitions held recently at the college. They were judged on talent, swimsuit and microphone presentations.

Eat Better

Americans have changed! In the past five years, we have turned from a sedentary way of life and a traditional diet to a nation actively aware of physical and dietary fitness. Society's emphasis on exercise programs have encouraged many people to seek healthier, more nutritious foods. ARA is recognizing your growing interest in physical fitness and dietary needs. As a result, PHYSFOODS is a program designed to aid students in developing better eating habits.

If you are one of the millions of people in the United States who are running, jumping rope, swimming, or involved in some sports activities to stay in shape, then ARA's Physfood Program — THE GOOD HEALTH CONNECTION — should interest you. First of all, take note of the seven colorful posters hanging in Blackwell Dining hall. These posters provide Dietary Guidelines for Americans, and are published by the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture and the U.S. Dept. of Health and Human Services. Remember, that the information provided is "intended for people who are already healthy." Adapt the first guideline to your lifestyle and then proceed to the second. This "One Step at a Time" method is the easiest way for you to continue making progress at your own rate. By forming these new habits and keeping up with a physical fitness program you will be TREATING YOURSELF RIGHT!

Advisory Committees

Director of the Board of Visitors, Janet Greenwood, President and Vice Presidents Donald Lemish, Phyllis Mable and Michael Haltzel, all took their turns letting the committee members in on what Longwood was like. Most of it was the usual PR and the beauty of PR is that you get to brag. That took a while because these people have had a lot to brag about lately.

Dr. Greenwood had the longest speech so she got to do most of the bragging. Trips to Europe and solid relations with some schools, there, the most money ever raised by the college, the most applications for admission in 13 years (I guess that will mean the most triples ever, next fall), the Social Work Program, plans for the Fine Arts center, athletic accomplishments and more. I've heard it all a million times but the guests were impressed as one well should be by such accomplishments.

Greenwood balanced the past accomplishments with future goals that the college has formed, the most interesting of which is much more emphasis on liberal arts in all classes. "We believe strongly that a liberal arts background is quite important and that there are skills that come out of liberal arts education that will always be in demand regardless of ones career choice," she said. Solid plans for the accomplishment of this goal are already under way in the forms of a writing requirement for all tests and a schoolwide foreign language requirement which the administration is pushing for.

Don Lemish followed the President relating the history of the institution, mentioning the phenomenal 86 percent pledges from faculty when most faculties are not even solicited and introducing all the guests at the meeting. Phyllis Mable gave a nice opinion of the students but really urged the committees to go out and talk to the students themselves. After Gil Davenport's luncheon address, Mike Haltzell further discussed future plans, most interestingly the computerization of the library. Again, liberal arts and communication skills were emphasized. According to Haltzell "we feel that the use of one's native language, both spoken and written is absolutely central to success in the future and if we were to pinpoint one single skill, one tool that we hope our students leave these ivy covered walls with it would be the ability to express themselves adequately in English."

After Haltzell the various department heads and their advisory committees broke into respective groups and met separately. I sat in on the English, Philosophy and Foreign language department and unlike the former processions, things began to get a little embarrasing. Students and funds have shied from the department lately because besides teaching, few solid career opportunities exist directly related to these majors. Recent studies have shown that students want high paying jobs and the money, presently is going towards these computers that everybody is talking about. Business, computer science and math are the majors that are presently enjoying this trend Frank A. MacDonald, Professor of Philosophy Emeritus at William and Mary noted the irony at this train of thought. "People running business on the East coast are not business administration majors. They're from Harvard. Princeton and Yale where those courses aren't even taught."

So while the business department probably got to do some nice bragging about their newest computers and the P.E. department had a whole new building to show off, this department had to explain why there were so few Philosophy majors and why a $100,000 dollar language lab had been dismantled earlier. But the committee was impressed with the faculty of the department considering them dedicated people although hampered by several nearly uncontrollable forces.

The meeting broke up in time for everyone to regroup for wine and cheese in the Virginia room. I didn't figure I would get any wine out of the deal so I took off to my room for a vintage bottle of Piels and some reflection. I remembered Dr. Greenwood's opinion on this whole thing at one point in her speech. "I would like to say to you in complete earnestness that if this was five years from today I really do believe that today we will look at this as the major turning point of the institution in the academic affairs barrier."

What will Longwood really be like in five years? Will business majors really write out discussions of supply and demand instead of marking "none of the above" on a computerized answer sheet? Will future Longwood students be famous for knowing how to ask where the bathroom is in four languages and also joke about how simple the new IBMs are to program? The Greenwood administration seems to possess all the qualities, possibly excepting humility, to accomplish that goal, along with their many others.

Well, one final Piels and one final quote from Thomas Rust, Director of the Board of Visitors. "Things are happening here at Longwood. It's an exciting time. And with your (the committee's) help and by working together with all the groups here in our Longwood family we can greatly enhance not only our services to our students, which is our first obligation, but also to the entire commonwealth and hopefully to the nation."

Lancers Split With Trojans
Face Randolph-Macon Thursday, Away

Longwood's men's basketball team got a big win Tuesday night 67-61 over Liberty Baptist, but the Lancers let another triumph slip through their fingers Saturday night as Virginia State rallied for an 85-84 win before 2,500 fans, a record crowd in Lancer Hall.

Now 11-6, the Lancers visit 10th ranked Randolph-Macon Thursday night in Ashland, after hosting a potent Guilford team Monday night. With eight games left to go, Longwood could still finish 19-6 if the team could put together a strong finish.

Longwood turned in a strong performance Saturday night, but missed free throws spelled the difference. Trailing 8-1 early and 39-38 at the half, the Lancers battled back to go on top 59-51 with 12:24 left in the game. During one stretch near the end, however, Longwood was able to convert just three of eight free throw chances and the Trojans caught up. A free throw by Kevin Bush at 0:05 gave Virginia State the win.

Senior co-captain Joe Remar turned in a sparkling scoring performance, driving over, under, around and through the Trojans for a career high 30 points. He added six assists and could have added more points but for missed four shots. The Longwood scoring leader also had five steals. He scored 18 points in the second half, alone.

Supporting Remar's REMARKABLE effort were forward Jerome (The Cobra) Kersey with 18 points (10 of 12 free throws), 14 rebounds, five steals and three assists. Kersey compiled those eye-popping stats in just 28 minutes of action. He fouled out with 3:23 left in the game.

Center Ron Orr added 18 points and freshman Lonnie Lewis scored 12 for the Lancers.

It was Lewis, a 6-3 forward from Henrico High School, who poured in 20 points in the second half (26 for the game) to lead Longwood over visiting Liberty Baptist Tuesday. The point total is a career high for the sharp-shooting cager.

Kersey also played well in the win with 15 points, 15 rebounds and four assists. Orr added 11 points and 10 rebounds for Longwood.

Another freshman who played well in the win was Frank Tennyson who filled in admirably for foul-plagued Mike Testa. In 24 minutes of action Tennyson had no turnovers, two points and three assists.

Remar (19.9 points) and Kersey (10.7 rebounds) and the Longwood team (54.1 FG shooting) have ranked among the national leaders in NCAA Division II most of the season. Remar, Longwood's all-time scoring leader (1,349 points) was rated 15th in the most recent NCAA stats in scoring.

Longwood's top career rebounder (691), Kersey is among the top 10 rebounders in Division II. The Lancers ranked 6th in field goal percentage among Div. II clubs.

Senior guard Bobby Carter was forced to drop off the Lancer squad because of a conflict with student teaching. A senior physical education major, Carter had played in nine games for the Lancers, averaging 2.6 points. He holds the distinction of being the first Lancer cager to make a 3-point field goal.

"We hate to lose Bobby from the team, but he really had no choice but to drop off," said Longwood coach Cal Luther. "He's student teaching in Richmond and couldn't get things worked out so he could commute back and fourth for practice."

Lady Lancers Top Liberty Baptist
Fall To W&M, Richmond

Longwood's women's basketball team beat visiting Liberty Baptist 45-44 Thursday, but fell to William & Mary 71-70 in overtime Tuesday and to powerful Division I Richmond Saturday 87-50. Now 6-10, the Lady Lancers host Bridgewater Tuesday, Delaware State Thursday and visit UNC-Greensboro Saturday in another busy week of action.

Longwood will likely have to play this week without two of its top cagers. Leading scorer and rebounder Florence Holmes is out with an injured finger and top reserve forward Bev Powell has been sidelined by back problems. Holmes and Powell are out indefinitely.

Despite the absence of two of its top players, Longwood came up with a big win Thursday night as Valerie Turner scored the winning bucket with 31 seconds left and then grabbed a rebound to seal the win. Senior Cindy Eckel led Longwood with 12 points while soph Mariana Johnson scored 10 points while filling in for Holmes.

"It was a super win," coach Jane Miller said of the triumph over LBC. "We had two of our top players out, but we still found a way to win. Amy Cook helped us in the first half with her outside shooting."

The Lady Lancers had played one of their best games of the season Tuesday night while bowing at William & Mary. Assistant coach Nanette Fisher said Longwood may have been too intense. Eckel scored 17. Holmes 16 and Robin Powell 14, but the Indians came up with the crucial points in overtime.

Saturday at Richmond, Turner and Johnson scored 12 points and Eckel 13, but the talented Spiders turned in a strong performance.

Hale Wins Tourney Title
Nabs Player-Of-The-Week Honors

Freshman wrestler Terry Hale won all three matches in the Washington and Lee Invitational January 22 to win the title at 134 pounds and for his performance, Hale has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 21-28. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

"Terry wrestled super in winning his first collegiate tournament," said Coach Steve Nelson in nominating Hale for the award. "He fractured his collarbone before Christmas break in the Liberty Baptist Tournament, but he has really come back strong since then. He wrestled very well in the tournament despite the fact that he's not yet back to full strength. Terry got two pins and a major decision en route to the championship."

Hale has compiled an 8-5 overall record at 134 despite his injury and has been a key factor in Longwood compiling a 6-3-1 record. The freshman picked up a win and a forfeit win Friday as Longwood ripped Lynchburg and Loyola of Baltimore.

A four-year grappler at Orange County High School, Hale won district, regional and state crowns. He was also named Most Valuable Senior Wrestler.

The son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson E. Hale, Terry is majoring in computer science at Longwood.

Gymnasts 2nd In GW Tourney Travel To Duke Friday

Despite the absence of Dayna Hankinson, Lisa Zuraw and Kim Kenworthy the injury plagued Longwood gymnastics team was still able to capture second place in the George Washington Invitational Sunday to raise their record to 8-5. Friday night Longwood dropped a close decision to visiting Radford.

Radford was also victorious Sunday scoring 159.45. Longwood scored 149.15, defeating Bridgeport 144.45, George Washington 135.65, Georgetown 105.85 and Virginia 63.30. Kelly Crepps tied for first in vaulting (8.65). Gray Stabley finished third in bars (7.85) and floor (8.0) and was fifth in all-around (30.85). Allison Berry tied for second on beam (8.25).

Friday night Radford (153.75) defeated Longwood (153.5). Crepps finished first in vaulting (8.8) and all-around (32.2), and second in beam (8.15) and bars (7.65). Dayna Hankinson finished first in floor (8.75). Radford is the same team which defeated Longwood by three-tenths a point last year in the regionals.

"I was not displeased at all with the loss Friday night since it was so close," said coach Ruth Budd. "We did a lot better than in the past and had our highest score of the year."

Budd feels her strongest competition will be this Friday when Longwood participates in a tri-meet at Duke with Jacksonville State. She said Duke is a good scoring Division I team and Jacksonville St. was runner-up in the Division II nationals last year.

Wrestlers Now 6-3-1 Host Tigers Wednesday

By RONNIE BROWN

The Longwood wrestlers swept two wins Friday over Lynchburg 37-12 and Loyola (MD) 48-9 to build their record to 6-3-1. The Lancers face Hampden-Sydney Wednesday in Lancer Hall at 7:30 and travel to counter George Mason and George Washington Saturday, Feb. 5.

Sophomores Steve Albeck, a 142 pounder, and Chuck Campbell a 150 pounder, notched two victories each by decision or pin to record marks of 13-6-1 and 10-3, respectively, in overall competition. Freshman Terry Hale, a 134 pounder, soph Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder, and Senior Joe Bass, a 177 pounder, also recorded two victories.

Campbell, who wrestled both matches with a knee injury, is questionable for this week's action.

Although the Lancers won by convincing margins in both matches, Coach Steve Nelson is not satisfied with the team's progression in the second semester.

"We did not wrestle as well as we have before this season," noted Nelson. "We still haven't gotten back our intensity after three weeks. With only 13 wrestlers and injuries, it is hard to get in good practices."

The Lancers will be vying for the first win over the winless Tigers and will face a tougher challenge Saturday with George Mason and George Washington.

"We will have to wrestle much better to be competitive with either team (GMU or GW)," said Nelson. "Mason is strong in the lightweights and has a nationally ranked heavyweight and George Washington is strong all the way through the line-up."

Lancer Cagers Fall To 12-7

A seven-minute cold spell at the end of the first half spelled disaster in an 82-66 loss to seventh-ranked Randolph-Macon Thursday night, but Longwood's men's basketball team must regroup quickly for a trip to Liberty Baptist Tuesday night.

Now 12-7 with six games to go, the Lancers will face an uphill battle Tuesday night in Lynchburg. The Flames, 15-7 with three straight wins, have not beaten Longwood since 1978. Longwood has won the last four meetings between the two teams and leads the series 7-2. The two teams played January 25 with Longwood taking a 67-61 victory.

Next Monday, Longwood hosts CIAA member St. Paul's, a team that handed the Lancers an 84-77 loss in December. The Tigers have gotten strong defensive play from 6-6 senior Lawrence Carr of Prospect, a graduate of Prince Edward County High School.

Longwood journeyed to Randolph-Macon Thursday night with hopes of an upset, but the Yellow Jackets were in top form and the Lancers were not. Except for 24 points from freshman Lonnie Lewis and 18 points and 18 rebounds from junior Jerome Kersey, the contest could have been an even more lopsided defeat.

Lewis scored 22 points in the second half. Kersey, who is scoring 14.9 points and pulling down 11.2 rebounds per game, went over the 700 mark in career rebounds Thursday night.

A 6-7, 220-pounder, Kersey now has 709 career rebounds and 1,148 career points. With a productive senior season next year, he should become the first Longwood cager to top 1,000 points and rebounds in his career.

All-time scoring leader Joe Remar had a night to remember against Guilford Monday night with a career high 36 points to go with six assists and two steals. The 6-1 co-captain, who is averaging 20.3 ppg., now has 1,397 career points and 495 assists.

Another Lancer cager scoring his career high against the Quakers was senior co-captain Mike Testa. Testa popped in 12 points as Longwood placed five men in double digits in the 103-90 triumph.

Wrestlers Beat Hampden-Sydney

By RONNIE BROWN

Currently 7-5-1, the Longwood grapplers wrapped up a winning season Wednesday, February 2, with a 53-6 trouncing of Hampden-Sydney in Lancer Hall and were subdued by Division I George Mason and George Washington Saturday, January 5, by scores of 35-9 and 29-15, respectively. The Lancers will travel to Washington, D.C., Tuesday to participate in the Capital Collegiate Tournament this week and will end the season hosting the Generals of Washington and Lee, Wednesday, February 16.

Although the win over the Tigers was not dramatic, the triumph was a big turning point in the five-year-old Lancer Wrestling Program. Not only was the win the first over Hampden-Sydney on the wrestling mat, but it gave the Lancer wrestling program its first winning season.

The Lancers found competition much stiffer as they dropped matches to George Mason and George Washington, Saturday.

"I felt the score against George Washington was not indicative of the match," said Coach Steve Nelson. "We wrestled a close match, but could not win the key weight classes."

Although the LC Grapplers suffered two loses, there were some bright spots.

Freshman Steve Kidwell, a 126-pounder, was 2-0 at 134 and Soph Steve Albeck was 1-1 at 142 and 150, respectively. Other double winners were senior Joe Bass, a 177-pounder, and soph Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder.

Although the Lancers will post their finest wrestling record this season, Coach Nelson has not been pleased with the grapplers second semester performance.

"We haven't wrestled with any intensity since the first semester," noted Nelson. I thought the win over Hampden-Sydney would get the kids fired up, but it hasn't worked. We will have to wrestle with intensity and emotion to be competitive Tuesday (Capital Collegiate Tournament."

Lady Lancers Win One of Three

Longwood's women's basketball team had another up-and-down week in recent play, losing to Bridgewater 70-59 - Tuesday, beating Delaware State 64-52 Thursday and dropping a 63-47 decision to UNC-Greensboro on the road Saturday.

Now 7-12, the Lady Lancers visit Randolph-Macon in Ashland Tuesday and travel to Lynchburg Saturday to take on Liberty Baptist at 3:00. Both games are VAIAW Division II contests and take on added importance. Longwood needs to win both contests to stay in the chase for a spot in the VAIAW Div. II Final Four March 4-5 at Longwood.

Coach Jane Miller was especially pleased with her team's play in the win over Delaware State, a Div. I team.

"We executed very well and got contributions from a lot of people," said Miller. "We played a good tempo that allowed us to execute and the kids kept good control throughout the game. Rebounding was a big key for us also."

"I have been expecting all along that those four would play well together at the same time," said Miller. "The win really picked us up after a disappointing loss to Bridgewater."

Player of Week

Sophomore Kelly Crepps (Hampton) had an outstanding performance in a meet with Radford January 28 and for her efforts, Crepps has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period January 25-February 4. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood sports information office.

Crepps, Longwood's top all-around performer in last year's Division II National Championships, was the top all-around in the Lancers' 153.50-153.75 loss to Radford and also performed well January 30 as Longwood finished second in the George Washington Invitational.

"Kelly was first in vaulting (8.8) and all-around (32.2) at the Radford meet," said coach Ruth Budd in nominating her for the award. "Her vaulting score was the highest score of the meet and in addition, she placed second on bars (7.65) and beam (8.15) and fourth on floor.

"The key to Kelly's success at this meet was that she did extremely well in two events (vaulting and beam) and fairly well in the remaining two events. Kelly's scores were definitely a strong factor in keeping the team score so close."

Crepps tied for first in vaulting at George Washington with an 8.65.

Gymnasts Host William & Mary

By JIM WINKLER

The Longwood gymnastics team turned in its third best score of the year Friday night in a tri-meet at Duke despite the absence of several key performers. The Lancers score however, wasn't enough to handle their toughest competition of the year — Duke and Jacksonville State.

Three Longwood players missed the trip due to the flu — Kelly Crepps, Allison Berry and Terri Audi. Kim Kenworthy also did not compete due to an ankle injury, and will miss the remainder of the season.

Duke's score 173.05 was the highest of any opposition thus far. Jacksonville St. (166.50) finished second well ahead of Longwood (151.20).

Dayna Hankinson was a standout once again finishing ahead of her teammates in all events except bars. Her floor exercise (8.8) was the top score of the year for Longwood. She also performed well on beam (8.0), vault (8.55) and all-around (32.15), her best score of the year. Gray Stabley was best on bars for the Lancers (7.45).

Friday night Longwood (8-7) hosts their final home meet of the year with William & Mary. The meet is set for 7 p.m. at Lancer Hall.

Toby Thompson

began to move away from the inner city which quickly was filling up with blacks; whom the white middle class saw as this terrible force to be avoided. Suburbia was formed almost in reaction to the hysteria of WWII where people were thrown together in a way that they couldn't avoid; and suburbia afforded a kind of privacy that people couldn't find before. Unfortunately, my generation had to grow up in suburbia and this sense of isolation and vacancy that my generation feels and that the children of my generation feel who still live in suburbia is something that this culture has had to deal with. The fact that people are now moving into the cities again and creating neighborhoods which are very much like life in small town America and in college is important.

Rotunda — One often hears urban life criticized for the fast pace, for the number of violent crimes coming from the inner city, and in particular, the number of juvenile delinquents; isn't that a major problem?

Thompson — The problem of delinquency in cities, as you raise it, and as most people raise it, almost always has kind of a racial tinge to it. We think of — what's the phrase — Bands of Marauding Black Youth. I think you're talking about complicated economic problems there that are different than what we're talking about in terms of the white middle class finding something positive about moving back into the city. I don't think that a confrontation with delinquency on any number of levels is necessarily bad. I think that the isolation from that kind of situation has been one of the problems of living in Suburbia. Delinquency, Aggression, kind of a divergency of behavior is something that exists in the world and people in urban environments have confronted that throughout history; it's really only in suburban existence that people have tried to isolate themselves from that. Ironically, if you read the newspaper, very often the most horrible and violent crimes are the ones that people are committing against each other in suburban circumstaces.; the fathers and mothers who come home and eviscerate their children and then blow their own heads off. Those are the crimes that are happening in suburbia. The things that are happening in the inner city are poverty related; they're bad, don't get me wrong, I'm not romanticizing crime. But they're more economic conditions and I think as a child growing up in the city, I remember that sort of danger, that rubbing shoulders with danger as being something I learned a great deal from; and

I wouldn't trade it. There are great advantages to being streetwise. You think about a survivor in suburbia or in the great unwashed middle class as someone who's really learned how to live with vacancies and en nui and this terrible sense of emptiness of lives. You think of the inner city hipster, the person whose future is on the line, every day whether through economic deprivation or by choice; they are people who live with danger, who seem to get a lot out of life, and I don't mean to romanticize that . But I think that to live fully is to be confronted with danger.

Rotunda — It sounds like Norman Mailor has had an influence on you.

Thompson — Norman Mailor has been a large influence on me, there is no question about that. I think he's a wonderful writer and I think he is one of our major writers. I think he has a streak of this absolute obtuse craziness which you can't avoid. He's got this obsessive compulsive nature that I identify with. But I think he's right about an awful lot of things. The White Negro is his famous polemic on hip; which as a matter of fact was the sub-theme or the major theme, really of my 60's book which was about hip or the evolution of that philosophy, in the white middle class — and it's my feeling that it (hip) is the result of the white middle class's exposure to the black culture through rock 'n roll — the offspring of jazz — and Vietnam and a lot of other absurd situations. What we're talking about or dealing with is a kind of poor man's existentialism, where people are either trying to live their lives by a certain kind of code or they're not. I think that the key word is danger — that an avoidance of danger. an avoidance of the possibility of failure or death in one's life is a really futile exercise.

Rotunda — You have written in the non-fiction narrative form since you began your career as an author. Why is that?

Thompson — The kind of journalism I do is what was called the new journalism in the 1960's and now it really doesn't have a name except maybe narrative non-fiction. Basically, what happened in the 60's and what intrigued a writer such as mys elf is that these incredible events started transpiring in the culture that became really more interesting than anything a writer could imagine.

I was trained in fiction writing, but I couldn't sit on my duff any longer. I had to get out there and see what was going on. So I took my training as a fiction writer and confronted the events that were happening in the culture and sort of claimed the new form. Not that I created it; writers like Norman Mailor and Tom Wolfe and other people forged the way. When I came along in the late 60's as a professional writer, there was so much happening and it was a brand new form, it was almost like the creation of rock-'n'-roll again. I mean journalism in the late 60's and early 70's had the creative force of rock-'n'-roll early in the 50's . . . it was something that was brand new. So what I do — and I did write some fiction as well — is to go out and confront people in strange situations and write about their lives. Most of the work I do works the way fiction would . My books are novels — they're non-fiction novels. They have characters which develop over the course of the book, they have plots. You develop it absolutely the way you develop a novel. When you're writing an article you hope that it works the same way a short story would work. But what became fascinating for me was ultimately the technique of the interview. Reportage, as Truman Capote noted, is an art form in itself. It's a great unexplored art form. Great writers have always used reportage — extensively. They're always gone out and talked to people about the way they live their lives. In our day and age it's also very difficult to get published any other way. Journlism is the great entree. I just spent two days in New York with Raquel Welch. How in the world if I went out of journalism could I ever have experienced two days in New York with Raquel Welch at this particular time in her career as queen of New York. I not only spent those days with her but I sat down and more or less stuck a microphone in her face and got her to talk about fairly intimate aspects of her life. There is this cachet that journalists have. We are obsessed in this country with the confessional; in a sense journalists are priests. It's extraordinary the things that total strangers will tell you about their lives in the context of an interview. If you're good at it you're really as effective as a kind of therapist or lay psychiatrist. You know how to probe into people's minds; you know when they make statements that are revealing. You know how to follow up on those statements and it becomes absolutely fascinating. It's like shooting the white waters; you're looking for those rocks to come up and you're doing all this editing in your head and the writing ultimately becomes the biggest drag. It's depressing to say that for someone who got into it as a writer. But for people who haven't done it, the excitement and edge of reporting is something that they just can't realize.

Minorities

student handbook is described as being a strictly Christian organizations.

The "invisible minority" — homosexuals or "Gays" would seem to have a particularly difficult situation: there is a general lack of tolerance in society as a whole, which the conservative image of Longwood and the Farmville area could only serve to exacerbate. Like the religious minorities, the Gays at Longwood lack official representation and official organizations. There is one unofficial informal group — "Longwood's Discreet Gay Society" — but it is a fledgeling organization.

Of course, a realistic proportion of minority representation within the student body, the Administration, the faculty and the staff, and increased minority representation in college organizations would help create a better environment for minorities at Longwood, but these changes would by no means assure a change in the attitudes of the "majority"; Those necessary changes in attitudes can only come from within the people who hold the prejudiced views. These views often stem from a fear of the unknown, a fear of something or someone different, a fear of "contamination". These fears are irrational and foolish; There will always be uncertainty in life; Everybody is different; The only thing contaminating about people are their ideas — and you have to allow yourself to be contaminated thereby willingly adopting the other person's ideas and views. And because everybody is indeed different, everybody is a minority.

Coal Combustion ?

It may be that the Longwood powerplant chipped off more than it bargained for when it started a project about three and one-half weeks ago using woodchips to fuel inactive coal burners. The project is what Longwood's Public Affairs office quaintily described as a "ray of hope for the future" but the ray could be dimmed because the wood chips are being helped along with chunks of coal; which, under EPA standards of air pollution control could be illegal.

Under current regulations according to Director of the Air Pollution Control board, Mr. Gene Brooks, the Longwood Power Plant can only use coal in cases of emergency shutdowns and with prior notification to the EPA (i.e. Air Pollution Control Board). The Longwood Power Plant has been using coal regularly to help fire up the wood chip project.

A number of the workers (who preferred anominity) have attacked the project for being too painstaking and backwards. "It don't work . . . those boilers aren't designed for woodchips; they're designed for coal and nothing else but coal . . . We get these woodchips by the ton (from local lumber mills such as Buffalo Shook for $7.00-$8.00 a ton) and we've got to shovel them in by hand and the stuff is slow burning — it takes a helluva lot more sawdust or chips to get the same number of BTU's as oil or coal."

The workers help out the slow burning wood with coal which is stockpiled in a shelter perpendicular to the power plant. "Saw dust won't bring up a sufficient amount of heat . . . we have to mix it with coal sometimes to get the heat back up."

Mr. Hill and Mr. Armstrong, who supervise the power plant contend that it is legal to burn the coal because of an emergency shutdown which occurred from Jan. 17-Jan. 25 in one of the oil burners at the power plant. Mr. Hill said that the EPA was notified on the 17th that Longwood would start generating heat with coal because of the inoperative oil burner. However, after the 25th when the oil burner was operative again the use of coal should have ceased. Said Mr. Hill "We're not supposed to be burning it at all." He continued "They may throw a shovel full to get the wood hot . . . but that's all "

Mr. Armstrong, however, said that the workers use a "shovel full an hour depending on the wood." He contended that there was an EPA regulation which allowed for the burning of coal for less than an hour at any given time without EPA notification. Mr. Gene Brooks of the Air Pollution Control Board said he had never heard of such a regulation.

Mr. Brooks said "Longwood was burning coal for years and when the existing air pollution control regulations went into effect (1970) Longwood couldn't meet them. They won't continue to burn coal unless they install the necessary equipment(bag houses, electric static percipatators), With their existing air pollution equipment they can not burn coal."

Dr. Verna Armstrong, Vice President of Business Affairs for Longwood College will be meeting with EPA officials this Friday, Feb. 18 to discuss the matter and determine if there are any violations. She said that Longwood has not burned coal under any conditions that are in violation of EPA regulation.

LED Sign Misled

Observe it against the wall in the Blackwell Dining Hall, over the main entrance where the lady hassles you for an I.D. Is it a banner? No. The college administration outlawed banners because they did not enhance the attractiveness of the newly redecorated dining hall.

If you did not notice, last fall, some measures were taken so that the dining hall might not be such a sore spot to the eye. The floor was waxed and the ceiling was painted. The tables were rearranged so not only did the students get to take a wild guess at what was an aisle and what was not, but more students could eat at one time. And to top it off, both salad bars were placed in the middle of the floor so that now there is one big mob in the middle of the cafeteria instead of two little ones on the sides.

Well, the students are pretty used to getting shafted by Slater, so those arrangements did not really get anybody angry but the removal of the banners was another story. The ghastly implications of not being able to tell each other happy birthday began to sink in on the student body and after the ensuing complaints and editorials and other actions, many of the potential banner-hangers were forced to realize that they just might have to grow up.

But the SGA was beginning to realize a more serious problem. Amidst the announcements of "Happy 21st from your sweet sisters" and "Alpha Smegma Omaha welcomes it's new pledges" some relevant information of importance to the students was passed to them by banners. The different organizational meetings and functions and "if you do not drop that class in five days you're going to fail" were examples of information that was necessary but now had no really effective way to reach the students.

Is it a campus bulletin? Come on! Who could see a campus bulletin way up there? For those of you who are really in the dark, campus bulletins have always been around, especially in the

Lancaster Drops Old System

In January, the Lancaster Library at Longwood College began assigning Library of Congress classification numbers to newly-acquired materials. This system replaces the previously-used Dewey Decimal system.

Adopting the Library of Congress classification will bring Lancaster Library into the mainstream of academic library practice and will thus facilitate future computer networking arrangements and other cooperative activities.

In addition, use of the Library of Congress classification will allow more efficient processing of materials, reducing costs while speeding movement of new items onto the shelves.

On the library's main floor, the Dewey holdings have been compressed to provide space for separate shelving of the materials classified by the Library of Congress scheme. The shelving designated for the Library of Congress holdings is at the back of the South Reading Room, just beyond the card catalog. The eventual goal is to house the older, Dewey-classified materials on the second floor of the library and to have only the newer, Library of Congress-classified materials on the main floor.

Although Dewey will cease to be used for new processing except in the area of children's literature, the bulk of the existing collection will remain in the Dewey classification for the foreseeable future. Because the library is undertaking the conversion with existing staff, reclassification will occur only when a new item represents a later edition, added volume or additional copy of an item or set already in the collection. In such cases the Dewey-labelled materials will be reclassed to join the new items on the Library of Conress shelves.

To accommodate users to the new system, the library has posted signs indicating the location of the Library of Congress shelves and detailing the basic arrangement of these materials. Bookmarks are being printed to provide users convenient summaries of the Library of Congress classes, and library staff members will offer special orientation sessions and assist users on an individual basis.

Dr. Jo Leslie Sneller, a Longwood English professor (right), recently became the first person to check out a book using the new Library of Congress system at Lancaster Library.

Wine Appreciation

Longwood College's Continuing Studies program is offering a non-credit course entitled "A Workshop in Wine Appreciation," beginning March 1 and continuing through April 26.

The workshop sessions are scheduled on Tuesdays, from 4:30 to 6 p.m., in the Virginia Room at Longwood. The registration fee is $35.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a brief introduction to wine appreciation and the art of wine tasting. Procedures and terms used to describe wine will be discussed and illustrated. The subtleties found in wine will be explained by briefly discussing their sources of entry into the wine during its production. Finally, a survey of the major wine regions of the world will be discussed.

The workshop will be conducted by Dr. Patrick G. Barber, associate professor of chemistry at Longwood. Dr. Barber's interest in wine and wine-making developed during his graduate studies at Cornell University in Ithaca, New York. During this time he traveled to the wineries of upstate New York, observed their practices, and began making his own wine from their grapes. When he and his wife moved to Southside Virginia in 1971, they established their own experimental wineyard, Schiehallion Vineyard.

For registration information, contact the Office of Continuing Studies, Longwood College, Farmville, Virginia 23901, telephone (804) 302-9256. Enrollment is limited and restricted to persons over 21 years of age.

considers it a success. I. B. Dent, director of the Student Union had seen this type of a sign displayed at a meeting he had previously attended and rendered this information to an Ad-Hoc for Student Leaders Committee when he heard that they were searching to alternatives to banners in the dining hall. They are the typed up sheets with general information that one would assume nearly everybody reads but the SGA thinks not.

After the elimination of banners, the information was switched either to the campus bulletins or the new smoker where banners are now allowed but in a much more restricted manner. It was determined, though that neither method was effective enough and the Student Government went searching for ideas.

Actually, that thing up there can roughly be identified as a digital LED type electronic display sign, its purpose being to enhance the exchange of necessary information among Longwood students. Its method is obvious and the SGA currently

ENTERTAINMENT

Kiss Me Goodbye

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

One of the oldest film genres is that of the ghost story. From 1925 with Lon Chaney's "Phantom of the Opera" to 1981 and "Ghost Story," there have been endless attempts to scare us into sleeping with the lights on (I can still remember refusing to sleep in the dark after seeing Vincent Price in "The Fall of the House of Usher"). On some occasions, these movie spirits have been conjured up to make us laugh rather than frighten us; but, too often these humorous ghost films are total failures, relying on corny humor and campy situations to form a plot that, in the end, is just as transparent and vague as its subject. "Kiss Me Goodbye" (20th Century Fox) is a rare exception to this rule.

Sally Field stars in the film as Kate Vilano, wife of the famous Broadway coreographer Jolly Vilano, played by James Coan. As Kate's flashbacks fill in the story's gaps, we witness Jolly's tragic death (he takes a drunken tumble down a flight of stairs at one of his own celebrations), Kate's three years as a widow, and her prospects for a happy life with her soon-to-be husband Rupert Baines, played by Beau Bridges. The humor begins when Kate moves back into her New York house, to find that it is occupied by the ghost of her dead husband. What follows is a humorous array of circumstances that one might expect with a ghost for a companion.

Director Robert Mulligan does a more than adequate job of resisting the temptation to slip into the common and mundane techniques that are often employed in this type of film. His slow motion flashback scenes are skillfully constructed and briefly fulfill their purpose without boring the audience. He very cleverly introduces the ghost of Jolly with such devices as a dancing marionette and disembodied tap shoes dancing their way through the house. Throughout the film, Mulligan uses techniques such as these to keep the atmosphere fresh and lively.

The pinnacle of quality in "Kiss Me Goodbye" is its screenplay. Written by Charlie Peters, the film's dialogue is both humorous and believable. Peters never allows the comedy to spill over

NOTES

By CHRIS YOUNG

In this age of Mega Metal and Synthepop, the Stray Cats offer a very refreshing sound to our tired ears. What's so ironic about it is that this refreshing sound isn't some new super dynamic kind of music, but rather good old Rockabilly!

Rockabilly is exactly what it says: Rock and roll mixed with a little bit of Hillbilly, a pinch of salt and viola!, you have it. Rockabilly is essentially 50's music.

The country is being swept by a great 50's revival. Stores are beginning to resell all of the 50's styles, some redesigned and some even original stock. Sock hops are popping all over the place, and a favorite at these hops are the Stray Cats.

Armed with a hollow body Gibson, a stand up bass, 2 drums, tattoes, black T-shirts and bouffant hairdos, the Stray Cats are storming up the record and the popularity charts.

Their latest release Built for Speed has already spawned two hits. The rebellious "Rock This Town" and the slinky "Stray Cat Sturt." If by some chance you haven't heard either, "Rock" is vintage 50's style, and "Strut," the Cat's anthem, is basically a bluesy cut.

The Long Island band which made it big in Europe is finally getting its deserved popularity. I must, however, say that Built for Speed is not the kind of album you listen to. As funny as that may sound, it's the truth. If you happen to buy this album, don't

The Back Doors: In Retrospect

By JOHN WATTS

Riding the popular crest of the Doors current renaissance and fascination with its charismatic leader, Jim Morrison comes the logical formation of imitation bands who attempt to capture the same style and sound that make the band's memory seem more in reach. It's a very altruistic notion, and a very hardy exploitive commodity for the uncreative and weak of character. The tribute can either be constructive or destructive, depending on the attitude of the band.

At the Jarman Auditorium on the 4th of February, came the most intriguing and effective Doors rendition — the Back Doors. They have stunned and stymied audiences throughout their current tour. Intrigued with the kind of people that put their hearts on the line for this kind of entertainment, I took a paper and a pen to record adjectives as they spilled out. It was rather enjoyable to watch a performance without any preinstilled partialities; simply to observe.

The opening act, Chris Bliss, was a standout success in the jugglers vein, which is exactly what he went for, as he peppered his skillful juggling routines with outrageous anecdotes of humor. As with any skilled performer, Bliss had a resourceful feel for the mood of the crowd; knowing when to unleash his Don Rickles' ridicule, suppressed with enough good vibrations to relieve the audience rather than arouse them. This is not to say there weren't a few uncomfortable moments. Several local toughs sneered the act in their hot seats, pelting him with thoughtless obscenities, trying to earn pats on the back from their followers.

Bliss, who came equipped with a razor sharp wit, countered the catcalls with unflappable aplomb. His juggling left the appreciative majority spellbound, weaving his musical balls through a choreographed collection of rock songs. He brought to life songs from Stevie Wonder to Eric Clapton. The spectre that raised me from the level of casual observer to involved participant was Bliss's performance during "The Rock" an instrumental song by the Who from their rock opera "Quadrophenia;" with the dramatic effect of flash pot and strob light, Bliss began to take on the proportion of an entire rock band all by himself.

After the sustained piano note of "A Day in the Life" had faded and the stage had cleared, the audience was buzzing in anticipation for the main event. I could catch bits and pieces of what other people were saying around me. "If it's Jim, you'll know it," a girl whispered. The intensity was picking up. Only a legend could satisfy this crowd, and here they were. The Back Doors came onstage locked into careful study of its prototype.

All eyes were scanning at attention as the Jim Morrison figure strode to the microphone. So there goes all the theories, he was alive and well after a 10-year hiatus in Africa with Amelia Earhardt. Such a man could not be terminated by mere death. I didn't hear such speculative suggestions by the crowd, but that's what they were thinking.

The intellectual types who knew the meaning behind the Doors' songs sat up smartly in their seats judging through frowning glasses. The festive gung ho partiers raised their fists and tested the flick of their lighters. Women gaped and groaned at the spectre of seeing the uncanny resemblence the singer had to Morrison.

The vocalist whose actual name is Jim Hakim, did indeed capture the auro of Morrison, down to the way his slender stature slinked in tight leather pants. The entire outfit (the band that is) wore very well. The drummer, bassist, keyboard and guitar player adroitly filled the roles of Krieger, Manzerick and Densmore, as the quite yippie sideman.

Not only did the band match the greatest hits Doors repiotre with note for note accuracy, they also had inventive extended instrumental jams.

Jim Hakin obviously had Morrison's stage moves down with expertise. His occasional practice of leaving the stage highlighted the instrumentals and isolated the virtuoso interplay between the eerie keyboard and guitar flourishes. He also demonstrated the unpredictable onstage behavior of Morrison. He evidently wasn't the smoothest stage mover as when he executed those frantic leg spasms, more reminiscent of a Tennessee clogger. There were also a few lapses when his leaning on the microphone stance reminded me more of Johny Ramone of the Ramones than Morrison. But that was probably just me.

Actually it was amazing how Hakim commanded the complexity of Morrison's enigmatic personality. Fortunately to soothe the suspense of the crowd, Hakim would bring back remnants of reality to remind audiences that he wasn't the only Jim that mattered. "I'm not the Lizard King, but I can do anything." Such statements bring a graceful execution to the covering of Morrison's material.

All the songs bounced off in good fashion as Hakim's vocal delivery hit all the ranges and contained richness and expression. I wonder if Morrison's voice even remained as consistent and clear in the old Doors' concerts. But then again, Morrison had more freedom since he was just being himself, while Hakim is in a straitjacket from the unique role he's trying to play.

Hakim used pauses between songs to give dramatic recitals of Morrison's prose. He uses such imagery as "swallow our skulls with our pupils" and "the ghost ships loom as the shadow sweeps towards us." Personally I'd rather listen to the prose of Yoko Ono or Muhammad Ali. Yet that is where the elusive mystery of the man is contained, more so than in the lyrics of the songs.

I saw the convincing ability that Hakim had on the audience in the middle part of "Touch Me." During the emotionally lilting voice of Morrison'r enamored singing "Now I'm Gonna Love You til the Heavens Start to Rise," I could see several women gaze at the singer as if it was an intimate announcement. Their boyfriends nudged them to show that they were still there. Moments later Hakim would begin stalking around the stage with a truculent tension, showing the angelic-tyrant contradiction of Morrison's presence. By the last song "The End," a wave of clouds curled out into the audience locking them into Morrison's prophetic gloom.

At the conclusion of the concert every one had gathered in their wondering imagination and straightened their ties back to reality. Although no musical ground was broken or a new branch of New Wave sprouted, people appreciated it in the same fashion that a musical is appreciated and the actors are praised for their role playing. Still I had an empty feeling that went out of the auditorium with me; that of being present at a pleasant dream, intoxicating and appealing, but which evaporates upon close inspection. To me it's an uneasy phenomenon to see rock and roll stagnate to a sentimentalized state of long running Broadway extravaganzas. Like a new drug use, I guess it will take years to determine whether such ventures will be dangerous to the health of rock and roll. Yet the Doors music seems to have held up best in the elusive, ethereal light of post-mortem adulation. Clearly the report transmitted from the crowd showed that they were more than willing to go along for the ride. To them the Back Doors had left a vivid commerative stamp for all to remember.

Guest Editorial

By EDDIE HOLLANDER

Y'all probably wondering just what the heck a fella like me is doing writin' an editorial. Well, it isn't easy, let me tell you. I stayed up most all of last night thinkin' of the different things I was going to say and just didn't know how I was going to say them.

You see Joe — the real editor — though I gotta say — just between you and me the fella ain't got that much on the ball — but I can't say much more than that; because it's a possibility that he might start censoring and editing out all the important things I have to say, just because I give him a little rap now and then. Anyways Joe and me were sitting around drinking Budweiser when he says to me, "Eddie, you know what?" and I wanted to know, so I said "What?" He says "Eddie, I don't let anybody else ever have a chance at this editorial business, and I'm getting pretty sick of it, so (I put this "so" in, because it really doesn't make too much sense without it) why don't you write the next editorial."

Well I mean to tell you, I was just bustin' at the seams to take a shot at it. I mean, I don't even go to college, and here was Joe askin' me to write an editorial. I guess he finally figured out it ain't so much book sense that counts as common sense, as I've been trying to get across to him all these years.

So, anyways I stayed up all last night and didn't even drink or go to this party I was invited to down on High Street, and I wrote this thing up which starts out with these words —

"Ladies and gentlemen of Longwood College" and I thought they were right nice words but didn't know exactly what to put after them, so I decided to read up a little just to see what other folks have to say.

Well, I was just huntin' around my house, lookin' in a magazine rack which my Dad — a very good American, my Dad — keeps chock full of VFW magazines and "National Geographics" and Reader's Digest, and a few other magazines which have more pictures than words to them. When I found this U.S. News World Report — "the only news magazine devoted entirely to national and international affairs" and well, I mean to tell you I got all hot inside because that was exactly what I was lookin' for. Something that would let you form an opinion on decisive issues and things.

The cover of it was really swell — made you feel proud somehow — and had these three fellas an' one of them might have been black. I'm not sure though because he was in the background. Anyways it had these three fellas all done out with U.S. gas masks and U. S. M-16's and U.S. camouflage helmets and it was really pretty because in the background the sun was all orange and fiery and there was this tall shiny missile which was probably what they called nuclear sticking up in the Background.

I knew right then and there that I'd write about those guys in the U.S. Army and how they deserve a lot of credit for what they were doing. So I wrote these words "The U. S. Army is one of the best armies in the whole world," which sort of made me feel good to say 'cause my Dad was in the Army and he fought in the Big One which stopped most all the evil in the world, except maybe communism, but you couldn't expect them to do everything. And I figured it was up to us to stop the rest of the evil in the world so I wrote right after that, these words, "The U. S. Army will wipe communism right off the face of the earth."

Well that was real fine I thought, but I wanted to say something very important and I didn't know exactly what it was, like when you've got an idea on the tip of your tongue and just can't for the life of you spit it out. Well that's how I felt. So I figured I'd just open it up and read what was inside first to get some ideas to work with and stuff.

I opened it up to page 23 which is where the important story about the Army was, and got a real shocker. It had this great picture with these fellas in the Army all painted in green and black and the one fella had the muzzle of an M-16 pointed right at you. But what was really frightening leastwise, I think, so was the white lettering over the picture "Ready for Action - Or Are They?" And then it had written underneath the picture these words "After a decade of demoralization, the armed forces have been rebuilt into the best ever in peacetime. The challenge now is to sustain the trend — with a budget under attack!" Well, the article was right dry; but I read most of it and got the gist of what was being said and I'll tell y'all it wasn't none too good. Seems our President — Mr. Ronald Reagan — is trying to help out the U.S. military best way he can, by giving them money, and I think that's damned admirable, because I know I always give something to those Salvation Army folks around Christmastime, and it ain't like a handout - those folks really need the money. So anyway, the president of the U.S.A. was being really downright heroic by giving the U. S. Army a lot of money and these Indian givers in the Congress wanted to take it back, which I think is damned awful if you ask me. So I crossed out the first words of my editorial and I wrote, "The U. S. Army will wipe communism right off the face of the earth if you give it a chance." Then I wrote these words after that, "Everybody at Longwood College should help the U. S. Army get better so it can wipe communism right off the face of the earth. Then I thought about it for a second and tried to figure out what Longwood could do to help the U. S. Army get better. and I wrote this "Everybody should stop eating for one day and give the money to Mr. Ronald Reagan, President of the U.S.A., so he can give the money to the U. S. Army, so it can wipe communism right off the face of the earth." But I didn't think it would be enough money cause Congress might just hog it all. So I wrote these words, "Everybody should stop eating for two days and work part-time at restaurants, and give up that communist-sociological financial aid stuff, and give all that money directly to the Great President of the U.S.A., Mr. Ronald Reagan, so he can give it to the U. S. Army, so it can wipe communism off the face of the earth!" And I mean to tell you, I was really hot when I wrote those words 'cause I can think of nothing worse than the good ol' U.S.A. without a lot of big guns and healthy young blue-eyed boys ready to get them nasty ol' communists. Yes sir, and I admire Mr. Reagan for having what Joe would call a good "attitude" — You know seeing things the way they are. If you ask me, he's just like the Lone Ranger or something, ready to ride into town and shoot it up with the bad guys, and that's really American, if you ask me.

That's what Mr. Reagan is — A True Blue American, so I wrote these last words in my editorial, just to sort of wrap it up, "Everybody give everything to the Great Mr. Reagan, and keep America strong." Course I saw that the last part on a U. S. Recruiting poster, but I think it sounds pretty darn good. Joe even said it was "symbolic", whatever that means....

dining hall.

The idea for the sign was then proposed to the SGA Student Senate which unanimously passed the proposal to purchase such a sign. And with further assistance from Tom Nanzig the sign was purchased from North Star Enterprises Inc. for a measly $3,199.80. The money came from the Student Activities Reserve Funds Committee which holds leftover money from past student government endevours.

Three thousand dollars. I'd scream out the announcements myself for three thousand dollars.

Nancy Lang, Chairman of Communications for the SGA, is the person who determines what is displayed by the sign and what is not. "So far, from students I've talked to it's been well received," she recently said about the sign. "It's not as messy as the banners and has made the dining hall look much nicer. It reaches more people than the daily bulletin and it runs pretty much the same."

The only difficulty that Lang could foresee was if too much information is fed in to it. But currently the sign is operating well under capacity. Brad Huddleston, a computer math major, performs the actual operation of the sign. If a student wants to submit an announcement for the sign, it should be delivered to the Public Affairs Office and include the submittors name and phone number. Any student can submit messages. "The sign is for all the students and not just a selected few," Lang stated.

Three thousand dollars. Three Grand. You could buy a sound system and make easy money on mixers with three grand.

It would seem that the only real scar still apparent from the ordeal with the removal of banners is the shabby way that the administration treated the students. Nobody from the administration approached anyone from the SGA and politely asked if they could outlaw banners. They probably did not even give a warning and they definitely did not ask any students for their opinions on the matter. And when it came time to get money for the display sign, in order to solve the problem that they had created, the administration did not offer a dime.

Last Thursday, when I was in the dining hall trying to stomach my Slater and contemplating how many truckloads of beer three thousands dollars could buy for the student's fee consumption I heard an announcement on the

Nuclear Weapon's Designer Really A Man Of Peace

Dr. Delmar W. Bergen does not seem like a man who designs nuclear weapons.

He is a devout Christian who speaks softly and patiently about building relationships with the people of other countries, interaction among nations and the quality of life. He eloquently discusses the devastating effects of a prolonged nuclear conflict. And he hopes that the fruits of his labor will never be used.

"My former boss once said that it would be a good idea if, every now and then, the national leaders strtipped down to their BVD's and felt the heat of a nuclear explosion," he said.

Dr. Bergen, associate division leader of the Applied Theoretical Physics Division at Los Alamos National Laboratory, in New Mexico, came to Farmville last Friday (Jan. 28) to attend an orientation meeting of Longwood College's Departmental Advisory Committees. He has been appointed a member of the Natural Sciences committee.

He accepted the invitation because of his association with Dr. L. Raymond Fawcett, director of Longwood's physics and pre-engineering program. Dr. Fawcett, who has spent his past two summers as a visiting staff member at the Los Alamos facility, is one of 15 physicists who are working on an experiment to determine the precise yield of a nuclear explosion.

Dr. Bergen, 51, who grew up on a farm in western Kansas, is in charge of nuclear weapons development at the laboratory. He has been with Los Alamos since 1957.

Should we be scared of nuclear weapons?

"We should recognize the dangers, but not so much with weapons as with the modern world," he said. "We need a great deal of interaction between the major powers (to avoid conflict). We should be interested in the overall quality of life, in this country and in other countries. If we break our relationships with the people of other nations, or fail to build those relationships, the world is in grave danger."

"We should see the folly of resolving our differences by force," he added.

The best way to ease nuclear race-related tensions, said Dr. Bergen, is to "learn to care about people. Relationships are built on a one-on-one basis; not from books. I think both sides (U.S. and Soviet Union) should recognize the folly of failure."

Both super-powers realize that a nuclear war would be horrible — and that, perhaps ironically, is what prevents one from erupting, he said. "I have no question in my mind that that's a real deterrent. It's buying us some time so we can build relationships."

But, he quickly added, "deterrence is dynamic. Today's deterrent is not tomorrow's deterrent. Nevertheless, we must strive until we find a better approach. We can't turn the clock back."

The nature of the Soviet people must be taken into account in arms negotiations, according to the nuclear physicist. "You have to remember two things about the Soviets: they're paranoid and they have a losers' image of themselves. But there are areas

Who's That Girl?

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

Success stories are good for the heart. And if you're in college, tales about a graduate finding a job are especially good for the heart — and if the particular graduate is from Longwood, the good is all the better.

Jackie Knighton graduated from Longwood in 1980. They say "you can never go back," but Ms. Knighton is back at Longwood. Only this time she's on the other side of the desk. She's the newest member of the Sociology faculty. A professor only three years out of undergraduate school.

When I asked her for an interview, she giggled nervously, "Me? For the paper?" Her story is special because she's making it, in light of the crowded job market, limited opportunities, and heavy concentration on technical job skills.

Her office is meticulously neat — (in sharp contrast with most professor's scattered stacks and piles of papers — graded and ungraded, reference books on their particular field, and "How-to" books on communicating with students, budgeting salaries, and is there really life outside of Farmville?) — which doesn't seem to lend itself readily to her laid back philosophies or appearance. She's a little shy, but she grows more comfortable with each class period.

"My main problem is getting used to playing the role of a teacher after being a student for so long." The first day of classes, students could be heard whispering "Who's that girl? She's not our teacher. Look how young she is!" But Ms. Knighton insists that the closeness of age between herself and her students "doesn't really make me feel uncomfortable." She shifted a little in her chair. "I like to try to think of myself as what I really am. I'm a grad student and I'm qualified to teach these classes." She relaxed, shifted again in her seat, "Actually, I'm getting a big kick out of the reactions." She smiled. The other night I was at the library, just doing some reading and I had on old jeans and a sweatshirt. This student just couldn't believe I was a teacher here — 'Why' I asked 'Don't I look like a teacher?' " She laughed.

Ms. Knighton has noticed a change in the students and the school since she was here only three years ago. "They seem to be more outspoken — in a lot of ways . . which is good." She emphasized. "There seems to be more concern with diversity and emphasis on making changes, instead of concentrating on staying the same like they used to do." Jackie Knighton never intended to teach. She's still working on her thesis, "Downtown Revitalization," and hopes for a career in some phase of city planning. Her contract here only lasts through this semester, and she came into the job kind of by accident. She needed a job, and there was an opening here in the sociology department, "so I applied, and I got it. Here I am." She's glad for the opportunity — "teaching has just opened up another door to me." Ms. Knighton thinks that it's necessary to try different careers to really find the one best suited for a person. She tends to think the "Attitude of the Era" of rushing into college, rushing out of college into a job and rooting yourself is unhealthy. "I don't see any point in rushing into things. That's not the way it has to be done."

Deli Hits Farmville

By GEREE LYELL

Oh, a deli restaurant! Civilization has finally hit Farmville. As I leaped for joy, visions from my younger years breezed through my mind. The delis of New York, with black and white checkered linoleum floors covered with sawdust. Those big chrome and white formica countertops, and salamis and sausage hanging from the ceiling. Loaves and loaves of crusty rye, pumpernickle, black bread, ah yes . . .

Well, back to reality. RJ's Garden Deli in the Southgate Shopping Center is a poor imitation of those wonderful New York institutions. Although the menu has many of the familiar items like Rubens and pastrami and swiss, the idea of a quality deli stops there. With 18 sandwich choices on the menu, there is no mention of the classic "design your own" sandwich. Perhaps this would be too complicated for the eight employees crunched behind the ten foot counter.

The atmosphere is open, spacious and very clean. Although I miss the idea of a noisy little hole-in-the-wall, RJ's has a pleasant environment. Clean booths in sunny yellow and limitation tiffany lamps abound. The many hanging plants add to the decor, but can never replace the sawdust and salami,

The pleasant atmosphere can not make up for the quality of the food. My two companions and I enthusiasticly ordered our favorites, a Ruben, salami and provolone, and what RJ's calls the "Great Garden," a vegetarian sandwich. "The corned beef on the Ruben was the toughest I have ever eaten," said one companion. "It snapped back when I tried to bite it!" I found that on my sandwich the salami

Men's Basketball

After a disappointing 60-48 loss to Liberty Baptist Tuesday in Lynchburg, the Longwood men's basketball team hosted St. Paul's last night, and visits the University of Maryland-Baltimore County Saturday night in games this week. The 12-8 Lancers face a trip to Atlantic Christian Monday before wrapping up the season with home games against Randolph-Macon and Phillips next week.

The Lancers, who have now lost three of their last four games, led 26-22 at halftime of Tuesday's game at LBC, but fell to a hot-shooting Flames team in the second half. Jerome Kersey and Lonnie Lewis scored 14 points each and guard Joe Remar added 13 in the loss.

Saturday's foe, UMBC, has never played Longwood in basketball although the Lancers played in Gino's Classic at UMBC in 1980-81. The Retrievers will be competing in the new Mason-Dixon Conference with Longwood and four other schools next season.

Co-captain Joe Remar ranks among the top six in three categories in the latest state College Division statistics rankings compiled by VASID. Remar, Longwood's career record holder in points, assists, and steals, was fourth in field goal percentage (59.6), fifth in scoring (20.3) and sixth in assists (5.3).

Junior forward Jerome Kersey rated fourth in rebounding at 11.2 rebounds per game. Kersey, in rebounding, and Remar in scoring, have ranked among the leaders in NCAA Div. II much of the season.

Lady Lancers Host W & M

Longwood's women's basketball team, 7-13 after a 58-53 loss at Randolph-Macon last week host William & Mary today, Guilford Thursday and visits VCU Friday in a busy week of hardcourt action.

The Lady Lancers were to have played at Liberty Baptist Saturday afternoon, but snow forced postponement of the contest. The game is tentatively set for February 26 at 3:00 p.m. in Lynchburg.

Longwood outscored Randolph-Macon 52-42 from the floor in Tuesday's contest, but the Lady Jackets made 16 of 28 free throws to one of six for the Lady Lancers. Coach Jane Miller, however, blamed the loss on her team's poor shooting from the floor.

"We missed a lot of easy shots," said Miller. "I don't feel the game was lost at the free throw line."

Senior Cindy Eckel moved closer to the 1,000 point mark with an 18-point, eight-rebound performance. Eckel now has 977 points with six games left in the season.

Sophomore Valerie Turner continued her strong play with 16 points and 12 rebounds. The 5-10 cager is now averaging 6.1 points and 5.4 rebounds. Soph Florence Holmes continues to lead Longwood in scoring (13.1) and rebounding (6.5). Eckel is next at 9.3 ppg. while Robin Powell is scoring 6.4 ppg to rank third.

Longwood will be hampered in the William & Mary contest by the absence of senior center Karen Savarese who will miss at least one game with an injured hand.

"War today, even without nuclear weapons, is not the war of the past," he continued. "Since World War II, approximately 100 million people have been killed in aggression, armed conflict and political sugjugation."

He believes that unilateral disarmament "would create instability and take us to war, if it's not done properly." The Soviet government, he said in response to a question, should not be trusted: "They're amoral." Although the Soviet Union is superior in the area of conventional weaponry, the U.S. still has an edge in "general technology."

"But the Soviets are outspending us in research, development, testing and Bergen pointed out. "And they're graduating more engineers than we are. It's obvious the gap is closing."

Wrestlers Host W & L

The Longwood wrestlers will cap off a winning season Wednesday when the Generals from Washington and Lee come to Lancer Hall for a 7:30 match. Currently 7-5-1, the Lancers are ranked ninth in the State by the second Virginia Collegiate Coaches Wrestling Poll of the season. Washington and Lee also received votes in the poll, but was not ranked.

In last week's action, Coach Steve Nelson's squad tallied 39 points and took fourth in the Capitol Collegiate Tournament Tuesday at Howard University. Dana Dunlap, a 167 pounder, earned the highest Lancer honors with a second place finish. Another sophomore wrestler, Steve Albeck, a 142 pounder, received third place as did senior Joe Bass, a 177 pounder. Wrestling on an individual basis, Longwood faced familiar foes including Runner-up George Washington and Champion George Mason.

The Lancers will also face a familiar opponent when they take the mat Wednesday. Longwood wrestled the Generals in the W and L Tournament in Lexington January 22 and will again expect a big challenge.

"We'll have to really want this match," said Nelson. "In order to win we must wrestle with a great deal of emotion and energy."

In the Generals tourney, Washington and Lee placed second behind Elon with 53.25 points and Longwood scored 52.75 points.

Wednesday night will be a special occasion not only for the Longwood wrestling team, but for Senior Joe Bass. Bass, who came to Longwood via Chowan Junior College, has seen the progress of a 3-12 program in 1980-81 to this year's winning squad. Nelson, who brought Bass to Longwood from Chowan, feels the 177 pounder is the toughest in his weight class in the state. Bass, currently 18-6, is Longwood's top career grappler with a 46-22 mark.

Dr. Bergen is cautiously optimistic about the future. "I believe that Christ is really the answer. He changed the world one time...I think either Christianity will spread, world-wise, or the world will blow (UP)."

Will we ever be rid of nuclear weapons?

"Yes, I think so, but I don't know what the birth pains will be. It won't be in my lifetime. Much depends on the world situation. Ultimately, it's up to you and I."

Lancer Gymnastics

By JIM WINKLER

Despite the injuries and illnesses which have plagued the Longwood gymnastics team all year, the Lancers earned their second highest score of the season (152.25). However, for the third straight week the Lancers efforts weren't enough to come out on top, with William and Mary earning a high score of 159.6.

Kelly Crepps was a standout once again for Longwood, placing first in vaulting (8.6), third in beam (7.6), and second in all-around (31.55). Gray Stabley and Dana Hankinson also performed well for Longwood. Stabley finished third on bars (7.85), matching Longwood's best score of the year which she received in the George Washington Invitational. Hankinson finished second on the floor (8.45) and third in vaulting (8.45). She scored 7.45 on beam but did not participate on bars. Competing in just three events, Hankinson scored 24.05.

Lisa Zuraw missed several weeks of the season with a shoulder injury, but recovered to compete February 9 at Duke. Last Monday she injured her knee while working out. and will miss the remainder of the season.

Longwood (8-8) travels to Radford Saturday for the Virginia State Meet.

Lancer Club Drive Completed

The first organized personal solicitation campaign of the Longwood College Lancer Club was completed recently with excellent results. Thanks to the efforts of 17 dedicated club members, 60 businesses and individuals have joined the Lancer Club with $3,815 in increases over last year and a total of $5,685 in funds raised for the Lancer Athletic Program.

Lancer Club President Tony Perini, who served as chairman of the solicitation campaign, was extremely pleased with the results. The club now has a membership of 160.

"The Lancer Club has taken a big step forward with the successful completion of our solicitation campaign," said Perini. "We had an enthusiastic group of workers and the response from the community was gratifying. It's good to know that so many people recognize the benefits to the community that a solid athletic program can generate."

The White team, captained by Doug Martin, beat out the Blue team, captained by Bob Burger, Jr., in a friendly rivalry within the campaign. The Blue team, led by Stan Armstrong with $425 in increases, raised $3,285 total and $2,590 in increases. The White team, led by Carolyn Wells with $400 in inreases, raised $2,400 with $1,225 in increases. Fred Hughes received special recognition for being the hardest worker in the campaign.

Showcase Gallery

The work of Longwood College senior Dennis Cooper is featured in the college's Showcase Gallery, Lankford Reading Rooms, through February 25.

Cooper has selected a variety of work for his senior exhibition. Included are zinc plate and plexiglass etchings, pen-and-ink drawings, oil and acrylic paintings, three graphite portraits, a woodcut and linoleum cut, and photographs.

An art education major, Cooper completed 10 weeks of student teaching last semester at Prince Edward County and Randolph-Henry High Schools. He is photographic technician for the college's Public Affairs Office, and his work has been included in GYRE, Longwood's literary-art magazine.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Carmon Cooper, of Farmville

As for the dining hall, another administration goal has been met. Of course, the food still stinks but the place does look nice. The display sign is much more attractive than the banners and they even conned somebody in to painting something blue. Is it worth it?

The Cats are everything the word "jam" is meant ot be (except jelly). The Cats could hold their own against any R&B band. 50's music may nat seem hard to play, but there is some damn good guitar playing by head Cat Brian Setzer. Not only do these guys have a new "angle", but they are talented. Mucho talented.

If the Rockabilly fad sticks around, you can bet we'll hear more from the Stray Cats. They have definately got Cat Class!

Deli Hits Farmville

was too greasy and had no flavor. At $2 for a regular sandwich (more for a super), I didn't find a bargain anywhere under the cheese and lettuce piled on what I figured out to be a rye "sub roll." What happened to the crusty rye that took forever to chew? These rolls were soft enough for the grandmother who forgot her dentures in the bathroom glass. But then I must remember that Farmville is a bit behind on the deli scene.

My other companion found that the vegetarian sandwich was rather good, except that they forgot to include the alpha sprouts on the sandwich. But then how can you go wrong with vegetables? They are all the same in Farmville, Chicago, New York or Des Moines.

RJ's Garden Deli is an unexpected change from the already too crowded pizza scene but as a quality deli it just doesn't rate very high. Maybe the dozen or so flavors of hand dipped ice cream will attract some customers. The sandwiches won't.

Kiss Me Goodbye

into the extreme slapstick that seems to have become the fashion of late.

The film's cast presents a mixture of good and bad. On the good side is the supporting cast fronted by Claire Trevor as Kate's mother who provides the perfect contrast to Rupert's bungling. Also on the good side is James Coan whose refreshing and humorous character is truly deserving of the name Jolly. The bad side of the cast is occupied by Beau Bridges and Sally Field. Bridges' acting is shallow and fails to reach the obvious potential of the character of Rupert. Sally Field has yet to return to the quality of acting she displayed so well in "Norma Rae." Her character seems forced and insincere, and shows once again that her future does not rest in the area of comedy. Together, Bridges and Fields are an unlikely comic pair.

Despite its flaws, "Kiss Me Goodbye" is a very entertaining film. It takes a very stock, Neil Simon-like situation and develops it into an above average plot. The humor is of a high quality and rarely becomes stagnant. What it lacks in casting is made up for by its fresh approach to an old film genre.

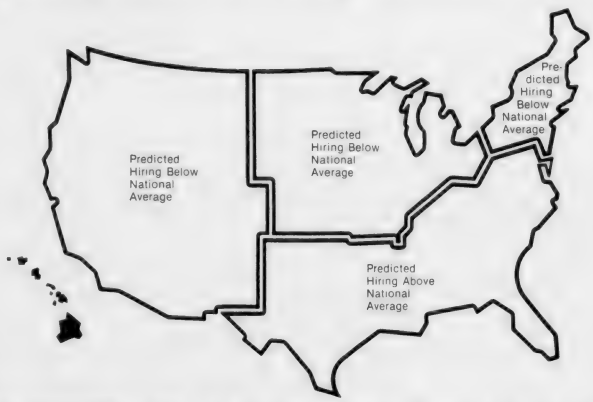
Where The Jobs Are and Aren't

Results of Manpower Inc. Employment Outlook Survey



A thin but visible ray of hope for the future of the nation's employment picture has emerged in the latest findings of the quarterly Employment Outlook Survey. According to the projections of over 11,200 employers polled in 347 U.S. cities last month, the quarter-to-quarter drop in hiring plans has halted, and a slight improvement is indicated for the first quarter (January, February, March) of 1983 when compared to survey results of one year ago.

While slightly fewer firms plan to hire additional workers in the next three months than last year at this time, the number expecting cutbacks has declined markedly.

Uncertainty about the length of the recession seems to be holding back plans for increased staffing in the first quarter. There seems to be a trace of cautious optimism in the survey figures for the first time in the last six quarters. It is most evident in the drop in the number of firms expecting workforce reductions. Reductions must decline before positive factors develop. Expected reductions have declined markedly in some key employment sectors, particularly in the construction and manufacturing industries which have been hardest-hit over the past year.

While the number of employers planning to expand their workforce is the lowest seen in six years, the number planning no change is the highest in that same period. It appears that the downward slide which began a year ago has stopped.

Regionally, the South continues to offer the brightest future for jobseekers with a major upswing reported by the construction industry. Western employers continue to expect slightly more cutbacks than increases in staff levels, the Midwest reports a more favorable employment outlook typified by a sharp drop in the number of firms expecting cutbacks, and the Northeast continues to predict slow-paced hiring activity.

Employers in the Northeast continue to predict slow-paced hiring activity, and some improvement in the construction industry which expects far fewer cutbacks for the first quarter of 1983 than in the past five similar quarters.

Overall, slightly more employers in this region expect staff reductions than plan additions; Northeastern survey figures lag behind those reported nationally.

Manufacturers are cautiously optimistic with the highest number in the seven-year history of the survey planning no change in employment levels. Manufacturers of durable goods predict the job climate to be similar to that of one year ago, and manufacturers of non-durable goods predict a slightly improved employment outlook.

The greatest improvement in job opportunities is reported by the construction industry: the number of expected cutbacks has declined markedly.

Improvement is also noted by wholesale and retail merchants. Seasonal staff reductions are reported for the first quarter as employers return to pre-holiday staff levels, but the cutbacks are not expected to be as severe as last year.

The employment outlook has stabilized in the white-collar sectors of services and finance, insurance, and real estate. While the number of job opportunities has not increased in these sectors, the number of employers expecting cutbacks in the finance, insurance and real estate sector has slowed.

The Midwest reports a more favorable employment outlook than one year ago. The improvement is typified by a drop in the number of firms expecting cutbacks.

This development was particularly evident in the manufacturing sectors with manufacturers of durable goods reporting survey figures which are a great improvement over those of one year ago. While the same number of employers in this sector plans to hire additional workers during the first quarter of 1983, significantly fewer expect reductions. Likewise manufacturers of non-durable goods predict a halt in the quarter-to-quarter cutbacks reported this past year.

Seasonal cutbacks by wholesale and retail merchants are not expected to be as great as in the past two first quarters and the number of employers actually planning increases has risen slightly.

Construction employers also report a thin but visible ray of hope with fewer expecting workforce cutbacks than last year at this time.

The white-collar sectors of finance, insurance, and real estate and the service industry do not report much improvement. The number of employers planning expansions to staff has diminished slightly, but the number expecting cutbacks has

Regionally, the South continues to offer the brightest future for jobseekers with a major upswing reported by the construction industry. In addition to the predicted expansion in workforce, employers in this sector expect fewer cutbacks than one year ago.

The highest number of job opportunities in the South are reported by the white-collar sectors of services and finance, insurance and real estate. Neither group posts survey figures which are an improvement over those recorded one year ago, but employment levels are expected to be stable.

Like the national trend, Southern wholesale and retail merchants predict slow-paced hiring activity, but the seasonal staff reductions are expected to be less severe than in previous first quarters.

Southern employers in the public administration sector are cautiously optimistic in their hiring plans with a high number planning no change in staff levels.

While Western employers continue to expect slightly more cutbacks than increases in staff levels, the construction industry and manufacturers of non-durable goods predict an improved job climate. A major upswing is predicted by construction employers planning to expand staff size while the number expecting reductions has dropped markedly. Likewise, cutbacks are expected to slow in the non-durable goods manufacturing sector and hiring is expected to be similar to that of one year ago.

Manufacturers of durable goods are not as optimistic with slightly more employers expecting cutbacks as plan staff increases. Last year at this time, the reverse was reported.

Beyond The Score

By William R. Leap

The crowd is restless and hot. They came to see some good ball playing and to have a good time. They're not expecting a whole lot, they just want their team to win. Some are friends, some are relatives, some skipped a big party and others a cram session in botany to come and see their team win. They're out there, they're anticipating, and they're betting, betting on the winner. They don't all like you or your team, but some of them love you like a son or daughter. They're more than electric they're atomic and they're ready to explode into a howl of excitement, praise, and deference. You know what they're looking for and you know you're not an actor, not a gladiator. You're a basketball player and it's time to play ball; that's all you know. They're just the batteries that get you charged, everything else is you, you and a hardwood floor, a glass board, and an orange rim, the ultimate truth.

"Every game's like an NBA championship," he said rather candidly but with an air of complete confidence. At 5'8" 150 pounds, Frank Tennyson is undoubtedly the runt of the litter. But he's bigger than he looks.

"He likes to say he's 5'10" but he's really 5'8" ..." says assistant coach Earnest Neal with a chuckle. "His teammates see him as being a spark plug or a motivational force for them. He's quicker than all the other players on the ball club and has a lot of espirit de corps."

Espirit de corps not only lives within Frank Tennyson, but on the walls of his fifth floor Frazier room. The moment you walk in you feel like you just stepped into the basketball hall of fame. The walls are papered with Sports Illustrated shots of all the big names from Dr. J to Christine Brinkley. And off towards the window an interesting basketball collage is constructed around the words "The Best" and "A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

"I think it's an advantage," says Tennyson concerning his physical stature. He sits relaxed on his bed and is dressed in cotton sweats. He talks with self-assurance. "I can do a lot of things the bigger players can't."

From the Boys Club of Richmond at age five to the National Youth Games for ages fifteen and under through Huguenot High School and Highland Springs High School to Longwood College, Tennyson has been proving on the court that he can do things that bigger players can't do. "You heard of Henderson...he plays for the Celtics; he went to Huguenot High School," says Tennyson with a smile and a definite air of pride.

An open young man of eighteen years with a faint touch of shyness, Tennyson clearly desires the recognition he deserves. But he isn't a starter for the Lancers and not likely to be a starter in the foreseeable future.

"He is by nature an aggressive player," admits coach Neal bluntly, "but he had some problems early in the season...he wasn't quite sure what he was doing."

Coming from being a high school superstar where he could do just about anything he wanted on the court into a college program where the system is totally different, Tennyson naturally had some adjustment problems. "It's more prestigious to start," he explains gazing at the floor thinking, being careful to convey the right meaning. "Starting means a lot but it doesn't mean everything. I'm not hung up over this starting thing."

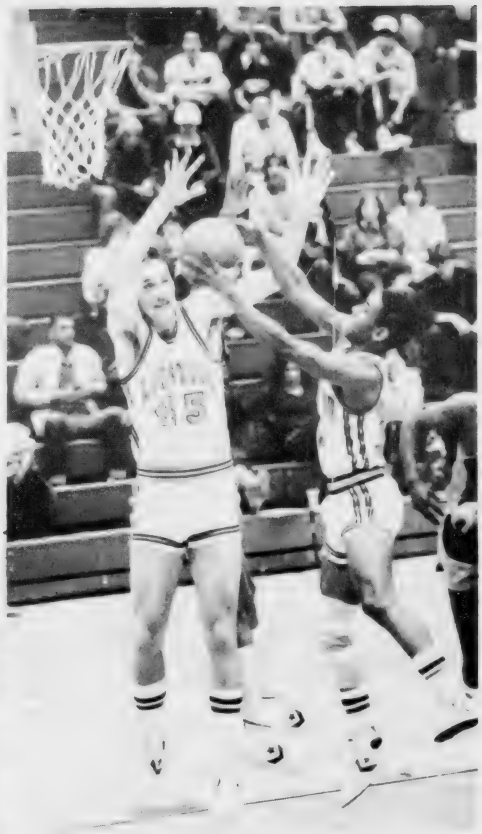
Then came the "freshman blues." The I'm not hungry, I can't do anything right, freshman syndrome. The coaches taking him aside for one of their "private talks," the first tests coming back a little less than par, and worst of all, the girls don't seem to have any taste.

It's that time in every freshman's life when the whole world seems to be falling into little bitsy pieces. For a basketball player it's even worse, concentration is a must. "Doing bad in basketball carries over into my social life," explains Tennyson. "It got so I couldn't sleep and I'd stay up all night reading and studying." He thought of hanging it up and going home.

Tennyson is a well-rounded, college-caliber point guard with a sincere interest in academic pursuit. He realizes that professional athletics is probably not in his future. But inside the Lancer's littlest point guard burns a bonfire.

He's a high energy player that actively responds to Longwood fans waving their blue and white pompons from way back in the stands.

Roughing the early season, freshman white waters, Tennyson has come back with a ferocious intensity that could well shatter the backboard. "I never in my life quit anything I started...I'm kind of an emotional person," he explains in the calm of his dorm room on a snowy afternoon. But what about on the court? Surely there must be some reason why George Mason, East Tennessee State University, and Longwood College actively recruited Tennyson for their programs.



"College doesn't dictate that you can't do different things," says Tennyson dryly, almost accusingly. He's looking for some latitude and as much playing time as possible, just like everyone else on the team.

Not being a starter, he realizes many of the advantages of waiting on the bench to play. "You can see the mistakes they're making on the court and you know when you go in you're not going to make that one," he says with a chuckle. "There's a lot more pressure to do well."

He's been there. He's been on the bench intently watching the game like a pro scout, looking for mistakes, the fouls, anticipating going in at any moment. He knows he's got to know what's going on on the court all the time, just like the coach. He feels the tension grow inside his guts when Joe Remar has got his third foul in the first half and head coach Cal Luther calls for him.

Now it's his turn to play ball. He's in the game and the crowd knows it. They're looking at him with scrutinizing eyes...they want to win. In his mind the crowd melts away like jello in the hot sun, they're not there, he can't let them be. He feels the smoothness of the ball on his fingertips as he dribbles up the court eluding a 6'8" guard with capped teeth and getting off a clean pass to Jerome Kersey who slams it home.

The crowd erupts into a wild frenzy of excitement. They're his friends for now and he knows it. But he also knows how fragile that friendship can be not only as a non-starter who can't afford many mistakes but as a favorite of the whimisical fans. He knows they're unreliable and will change colors like a kaleidoscope two minutes later when a not so fine pass leads to a turnover and a hush sweeps through the gymnasium like a forest fire in the Sierra Mountains. "You should have been there" is all he can think.

Tennyson hustles for a block.

A business management major with his eye on insurance, Tennyson knows the value of security. "I have the same attitude at practice as during the game," he says thoughtfully. He views practice as the insurance policy for a good game. "You have a good practice, you have a good game."

And practice he does. He practices with the same intensity as he plays. "He comes early and leaves late," states coach Neal matter-of-factly.

Frank Tennyson looks forward to increased playing time in his future years at Longwood but is open to the prospect of a better qualified point guard than himself coming along to fill the sneakers of senior Joe Remar. "If he's doing things we need for the team, then he should be the one that's playing," he says dryly, gazing at his basketball wallpaper.

He may not be a starter for the Longwood Lancers, but Frank Tennyson certainly feels part of the team. Whether dashing out on the court at that crucial pressure point in the game or squating down in his super low, free throw stance, Tennyson's mind is on nothing but rhythm and form, rhythm and form. He may not be a Ralph Sampson as an individual basketball player, but when he's on the court his mind's on playing ball and playing it well.

Meanwhile, the fans in the backdrop are thinking win.

BUBA—The Non-Alcoholic Frat

For some people a fraternity is the epitome — the apotheosis of college life. Friends that are as frequent as emptied beer cans, wonderfully insane inductions (recall the raw egg yolk which had to be passed from mouth to mouth by initiates while laying on a tile floor with their hands tied behind their backs) and beautiful sorority women whose dearest wishes are successful ski trips which invoke a nostalgia generally reserved for dead ancestors; flashy toga parties and wild intoxicated runs on an unsuspecting town — what can beat the ultimate hedonistic throw-your-mind-to-the-wind atmosphere of a true blue collegiate fraternity? Another fraternity of course. To be specific, BUBA fraternity, right here at Longwood College.

BUBA (beta upsilon beta alpha) is the infrequent exception to the rule. Fraternity pour la fraternity. Esprit de corps — I os hermanos united in the common cause of los hermanos on first floor Tabb dormitory, room 107. That is their "headquarters", where the Fraternity's spokesman, David Walton, described BUBA's creation and evolution.

"It started as a joke and just got carried away . . . carried away right into reality. We were just a bunch of fellows that wanted to join a fraternity but wouldn't or couldn't because first, it was too expensive and second, none of us were into partying. BUBA, for us, stands for Brothers United By the Annointed. Don't get us wrong, it's not a heavy religious fraternity, we all share a common faith though. Our motto is 'fratres conociatus ad diem — brothers united by God."

In their bathroom are the remnants of their last party — eight cartons of emptied mountain dew and pepsi bottles. "The closest thing we come to a hangover is a bad aftertaste . . . we just think there are better things a frat can do besides drinking itself under a table or hugging the toilet bowls."

Although such a unique concept as a non-drinking, non-hazing fraternity should have been eagerly accepted by Longwood's administrators, it wasn't.

"At first it was really difficult, Bob Jensen vice president of the interfraternity council took the idea to Dean Ogrosky and he rejected it. He said that there were only 800 men at Longwood and of these only about 10 per cent joined fraternities. Since there were already five fraternities on campus he felt that another one would be unnecessary . . . sort of like over kill I guess. Anyways after hearing his verdict we decided to go to Phyllis Mable (Vice President of Student Affairs) who has the last say in such matters and she was great. She accepted the idea right off. After that it was just a matter of drawing up a constitution and recruiting new members."

The fraternity has done relatively well in recruitement considering Longwood's drink-a-thon attitude. Four new members were inducted February 20 and they are looking for more initiates as soon as BUBA becomes better known.

"It's just a matter of time . . . people will see what we have to offer — things like an active intramural sports program, working with charities such as the United Hunger Fund, even dances where, if somebody wants, they can bring a alcohol, but the fraternity isn't going to pay for beer or anything."

Another item which may attract new members in an age of tight wallets and squeaking budgets is their fee, which by

David Kramer Speaks On U.S.-West German Relations

A slogan on walls in West Germany reads, "Why do the Americans want to defend us to death?"

That characterizes the attitude of many West Germans toward the United States, Professor David Kramer, Prorektor of the College of Social Work and Social Work Education in West Berlin, told a Longwood audience on February 10.

Kramer, whose institution entered into a partnership agreement with Longwood last November, spent two days on the Longwood campus, discussing possible exchanges with faculty and administrators. He gave a lecture in Wygal on West German-American relations and the rise of alternative political ideologies in Germany.

Dr. Michael Haltzel, Longwood's vice-president for academic affairs, noted that the agreement "is starting to bear fruit. It has a great deal of potential for the faculty and, ultimately, for the students of Longwood College" Kramer's position as Prorektor is the equivalent of Haltzel's post.

"The relationship (between U.S. and Germany) is difficult to define," said Kramer, a native American and a political scientist. "The simple fact of the matter is that we established West Germany. They feel a great deal of gratitude but also a great deal of resentment. Now, their gratefulness has been replaced by a critical attitude."

"We can't expect Germans to continue to be devoted disciples of the United States," he added. "They have to find their own identity."

Kramer noted that inflation "destroyed" Germany's economic system after World War II — the rate of exchange was American cigarettes. "West Germany was shaky at first but quickly developed, with the aid of the Marshall Plan, one of the best economies in the world. Their recovery was mind-boggling; I know Germans who can remember hunger. They created what's been called 'the economic miracle.' "

Although the United States is still a powerful nation, said Kramer, it is not as powerful as it once was, and this shift affects U.S. relations with West Germany and all of Europe. Two major issues separating the United States and Europe are the deployment of medium-range U.S. missiles and the Siberian natural gas pipeline, he said.

"An overwhelming majority of Germans don't want medium-range American missiles, which they originally requested," pointed out Kramer. "The debate on this issue has become bizarre in Germany. They criticize the Americans but not the Soviets, ironically . . . I don't think it's in our interest, or their interest, to defend them (Germans) against-will.

that the U.S. would defend their continent regardless of the consequences, Kramer said. "The Germans started thinking that if the Russians bombed, let's say, Frankfurt, then the United States would bomb Moscow and the Russians would retaliate by bombing New York. Germans don't think that an American President would trade New York for Frankfurt."

West Germany, he said, is strategically important because of its location. "It's the dividing line between East and West. The Soviet Union would have to come through Germany to get at Europe. If West Germany became pro-Soviet, it would alter the global power situation. That's not likely now, but it's possible sometime in the future."

Unfortunately, the disintegration of the NATO alliance has hurt that organization's chances for a worthwhile arms agreement with the Soviets, Kramer claimed.

"I think the NATO alliance is in the process of falling apart. And I'm not the only person who thinks so. Henry Kissinger thinks so, too . . . Though the U.S. is spending more money on defense, I think it's actually less secure, because of the fragmentation of NATO nations."

West German fears over the arms race, and the obvious impact of a nuclear conflict, have led to the rise of the Alternative Party, sometimes known as the "Greens," he said. If the March 6 national elections were held today, this left-wing party — which opposes all forms of nuclear weapons — would probably control Parliament, predicted Kramer.

Since the late 1960s, he continued, young Germans have voted for left-wing candidates, a departure from the past when young people voted like the rest of the country. About 30 per cent of young voters now support the Alternative Party. "This has given a new flavor to German

Fred Speaks Out- And Makes A Request Or Two

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

Any of you who have ventured into downtown Farmville in recent days are probably aware that Walt Disney's "Peter Pan" is now showing at the State Theatre. A few of you (a very select few, I'm sure) may even be anxiously waiting to read what I have to say about it. To that select few, I apologize. I have absolutely nothing to say about "Peter Pan." In fact, I have never seen the film myself.

Whenever I think about reviewing a film like "Peter Pan" (the sort that have become national institutions) I am engulfed by an overwhelming wave of anxiety and paranoia. Suppose I saw the film and didn't like it; how could I give it a bad review and still maintain a sense of personal safety. If I saw the film and liked it, there would be those who would doubt my sincerity and say that I was bending to social pressure. Instead, I will yield to a social pressure of a different kind and simply not review it.

Part of my problem is that I do not have something that every film critic needs: a good idea of what his readers like and dislike in movies. I never know what the basic reaction to any of my reviews will be. If I had this foresight, I would feel more secure in what I review and know who would hate and who would applaud my opinion.

With this sentiment, I now call on you, the students of Longwood College, to voice your opinion in the area of cinematic art. What is the best film you have seen? What is the worst film you have ever seen? Take the time to write down a list of your favorite and least favorite movies (limit yourself to ten of each, please). It is my aim to compile a list of Longwood's favorite films and also the ones you wouldn't take your worst enemy to see. I am convinced that everyone has an opinion on this subject; everyone has been moved by a particular film, either to tears or to the bathroom. Therefore, I expect an overwhelming response from both students and faculty (this means you, Dr. Greenwood). The final list will then be compared with my own list, just so you can see how your opinion matches with mine. Send your list to me, Fred Campbell, Box 97, the Rotunda, Box 1133, or give it to any member of the Rotunda staff. Don't forget to sign your name. I appreciate and anxiously await your response.

AASA Talent Competition

A two-brother dancing act took first place and a stand-up comedian captured second in the Fashion-Talent Show sponsored recently by Longwood's Afro-American Student Alliance. The February 16 program in Lankford Building occurred in conjunction with Black History Month.

AASA, which annually sponsors a talent competition, decided to add a fashion show to this year's program. Eight women participated in the non-competitive modeling of the latest fashions, while four talent acts were featured.

Marty and Rico Criner of Spotsylvania, first prize winners of $25, performed a dance routine called "Bits and Pieces." They used a distinctive dance style which was described as a combination of "electric boogaloo and the pop." Marty is freshman class president.

Rick Franks of Norfolk, a stand-up comedian, won $15 for his 1-minute performance. He has performed at comedy clubs in Richmond, Norfolk, Cleveland and elsewhere in his native Ohio.

AASA members Silvia Holmes and Troy Littles were in charge of fashion and talent, respectively. Ms. Holmes was also program M.C.

Judges for the program included Tom Baynham, director of Employee Relations; Dr. Martha Cook, an English professor; and Karen Hubbard, a dance lecturer.

College Republicans

The Longwood College Republican Club received two awards at the College Republican Federation of Virginia State Convention, held Feb. 18 - 20. The club received the awards for best small club and most improved club.

The entire club is to be commended for its fine work during the election campaign and the progress it has made during the past year. Congratulations.

But then that groddy Captain Hook showed and was just too yukky like really zod and he started acting all Geek and macho with poor Petie and Tinker and I totally went teary eyed. Especially when twinky wendy was like walking the plank and Petie almost ya know got munched by a tic toc croco. I like couldn't scan that hoddaded hook any longer it was ohhh like gag me with a spoon really groody, groody to the max. So like I left. I mean what would you do? Debate Tournament Held

The fifteenth Longwood College Invitational Debate Tournament was held on Saturday, February 19, 1983. Emerging as the first place winner over twenty-two schools was Prince Edward County High School. In second place was Prince Edward Academy; third place was Blacksburg High School, tieing for fourth place was Douglas Freeman High School and Western Albemarle High School. Over 175 students were debating the topic of curtailing the arms sales to foreign countries.

In the switchman division Morgan Anderson of Prince Edward Academy captured the politics," said Kramer.

West Germany also experienced a "baby boom" after World War II; between 1958 and 1967, one million children were born annually, twice the normal rate. "Nobody knows exactly what to do with these young people," he said. "They think their economic future is bleak. They're much more pessimistic than young Americans."

Since the German economy stopped growing in the late 1970s, Kramer said, the country is increasingly unable to support its welfare state ("It's hardly possible to stub your toe without someone coming to lick your wounds at government expense," he laughed).

"They're not just upset and uncertain over missiles. They're upset and uncertain about everything. If there was a war in the Middle East, they'd be cold in two months. The United States has the least advanced welfare state of any capitalist country and we can't afford it — imagine the problems the Europeans are facing."

The United States should reassess its relationship with Europe and, in the future, be more candid about its intentions, said Kramer.

"We Americans have to face some very difficult decisions about what our (European) interests are," he noted. "We should determine who our allies are and who isn't our allies. We're not helping ourselves by saying we'll come to the aid of Europe; they simply don't believe it anymore. We should tell the West German: do you want a mutual partnership or accommodation with the Soviet Union? There are definitely risks to this, but there are risks to deluding ourselves."

"We should put the Europeans to the test," he added. "I think they'll meet the test."

The Rotunda is Lacking

By Becky Dunk

Any newspaper — be it a major one such as The Washington Post or a small bi-weekly like the Farmville Herald — should be compiled so as to meet the needs of the community it serves. Likewise, a college newspaper should adequately serve the community it caters to. Why then, does the Longwood College paper, The Rotunda, not meet the expectations of the student body? A look at the February 8, 1983 issue of The Rotunda will help to justify my complaint.

First of all, let me support my statement that students aren't happy with the paper. At lunch yesterday, I was nominated by my friends to go and gather up several copies of the paper so we could all read it. As I passed through the Rotunda, I noticed that very few people were even casually glancing at the paper. Could it be that bad, I wondered? Several other copies cluttered the floor and the glass cabinets lining the Rotunda walls.

I grabbed four papers and weaved my way back through the crowd which was gathering for lunch. I threw the papers on the table where we were sitting and watched as several eager readers picked up a copy. The response among the other seven people at the table was quite similar — each one quickly leafed through the issue, said "boring," or "nothing I want to read," and tossed it back down.

Being interested in journalism, I delved deeper into the copy than my peers had. What were my sentiments? I had to agree with the others — it was pretty bad.

I did think the front page looked good until I reached page 3. Why was an article about Dr. David Kramer, dean of a college in West Berlin, relegated to the inner pages? After all, how often do people from Germany visit Longwood?

The "Sorority Informal Rush Schedule" on page 4 was nice if one is interested, but by the time the paper came out, Rush was half over. Anyone who really cared probably saw the flyers that were posted on every wall, pole, and window all over campus. Was the schedule merely a space filler?

If I hadn't read the Nestle's article in the last issue of The Rotunda I never would have understood "Nestle's Reply" on page 7. An editor's note with a brief explanation would have been appropriate.

The article on page 8 dealing with the Miss Longwood Pageant was also worthy of the front page. Of the students I talked to, more are interested in the Miss Longwood Pageant than in the Departmental Advisory Committees.

The sports pages this week should have been an embarrassment to the editor. The title of the first article, "Lancers Split With Trojans — Face Randolph-Macon Thursday, Away," was outdated. That's last week's article! On page 11 we read that Randolph-Macon beat Longwood.

This happens several other times with women's basketball, gymnastics, and wrestling. One wrestling article says we host Hampden-Sydney Wednesday, while another article on the next page boasts of the Lancer's victory over Hampden-Sydney. Which do we believe? With minimal effort, these articles could have been combined or at least updated. (Incidentally, the photo on page 11 which was credited to Dennis Cooper was taken by Hoke Currie.)

There are more spelling and grammatical errors in this paper than in one Sunday issue of The Washington Post. Is it that hard to find someone to proofread each issue?

Finally, why, if this is a student paper, aren't all the students who write articles given bylines? And in the cases where articles come from Public Affairs, Sports Information, or some other office, aren't they worthy of a little credit?

A student newspaper should not be a one-man effort; the editor-in-chief shouldn't be expected to write all the articles, do the layout, and proofread the copy by himself. If more students would get off their apathetic tails and contribute to The Rotunda, maybe Longwood would have a more attractive, informative newspaper than the one we are presently faced with.

To The Editor,

I was very disappointed with your "Deli Hits Farmville" article. I have found the food to be very delicious!

I got the "Great Garden" in pocket wheat bread, and it was superb! It was stuffed full of melted provolone and cheddar cheese, cucumbers, lettuce, tomatoes, olives, spinach, carrots, bell peppers, oil, vinegar, spices, and "alfalfa" sprouts not "alpha" sprouts.

Another time I went, I got the roast beef in pocket wheat bread stuffed full of yummy veggies, and it was just as delicious!

* To read this article and have you condemn the restaurant on the first time you try it is appalling. Remember the first time you tried beer? And didn't you give it a second chance?

Maybe you should send someone else on your staff to try R.J.'s — get a second opinion. (The guy that ate with the reporter liked his meal. Why not have more input from him?)

Many people who have read your article probably won't try R.J.'s because you have cut it down, and I don't feel that you gave R.J.'s a fair chance.

I also considered it very rude to put an advertisement of R.J.'s next to a downgrading article. They explicitly say that they don't claim to be a New York deli, but you cut them down because they're not.

Why does (almost) every article printed in the Rotunda down whatever your are writing? News doesn't always have to be bad!

Setting Suzy Straight

By LIZ D'SURNEY

Why is it that only Home Economics majors seem to get ridiculed and harassed for their major? You never hear of anyone walking up to a student majoring in chemistry and say, "Why? So you can play around with testubes and chemicals the rest of your life?", or to an accounting major and say, "What are you going to do? Add and subtract for a living?"

Remarks such as these are what Home Ec. majors have to live with everytime they mention their major; the pressure doesn't stop here. It carries over whenever you encounter people who know your major. They jeer and chant "Suzy Homemaker, Suzy Homemaker, Suzy, Suzy, Suzy" until you actually want to use a dust pan and broom . . . but not for sweeping!

It is extremely frustrating, to say the least, to be at a party, at work, church, or home, or visiting and have people make comments such as: "Oh, are you going to be a teacher . . .or "a professional housewife?" . . . "or cook and sew the rest of your life?" Or one of my favorites, "So you can hang your degree on the wall and dust it off every day!"

Upon first entering the career of Home Ec., such statements would almost immediately make me react in a defensive manner. Now, however, I can only pity such people for their ignorance.

Many companies hire Home Economics majors but they do not publicize it. Some of these major companies are Vepco, C&P, A. H. Robins, Phillip Morris, Reynolds Metal, Allied Chemicals, General Electric, and Proctor & Gamble. The true title of Home Ec. is concealed from the public. Instead, companies tend to list them under titles such as: Public Affairs Director, Communications Consultant, Consumer Information Specialist, Marketing Manager, Account Executive, Energy Specialist, Fashion Consultant, Merchandising Evaluation Engineer, and Nutrition Coordinator.

Facts and information explaining the growth and development of Home Economics are available through the media. It's all there. The jobs are varied. To mention a few: Market Service Assistant, Manufacturer's Representative, Production Development Coordinator, Loan Counselor, Legislative Assistant, Consumer Services of TV, Auditor for I.R.S., Film Producer, Food Production Manager, and the list goes on. Home Economics covers areas such as Family and Child Development, Nutrition, Fashion Merchandising, Consumer Affairs, Communications and Business.

These job possibilities should be considered the next time people come across a Home Ec. major, rather than admit to their own naivety. The field of Home Ec. has grown vastly. Presently, it is one of the best fields to get involved in. People from other majors often find themselves in Home Ec. positions, among these are business majors. Once in these positions, they find themselves lacking in the skills required of Home Ec. majors.

This is just a fraction of the information about Home Economics. Home Ec. majors are in great demand. The stereotyped idea of Home Ec. can go straight down the drain . . . and Suzy too.

The team from Prince Edward County High School of Monique Fawcett, Cliff Peale, Sandra Kiess, and Lacey Peale won the varsity division as a team. Monique Fawcett was the top negative debater followed by Cliff Peale.

In the novice division the team of Three Stonikinis, Kate Iverson, Carol Berry, and Becky Haltzel of Prince Edward County captured the novice division. Cherie Elder of Prince Edward Academy captured the speaker award on the negative side, followed by Three Stonikinis. In third place Becky Haltzel and Diana McMakin (PEA) tied for the award. The novice team of Susan McKissick, Cindy Southall, Peyton Anderson, Monty Mason, Diana McMakin, Cherie Elder, Kim Schinabeck, and Christine Ward from PEA were in fourth place.

Other local students in competition were Margot Rogers (PECHS), Dana Hill, Scott Johnson, Carolyn Saylor, and Pam Oakes of Prince Edward Academy.

Other switchman winners were Monocan High School and Meadowbrook High School, both of Richmond. In the varsity division Western Albermarle, Nelson County, Turner Ashby, and Bassett High Schools participated. Your Turn

Dear Sir-Madam:

The Foreign & Domestic Teachers Organization needs teacher applicants in all fields from Kindergarten through College to fill over five hundred teaching vacancies both at home and abroad.

Since 1968, our organization has been finding vacancies and locating teachers both in foreign countries and in all fifty states. We possess hundreds of current openings and have all the information as to scholarships, grants, and fellowships.

The principle problem with first year teachers is where to find the jobs!

Since College Newspapers are always anxious to find positions for their graduating teachers, your paper may be interested in your teachers finding employment for the following year, and print our request for teachers.

Our information and brochure is free and comes at an opportune time when there are more teachers than teaching positions.

Should you wish additional information about our organization, you may write the Portland Oregon Better Business Bureau or the National Teacher's Placement Agency, UNIVERSAL TEACHERS, Box 5231, Portland, Oregon 97208.

We do not promise every graduate in the field of education a definate position, however, we do promise to provide them with a wide range of hundreds of current vacancy notices both at home and abroad.

Women Golfers to Open Season

The Longwood women's golf team will open its 1983 Spring season on February 25 in the Troy State Invitational. The invitational will include twenty schools, with only three from Division II — Troy State, Weber State and Longwood.

Coach Barbara Smith feels that South Carolina, Ohio St., North Carolina and Georgia are the top four schools in the invitational. "Weber State won the Division II Nationals last year and Troy State finished second, so both teams could prove tough," said Coach Smith. Longwood finished third in the National tournament last year.

Coach Smith feels that All-American Robin Andrews has the chance to have her finest season. Last fall in the James Madison Invitational, Andrews won the individual title with a 40-79 - 119. Sue Morgan also performed well in the fall. Sue improved greatly as the season progressed, scoring in the 70's several times. Lanie Gerken also played well in the fall and will join Morgan and Andrews in the top three positions for the Lancers. Lanie was Longwood's top finisher in the North Carolina State Invitational.

The remaining three positions for the Lancers will be determined in the practice round at Troy State. The Troy St. Invitational will serve as practice as well as competition, as the Lancers have not practiced as a team since November.

The Lancers will host Marshall and William and Mary in the Longwood Invitational March 12-13.

Coach Barbara Smith, who has led Longwood to six state titles, is hoping the Lancers will improve as the season progresses. "We want to do the best we possibly can and try to improve our scores from the fall." Longwood will have everyone but Donna Turner returning from its fall season.

Cagers to Finish at Home

Longwood's men's basketball team, 13-9 after splitting two games last week, closes out its season at home. After visiting Atlantic Christian Monday night, the Lancers entertain 16th ranked Randolph-Macon Wednesday night at 8:00 and end the season Saturday night hosting Phillips (MS).

Two of Longwood's all-time top cagers, seniors Joe Remar and Ron Orr, will be closing out their careers Saturday. Remar and Orr rank 1-2 among career scorers in Lancer basketball history.

Longwood journeyed to Maryland Baltimore County Saturday night and came away with an 80-78 loss in overtime. Remar tossed in 23 points and had 10 assists while Orr scored 26 points and grabbed 13 rebounds. The Lancers were hampered by the four problems of junior Jerome Kersey who picked up his fourth foul in the first half and fouled out with 4:21 to go in regulation. Kersey finished with eight points and eight rebounds.

Remar helped send the game into overtime by hitting four free throws in the last five minutes. UMBC missed a shot with two seconds left in regulation and the score tied 72-72. The Retrievers got a bucket with six seconds to go in overtime to take the win.

Longwood had beaten St. Paul's last Monday 89-74 with 20 points from Remar, 19 from Orr and 19 points, 16 rebounds from Kersey.

Wednesday's game with Randolph-Macon will give the Lancers a chance for revenge after an 82-66 loss to the Jackets February 3. Coach Hal Nunally's team, which thrashed Liberty Baptist 73-51 Saturday, will be making its first appearance in Lancer Hall where Longwood has a 25-4 record over three years.

Wednesday night will mark the first regular season doubleheader for Longwood's men's and women's basketball teams. Women's teams from Randolph-Macon and Longwood will play at 6:00 and men's teams from the two schools square-off at 8:00.

The doubleheader will also feature Lancer Club night. Longwood's fund-raising organization for athletics, the Lancer Club, will be recognized at the twinbill and there will be a special hospitality room for Lancer Club members and their guests between the two games and at halftime of the men's contest.

Also at halftime of the men's game, regional coaches of the year Rich Posipanko (soccer) and Buddy Bolding (baseball) will be recognized for their accomplishments.

For four years seniors Joe Remar and Ron Orr have been starters on the Longwood basketball team. During that time the Lancers have compiled a record of 75-29. Remar (1,453) and Orr (1,292) are the top two scorers in the college's seven-year men's basketball history.

Remar, a co-captain this season, is Longwood's career leader in points, assists (514) and steals (194). Orr has 616 rebounds to go with his 1,000-plus points. The duo from Elizabeth, New Jersey have been vital cogs in Longwood's emergence from a Division III power to Division II.

Saturday night when the Lancers host Phillips, Remar and Orr will play their final college game.

Gymnasts Score Season High

For the fourth consecutive week the Longwood gymnastics team has improved its performance. Saturday the Lancers turned in their highest score of the year (158.50), and finished fourth in the Virginia State Meet held at Radford.

Kelly Crepps and Dayna Hankinson were Longwood standouts once again. Crepps finished second in vaulting (8.6), third on floor (8.6) and fifth in all-around (33.1). Crepps also finished with the top Longwood score on bars (8.35). Hankinson finished fourth on beam (8.45) and tied teammate Gray Stabley on floor (8.4), with the sixth highest score.

The Longwood final team score was not the only season high for the Lancers. Crepps set the season high in both bars and all-around, while Hankins set the season high on beam. Despite the fourth place finish the Lancers performed well.

"We performed a lot better than in the past and scored higher," Coach Ruth Budd said. "We did much better on bars, but still had our problems on beam."

William and Mary won the state title Saturday with a 166.45. Radford was second at 164.10 and James Madison third at 162.30.

Longwood closes out its regular season action Friday night in an invitational tournament at James Madison.

During halftime of the Longwood-William and Mary women's basketball game Tuesday night Dr. Elizabeth Burger Jackson (center) was honored with a plaque recognizing her selection to the Wall of Fame of the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame. Joining in the event included (from left) Michael Haltzel, vice-president for academic affairs at Longwood; Carolyn Hodges, Longwood athletic director; Dr. Jackson; Mildred West, women's athletic director at William and Mary; and Stokeley Fulton, Virginia Sports Hall of Fame representative.

Lady Lancers Fall to 7-16

The Longwood women's basketball team, 7-16 after three losses last week, hosts Chowan Monday, Randolph-Macon Wednesday at 6 p.m., and visits Liberty Baptist Saturday afternoon to close out its regular season play. Forward Cindy Eckel scored her 1000th career point Friday in a 66-57 loss to VCU (see related story, this page).

Eckel and fellow seniors Karen Savarese and Barbara DeGraff may be making their final home appearances Wednesday night against R-MC. Longwood is one of six teams in contention for a spot in the VAIAW Division II Final Four March 4-5 at Longwood.

In action last week, the Lady Lancers fell to William and Mary 65-62 Tuesday night despite coming back from a 19 point deficit to within two points late in the game. Thursday, visiting Guilford took an 85-69 win from the team. Friday night, Longwood fell victim to VCU on the road.

Longwood's most consistent player last week was sophomore Valerie Turner. Turner had 13 points and seven rebounds Tuesday, 24 points and 13 rebounds Thursday, and 10 points and seven rebounds Friday. While Eckel scored 13 against Guilford, leading scorer Florence Holmes scored 10 Tuesday and 14 Friday night. Guard Robin Powell scored 10 against the Rams.

Also playing well was soph Marianna Johnson with 24 points on 10-19 shooting from the floor for the week. Marianna has the highest scoring off the bench, at 5.9 ppg.

Eckel Nets 1000

Senior forward Cindy Eckel reached a career milestone Friday night when she became the fourth lady cager in Longwood History to score 1,000 career points. She netted six points in the 66-57 loss to Virginia Commonwealth.

CINDY ECKEL

Prior to the 82-83 season, Eckel had scored 792 points, was named the VAIAW Division II Co-Player of the Year in 1981, and also made the VAIAW Division II All-State team that year. She holds the Lady Lancer single game record for most field goals scored at 15 along with standout Sue Rama.

Eckel is second in scoring this season at 9.3 ppg. behind sophomore Florence Holmes (13.1 ppg.), and has led the Lady Lancers's scoring in six games so far this year. Her 40.9 field goal percentage for 82-83 promises to be the best of her career.

The only other Lady Lancers to score 1,000 points are Sue Rama (1,471), Maryjane Smith (1,167), and Brenda Fettrow (1,117).

Albeck Leads Wrestlers with Third Place Finish

Sophomore captain Steve Albeck became the first wrestler in Longwood history to place in a regional tournament over the week end as the 142-pounder placed third in the NCAA II Eastern Regional Tournament at the University of Pittsburgh-Johnstown.

Albeck lost his first match to the No. 2 seed and then proceeded to win the next three (two by pins) to finish third in his weight class. The Lancer grappler was one of three individuals considered for a spot in the national tournament, but the tournament coaches voted to send a 118-pounder instead.

"I'm very proud of Steve," said Longwood Coach Steve Nelson of Albeck. "He wrestled well and I felt he should have gotten a berth in nationals." Albeck upped his final record to 21-9-1.

Albeck was one of six Longwood grapplers to compete in the tournament which was won by Morgan State with 79¼ points. The Lancers totaled 9½ points to place 11th out of 13 teams entered.

Also competing for Longwood (with final records in parentheses) were: Tim Fitzgerald at 118 (14-11); Terry Hale at 126 (11-10); Chuck Campbell at 150 (14-9-1); Joe Bass at 177 (20-9) and Keith Barnes at 190 (8-8).

LC Ruggers Fall to VMI in Opening Match

By Rollson Schotta

The Longwood Rugby Club played its first match of the '83 season against a tough Virginia Military squad Saturday at home. The Cadets' relentless attack kept the LC ruggers on defense for much of the game, with Longwood losing 12-0.

VMI was here to avenge a 14-13 loss last year, and their players were pumped up for the rematch. The Cadets used their size and strength advantage to power their way to a 9-0 halftime lead. Despite solid tackling from Longwood's forwards and a strong offensive effort from outside wing Tod Haymans, Longwood was unable to keep VMI from penetrating deep into LC territory.

The most costly losses of the game for Longwood were of Bill Galloway and Wayne Busch, who were both put out of action with head injuries early in the first half. Both are expected to be sidelined for much of the season.

Injuries aside, the LC ruggers could not be too dissapointed with the VMI loss. With a large number of new players, the team did well in holding a well-disciplined VMI club to twelve points.

VMI also won the 'B' side game, defeating Longwood 4-0. Many players from LC's 'A' side played in the game, as well as a couple of volunteers from the sidelines as the team was short-handed. Strong hitting from the entire squad kept the Cadets' game unorganized throughout both halves of play.

The Longwood Rugby team is still scheduling games for the spring schedule, but scheduled opponents include VCU, James Madison, and Hampden Sydney. Home matches are held at the President's field and will be announced.

Artist of the Month

February's Artist of the Month at Longwood College is senior art major Mary Ruth Shields.

Ms. Shields is concentrating in drawing and also does extensive work in crafts. Her winning drawing is a study for a mask and will be reproduced photographically on a three-dimensional surface. The concept for the mask is taken from Sioux Indian mythology concerning the Woman of the North, whose color is white and who symbolizes wisdom.

After graduating from Longwood, Ms. Shields plans to attend graduate school. She is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Wallace C. Shields, of Clifton Forge.

The competition for Artist of the Month is open to all art majors and students in studio classes at Longwood. Work submitted for consideration must have been completed during the current academic year. The winning work is selected by the art department faculty, and the artist receives a $50 cash award.

David Willis to Appear

Magician-comedian David Willis will perform Wednesday, February 23, at 8 p.m. in the Gold Room in Lankford Building.

The young performer began his unique career on the streets of Washington D.C. until he became such a success that police asked him to stop. The huge crowds that he attracted were blocking traffic.

Although Willis began with an interest primarily in magic, his talent for sleight-of-hand was soon equaled with a good sense of humor, a quick wit, and great comedy timing. He travels with pal Sidney the Skunk who has the distinction of being the world's only skunk impressionist, from coast to coast. He has been received eagerly by college students in almost every state for his interesting and hilarious approach to magic and comedy.

The performance, sponsored by the Longwood College Student Union, is free of charge and the public is invited to attend.

American Musicale

Longwood College's Gamma Kappa chapter of Sigma Alpha Iota, national music honor society, will present an American Musicale on Thursday evening, February 24, at 8 o'clock in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building.

The Musicale program will include a cross-section of 19th and 20th century American music, including compositions by Gershwin, Copland, Gottschalk, Persichetti, Diemer, and others.

The Longwood Concert Choir will open the evening's program, followed by performances by student pianists and vocalists. Two works performed by the Lancer Edition, Longwood's show choir, will end the program.

The Longwood Musicale is part of a nationwide tradition developed by Sigma Alpha Iota to promote interest in American composers and their music.

The public is cordially invited to attend the Musicale at no charge.

Currently BUBA does not belong to the interfraternity council nor do they have any ambition towards getting a national charter. Their six member executive council — President, Mark Bass; Vice President, David Turk; Treasurer, Greg Blank; Secretary, Anthony Russo; Spokesman General, David Walton; and Public Relations manager, Robert George is intent on one thing — brotherhood. They have only two sweaters with their frat letters (one given as a birthday present and the other bought at personal expense) and one poster with clasping left and right hands representing love and brotherhood respectively. It seems a little too simple for a beginning fraternity — such an absurd idea as brotherhood and love and all that schlock, but then the Alpha and Omega started it all with a word — the word . . . what was it anyway? Love . . . Brotherhood?

Inside Black Fraternities— The Q-Dogs on Campus

By JOE JOHNSON

It is September at Longwood near the beginning of fall semester and the weather has a humid stuffy tinge. It is hot in the afternoon and Orlando Turner's legs are aching. He does not know how far he has run. The dull thump of combat boots is two paces slower than his heart and the black sweatshirt sticks to his water sheened body like new paint to primer.

The other runner, Mitch, is behind him somewhere, he can hear the dull thud as black boots slap asphalt and his thoughts coalesce into a raging rhymatic chant "O -M-E — G-A-P — S-I-P-H-I" louder Orlando. "O-M-E — G-A-P — S-I-P-H-I louder Orlando LOUDER!

"Omega Psi Phi - OMEGA PSI PHI - OMEGA PSI PHI".

He stops — lungs roaring for air — and bends, wrapping a towel around his ears. Frazer dormitory looms overhead like Gibraltar, white and towering, there are chants and catcalls from the window "Go home Q-Dog"..."Get lost."

He doesn't hear the voices, his hands are on his knees and in his mind there is a buzzing tone as if his brain were an AM radio caught in between the channels.

Don't think about the voices Orlando, block them out, forget them. He straightens and walks toward the candy colored red and yellow house that Dalany Brown has rented. There is the refuge, there is the home, there are the brothers.

"Not everybody can do it, you have to want it; want it bad. It made me learn the rewards of discipline, now I feel like there's nothing I can't do - because I've pushed myself to the limit, past the limit."

It is cooler now, late February and the green army fatigues and combat boots Orlando wore that afternoon in September are replaced with a comfortable leather jacket and Nikes. He is sipping a coke and munching on M n' Ms and is satisfied with life. He is now a brother, one of the few elite that make Omega Psi Phi and he is proud.

"When I stopped running that day in September I wasn't feeling that good because I knew there was something else they'd have me do - there's always something else. They keep pushing you mentally and physically past the breaking point."

Orlando Turner gave up playing basketball for Longwood during that fall semester. He gave it up to go through 8 weeks of pledging, of running and screaming, of small chores and late night studying and doing everything and more to make himself an Omega man, a brother....

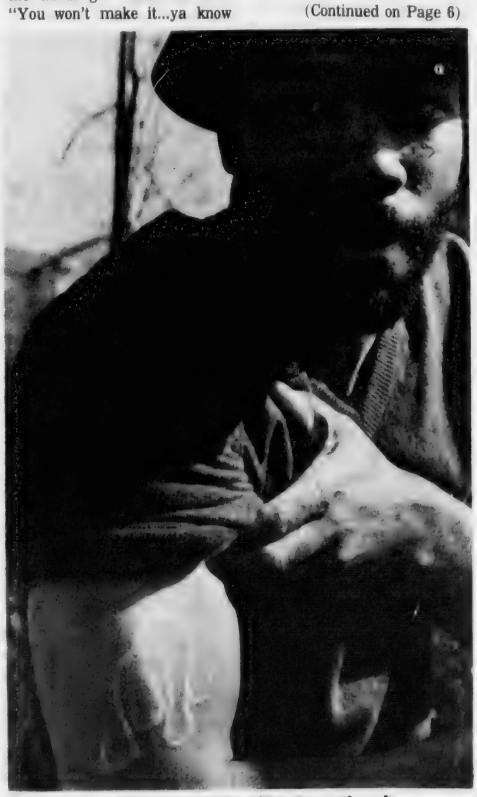
Mike Mcroy and Troy Littles are in a room talking about the basketball game that is playing on the television set. Gary Thornhill is pressing ice to his biceps, sitting in a small flower patterned loveseat near the left hand corner of the room. The ice he hopes will numb his upper arm. Numb it enough so that he won't feel the brand - the red hot Omega brand. It could have been made for a cow puncher - a long metal stem with the Grecian Omega letter twirled tangent on the end, like an inverted horseshoe. The other brothers have told him about the brand, how it hurt for days worse than a tetanus shot - like a bullet wound - hot and piercing. The ice is beginning to melt, it trickles, down his arm. He wishes it wouldn't melt so fast. An Omega brother sees that Gary is ready. He picks up the brand and carries it into the room where Gary is sitting. Gary holds up his sleeve with his left hand.

Close your eyes...its going to hurt. He keeps them open. He thinks the brand looks cool, like a neon sign, a little red glow. It comes closer. He can feel the heat of the iron now. Just do it man - a low sizzling sound. The Omega is christened in fire and flesh. It smells. But he doesn't flinch, he doesn't scream.

"That was about a year and 6 months ago" says Gary "It didnt hurt half as bad as the brothers said it would. They were just bullshitting, to get me scared."

In Dalany Brown's rented apartment on the first floor of that candy-colored house across the street from Frazer dormitory, a small Zenith black and white set is showing "The Warriors". A violent saga of street gangs and asphalt deaths. Gary is gazing at his right arm contemplating the welted badge of courage.

"Not every brother has to do it. If you want to you can, if you don't want to, its no big deal. It's a tradition in black fraternities - like the way we pledge - very tough and structured almost like a boot camp."



Two other Omegas, Troy and Mitch Walker, are sitting on a sofa facing the TV. Dalany is off to the right. His head is tilted upward, poised on the back of his hand. He has the look of a warrior, dignified, majestic, accomplished. His eyes flash across the room and meet Gary's. If there is a leader to be found for these men it is here, in Dalany's razor-slit eyes and terse machine-gun speech.

"We take our pledges and we mold them into the type of Omega they're supposed to be," Dalany folds his hands into a cupped U and then compresses them. "If you don't fit the criteria for Omega man..." he pauses letting the words get under the skin. "You won't make it...ya know what I'm saying, you just won't make it."

Troy hits his chest and says "Everything we have comes from here man."

"I'm going to tell you what a white guy said to me..." Dalany crouches in his chair, his elbows on his knees watching for a reaction. "This dude from Delta Sigma Phi, he comes up to me and says 'Dalany who do you think would win if the Delta's got into a fight with the Omega's" and I'm like thinkin' 'Why would you even ask me a question like that,' you gonna fight us or something, so I said "What difference does it make?" And he said, "Well, we got more brothers than y'all got." I said, "Man, what difference does it make if you got 40 brothers and when it comes time to throw down 30 of them, run that way." He points to the door. Mitch says "That's right" and nods.

Lancer Edition and Jazz Combo To Perform

Not all the talent at this year's Miss Longwood Pageant will be wearing a swimsuit or an evening gown.

The Lancer Edition, a choreographed show choir, and the Jazz Combo will provide live musical entertainment at various intervals of the pageant, scheduled for Saturday, March 5, at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium.

This represents part of an overall effort to make this year's event a professional, "first-class" pageant, one Longwood official said. The Lancer Edition will be the first student show group to perform at the Miss Longwood Pageant.

The Lancer Edition — whose music consists of jazz, blues, pop and rock — will perform for the "grand opening" and at two other times during the pageant. The Jazz Combo will, in addition to backing up the Lancer Edition, perform during the swimsuit and evening gown competition, and for the coronation of the pageant queen.

Both groups were formed about a year ago. The Lancer Edition is directed by Dr. L.E. Egbert, Jr., head of the music department, and choreographed by Horace Scruggs, a sophomore music major. Allen Butler, a music instructor, directs the Jazz Combo.

Thirteen young women will be vying for $1,800 in scholarship money and the chance to compete in the Miss Virginia Pageant in July. The pageant is part of the Miss America series, which represents the largest private scholarship foundation for women in the United States. In 1982 scholarships totaling over $2 million were awarded contestants at the local, state and national pageants.

The contestants for Miss Longwood were chosen from 40 applicants in preliminary competition. Tickets for the pageant are available from the College's Public Affairs Office in East Ruffner. Prices are $2.50 for adults and $1.50 for students.

The Lancer Edition rehearses a number under the watchful eye of director L. E. Egbert (back to camera).

Dance Company to Perform

The Rod Rodgers Dance Company will be presented Monday, March 7, 1983 at 8 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium, the last of five performances featured this year in the Longwood College Series of the Performing Arts.

Rod Rodgers is a celebrated choreographer who founded the dance company over fifteen years ago, and has been directing them ever since. The company tours extensively across the United States, maintaining a commitment to bringing programs to community audiences which have had limited opportunities to see professional concert dance. Over the years, this integrated but primarily black dance company has dramatically demonstrated an ability to appeal to audiences of all ages and ethnic origins. The Rod Rodgers Dance Company is considered one of the top three dance companies in the nation that are directed by black artists.

Student Rumours Denied: Three Sisters a Success

By JOHN WATTS
Play Review

None of them were for it. Whenever I picked the subject of going to see Three Sisters at Jarman Auditorium, my friends shrugged indifferently and said that it was not in their best interests to attend. In fact it didn't seem to be in anyone's best interests. That noncommital reaction seemed to be lurking everywhere on the campus. I felt at the time, that I had been given a bitter pill to swallow, something that had to be washed down with a grimace. Attend that show, people seemed to be hinting to me, and the consequences would not be suprising. People even laid down facts to me about friends of theirs that had stomped out quite decidedly half way through the first evening show. It is funny how rumors can influence people and can keep them locked to their chairs, conditioned to lounge. Perhaps the rumors found their target with my friends or maybe it was just meloncholia. What ever the cause I found myself attending alone.

For the next three hours during the play, I was on the edge of my seat — totally involved in the lives of the characters of the play. Based on a script written by Anton Chekhov, the story revolves around three sisters in Russia and their melancholy existence, surrounded in luxury. Act I introduces the characters as they appear in the parlor of the girls' house. The atmosphere immediately established is that of a normal household routine. There is a pot pourri of visitors who are introduced as elements in the story line through their mannerisms and speech.

The level of acting is splendid. Not only was it impressive how well ironed out the lines were from the rehearsals (and there were a lot of lines to memorize), they were delivered with an internalized passion and not simply read out. Had it been otherwise, it would have been a very long night.

Because of the force of his personality, eyes were focused on Dr. Chebutykin, portrayed by George Hughes. Hughes, with an arthritic hobble and a quavering voice, acted with an urgency which breathed fire into the role. I guess that guy's real life identity is that of a student. But he certainly did make a character crossover. If I could pick an actor, I would have to say it was Hughes that really had the audience humming. It was his loveable old figure that everyone looked for.

Ginger Moss, Khaki Stoll, and Sherry Forbes portrayed their roles as Olga, Masha, and Irene Prozorov to perfection. Their pathetic and futile attempts to break out of the drab and meaningless routine of their lives was the story thread of the play. If they could get to Moscow, they felt, their lives would be transformed into glittering excitement.

The brother of the girls, Andrew Prozorov was played admirably by Christopher Cox, who played a complex, unhappy person in the throws of a fulfillment crisis. He always seemed to be trying to hide from one of the relentlessly outrageous eccentrics that kept trailing him. He acted as if he was on the verge of a breakthrough, but not quite sure how to get there.

Michael Foster, who played Dr. Baron Toozenbach, represented the thoughtful, stabilizing element of the menage. The resonating qualities of his voice permeated the auditorium.

The odd behaviors of the characters provides constant absurd situations such as the unsocial peculiarities of Captain Soliony played well by Steve Sullivan. Their romantic dalliances lend a comic relief to the brooding, typically Russian atmosphere.

The Supporting cast was well chosen and well played. Particular mention should be made of the two lieutenants who, though they only appeared only briefly, added vigor and excitement.

Director Patton Lockwood does a good job of recreating the atmosphere of grey futility prevalent in Russian literature. Coren Brosi, Sharon Gilmore, and Sherry Forbes contributed significantly with their costuming and scenery.

The final scene of the three hour play comes with all of the remaining characters outside having said goodbye to departing soldiers. It is discovered the doctor has been killed in a duel over an argument. He died an empty man, knowing that his wife, Irena, never loved him. Towards the end the sisters are brushing back their tears and beginning to bristle with excitement over the hope of a new life-style. The bitter old doctor slumps in his chair and groans, "Nothing matters, none of it matters." Andrew Prozorov continues pushing his baby carriage, trying to think of a way out of his discontent. "No one has really done anything noticeable here, everybody has become dull, drab, boring, lazy, complacent, useless and miserable."

The performance brought to life the pathos of man's condition. It was, however, an uplifting night. So uplifting that people filing past each other would clasp total strangers on the back. By the end of the evening I felt very close to the characters of the play. Checkhov created a play that can never lose its effect on future generations, as long as there are wandering souls that suffer. It is a shame 'hat the auditorium was not filled to capacity. For the capacity of skill that the performers brought to the Three Sisters demanded it. My friends should be sorry they didn't go.

Gandhi: A Dream Come True

By FRED CAMPBELL

When the promise of Spring Break first invades the air, a young man's thoughts traditionally turn from the mundane activities of a typical American small town towards the brighter opportunities of a semi-large American city. It was in keeping with this tradition that I, like a giddy school boy, packed by aging Dodge, slid behind the wheel, and set off in the general direction of Roanoke. To many of you, Roanoke may not seem like the kind of city that has a lot to offer, but to a hopeless film fanatic like myself, Roanoke has one characteristic that becomes a kind of redemtpion; the fact that it has more than one movie theatre. I was determined to see at least one current motion picture during my brief stay.

What finally met my eyes was a type of film that has been a rarity in recent years: an epic. During Cecil B. DeMille's reign as Hollywood's king, the epic film was a common sight. Audiences attentively watched as the large part of a person's life flashed on the screen in such extra long films as "The Ten commandments," "The Robe", and "The Greatest Story Ever Told." As the fast-paced, blood and car-crash audience of the late 70's and early 80's emerged, the demand for a three-and-a-half hour history lesson decreased until the epic film, with the possible exception of the 1981 film, "Reds," became a thing of the past. Happily, this film genre has struck another blow against extinction with Richard Attenborough's cinematic masterpiece, "Gandhi," a film that embodies all of the traits of an epic film.

The story of how "Gandhi" came to be is an epic in itself. The film is a realization of director Richard Attenborough's twenty-two year old dream to bring the story of Indian leader Mohandas K. Gandhi to the screen. Attenborough was beset with every kind of problem imaginable during his quest, from screen play difficulties and financial problems to a casting snag of every sort (the likes of Martin Sheen, Richard Burton, and Dustin Hoffman were considered for the lead before Ben Kingsley finally got the part). The end result of his sweat is a graceful portral of the life of the man India called "the great soul."

The first of the film's many attributes is its all-star supporting cast, which includes Ian Charelson (Chariots of Fire) as English minister Charlie Andrews, and Martin Sheen (Apocalypse Now) as Walker, the staunch New York reporter. The dark spot in this array of celebreity cameos is the appearance of Candice Bergen as photographer Margaret Bourke-White. Ms. Bergen's performance is shallow at best, and seems to serve no purpose whatsoever.

Ben Kingsley's portrayal of Mohandas Gandhi is superb. His versatility as an actor comes into full view as he handles Gandhi's younger years with ease, and then gracefully moves into his later life, aging the character slowly, but effectively. Kingsley is very deserving of his nomination for the Academy's Best Actor award. (Of special note — Ben Kingsley is only the third actor ever to be nominated for an Academy Award for his film debut.)

The only problems with "Gandhi" rest with actor-turned-director, Richard Attenborough. Attenborough ultimately reaches his desired end, but in the process, the means he employs get tangled. Before the film's intermission (that's right, I said intermission), Attenborough tries to pull the audience into his vision of Gandhi too quickly. At times, the events of Gandhi's early years are squirted out onto the screen in a slightly incoherent manner. Certain scenes seem out of place and the audience is left confused rather than anxious.

After the intermission, Attenborough slows down a great deal. Each scene serves a useful

Collette's Choice- Whose Right? Whose Life?

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

She opened the pale green door of the old, renovated house and paused on the porch to listen to it creak as it shut. There were red clay pots with marigolds and shamrocks and a few young girls huddled quietly on the new porch swing. She started down the freshly painted wooden steps that had already begun to peel. Painted steps always peeled, she thought. She looked for the Jeep and wondered if anyone had taken the stereo or cassettes since she had driven it with the top down. The faded blue paint on the Jeep was beginning to crack too. She climbed in and looked back across the street to the old house. She started the engine and found a radio station, she turned the volume up.

She had arrived at the house almost six hours earlier . . . Richmond Medical Center for Women, said the sign out front. Just a nice name for an abortion clinic.

Abortion is fast becoming the most commonly performed operation in the United States. Today, 3 out of 10 pregnancies will end in abortion, and 45 percent of those abortions, involve a mother between the ages of 15 and 17. The physical risks of abortion have diminished since 1973, when abortions during the first trimester of pregnancy were deemed legal by the U. S. Supreme Court in the Roe v. Wade case. A legal abortion in the first trimester is safer even than a full term pregnancy. Even though the physical risks are limited, the emotional toll on the would-be mothers is one that even the Right-to-Lifers can't understand. And the stress toll is a completely different story when the victims are teenagers.

Collette, an eighteen-year-old college student, had just undergone the six-hour long process of ending an unwanted pregnancy. The actual abortion procedure took only three to five minutes, but the Richmond Medical Center for Women required the rest of the time for counseling patients. Patients are required to make appointments at least two weeks in advance. This is to allow enough time for the woman to be certain that an abortion is her final choice.

When Collette arrived at the Medical Center, she was given forms to fill out asking the specific conditions of her pregnancy: whether or not she was married; did she know who the father was; was she using birth control; why or why not — the usual things forms have the exclusive rights to ask. Collette was then given a pregnancy test, and a blood test to check for syphilis. Then, Collette went to join the other patients, gathered in the waiting room, which looked painfully like a big living room your grandmother decorated, and there they all watched Love Boat and Family Feud until their name was called to go upstairs and meet their counselors.

Collette's counselor's name was Anna, and she tried to make Collette feel as comfortable as possible. She talked to Collette about different methods of birth control, and learned why hers failed. Anna, above all, made certain that Collette was aware of the alternatives to abortion. Anna discussed in detail the abortion procedure and the aftercare. In order for the doctor, Dr. Fitzhugh, to perform the abortion, Anna had to be sure that Collette was emotionally prepared; that she was stable enough to deal with the common feelings of guilt, and other roller-coaster emotions.

After another waiting period, Collette was finally called back upstairs, along with five or six other girls, to prepare for the abortion. They were given paper dresses and five milligrams of valium. The abortion procedure is done with a vacuum aspirator, much like a suction device.

Although it's a short operation, it is especially painful. Anna stayed with Collette throughout the abortion and tried to divert Collette's attention away from the pain. Anna made small talk, about the concert in town that night, and about good restaurants, and reminded Collette to keep her eyes open. Tears streaked Collette's face as she laid there. "God, it hurt so much. I hated myself for what I was doing. And the noises the machine made — it was horrible. I wanted to die."

After the abortion, Collette's blood pressure and pulse were monitored, and she was given soda and crackers to help restore her energy. That's it. She was free to go. That is, after she picked up the prescription drugs that she'd have to take for the next three weeks to prevent infection and to shrink the uterus down to its original size before pregnancy.

"It seemed a crime to be able to leave that place looking just like you came. No scars, nothing." She drove the old beat up Jeep exceptionally fast that afternoon. The wind beat her hair across her face. Dust clouds surrounded her as she pulled into her driveway. She greeted her family as she sat down to supper. Her mother had fried chicken. "I've always liked Mom's fried chicken."

Overcoming Gynecology Paranoia

By Liz D'Surney

The horrors and fears that Vickie had had for the last few years had finally come to an end. She expressed her relief and satisfaction for realizing the necessity of such a task and for gaining the courage and support she needed to fulfill this requirement.

Conversing with many friends, Vickie gained much information on the subject. After almost everyone had gone, she sat in a chair staring at the floor and twirling her hair around her finger. She reached for the phone book and called the Prince Edward Health Department. She asked for the Family Planning Department and made an appointment with the gynecologist. The GYN clinic maintains a full schedule so she would have to wait nearly a month and a half until her appointment.

The first appointment with a gynecologist is not something women express much enthusiasm about. Like Vickie, many women postpone making such an appointment for as long as possible. There are those women who are unaware of the fact that it is best to see a gynecologist shortly after turning 18 years old. Though it is a responsibility all women have and must face sometime within their lives, it tends to cause emotional stress in many women. Perhaps this is from fear of the unknown or unexpected. Whatever it is, women owe it to themselves to take the initiative to call a gynecologist and make that first appointment.

Gynecological services were first introduced to Longwood in September of 1979, when Dr. Willett was the college president. The Prince Edward Health Dept. met with college administration and approved the availability of a GYN clinic. At that time, the clinic was held at the Health Dept. office. It was just this past fall that the clinic was moved to the college infirmary.

A gynecologist comes to the infirmary one Wednesday a month for several hours to meet with the patients. They would like to be able to set up appointments more often, but their state budget won't allow it. Miss Calhoun, a social worker for the Prince Edward Health Dept. said, "I wish we could have it two Wednesdays a month. We'll hopefully be able to start it sometime soon. We manage to see about 20 patients a month through the college. So far we've had really good results and everyone always shows up for their appointments."

Many girls on campus have taken advantage of these services. Various comments have been made which support Miss Calhoun's statement of the popularity of the clinic. One student made the comment, "It's a great idea because as a college student without much money, it is good to have an opportunity like this to go where free services are offered and know that your appointment is in strict confidence with the doctor."

Vickie said, "I think they should come here more often. Many girls have not had the chance to meet with a gynecologist yet and this is the perfect chance for them to do so."

It seems that there is a great demand for gynecological treatment. As it is, the Prince Edward Health Dept. supplies these services to Longwood voluntarily. The nursing supervisor at the health dept., Dr. Greenwood, Longwood nurses, and counselors met together to determine the necessity of such a clinic. Soon thereafter, the health dept. went to work to publicize the GYN clinic.

Posters advertising gynecology and family planning were placed around campus. But they were soon removed due to disapproval from the administration, according to Miss Calhoun. Apparently they did not want such a topic advertised so openly to the students. "Since then our only way of communication has been by word of mouth," said Miss Calhoun.

At her appointment, Vickie felt relaxed talking to the gynecologist and assistants about her appointment. Together they discussed the procedures of the appointment and the tests to be taken such as blood tests, a pap smear, and the pelvic examination. The social worker explained the forms of birth control available to Vickie, should she decide to choose to use one. The many questions she had had for so long, she was able to ask and received concrete answers from a reliable source.

"Most of our patients appear to be quite relaxed and open up to us," said Miss Calhoun. "They seem to feel comfortable enough to ask us whatever is on their minds. We've had good reactions from our patients."

All forms of birth control are available to students. Among these are the pill, the I.U.D., and the diaphragm. To get the pill, one must have an examination, then a few days later, pick up a three month's supply of pills at the health department. At this time, a second appointment is made for a few months later to check the patient's blood pressure, discuss any problems which may have occurred, and to receive the rest of the pills, which includes an eight month supply. All forms of birth control require an examination and a follow-up visit, depending on which type of birth control is to be used.

All birth control methods are kept in stock at the health dept. except for the diaphragm. This has to be ordered separately as needed. The gynecologist will discuss the pros and cons of each method of birth control if so desired. How to use each method is also covered in the session. To date, these forms of birth control are offered free to college students with the exception of the diaphragm which costs approximately $50. The appointment is also free of charge.

For noncollege students, the fee for such an appointment would cost from $13 to $39, not to mention the charge of birth control if used. "We have had a lot of cuts in our budget this year," said Miss Calhoun. "If it continues, we may have to start charging some kind of fee. But that probably wouldn't start until next fall."

These free services should not come as a surprise to anyone because they have been offered for some time now. Many women on campus are not aware of this opportunity and it should be called to their attention, especially to those who have never been to see a gynecologist before. Some women do not know about the gynecologists in general, as far as the process and necessity of such an appointment.

Mrs. Roop, head nurse in the infirmary said, "We (the infirmary) have no connections with the gynecological services offered. The health dept. does all of that on their own. We may point the girls in the right direction, but lately we haven't even had to do that. We put a sign on the door which says "GYN clinic upstairs" and they don't even have to talk to us. We don't know these girls and we're not looking to see who is coming or going."

The health dept. comes into the infirmary and prepares for their appointments in the room available to them, but have no interactions with the infirmary. Mrs. Roop also said that they do offer help and advice to those who request it. She said, "Girls should feel free to come in here and ask questions. Many are embarrassed about such a subject and they should not feel that way. We are here for their benefit and are working to help students in any way we can."

Many girls on campus support the system 100 percent, and for a variety of reasons. One girl stated, "It's great for people who are sexually active because they have access to free birth control pills and appointments. You can get up to a year's supply of pills." A second girl said, "You may as well take advantage of it . . . afterall, they're here for your health and good safety." A third reason was stated as, "It's good to have these services available, especially to those who could never talk to their mother about such a subject. Here you can do it

You Only Live Twice

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is an article submitted by Johnel Brown to Toby Thompson's narrative non-fiction class. It is the compilation of two weeks of in-depth interviewing with "Cass" (her name has been changed) who is the daughter of one of the richest families in this area. According to Johnel, "Cass" may soon be coming to Longwood to study social work.

By Johnel D. Brown

She finished wrapping her fingers in adhesive tape — now there was no way she'd leave any prints. She took one more sip of the Jim Beam, threw the bottle in the backseat of her muddy Trans Am and headed for the doctor's house. The back door was big, wooden and locked. Cass looked down at the car, parked at the bottom of the driveway and motioned for Susan and Steve to come on up. Mark was keeping a watch on the road. Cass pounded on the door, which led to the kitchen. The heavy rapping caused the refrigerator to "walk" the floor, sounding much like footsteps. Cass froze. Susan ran. Cass pounded one more time and the door gave way. There. They were inside. After hours of cruising, and countless Quaaludes, bong hits and shots, the quartet had broken in.

They stood in a kitchen. A big kitchen still warm, it smelled of coffee and bacon from the morning. "Alright, let's go...everybody...stroke..." They went through the house looking for anything that their "fence" might be interested in and would pay cold cash for. Persian rugs, cameras, clocks, stereos, jewelry, anything. "That's enough everybody, let's go." They jumped in the Trans Am, Cass at the wheel and spun out of the damp driveway.

Cass took a long drag off of her cigarette and sighed as she finished telling the story. She looked different now. Before it was a uniform of peasant blouses and patched Levi's, worn and tattered like her body, long strings of blonde hair, no make-up and a passion for fast cars and big men. Before, if you looked at her close, you would call her a street urchin, perhaps if you didn't know her well, a tramp. She might agree. She'd say, "Yeah, I f....d up." But her background hardly called for such a product. The men who write statistics in white offices about such people as Cass may have an explanation. They might call it rebellion, juvenile delinquency, and some might call it growing up. But if Daddy, her Daddy, who is one of the richest men in Southside, could've seen her, he might not have known her, he might not have cared.

"When I was 12 or 13, me and Gary, my cousin, would beat up the little niggers in town. This one little dude, he'd come by the house and holler, "Hey honkey!" And so me and Gary would wait for him to go by and we'd sic the dog on him first and then we'd go beat his ass. Scratch him up 'till he was white. We used to shoot him with a BB gun. We'd tie him to the railroad tracks and shoot the shit out of him. When he'd cry, we'd tell him to come back out, and then we'd shoot him again. Choo-Choo-Choo." She made the noises. "We were just playing, we didn't know we were doing anything wrong."

Not Cass. Her Daddy was rich. And she was tough. She'd done it all.

It'd been almost two years since they had broken into those houses, and over a year since Cass finished pulling time for it. Somehow just talking about it made her look tired. It seemed that trouble and Cass had always run into each other, and even become sparring partners.

"I remember the first bag of pot, that's the funny thing. You know how in a 75 or 74 Vega stationwagon, the spare tire is in the back under the floorboard. Me and Gary were so paranoid about that one bag of pot, we hid it in the back under the floorboard, in the spare tire, so everytime we would want some of it, we'd have to stop and get out, and I mean if a car came it was like Gary would dive in the back and I'd take off - it was like everybody in the country knew we had that bag of pot."

She got up to get her a beer and offerred me one too. "Sorry about all this mess. I reckon it'll be a goddam week before we get moved in." She and Carl had been dating for over a year, and they've lived together for six months, and this was their second trailer. Most of the boxes had been unpacked, but a few were still stacked unopened in the kitchen of their new trailer. It was a "double-wide", much more spacious than their first trailer. Tonight Carl was at Mrs. Tompkin's house, his English tutor, working on getting his diploma that he never got at the Academy.

She opened her beer and settled back against the pillows she had propped on the floor. Her jeans were faded, and her sweatshirt, new and pink, made her glow — that and the beer. Her hair was different now. Still dirty blond, but shorter and curly. Her eyes sharp and green, were always darting around, not wanting to miss a step. Anybody's step. She took another cigarette from the crumpled pack of Marlboro Lights, and lit it slowly taking a long drag and watching the smoke as it flowed out of her mouth.

Susan had tried for quite some time to get Cass to break in with her. Cass had siphoned gasoline, and sometimes stolen things from people's garages, but never a house. A house that someone lived in. "You never know, man. You never know if the people are going to come home any minute, right as you're carrying off their stereo, or what. No, I'd never break in with her." Finally, one afternoon Susan succeeded, and Cass drove around looking for houses to hit. "We'd go up to the door, and knock. The big line was — man, I mean here we were in a Trans Am with the 'T-Tops" down, and we were going to tell them we were looking for a hunting dog. And if nobody came to the door, we went around back and popped the door open." "I never would do it before, because I was scared. Daddy always told us that if we needed something bad enough to steal it to ask him, but not to be out stealing. I just got this extreme hate because I was doing so much crank, and I was so wound up, I was building up hatred. So much had happened. Gary had been arrested, me and Alan (Cass's husband of six months) had split up, Mama left me alone and went to Pennsylvania, and it was just so many things building up in me."

Through all the mischief, and all the trouble, getting busted was still something new to Cass. Her friends had been busted, and had even done time before. But never her. Not Cass. Her Daddy was rich. And she was tough. She'd done it all. She'd even joined a carnival in Florida when she was sixteen, just to prove that nothing in this small town could hold her down.

One afternoon, Cass's sister, Bobbi Lee, had come to visit, and found Cass really strung out. She looked wild. "I got mad at her one night and I had her up against a wall with a big knife at her throat. Threatening her. I just lost my shit that night. I'd just gone off, because I felt like the whole world had shit on me, and I'd been so nice to everybody." Bobbi took Cass to a drug rehabilitation center in Georgia called Will and Way. She had to go through detoxication and therapy to get rid of all the alcohol and all the drugs left in her system. "It really helped me. If I hadn't gone, hell, I'd have killed somebody. When I came back from Will and Way, I tried to do it again, to get back into the same routine with the same people, drugs. I couldn't do it. I couldn't get high and feel good about it. I felt different. I started making new friends."

Her eyes, sharp and green, were always darting around, not wanting to miss a step. Anybody's step.

Soon after Cass returned to Southside, her trial date was scheduled. "I got up that morning, Carl had stayed with me that night, and he honestly didn't think that I was going to jail. I'd been telling him, 'Carl, I'm going to jail'. I got up that morning, and I didn't want him to see me crying, and I went into the bathroom and I was splashing cold water on my face and I went back in there. Everytime I looked at him, it was like, 'Jesus, if I could just grab you, and take off and leave, I'd do it'".

She finished the beer and got up to get another. "Do you want one?" She looked really tense, but relieved at the same time. She was telling her story, and I wondered how long it'd been.

"In court that morning, the judge asked me if I had anything to say. I told him, 'I just want to apologize, I realize I did wrong and I don't want you to be any more lenient on me than you would for anybody else, but I think that I've done exceptionally good — and I don't think I should get as harsh a punishment as someone who had been a real criminal. I'm not denying that I did the things I did, but I did not do it as the person that I am now. I did it as the person I was when I was on drugs." And that was then.

The judge sentenced Cass to three months in the County Jail. Originally the sentence had been for 20 years with 10 suspended on the charges of breaking and entering, and grand larceny. One more time the cards were stacked for Cass. She spent October through January of 1982 and the New Year come in through bar striped light. "It was a real bitch, and I'll never go back."

She stubs her cigarette out carefully in the ashtray, making swirly designs in the ashes. After the story, she leaned her head back and sighed. Relieved. Either that it was over, or that she had finally finished telling about it. Two Siamese kittens played with a string of yarn on the carpet. Cass laughed. "They're the damdest things, crack you up." She opened a plastic shopping bag and took out an embroidery hoop that held a piece of cloth where she was crosstiching a wildlife design. A black panther was crouched on a limb, ready to spring. "It's for Carl." She smiled, almost gleamed. "I work on it when he's at school."

"And all of us are going to be standing there, we're not running, because that's the way we've been molded. I don't think there's a brother in here that wouldn't die for me." "That's right," Troy says, "A lot of people just don't understand us, don't understand the tradition behind black fraternities. I mean we were founded for black unity...at Howard University in 1911...all black fraternities are founded for black unity, because at the time they first started, blacks couldn't join white fraternities and we needed something to bring us together. The only friends I have on campus are my brothers. I tell them everyghing just like a natural blood brother. Some people think we're kind of wild. Other guys might say we're militant...that's a lie...it's just a matter of closeness of making sure none of us get the shaft. People that down us, don't understand us." Dalany is annoyed, he shifts in his chair listening to Troy's words and then smooth like a cat, raises his hand. Troy stops speaking.

"I'll give you a prime example of the hassle we get because of the misunderstanding. We can be out in front of Frazer doing our dance routine and chanting and it's like synchronized swimming, you know, everybody rippling in time together, and everytime, just about guaranteed, a few people will start yelling out the windows "nigger" or "Why don't y'all go somewhere else, nigger" or something like that, and Jim Scott (the Resident Supervisor for Frazer) will get on the phone and call the Campus Police. Let some white frat come out in front of Frazer and start screaming and hollerin' and they'll get away with it - and its happened man - they think its funny then when the white frat is raising hell and they won't do shit about it." Its not usually the majority of the people that yell 'nigger' or something out the window though...I don't want to give you the wrong idea. I think on the whole, a lot of people respect us.

When we're walking away some folks start yellin' things like "Nah - forget them, come back, come back ya know."

The contrast between Omega Psi Phi and the other "social" fraternities is as stark and bold as the printing on this page - the black and the white. They call for academic excellence - a minimal 2.5 grade point average as opposed to the social fraternities 2.0 and a pledge program that equals the USMCs torturous basic. They don't want to belong to Longwood's Inter Fraternity Councel because "It'd be like pledging Longwood." They have a stoic outsiders attitude towards the campus which according to Dalany is not by choice.

"We'll never be accepted here man. The college as a whole is not going to accept our fraternity becasue its black - and the college does not accept blacks. Things are slowly changing and getting better, but right now there are still a lot more changes in attitudes that the college has to go through, and eventually if it learns to accept the blacks, they will accept the fraternity... As far as our fraternity goes though...we don't care. You can like us or dislike us, that's your opinion. You go[illegible]yours and we got ours."

Mitch Walker, a lanky boned 6'2" guard for the Longwood basketball team didn't make it through the Omegas boot camp the first time. As a freshman, wise and wry, straight from New York he buckled under to no one. When the Omegas told him "no chillin' out" - no TV, no drinking, no smoking, and "whooaa" no women, when they told him how to walk, eat and talk and "when to sleep, dream and shit" he walked out the Q-dogs' door.

"It was a strange feeling...I was used to doing things the way I always did them, and I guess I did some wild things back in those days...I wasn't ready for the Omega fraternity yet. When it (the pledge weeks) hit, I wasn't prepared physically or mentally - it was like having a bomb drop on you."

"He felt like a rat" says Dalany "a weasel...he didn't feel like a dog though, not a Q-dog."

"When you're an independent like Mitch was and you get on line and someone tries to tell you what to do and they're trying to break your spirit down, they're sayin' 'look Mitch it's time to go to bed, it's time to study (and we've got all the pledges studying while they're on line 6 o'clock to 9 o'clock or 6 o'clock to 10 o'clock Monday thru Friday) - it's time to wash your clothes or take a shower...it's a big change," says Little. "He didn't make it after a week," says Gary. "It's a challenge and you've got to want it, it takes work...and perseseverance, like the Q-dog, our bulldog, perseverance and courage." "Mitch made it on the second try - he wanted it enough that time."

The Omegas in Dalany's room are quiet, the tension has been broken it seems, a tension that has been building for a long time. Gary Thornhill nods solemly , Mitch has his head leaned back against the sofa, his eyes are watching the slow wind bent undulations of a piece of plastic taped over a window's empty frame. There are only 7 members to this fraternity on campus and in the local community. They go, as Troy Littles put it, for quality, not quantity. To belong to this fraternity, the Q-dog litter, it doesn't matter if you're black or white, if you're rich or poor. What counts is how bad you want to be a brother. There are 100,000 of them nationally, spread out from Alaska to Florida, a huge volvox of a family. Like Dalany says "I'm a family man see - I'm going to take care of my family - you know till the day I die" - like the fraternity saying goes "Omega Psi Phi till the day I die."

Miss Longwood Pageant

Thirteen girls and no tattoos. It could be an interesting evening.

This year's Miss Longwood Pageant on Saturday night, March 5, in Jarman Auditorium will have "all the glitter and pizazz of its past years," according to a college official.

H. Donald Winkler, Longwood's Director of Public Affairs and Pageant Coordinator, said that some of Longwood's most talented and attractive students will be competing for the title, which carries with it a $1,000 scholarship and the right to represent Longwood in the Miss Virginia Pageant.

The $1,000 scholarship is provided by McDonald's. The first runnerup will receive a $500 scholarship from the Golden Corral steak house. Smyth's Food Service is giving a $200 scholarship to the second runnerup and a $100 scholarship to the third runnerup.

Judging will follow Miss America criteria and will be based on private interviews, talent, and swimsuit and evening gown presentations.

Tickets for the pageant are $2.50 for adults and $1.50 for students. Tickets may be obtained at the door or in advance from the College's Public Affairs Office on the second floor of Ruffner Hall. A souvenir program booklet is available for $1.00.

Dogs Survive Fire Across From Stubbs

By Tammy Porter

It is just after 7 o'clock on a bitterly cold Saturday evening in February. The sky is clear and the stars are twinkling. The wind is blowing, making the air seem colder in the town of Farmville.

At Stubbs dormitory at Longwood College, the students are relatively quiet as opposed to their normal noisy Saturday evenings. While most of the girls have packed-up and gone home for the weekend, the remainder of the girls are either taking showers, drinking beer, or catching a short nap, since barking dogs have kept them awake the night before. A lot of the students are heading out to the big entertainment attraction in the lower dining hall: The Voltage Brothers are scheduled to appear at 9 p.m. and everyone wants to attend since it is one of the few times Longwood College has sponsored a band the college students know something about.

Various students are engaging in different actions in different parts of the dorm in the town of Farmville...But that evening on February 5th they will all be joined together in an observation that they will not forget: The fire of the house with the barking dogs.

At 7:20 p.m. while working her normal night shift at Stubbs, the desk aid sits behind here wooden desk calling girls down to escort their dates for the evening. She watches television on a portable black and white. From the corner of the hall on the first floor she hears a girl scream. Rushing to the back door, she sees smoke pouring out of the chimney from the two story brick house that is located on Griffin Street beside the Baptist Student Center.

Suddenly, the fire trucks approach Longwood Campus. After parking in front of the burning house they begin fighting the flames. The students are horrified. One yells, "The dorm is on fire!" The students begin to leave their rooms. The thought enters their minds, "Are we going to lose everything like the students at William and Mary?" In an uproar, they fly down the stairs and as they approach the window they see the smoke coming from the house across the street. Immediately the windows are packed by students viewing the fire. Someone says, "Hey everyone come look, this house is on fire!" The party on the second floor goes outside to watch the fire from the corner by Stokes Grocery Store. The students eating dinner on the third floor drop their knives and forks to stare out from the window.

Donna Ruggiero yells, "It's that house with the barking dogs." Apparently, earlier that day, she filed a complaint about the dogs barking all night long keeping herself and other residents from sleeping in their rooms. While she was the only student to report the noise, several students complained about the dogs.

At 7:05 p.m. Nancy Walker, 35, of 307 Griffing Street has her eldest son run to a nearby neighbor to report a fire. Her wood stove which burns consecutively 24 hours a day is causing a fire. The sap from the pine and other pollutants in the air has blocked her chimney. While washing her dinner dishes, she has turned to the dining room and noticed it is full of smoke. Panic striken, she has told one of her five children to go get help. She opens the front door and begins calling for her other children. She cuts off the oven hoping to reduce the flames. "The smoke was the worse part," she remembers. "It filled the whole house....It was hard to breathe."

Luckily the volunteer Fire Department from Farmville does not waste time reporting to the fire. After hosing the flames for 30 minutes, they check the vents and insulation of the home. Mrs. Walker remembers, "They even went into the attic which has been locked for two years now."

Meanwhile the students observing the fire are returning to their previous activities. Jay Howell says, "I'm going to eat...I don't like cold steak." The students drinking go back inside for another beer.

The fire trucks depart from the scene at 9:20 p.m. Mrs. Walker does not know how much damage has been done to her house. She

Market Basket Survey

The local market basket study and area gasoline prices study are projects of the Economics Seminar class at Longwood College and are under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo of the Business and Economics department

The local food market basket cost 64 cents more in February than in January, a 1.06 percent increase. Total cost for the basket was $61.03.

But this month's food basket total was $1.08 less than in February 1982.

Accounting for the small increase in this month's market basket cost were slightly higher prices for 13 food items, including meats, fish, cheese, apples, carrots, lettuce, and corn.

Prices were slightly lower for 17 items, including flour, bread, soda crackers, fryers, milk, ice cream, eggs, bananas, oranges, cabbage, celery, potatoes, tomatoes, coffee, cola drinks, shortening, and peanut butter.

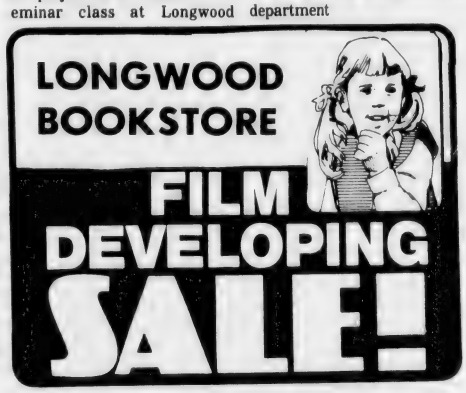
Ten items were priced the same as last month: corn flakes, evaporated milk, frozen green beans, onions, peaches, peas, tomato soup, margarine, sugar, and grape jelly.

The Farmville market basket compares with other three areas of the state where such surveys are conducted as follows:

Farmville — Jan. 1983, $60.39, Feb. 1983, $61.03 and Feb. 1982, $62.11;

Northern Virginia — Jan. $5959, Feb. $62.14;

Richmond — Jan. $61.03, Feb. $60.85;



Norfolk, Virginia Beach-Portsmouth — Jan. $58.67, Feb. $59.35.

Again this month, the local market basket is not the highest priced one in the state. The food basket in Northern Virginia totaled $62.14 this month, a hefty 4.3 percent increase over last month. The Tidewater area basket also showed a slight increase of 1.2 percent this month, totaling $59.35. Only the Richmond area basket, at $60.85, showed a cost decrease of 0.3 percent.

The local market basket study will include one more store beginning in March. The area's newest store, IGA Foodlines, will be included along with Safeway, Winn-Dixie, and Big Star.

In addition to the local food basket, the Economics Seminar class also surveyed local gasoline prices this month. Prices for gasoline at self-service and full-service stations for all brands were lower in February than in January. Prices in Appomattox, Blackstone, Crewe, Dillwyn, Keysville, and Farmville all followed the generally lower trend in gasoline prices.

In Farmville, all regular and unleaded gasoline prices dropped by a large 4.30 percent. The unleaded premium decline was a smaller 2.55 percent.

Computer Courses Offered

In response to the growing interest in home computers, Longwood College is offering three innovative computer courses during the months of March and April.

The first course, The Basics of Home Computing, is a non-credit course designed specifically for persons who know very little about home computers. Using simple language, group discussions, guest speakers, and hands-on experiences, the course provides a non-threatening introduction to the complex world of personal computing.

The class sessions will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. on the following Tuesday evenings: March 1, 8, 22, 29, and April 5. The fee for the course is $30.

The second course, Small Business Microcomputer Applications. (Bus. 358), will emphasize hardware analysis and selection, choosing and designing software, integrating computers into small professional and business operations, and economies and efficiencies gained through computer applications. Case studies, demonstrations of hardware and software, and student analyses of possible applications will be used to develop realistic knowledge and skills.

The classes will meet from 7 to 8:40 p.m. on the following Wednesdays: March 2, 9, 23, 30, and April 6, 13, and 20. The course carries one academic credit, and the fee is $35 plus a one time non-degree registration fee of $10.

The third course, An Introduction to Personal Computing, provides students with their own VIC-20 color computer to use and keep, plus instruction in keyboard operations, graphics and sound generation, Basic programming, and developing their own personal computer system. The course is designed for persons with no prior computer education and will provide a strong base for further computer skill development.

The VIC-20 computer was selected for the course because of its low cost, impressie keyboard, built-in Basic language, video game cartridge acceptance, adaptability to the home and office, color capability, and the availability of equipment and software in the Richmond and Lynchburg areas.

Class sessions will be as follows: Saturday, March 5, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. (lunch will be provided); and 7 to 8:40 p.m. on March 29, April 5, and April 12. The fee for the course is $220, which includes one academic credit and the VIC-20 home computer.

All of these classes will meet in the Wynne Building at Longwood (former Campus School). Interested persons are asked to register in person at the Office of Continuing Studies, Wynne Building, on weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. through March 1. For additional information, call 804-392-9256.

Rick Franks— Laughing All The Way to the Bank.

Many college students work at various odd jobs to put themselves through school. But not many do it the way Rick Franks, a Longwood College junior, is doing it.

Franks, a pre-medical technology major, is a stand-up comedian. He has performed at nightclubs and comedy clubs in Richmond, Norfolk, Cleveland and elsewhere in his native Ohio. And although comedy is currently a means to help him pursue a career in medical research, he may one day abandon the laboratory for the stage.

"I'll be in college a long time and I'll be in medical school a long time," he said. "Then there's internship and residency. All that takes time and money. Depending on how my career goes, I could possibly make more money as a comedian than as a doctor. I'll just have to wait and see how everything goes."

So far, in a professional career of only a year, everything has gone well. A 26-year-old Cleveland native who now calls Norfolk home, Franks now calls Norfolk home, Franks has appeared at nine clubs. He first performed professionally in March last year.

"I was in Cleveland on a short vacation and auditioned for a job at the Tangiers Club, a cabaret in Akron," he recalled. "I was supposed to open up for the Unknown Comic. Then he cancelled and I had to do the whole show."

Last November he performed at the recently opened Richmond Comedy Club, located in a Shockoe Slip pub. Over Christmas break he went to Cleveland and did about four shows a week at various clubs. Franks's performances on the Longwood campus have included the fraternity banquet last October and the Afro-American Student Alliance-sponsored talent show in mid-February, where he captured second place.

Rick Franks as Karl Malden in a fictional "American Express" commercial.

The biggest break in the comic's career could come from a nationwide talent search he recently entered. Franks has submitted a seven-minute videotape of one of his routines to the organizers of the second annual All-American Collegiate Talent Search.

New Mexico State University, which is running the competition, will choose seven finalists and one alternate from the entries, which encompass all forms of entertainment. Those persons, who each receive $500, will perform there March 26 in front of numerous professional agents. Three will be selected to perform at "Catch a Rising Star," a prominent New York nightclub that specializes in comedy.

"The exposure I would get from performing in New Mexico, with all those agents persent, would be more important than winning the thing," he said. "It could lead to future jobs." In addition to the seven finalists, three contestants from each of 14 regions will win cash prizes and have their material sent to agents.

Frank is not a typical college student. He has held 28 different jobs — lasting anywhere from five days to two and a half years — and attended three colleges. Those jobs include assembler, exterminator, lathe operator, molding plant worker, sub shop employee, salesman, taxi driver and torpedo tester for the Defense Department.

The varied work experiences help with his comedy, Franks noted, because he often relates real-life situations.

"The funniest thing that ever happened to me was when I was a taxi driver in Norfolk and was robbed by three ladies," he recalled, chuckling. "The funny thing was, I didn't even know I'd been robbed for hours and hours. They picked my pockets; I lost $56. They paid me with my own money, $6 plus a $2 tip. I was so embarrassed I couldn't even tell my boss."

Franks, who enrolled at a community college near Cleveland after high school, later attended Old Dominion University. Last fall, after three semesters at ODU, he transferred to Longwood because he wanted a smaller, residential college. "At ODU, you see a thousand faces a day and you don't get to know one of them. Here, you get to meet a lot of people."

He writes "virtually" all his own material, much of which is aimed at college-age audiences, and prefers comedy clubs over nightclubs. "They're there to see comedy," he said of the audience.

"Right now is an excellent time to try it as a comedian," he claimed. "Comedy clubs are opening up all the time. Because

Music Recital at Wygal

Longwood College Department of Music will present Cindy Riser and Donna Eason in a recital on Sunday, March 6, at 4:00 p.m. in the Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Building at Longwood College.

A senior music education major at Longwood, Miss Riser is a piano student of Pauline Haga. She will perform a French Suite by J. S. Bach, two pieces by Robert Schumann, two Preludes by Claude Debussy and a Sonatina by Dmitri Kabalevsky.

Miss Riser is a member of Longwood College Concert Choir and has been secretary and president of the local Student Chapter of the Virginia Music Educators Association. She is a 1979 graduate of Prince George High School and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nolan B. Riser.

Miss Eason is a junior music education major and a voice student of Patricia Lust. She will sing selections by Joseph Haydn, Gabriel Faure and Ned Rorem. Wanda Morris will be her accompanist.

Miss Eason is a member of the Camerata Singers and the Longwood Student chapter of the National Association of Teachers of Singing and SCVMEA.

Your Turn

A genteel tradition at Longwood College is its dining hall. Seldom will you find an institution where tables are set with china, silverware and fresh flowers. Much effort has been made to make the dining hall an attractive place to dine. Such efforts are shown through the painting of the walls, hanging of curtains and displaying of the menu and its caloric content. There are services which ARA provide that students may be unaware of - such as packing a bagged lunch for individuals whose schedules do not permit them to dine and preparing special diets for individuals with the help of ARA nutrionist, Rita Harris.

Each month birthday dinners are held to help celebrate those students who have a birthday sometime during the month. Twice a month, dinner is an adventure to giving students a chance to become acquainted with food from other countries. Students are encouraged to participate by dressing for the occasion.

Some students question the expense of the meal plan at Longwood. Individuals have asked why one must pay for all meals if one does not eat every meal in the dining hall. The cost of the meal plan allows a student to be absent from a number of meals. With this plan, the price of the meals are reduced and students are allowed seconds. Another expense of the students is applied toward busing trays. Students neglect to pick up their own trays. This requires more waiters and waitresses to work, which in turn is an additional expense for the students.

Through the Dining Hall Committee, a continuous effort is made to improve and create an atmosphere agreeable to the students. Meetings are held twice a month with representatives from the student body, dining hall staff, dining hall workers, ARA, and Dean Ogrosky. If you have any suggestions or questions concerning the dining hall, feel free to speak with the head of ARA, Mr. Pronesti or any dining hall committee member.

Cordially,
A Representative from the Dining Hall Committee

Lancers close with Two Wins

Longwood's men's basketball team ended its season with two straight wins last week, knocking off 17th ranked Randolph-Macon 41-39 and beating Phillips (MS) 79-72 to finish 15-10, the fifth straight winning season for the Lancer cagers.

A 19-footer by senior co-captain Mike Testa provided the margin of victory as the Lancers edged Randolph-Macon Wednesday night by two in what was probably the biggest win ever for the Lancer cagers in Lancer Hall.

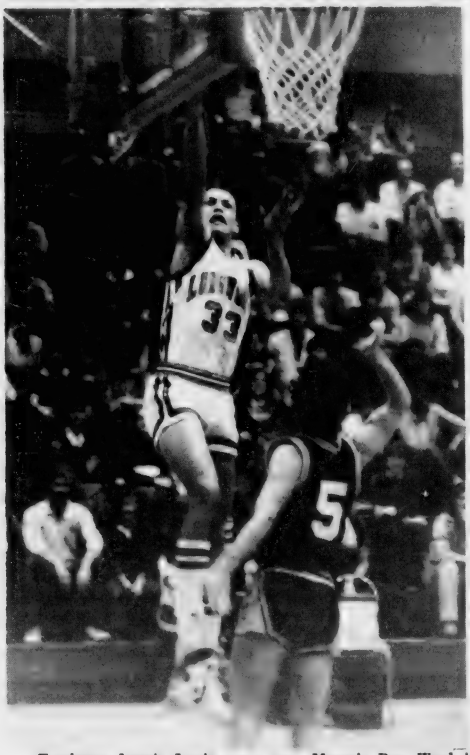
Six points by freshman Lonnie Lewis keyed a 10-point burst in the first half that put Longwood up 23-14. The Jackets never led after that, though the game was tied three times in the second half. With Macon refusing to come out of its zone defense, the Lancers held the ball for several minutes in both halves.

With the scored tied 39-39 and time running down, freshman guard Frank Tennyson forced a turnover at 0:34 and Testa came through with the winning shot at 0:03. With the victory and one over Phillips Saturday night Longwood moved its homecourt record to 27-4 since Lancer Hall opened in 1980.

Saturday night's win over Phillips marked the final appearance for seniors Testa, Ron Orr and Joe Remar. Testa had a great game with 11 points, five assists and five steals.

Remar ended his career with records for points (1,479), assists (531) and steals (201). The 6-1 guard averaged 18.7 points per game, highest Longwood average since Jimmy Yarbrough scored 22.2 ppg. in the 1976-77 season. He had 137 assists, 64 steals and 15 dunks this season.

Orr, a strong scorer around the basket, ranks as Longwood's second leading career scorer with 1,335 points and is also second in rebounds at 648. The left-hander averaged 16.4 points and 8.6 rebounds with 15 dunks in his finest season ever.



Junior forward Jerome (The Cobra) Kersey, who had 16 points, 16 rebounds, five assists, two blocked shots and four steals against Phillips, broke his own record for rebounds (270) and blocked shots (42) in a season. Kersey averaged 14.6 points and 10.8 rebounds while leading the Lancers in blocks, steals (71), dunks (22) and ranking second in assists (77).

Kersey turned in a phenomenal play in the win over RMC. In the first half he grabbed a loose ball with his right hand just before it went out of bounds and flipped a behind-the-back pass to a breaking Remar for a slam-dunk. The 6-7 forward had 12 points, seven rebounds, five assists, two blocks and two steals in the win over Macon.

Freshman Lonnie Lewis ended the season averaging 10.4 points and leading the Lancer regulars in free throw percentage (76.9). The 6-3 forward scored 10 against the Yellow Jackets and 15 in the finale against Phillips.

For the fifth year in a row, Longwood has ranked among NCAA leaders in field goal percentage. Ranked high in Division III in 1979 and 1980, the Lancers have ranked among the top teams in shooting in Division II in 1981, 1982 and now this season. Coach Cal Luther's team hit 53.6 per cent of its shots from the floor and was rated third in the latest Div. II statistics.

Baseball Season Opens Thursday

Longwood's baseball team, 31-10-1 and South Atlantic Region champs in NCAA Division II last year, open the 1983 season Thursday at Pembroke State. The Lancers play at Pembroke for one game Thursday and two games Friday and then travel to South Carolina for twin bills at Baptist Saturday and Allen Sunday. The first local appearance for the Lancers will be Tuesday, March 8 at Hampden-Sydney in a 2:30 contest.

As coach Buddy Bolding approaches the upcoming season, he has reason to believe Longwood could field another powerful team. Although several key players were lost to graduation, including much of the Lancer pitching staff, Bolding feels the Lancers could once again be contenders for national honors in Division II.

The Longwood infield, which played brilliantly in 1982, returns intact except for the graduation loss of star first baseman Denny Ulrey. The Lancers have a lot to live up to after last season's appearance in the Division II World Series and fifth place national ranking by Collegiate Baseball.

Bolding, however, feels an excellent recruiting year will enable Longwood to field another national contender.

"I think we can contend for an NCAA Playoff berth once again," says the coach. "If our young pitchers can continue to improve, we'll be a formidable opponent in the national scope again this year. Our goal is to qualify for the playoffs again, and to defend our NCAA II regional title."

The returning starters are virtually a hit parade of batsmen. DH Allen Lawter, .311, has been moved to first base. Also back are second baseman David Rumburg, .397, All-American shortstop Dwayne Kingery, .390, third baseman John Sullivan, .375, catcher Doug Toombs, .397, and left fielder Sonny Bolton, .379. Longwood, which averaged 9.2 runs per game last season, could have its most potent lineup ever in 1983.

Moving into the starting lineup will be freshmen Dennis Leftwich in left field, and Chris Wilburn in right. Leftwich will continue Longwood's tradition of having sensational speedsters in center, while Wilburn, an All-State pick as a senior, will provide a potent long ball threat. Top outfield reserves will be senior Sam Bagley and junior Duayne Kendrick.

Heading up the pitching staff will be senior righthander Mickey Roberts, 5-0 with a 0.96 ERA last season. Also expected to be top starters for Longwood are freshmen Glenn Mitchell, Todd Ashby and Tommy Norris. Adding depth to the mound corps are senior Ron Jones, who played outfield a year ago, and newcomers Scott Mills and Terry Spittler.

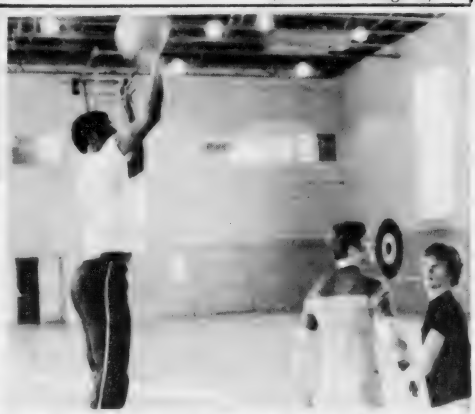
Gymnasts Await Possible Bid



The Longwood gymnastics team ended its regular season at the James Madison Invitational Friday night on an up and a down note. Longwood's team score (159.9) was its highest this season, yet once again the team finished beneath the opposition.

Strong Division I opponents North Carolina State (172.65) and James Madison (169.05) finished first and second in the meet.

Kelly Crepps turned in the best all-around score of the year for the Lancers (33.35), which was only the eighth highest score in the meet. Crepps placed second in vaulting (8.75) and fifth on beam (8.7), which was also a new season high. Dayna Hankinson also did exceptionally well in all-around (33.05) and placed fifth on floor (8.65).

The Lancers finished the regular season with a misleading 8-10 mark. Five of Longwood's ten losses came at the hands of Division I schools — Auburn, East Tennessee, Duke, N.C. State and James Madison.

The NCAA Division II Regionals will be held March 12 at Radford. The Lancers are awaiting word from the Division II Regional Committee on whether or not they will receive a bid.

Sports Briefs

LC Player of the Week

Sophomore Steve Albeck became the first Longwood grappler to place in a regional tournament February 19 when he came in third at 142 pounds and for his accomplishment, Albeck has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period February 18-25 by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Albeck, the Longwood captain, won three of four matches in the Eastern Regional Tournament at Pittsburgh-Johnstown to place third at 142 and receive consideration for a berth in the national Division II Tournament.

"Steve wrestled in the tournament with torn cartilage in his ribs, but he seems to wrestle best when he is hurting," said Coach Steve Nelson. "His third place match may have been his best collegiate match.

"I felt Steve deserved a trip to nationals for his performance," the coach continued. "Under last year's system, he would have qualified, but because of cutbacks this year only one-third place winner was selected."

Albeck, who finished this year at 21-9-1, led Longwood to a 7-6-1 dual match record, the school's first winning season in wrestling. A two-year standout, he has a career mark of 42-21-1.

Lady Lancers Win Two

Turner, Johnson stand out in final games

The Longwood women's basketball team finished the 82-83 season last week with strong wins in both of their final games. Sophomores Valerie Turner and Mariana Johnson played key roles as the lady cagers defeated Randolph-Macon 62-49 Wednesday and Liberty Baptist 58-47 Saturday. Both teams had defeated Longwood earlier in the season.

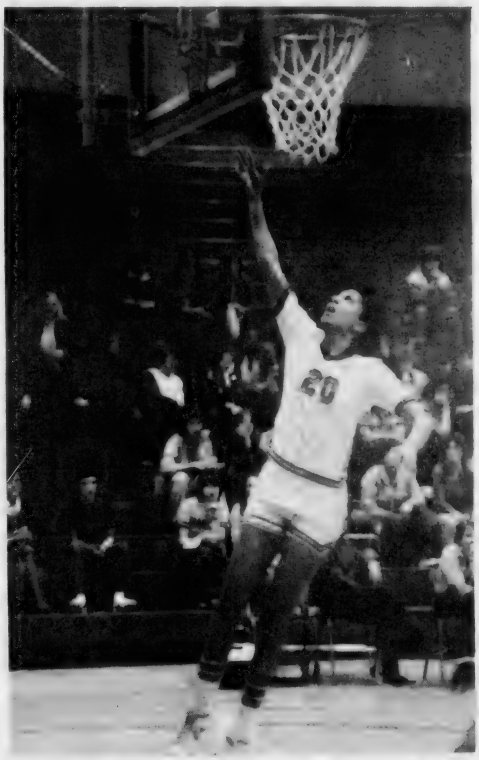
Turner had a strong performance against the Lady Jackets with 22 points and 13 rebounds. The 5-8 guard added four assists and three steals. After a slow start, Turner came on strong at season's end to average 7.8 points and 6.3 rebounds on the year.

Johnson, however, led the win over the Lady Flames in Lynchburg. The 5-9 forward scored 16 points, hitting eight of eleven from the floor. She finished the season averaging 6.3 points and 4.5 rebounds.

Junior guard Robin Powell handed out eight assists in Saturday's win, giving her a team high 58 for the season and tying her own record for assists in a single game.

Seniors Cindy Eckel, Karen Saverese, and Barbara DeGraff played in their final game for Longwood Saturday. Eckel finished her career with 1,029 points, fourth best in Longwood history.

The wins last week closed out the Lady Lancers' season with a 9-16 record.



Kersey Second Team All-Region

Longwood junior Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey has been named to the Division II All-South Atlantic Region second team, after averaging 14.6 points and 10.8 rebunds, helping the Lancers compile a 15-10 record.

Kersey, a pre-season All-America pick by Street & Smith's and a first team All-Region choice last year, led Longwood in rebounds (270), blocked shots (42) steals (71) and dunks (22) while ranking second in assists with 77. The power forward has 1,228 points, 766 rebounds and 161 assists in his three-year career.

Named to the All-Region first team, which is picked by the National Association of Basketball Coaches, were Bryan Vacca of Randolph-Macon, Julius Norman of Virginia State, Charles Oakley of Virginia Union and Michael Britt and Earl Jones of District of Columbia.

Joining Kersey on the second team are: David Pope of Norfolk State, Keith Moreland of Maryland Baltimore County, and Tony Washington and Greg Hines of Hampton Institute.

Softball Team Returns Eight

By Jim Winkler

The 1983 Longwood women's softball team will open its season March 7 at Mary Washington in a double header. Eight players are returning from last year along with five rookies.

Longwood will be participating in NCAA Division II for the first time. Coach Nanette Fisher feels the Lancers will fare well in their new division.

"Our competition is very similar to the past couple of years. The only team we meet this year that we haven't played before is VCU," said Fishers. Last year Longwood had a record of 10-8.

Fisher is most wary of Division I opponent George Mason. "Mason won Division III three consecutive years, moved up to Division II and did well and is now competing in Division I. Its fall squad was 14-0."

Among Longwood's returning players are pitchers Donna Kanary and Betsy Armstrong. Both performed well last season. Lynne Giblert was a key infield player last year. Kay Aultman, Cindy Walsh, Pam Cauley, Collen Stiles, and Donna Goforth are also returning.

"We hope to improve our defense and capitalize on opportunities more than last season," said Fisher. "Our batting percentages were good, but we didn't take full advantage of our opportunities."

Coach Fisher feels the Lancers will be ready for Mary Washington on March 7 despite limited practices for the team.

Will Named Volleyball Coach

Sherry Will, a Longwood graduate and native of Lynchburg, has been named as coach of Longwood's NCAA Division II women's volleyball program, Longwood Athletic Carolyn Hodges announced yesterday.

SHERRY WILL

Will replaces Joyce Phillips who is giving up her duties as volleyball coach but will continue as director of the Longwood cheerleaders.

With seven years' experience playing volleyball at Amherst Co. High School and at Longwood, Will is sell versed in the sport she will be coaching. Captain of the Longwood volleyball team her senior year, she graduated with a B.S. in Physical Education and has taught at Park View Senior High School in Mecklenburg County two years.

A prep standout in basketball, softball and track as well as volleyball, Will will be continuing her studies at Longwood next year with long range plans of obtaining a Masters in Exercise Physiology.

"Sherry was an outstanding volleyball player at Longwood and we're delighted to have her back as coach of our team," said Hodges in announcing the one-year appointment.

Will says the job will be a challenge for her.

"I'm excited that I got the position," said the Lynchburg native. "Volleyball has always been my favorite sport. I've always wanted to coach volleyball at the college level. It will be a challenge, but I feel I'm capable of fulfilling the job."

Johnson, Testa perform strong

Sophomore Mariana Johnson and Senior Mike Testa turned in outstanding performances last week as the Longwood basketball teams closed out their seasons.

5-9 forward Johnson scored 16 points in the Lady Lancers final game, a 58-47 victory over tough VAIAW opponent Liberty Baptist. She finished the season averaging 6.3 points per game and 4.5 rebounds per game. The Lady Lancers finished the season at 9-16 while Liberty Baptist earned its way into the VAIAW final four with a 7-14 record on the year. The Lady Flames will compete at Longwood Friday and Saturday in the VAIAW Final Four tournament.

Testa, a 6-0 guard shot the winning goal Wednesday vs. Randolph Macon. The play was set up when freshman guard Frank Tennyson stole the ball with 34 seconds left. Testa scored 11 points in the final game of his college career Saturday night vs. Phillips (MS).

Riding Team Opens Strong

The Longwood Riding Team opened this semester's season on February 19 at Sweet Briar College. The team competed strongly, finishing fifth out of a field of eight participating schools. The riders also competed at the University of Virginia February 26, coming in fourth of eight colleges.

Individual results from Sweet Briar include a first place for Mary Brockwell, who finished third in last year's Nationals in walk-trot, and a second place for Kristin Birath in Novice Equitation. Kirsten Ladendorf won a second in Intermediate over fences, and Martie Wilson earned a second place in Novice over fences.

At UVA, first place winners were Kristen Birath, Mary Brockwell and Beth Wiley. Second place winners were Bryan Farrar, Open division over fences, and Kristen Ladendorf, Intermediate over fences.

Several riders are now eligible to compete at the Regional Intercollegiate horse show at UVA this spring. Kristen Birath and Mary Brockwell qualify for Novice equitation at Regionals and now advance to the Intermediate Division. Carol Turner advances to the Novice Division and will compete in walk-trot-canter at the Regionals. While several of the ten riders need only a few more points, five have already qualified for the Regionals.

There are two shows remaining in the season. On March 26 the team travels to William and Mary, and the final show of the year will be hosted by Longwood on April 6.

Absence of Melee?

By JERRY WEIR

Poor attendance at sports events would appear to be a highly frivolous matter for any person entertaining the egotistical notion of calling himself a writer to delve into — however, as I have never considered myself to be too terribly far above the high school thought process and subject matter (or, for that matter, even much of a writer), I don't have any misgivings about doing so.

Commentary

With all of our winter sports nearly over, such an endeavor may well prove useless to the Longwood athletes who have already finished their seasons. It may, however, prove helpful to the athletes whose sports are just beginning to get underway — i.e., Longwood rugby, baseball, tennis, softball and lacrosse, so I'll go ahead with it.

Did anyone go to a women's basketball game this year? Don't be shy — I know you're out there! The Lady Lancers games in front of the largely empty, rather unsupportive aluminum bleachers in Lancer Hall. There was a regular attendance at the games, but it was slight at best. It would not be easy to say much better for the "crowds" at our home wrestling matches and gymnastic meets. Dragging people to these events is much like getting them to knowingly sign up for one of Dr. Helms' U.S. Government classes — which, except for a few innocents about campus, is close to impossible.

Quite a few supporters have shown up for the men's basketball games — in particular last week's R-MC game at which certain sororities thought it necessary to make attendance mandatory to get any of their members to come to the game. Is it really all that bad?? I thought that we could go to a game just to enjoy it, however such frivolities must be below the upper echelon of the Longwood socialite scene. That's o.k., though, a few sorority sisters did get introduced to the game of basketball, an acquaintanceship which, in and of itself, was rather an intriguing spectacle to witness ("How many points for a touchdown?").

Yet another incentive for some to attend this game was to hurl masses of toilet paper onto the floor of Lancer Hall as soon as Jerome Kersey made his first field goal — more of that good old high school humour — but why leave as soon as this one major goal had been accomplished? Everyone who did leave missed a fantastic Longwood win.

The upcoming outdoor games may not be as much fun for those who want to throw toilet paper, but, then, a cooler full of ice cold brew may satiate such desires while

Rod Rogers

The Rod Rodgers Dance Company and their accompanying musical ensemble has also been very successful and effective in performing and teaching residencies working with experienced dancers and beginners, with special education and children's programs.

The company is widely known for its percussion dance plays, where the dancers play hand held instruments, creating their own musical environment as they move onstage. Rodgers has also developed an approach to nonliteral works which he calls "sculptural movement landscapes," described by a DANCEMAGAZINE critic as ". . . some of the most exciting abstract movement around."

Admission to the performance is $4.00 for the general public and free for Longwood College students. Advanced tickets can be purchased in the Student Union Office, Lankford Building, and tickets will be sold at the door, availability permitting.

watching a baseball or lacrosse game. Perhaps sororities and frats could encourage support of all of our sports. All LC students support our sports programs financially, why not make the effort to support them with attendance?

But really, folks, don't get me wrong — I have no desire to sound like an all-American, go-get-'em, Farmville-is-my-town LC sports fan, but it does appear that the Longwood sports scene is somewhat less than thrilling to many students. If so, it is due to our lack of support for the Longwood teams, and not to the lack of effort on the part of our athletes, coaches and trainers. It's your money on display in LC sporting events, and you may as well have a peak at the investment.

Oh well, so much for the high school sports pitch — uhh, where's that toilet paper??

Paranoia

on your own and feel good about it." All of these statements are in great support and give positive points of the gynecological services.

An appointment with a gynecologist should not cause anxiety as it did with Vickie. It is a natural part of life and needs to be accepted. It is something that should be done as soon as possible in the early years of a woman's life. As one girl said, "There is nothing for a girl to be afraid of. I strongly urge everyone to go who hasn't been. It is important to have this check-up."

It seems that for the most part, once a woman goes, she wonders what she ever had to fear. This was so in Vickie's case, but she feels that she benefited from it in numerous ways. She took the effort to take care of herself and how could that be so frightening? One can't go wrong with free advice and services. One female student said, "I hope they keep it going for as long as possible. It's great."

Longwood will again play an extremely tough schedule with 10 Division I opponents and a total of 15 games against Division I foes. The Lancers will face Virginia Tech, James Madison, Virginia, William & Mary, Duke, Virginia Military Institute, Georgetown, Baltimore Baptist and Maryland Eastern Shore in Division I. Among the small college powers Longwood faces are Pembroke State, Norfolk State, Randolph-Macon, Pittsburgh-Johnstown, Maryland Baltimore County and Mount St. Mary's.

"This will be by far our most demanding schedule ever," said Bolding, "but we can't get ready for post-season play unless we play tough competition during the season."

purpose, and the plot assumes a more even quality. Towards the end of the film, you not only realize the genius and compassion of Mohandas Gandhi, but also the masterful ability of Richard Attenborough, whose efforts also earned him an Oscar nomination.

The skill and care that went into the making of "Gandhi" make it one of the best films to come out in the last five years. Even though Ben Kingsley and Richard Attenborough are not my picks for their respective Oscars, they both give the kind of performance that is refreshing and rarely seen these days. The epic quality of the film alone makes it a viable contender for the 1982 Best Picture Award. But with the year's competition as stiff as it is, only time will tell.

Underfed Stoker Decided On

Dr. Armstrong, Vice-President of Finance for Longwood College, met in Richmond February 24 with officials from the Division of Engineering and Building and the Environmental Protection Agency in order to discuss plans for an "Under Fed Stoker."

The Under Fed Stoker, according to Armstrong, would be used to deliver from the ground level up, sawdust, woodchips or coal to the two coal burners which are currently being fed wood chips through an antiquated "Automatic Stoker."

"The Under Fed Stoker" said Armstrong, "was thought the best way to go. It would enable us to burn sawdust, woodchips or coal for less than $200,000 (the cost of the underfed stoker).

The mechanism would have built in pollution controls and since "it's a hotter burning stoker" it would be safe to burn alternative fuels, allowing Longwood "a flexibility we've never had before." Or Armstrong estimates that the woodchips project could save Longwood approximately $150,000 in one year. If everything goes well the under fed stoker should be in place by October of next year.

"The state office is really for this . . . we'll be the first state institution to burn wood for fuel. It would also help our local economy lumbermills such as Buffalo Shook will love to sell us sawdust."

Dr. Armstrong said, "This may turn out to be the push that the Longwood budget needs. Hopefully it will lead to more money being channeled into our academic departments" as a result of the fuel savings.

will not be held responsible for the fire. Her landlord will inform her that she will pay for all the damage since it is covered in her insurance. In response to the fire Mrs. Walker says, "The fire department did a good job and I was pleased with their work and amazed at their concern for making sure the fire was out...I pray I won't have to go through this again!"

Across the road at Longwood, Donna Ruggiero replies, "Too bad those damn dogs couldn't have died!" She ties her shoelaces before walking towards the lower dining hall to see the Voltage Brothers.

of the economy, people want to laugh . . . The 30's, for example, saw comedy come of age. And now, we're seeing it again."

Franks, who will perform at the Richmond Comedy Club on March 9-12, plans to travel to New York over spring break in search of bookings. "Even the people who emcee shows at nightclubs make good money."

He said that he has learned a valuable lesson during his on-again, off-again collegiate career. "I know the ropes of college financial aid. I found out that once you're completely broke, you can get every dime you need."

The Three Faces of Eve

Chris Sizemore to Give Talk

Chris Sizemore, the real-life "Eve" of psychology's most celebrated case of multiple personality, will speak in Longwood College's Jarman Auditorium on Thursday night, March 24, at 8 o'clock.

Ms. Sizemore's early life story was popularized in the book and film, The Three Faces of Eve.

Her visit to Longwood is sponsored by the college's Psychology Club.

General admission to the lecture is $1.00. Longwood students, faculty and staff will be admitted free of charge.

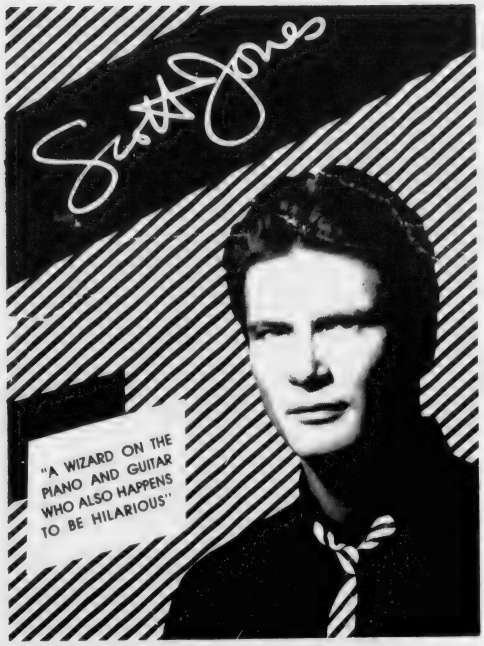
Longwood College Company of Dancers

The Longwood College Company of Dancers and department of health, physical education and recreation will host the Dance Theatre of Central Virginia in a "Studio Dance Evening" on Saturday, March 26, at 7:30 p.m. in the Lancer Hall Dance Studio.

The dancers will perform and discuss their compositions with the audience. The public is cordially invited to attend at no charge.

The Dance Theatre of Central Virginia was established by Betty Sue Moehlenkamp, of Lynchburg, to offer training and opportunities for performance to professionally oriented dancers in the Central Virginia area. Acting as a "dance umbrella," it hopes to encourage creation of new works of choreography in varied styles of dance with the active involvement of musicians, visual, and theatre artists.

Two Farmville artists will be performing in the program at Longwood. Noelle Prince will dance a new work, Autumn Flourish, with music by Ernst Kreneck. Karen Hubbard, who is currently teaching in the dance program at Longwood and is artistic director of Dance-By-Two, will perform House In The Rising Sun, choreographed by New York-based Canadian dance artist Terrell McGuire.



The Lynchburg choreographers performing include: Betty Harris of Dance-By-Two and currently a member of the faculty of Seven Hills; Betty Sue Moehlenkamp, director of Dance Theatre of Central Virginia; and Walter Holland, dancer, writer, massage therapist and graduate student at Lynchburg College. A company of 10 will join these choreographers in presenting solos, duets, and group works.

Dance Ltd., of Richmond, will contribute to the program a duet, Twice Blue, choreographed by company director Karen Kessler.

Dr. Betty Bowman, director of Longwood's Dance Company, states: "Longwood is pleased to host this new not-for-profit arts organization committed to the development of dance in our area. This group has given freely of their time, skills, energy and artistry to this program for our community, and their performance is greatly appreciated."

For further information about the studio dance evening, call Longwood's department of health, physical education and recreation at 392-9266.

Hat Party

Elisabeth L. Flynn, Associate Professor of Art History cordially invites Students, Faculty, and Administration to a Hat Party on Bedford Mall on Thursday, April 28th at 6:30 p.m. Punch and cookies will be served.

The invitation requires that a. each guest must wear a hat; b. each guest must make his-her hat; c. your hat must be copied from a work of art.

In the History of Art there are many works in which the people portrayed wear marvelous hats. When we look at these works we often say "Wouldn't it be wonderful to wear a hat like that!" So this party is designed to give us the opportunity to wear Henry VIII's black velvet hat with jewels or Blue Boy's with a feather. There are all kinds of hats or headdresses, scarves, helmets, turbans, feathers and headbands. Everyone has a chance to wear a favorite hat. For suggestions for hats, go to the Reserve Room in Lancaster Library and just browse through the books, look at the pictures and have fun trying to decide which hat you like best.

There will be three prizes awarded for the hats. The prizes will be a year's membership in the Smithsonian Institution. The membership has much to offer including the monthly publication of the "Smithsonian". If the winner already has a membership another suitable membership will be selected. The prizes will be awarded to 1. The best made hat; 2. The guest who can identify the most hats, and 3. The Judges' Prize. Category 2 is a contest. Therefore, as we are making our hats we will not tell others its source. Let everyone guess.

Miss Phyllis Mable, Vice President for Student Affairs and Mr. Randall Edmondson, Assistant Professor of Art will judge the hats under the chairmanship of Mr. Homer L. Springer, Jr., Associate Professor of Art.

ART FACULTY EXHIBIT

By MAURICE FRANCK

It is now, it is here! Eight members of our faculty, from the art department, are sharing their work with us. Only a fool would miss it. It's never too late. That is, until the fourth of April.

Prior to the Sunday night deadline, I was able to slip over to Bedford and take in this exhibit. Pattern form, texture, mysticism — all observations on our world portrayed only by the artist.

Observations of light and still movement are protrayed in photography and paint. Life forms in jewelry reflect its origin — from molten earth and formed to man. Molten and formed. Randy Edmonson's ceramics show a true understanding of glazing; likewise Eduard Betenas' horizontal reliefs in bronze and stone are reminiscent of Bonzai garden craftsmanship.

Icons, including "Icon for "1/20/48" (the date of Ghandi's Death), represent Homer Springer. His "Summer Hymn for a Country Funeral," is a delicacy of tintype photographs, pressed flowers and old lace resting poignantly in one corner near Elisabeth Flynn's architectural study of a West Virginia highway. These works mingle with a series of mud-daubers on lattice-work, corrogated and confirmed, latered, wrapped, rolled, paper pulp constructions by Barbara Bishop.

If somehow on the way in you missed it, you will surely notice it on the "My Marvelous Mystery Box," a collection of "untapped resources" by Jacque Wall of primal masks, man made an natural forms around native puppets seemingly introducing us to ourselves. We leave satisfied.

Longwood Art Symposium

Longwood College's sixth annual Symposium for Art Historians in Virginia Colleges, Museums, and Universities will be held on Friday, March 25, in the Bedford Art Building.

Seven art historians from five colleges and universities are scheduled to speak. Their topics range from the architectural contracts in use during the Republican period in Rome to the "minimalist" work of contemporary sculptor Robert Morris. Each lecture will be illustrated with slides.

All of the Symposium presentations, beginning at 9:30 a.m. and concluding with an open discussion at 3 p.m., are open to the public without charge.

The first speaker will be Howard Risatti, of Virginia Commonwealth University's department of art history. He will discuss "Early Modernism in America," specifically the exhibition of Cezanne watercolors at 291 (Alfred Stieglitz' sutdio at 291 Fifth Avenue in New York City). He will focus on particular Cezanne works and critical reaction to them.

At 10:15 a.m., Felicia Lewandowski, of Radford University, will discuss the collection of contemporary art that Radford is currently developing with the help of Dorothy Gillespie, formerly of Roanoke. Ms. Gillespie initiated the donation of a number of contemporary works by her friends and associates. Dr. Lewandowski will discuss the origin of the collection and focus on several of the works included in it.

Percy North, of George Mason University, will speak at 10:45 a.m. on "Max Weber and the Modern Vision of the City." Weber produced "dramatic paintings of the interior and exterior rhythms and forces of the city of New York" during the first third of the 20th century.

Concluding the morning program will be Robert Porter, of VPI & SU, who will speak at 11:15 on "Beyond the Edge: The Art and Criticism of Robert Morris."

Following a lunch break, the Symposium will continue at 1:30 p.m. with a presentation by Charles Moore, of VPI & SU, on "Two Masters of Enigma: Comparative Visions of Antoine Watteau and George Segal." Watteau was one of the originators of the Rococo

Lady Netters on Road

Longwood's women's tennis team, coached by Carrol Bruce, begins play at the Emory & Henry Tournament March 25-26. The young Lancers, with two juniors, one sophomore and several freshmen, will be trying to improve their fall record of 2-8.

Barbara Cathey and Lisa Barnes will be playing in the top two positions in singles and should also form the No. 1 doubles team for the Lancers. They attended Suffolk High School together and should prove to be solid competition against any opposition. Terri Justice was selected as team captain and will play in the No. 3 spot. Karen Croun will compete in the fourth position The remaining positions are still in close competition between freshmen Karen Gardner, Anne Drumeller, Alison Butler and Cathy Morris. Morris and Barnes are the only players returning from the fall season.

Coach Bruce is looking forward to the start of the season. "We should have more wins this year as our competition is balanced well." Bruce looks for the lower positions to produce wins. "We are a good balanced team, so our bottom players should do very well."

The Emory & Henry Tourney will feature seven teams with Randolph Macon Woman's College being the favorite. Joining with Longwood in the tournament are Averett, Ferrum, Lees-McRae, Clinch Valley College and LMU.

In looking ahead to the season Bruce sees Hollins as the premier team on the schedule. Two other very strong teams the Lancers encounter are William & Mary JV and Bridgewater. The latter half of the season includes matches against Lynchburg, VCU and Southern Seminary, teams which Bruce feels the Lancers will be very competitive with.

movement in the 18th century, and Segal is a part of the 20th century's Pop Art movement. Yet Moore states that "the common achievement of both artists is the degree of pathos imbued in their works." He will compare the ways Watteau and Segal "create their respective enigmatic visions."

At 2 p.m., Diane Scillia, of Virginia Wesleyan College, will discuss the series of 12 engravings executed by Israhel van Meckenem just before 1500. These works depict "contrasting types of lovers (happy and unhappy, licit and illicit), suggesting that van Meckenem's engravings illustrate various aspects of amorous folly."

The final paper on the Symposium program will be given by Jerrie Pike, of VPI&SU, at 2:30 p.m. She will discuss the competitive bidding-contract procedure used in ancient Rome for the construction of new architectural monuments and the maintenance of those already in existence.

Longwood Literary Festival

From Classic to Contemporary

By DAVID S. AREFORD

During the seventy years of his life, writer John Cheever often remarked that "Literature is the highest form of communication between intelligent adults." To some this communication means love, hate, ideas, theories, explanations, abstractions... the list goes on and on, but it must be agreed that all literature shares with the world a part of its creator's mind and his insight on life. It is a communication seldom shared in our every day lives, in conversation or through television or film. At its best, it is an honest, unselfconscious sharing of an intellect.

John Cheever's remark is behind this year's organization of Longwood's annual Literary Festival sponsored by Longwood's literary magazine, The Gyre. It promises to be a sharing and communicating of intellects through the medium of literature in a variety of ways. A tribute to John Cheever who died this past June, will be included.

The Festival, April 3-7, will open with the film version of John Fowles' novel, The French Lieutenant's Woman. The film, co-sponsored by S-UN, stars Academy Award-winner, Meryl Streep (who is up for another Oscar this year) and Jeremy Irons. It is a fascinating film, the screen play of which was written by playwright Harold Pinter. It will be shown at 7 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium on April 3 and 4. Admission is only 50 cents.

On Tuesday, April 5, at 3:30 p.m., a dramatic reading of Cheever's short story "The Death of Justina" will be presented in Wygal Auditorium with readers: David Areford, Mike Foster, Jeff Thomas, and Felicia Wilhoite. This story is included in the Pulitzer Prize-winning The Stories of John Cheever. The program will also include a performance by the Camerata Singers and soloists Gordon Parr and Wanda Vincent. The three pieces being performed are poems by Walt Whitman, Robert Frost, and W.H. Auden and have been set to music by composers Ned Rorem, Benjamin Britten, and Randall Thompson. This informal short program will last only about an hour.

On Wednesday, April 6, at 8 p.m., the John Dos Passos Prize for Literature will be presented in Wygal to award-winning novelist Robert Stone. The prize is administered by Longwood College and commemorates writer John Dos Passos. The prize is in the amount of $1,000. Stone was born in Brooklyn, New York, and grew up in Manhattan. He served in the U.S. Navy as a journalist, lived in New Orleans and San Francisco as an involved member of the counter-culture, and later worked as a foreign correspondent in South Vietnam. His first novel, the much acclaimed, award-winning A Hall of Mirrors, appeared in 1967, and his shorter fiction has appeared in New American Review, Fiction and The Best American Short Stories 1970. Another novel, Dog Soldiers appeared in 1973 and his third novel, A Flag For Sunrise appeared recently to the same critical acclaim that accompanied the preceding two novels. A reading by Stone will be included in Wednesday night's program.

The Literary Festival will conclude with a program of readings on Thursday, April 7, at 8 p.m. in Wygal by Otis Douglas, Katherine Stuart, and Toby Thompson. Douglas, a Longwood faculty member, and published writer will read one of his short stories. He teaches creative writing and has organized the writing workshop, at Longwood. Stuart who teaches at Prince Edward Academy will read from her poetry. She has been published in various literary magazines such as Appalachian Heritage, The Green River Review, Roanoke Review and The Hampden-Sydney Poetry Review. She has participated in many creative writing programs at Longwood, University of Virginia, Virginia Commonwealth, University and Radford University. Thompson, also a Longwood faculty member will be reading a narrative non-fiction piece. Thompson has been published in many magazines, including The American Film Magazine, Playboy and The Village Voice and has written three books, Positively Mainstreet, Saloon, and The Sixties Report. A reception will follow and will provide an opportunity to meet the writers and discuss their work.

Hopefully, the variety of the festival will help it appeal to many people. An aim this year is to expand the event so as to attract a wider audience, not only from Longwood, but also Hampden-Sydney College and the surrounding area.

Cheever, who often probed the dark interiors of life, also celebrated life in "A World that lies spread out around us like a bewildering and stupendous dream." This year's Festival plans to follow Cheever's example.

Board Announces Hike

The Longwood College Board of Visitors, in a special meeting on March 25, approved an increase in tuition and fees totaling 9.9 percent for Virginia students and 11.3 percent for out-of-state students.

The new fee structure will take effect for the 1983-84 academic year.

The total cost for Virginia students living in Longwood's residence halls will be $3,925 for the regular academic year consisting of two semesters. This compares with $3,570 for the current year.

For out-of-state students living in Longwood's residence halls, the cost will be $4,675, up from $4,200 this year.

Day students will pay $1,520 for the academic year, as compared with $1,394 for 1982-83.

Dr. Verna Armstrong, vice president for business affairs, said: "The increase in tuition and fees is the minimum the College needs to continue serving its students. The increase in in-state tuition (not counting room, board and special fees) is 9.4 percent from $850 to $930; last year it was only 2.3 percent for a two-year average of 5.9 percent. These relatively low increases in tuition reflect the continuing commitment of the College to contain costs while maintaining the excellence of its programs so that our students receive the best education for the lowest feasible tuition."

In other action, the Board approved a bond resolution pertaining to a routine financial transactions related to repayment of funds the College borrowed from the State for renovations.

Wilson at Willis
Archaeology Dig

The first time I met David Wilson he was singing .38 Special's "Hold On Loosely" and strumming on a single necked six string guitar. If hindsight is anywhere close to the proverbial 20 20 he was also sweating, grinning, carousing, playing the lead, and occassionally unless the beer had totalled the better part of my senses, swaggering.

That was about a year ago in a friend of mine's cellar. The basement band has since broken up but David is still around working a little overtime with a violin and digging in dirt. If that seems like a cultural paradox or the first symptoms of regressing personality then perhaps it is. David wouldn't argue — slugging a Budweiser and sliding a Mozart theme across his violin strings, he is apt to agree, nod his head and utter with sardonism racing across his face, "I'm just a simple country boy."

I met him again last Thursday for his latest venture into cultural confusion, an archaeology trip into the heart of Buckingham County, specifically into the side of a little geological oddity labeled a Manadnok by archaelogists, which in layman's terms means simply, a rock that doesn't erode fast. To the Buckingham County folks, it is just known as Willis Mountain.

This is where David drives 20 miles in a blue Impala and digs in the dirt for rocks and glass. He spends about 10 hours a week doing that — kneeling down under a rock shelter on the side of Mount Willis, scraping Mother Nature's birthday suit raw and (—get this—) enjoying it.

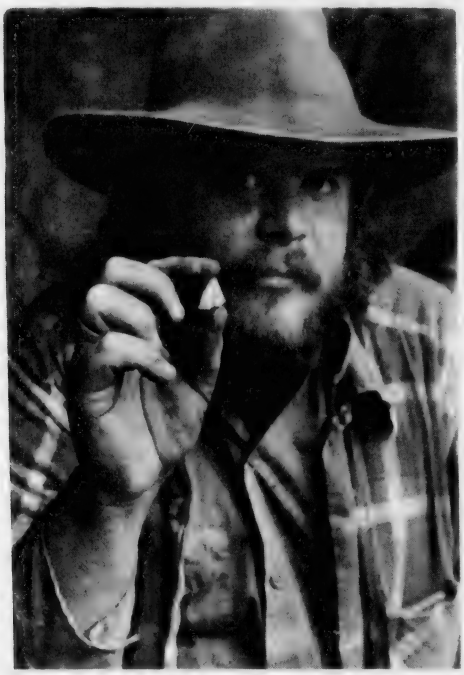
"Put a quarter in and out comes the lecture," he said as we rode buckets bouncing, trowels scraping and wheels turning towards the pinnacle of his latest ambitions. Three other volunteers were also in the car, looking forward to a cold 4 hours of backs bent and knees wet.

Up ahead Willis loomed like a rising Gargoyle pedastalled on the Buckingham plains. David was participating in Longwood's Summer Field Schools in archaeology at Anna's Ridge when he first noticed the mountain's dark profile high above the surrounding landscape. "It seemed like an obvious place for Indians to use as a look out for defense . . . if I was an Indian back then I'd like to go up there and take a look — it would have seemed like the ideal place for camping."

He bounced the idea around with colleagues and friends familiar with the area. Robert Taylor told him of how Confederate deserters supposedly held up in Willis' caves during the Civil War. Natalie Jenkins remembered finding bits and pieces of projectile points at a place named Woodson's rock shelter at Mount Willis, and David, well, he got a silly gleam in his eye, the type of gleam usually associated with mad artists flinging paint on a canvas at 50 paces. Except the distance in this case was a little farther — about 2000-3000 years B.C. to be specific. David could still see them, they would be Indians running half naked in animal skins and tree bark, watching what would become Buckingham County spread out before them like the fertile crescent. Perhaps stampeding animals through Indian gap and ambushing them with projectile points made sharp in one of the shelters. Or maybe storing materials up in the nooks of some long forgotten crevice. . .

Natalie had taken David up to Woodson's rock shelter on Willis Mountain and within 20-25 minutes they discovered 2 projectile points and three other pieces of stone tools. On the other side of the mountain, the Northern Peak, Dr. Jordan began an archaeological survey that summer and David photographed and dug with the school as 59 shards of pottery were unearthed. Monacan Indian pottery about 350 years old Dr. Jordan hypothesized, was stored there in case of hurried flight from advancing English colonists.

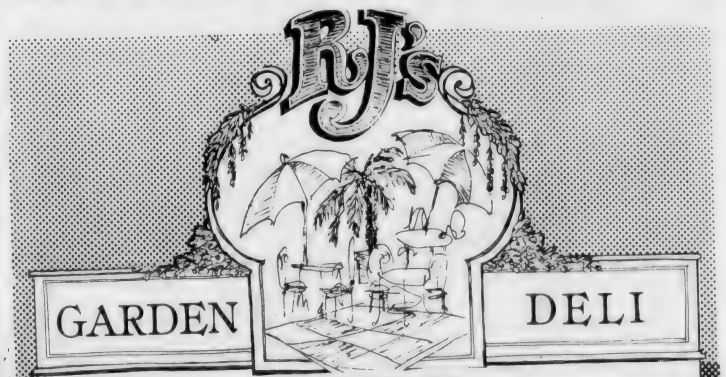
Woodson's rock shelter, however, was still untouched. Other possible sights were still unknown and Willis Mountain, both Dr. Jordan and David, concluded could yield knowledge of a past that Central Virginia never knew. But the prognosis for its survival wasn't good.



Dixon's Kyanite mine operation owns Willis Mountain. And kyanite has become chemical gold for Dixon used in heat shields for space rockets and possibly to replace silicone in the computer microchip industry.

The mine takes hunks of the mountain away, hour by hour, gorging into its peaks, stripping the tops of its history into a waiting silo leaving the mountain gapped and pecked as if the naked rock were a jagged line of discontent.

David started the Bureaucratic mills churning — first a conditional use permit signed by the owner of the land, Gene Dixon, then a Virginia Research Center for Archaeology site survey form, then a geological survey and then, down to tacks setting up the grids in quadrant working areas, and finally, lowering the nose two inches from the ground smelling the earth and feeling its rough wet edges as the trowel scrapes into its sides.



Anthropology 490 is the official title for what David is doing — a 6 credit independent study in archaeology — find a site, work it for a semester, give a preliminary report to Dr. Jordan on the findings and later perhaps as much as a year or two later a final report for the Virginia Archaeological Journal.

Archaeology Dig

out from the side of the mountain like an emptied chest cavity. It began forming about 251 million years ago during what is termed the Appalachin Period. Vultures have nested on the Southern peak of Mt. Willis and as we approached one or two of their number arced slowly outward catching the wind in their wings silhouetting themselves black against a cloudless sky.

Inside the shelter there is a weird amalgamation of the past and present. Broken Boone's Farm Tickle Pink bottles, and rusted Budweiser cans can be seen stashed in a small nook across from two surveyor's names which have been chiseled meticulously into the rock sides of Woodson's interior. "R. Balling, H. Bell 1709, P. Turpin 1769."

Lichen grows on its side adding to the color of the quartz, kyanite and pegmatite intrusions, which keep the interior from having that cold gray look. Graffiti adds the rainbow effect — "Chip was here" and in red paint — "KKK."

The monotony of the work was inescapable. Trowels scraped the site and red-handled picks dug around possible artifacts while paint brushes cleaned the few that were found. The dirt was accumulated in buckets which would later be dumped through a screen and shaken like a sieve while wary eyes and fingers checked for that special something which makes it all worthwhile.

One last find was made that day. David found it screening his dirt — a small arrowhead base carved from the white quartz. He guessed it was from the Woodland period and dated it between 900-1000 A.D. About the same time period as the pottery found at Dr. Jordan's site that summer. "Not a bad day," he said, "there have been better and there have been worse." The best was six projectile points found in one hour. The worst, of course, was none. That's difficult to imagine, digging the earth for five-six hours and not finding a scrap of worthwhile evidence.

Perhaps the urgency of Kyanite Mines working full tilt against his time, eating up the past before it can be understood, drives David. Perhaps it's like he said, all puns probably intended, "Where else can I get six credits for doing something I dig?"

The new "Miss Longwood," Robin Elder (center) is flanked by (from left) "Miss Congeniality," Pam Stanley; first runnerup Kim Short; second runnerup Martha Sandidge; and third runnerup Natalie Thompson.

Elder Chosen Miss Longwood

The hometown favorite won the crown.

Robin Lynn Elder, a freshman from Buckingham, was chosen "Miss Longwood College" Saturday night in a Miss America preliminary in Jarman Auditorium. She will represent Longwood in the Miss Virginia Pageant in July.

The Miss Longood title carries with it a $1,000 scholarship provided by McDonald's of Farmville.

The first runnerup, recipient of a $500 scholarship from Golden Corral restaurant, was Kim Short, a junior from Emporia. Martha Sandidge, a junior from Manassas, was second runnerup, and Natalie Thompson, a sophomore from Alexandria, was third runnerup. All are Dean's List students and-or members of academic honor societies. Pam Stanley, a senior from Charlottesville who grew up in Cumberland, was chosen by the other contestants as "Miss Congeniality."

Some 40 contestants competed in the preliminaries for the Miss Longwood Pageant. Thirteen finalists participated in the Pageant Saturday night before a near-capacity audience.

The new Miss Longwood, a mathematics major, is a Dean's List and honors student. She plans to become a computer programmer. Miss Elder is a member of Alpha Lambda Delta, an honor society for freshmen.

She is a Magna Cum Laude graduate of Prince Edward Academy, where she was a member of the National Honor Society and Who's Who Among American High School Students. At PEA Miss Elder was a semi-finalist in national forensic competition, was named most outstanding female choral member, had the lead role in the Senior Play, played on the girls' basketball team and served as Pep Club president.

She is 19, 5'7", with brown hair and brown eyes.

For the talent competition, Miss Elder sang "Sweet Virginia Breeze." She was sponsored by the Camerata Singers, of which she is a member.

Miss Elder had to rehearse her song in an unusual manner. "The song wasn't available in sheet music," she noted. "So, I called Robbin Thompson (leader of the band that had recorded it) and one of the keyboard men agreed to record the song on a cassette in the key that I wanted to sing."

Her father, Danny Elder, is president of Elder Construction, Inc., of Buckingham. Her mother, Linda, is a kindergarten teacher. She represents the fourth generation of her family to attend Longwood. Her mother, grandmother and great-grandmother also attended Longwood.

"When my great-grandmother went here, I think it was still called the Farmville Female Seminary," said Miss Elder.

How did it feel to win?

"I was numb at first," she said Monday morning. "Then I felt really honored. I feel thankful to all the people who helped me — my friends, roommates, suitemates and a lot of others. My hostess, Cindy Parker, did a lot of work."

Although she is accustomed to being on stage, Miss Elder admitted that she was nervous during the competition.

"I don't usually get nervous. I'm used to singing in front of my church, competing in forensics and playing basketball in front of a lot of people . . . I just like getting on stage."

The judges, all of whom have had many years of experience in judging Miss America state and local pageants, unanimously chose Miss Elder as Miss Longwood.

All of the runners-up were singers in the talent competition. Miss Short sang "Lady;" Miss Sandidge sang "Evergreen;" and Miss Thompson sang "Summertime." The other talents included balletic dances by three contestants, jazz dances by two performers, a a flute solo, dramatic comedy, gymnastics routine and piano solo.

Miss Elder is looking forward to the Miss Virginia Pageant, which will be held in Roanoke from July 12 to 16. "I'm really going to work hard," she said. "After the Pageant, the judges were giving me advice on ways I can improve. I asked them for advice."

Special entertainment was provided during the Pageant by two Longwood music groups — the Lancer Edition, a choreographed show choir, and the Jazz combo. Donal Lemish, vice president for institutional advancement, was master of ceremonies for the 2½-hour program, which was titled "A Touch of Class."

The French Lieutenant's Woman

By MICHAEL LUND

"Is a pen a metaphorical penis?" asked authors Sandra Gilbert and susan Gubar in their 1979 book The Madwoman in the Attic: The Woman Writer and the Nineteenth-Century Literary Imagination. The question was not really a surprising one for the end of a feminist decade in which traditional stereotypes were routinely exploded.

Society confronted an idea, which Gilbert and Gubar found to be "all pervasive in Western literary civilization," that only men, with their unique sexuality, are capable of literary creation, and thus of "authority" in a variety of its meanings. As Gilbert and Gubar traced the effects of that tradition on such famous Victorian authors as Jane Austen, Charlotte Bronte, and George Eliot, they were asserting both a nineteenth-century feminine creative force (in the careers of these novelists) and a twentieth-century one (in their own literary criticism).

The movie of The French Lieutenant's Woman (to be shown as part of Longwood's Literary Festival April 3 and 4) draws on this same contrast between the last century and our own, as did John Fowles' 1969 novel which inspired the movie.

The advertisement for the movie, featuring the alluring image of Meryl Streep and the phrase, "She was lost from the moment she saw him," suggests that we moderns will be on familiar (and comfortable) ground in viewing: typical Victorian woman, caught in the confines of society's definition, can break free only to her own destruction. (The title of movie and book also appears to reinforce the formula.) But those who have not yet seen the movie will be challenged in two ways (and those of us who have seen it at least once before will find the challenge more subtle than we remember).

In the first place, it is the Victorian man, played by Jeremy Irons who is more trapped than the Victorian woman (not simply because of his culture, but because of the remarkable individual character of the woman Streep portrays). The gradual disintegration of his security through the course of the movie is a faithful and effective extension of the familiar moral plot in nineteenth-century fiction (used by the novelist Fowles as well). Viewers who are sensitive to the historical context will find no easy answer to his dilemmas.

In the second place, the movie does not take place entirely in its principal Victorian setting; actors and actresses from our own time move between two worlds attempting to find a footing in both or either. And in the modern setting, even more graphically, it is the woman who comprehends and surmounts her condition. Here most of all any assertion that we are beyond such "Victorian" confusions becomes least convincing. Whatever her biological destiny, The French Lieutenant's Woman writes her own history. Whether the same can be said of us may be seen in our response to the work of art.

Faculty Art Displayed

Recent work by all members of the Longwood College art faculty is currently on exhibit in the Bedford Gallery at the college.

The exhibit is a sophisticated showcase of varied talents, techniques, and interests. Included are mixed media works, paintings, pottery, photographs, jewelry, and sculpture.

Mark Baldridge's contribution to the exhibit is a collection of handcrafted jewelry in silver and gold. Included are rings of 14-carat gold and sterling, earrrings, and pendants in gold with diamonds and titanium.

Eduard Betenas is showing a group of small abstract sculptures, several in marble and several in bronze on shaped slabs of poplar, walnut, and oak.

Barbara Bishop has utilized handmade sheet formed, mould cast, and poured cast papers to create her "Earth Forms" and other works. The colors are beautifully subtle shadings of earth tones.

Randall Edmonson has chosen vivid primary colors against neutral backgrounds for his large, precision-painted canvases. He also is showing an earthenware raku pot, a porcelain bowl, and two stoneware bowls.

Elisabeth Flynn's photographs include architectural studies of ancient monuments, arches, and walls in Greece and Rome; a color still life of vegetables at a market in Rome; the "Wine Dark Sea" at sunset; and a fellow "wandering photographer" loaded down with cameras, lenses, and tripod.

In his mixed media works, Homer Springer combines drawings and paintings in pencil, ink and acrylic with an intriguing variety of found objects. In "Summer Hymn for a Country Cemetery," he has combined a pencil drawing of a country church with old photographs, bits of lace, dried flowers and butterfly wings. His "Fifth Reunion of the Keepers of the Flame" includes four pencil-acrylic studies based on an old photograph of four young men. He also is showing "icons" to St. Nicholas and the Archangel Gabriel, and an "Icon for 1 20 48" (the date of Gandhi's death).

Jackie Wall is showing a rod and hand puppet called "Dream Bird," made of felt, feathers, and styrofoam in electric shades of pink and blue. Her other work, called "Untapped Resources — My Marvelous Magical Mystery Box," is a head-high wooden box containing Indian puppets, smaller boxes in varying sizes and shapes, feathers, a papier-mache mask, fibers, and other mixed media creations.

Carolyn Wells is showing handcolored and high contrast black-and-white photographs. Subjects include scenes at Nags Head, children, and an elderly black woman.

The exhibit will remain in the Bedford Gallery through April 3. Gallery hours are: Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m.; Saturday, 2 to 5 p.m.; and Sunday, 5 to 9 p.m.

Wall to Direct Governors School

Some educators relax a little over the summer. But not Jacqueline Wall. A Longwood College art instructor, she is even busier in the summer than during the academic year.

"We keep the students busy from morning until night, and they keep us busy from morning until night," Mrs. Wall, director of one of the 1982 Governor's Schools for the Gifted and Talented, said recently.

Mrs. Wall, who will direct a Governor's School at Longwood again this summer, discussed her experiences in a "Fireside Chat" March 2 at Longwood House. In these programs — which date to the turn of the century — a Longwood faculty member addresses a selected audience in an informal setting.

The audience of about 15 included Longwood President Janet Greenwood, Longwood faculty, prominent local citizens and Rurik Ekstrom, a Richmond architect who taught an architecture class last year.

Last summer Longwood was one of three colleges awarded a Governor's School. About 150 rising high school juniors and seniors, who were housed on campus, participated in an intensive four-week interdisciplinary program focusing on man's relationship to his physical and spiritual environment. The arts were emphasized.

Longwood's program was the first to use an interdisciplinary approach and will serve as a model for the two schools this year, at Longwood and Virginia Tech. Two-hundred students will attend the Longwood program.

"What we had last year was the beginnings of an interdisciplinary program that had an emphasis on hands-on, practical experience," noted Mrs. Wall, who was formerly art director at the campus school.

Among the activities were an archaeological dig at an early Indian mound site, an examination of the campus's and town's architecture, and a study of psychologist Carl Jung's theories. Students composed music, worked with computers, wrote poetry and prose, and tried improvisational acting. They also produced a videotape narrating their experiences.

"We're trying to get the kids to take risks . . . to think holistically and to see that everything is interconnected," Mrs. Wall explained. "The Governor's School is for people who are problem-solvers, and who think perceptually and with a global consciousness. We're not just after brains, but brains that have an interest in artistic avenues."

She continued, "They were allowed to challenge us and to ask questions. But it takes time; it's not an overnight thing. You've got to gain their confidence."

Under the Virginia Governor's School program, which is entirely state-funded, the content of each program is up to the host institution. It is not designed to provide an accelerated program of high school study nor a freshman college curriculum, but rather, a unique educational experience, according to Mrs. Wall.

"It's for people who know where they want to go, and why," she said.

SGA Open Forum

Editorial

By JEFF ABERNATHY

The Student Government Association is planning a big shindig for tomorrow night. Beer, hotdogs, the whole bit while "College Publications" (neatly singled out was The Rotunda) are (is) discussed at this so-called open forum.

Many SGA members are gleeful at the opportunity to finally shut down the subversive elements here at The Rotunda. They are ready to stop the printing of such pinko leftist topics as nuclear arms, abortion, and homosexuality to name a few. Most nobly, they want to put stories in The Rotunda which really should be printed — i.e., yet another reprinting of "Sunburst at Longwood", weekly updates on the high quality of life here at LC, and other such wholesome, morally uplifting stories. They rejoice in the hope that we shan't have to read anything which might alarm Mommy and Daddy, which may present different ("radical") ideas, or which might cause us to be shaken to our firm, white, middle-class roots. The formation of a new publications board, a board which includes the Director of Public Affairs for Longwood College, reflects these ideas. Surely, nothing could be better for us than to get a p.r. influence working to redirect The Rotunda — maybe, someday soon, LC students can have the overwhelming benefits of a weekly propaganda report to trash the dining hall with.

Forgive me for being somewhat sarcastic. It's just that I have this belief that all college students should, if nothing else, be open-minded. I see little open-mindedness in the attitude which some have toward The Rotunda.

Don't get me wrong — I believe the changes in the past two years have, as a whole, been good ones for this college. This administration has made strong steps in the right direction, a direction Longwood hadn't known for a number of years before Janet Greenwood had heard of Longwood (much less Farmville!). Yet it can hardly be said that we don't have our faults.

It cannot be seen as less than responsible journalism for The Rotunda to point out these faults. Similarly, though, we must try to seek out the advances being made.

I guess I've seen too many Monday morning sunrises over Farmville (not a terribly inspiring sight after an evening of rewrites and lay out), and I've smoked too many Marlboros trying to help put a paper out. What's worse is the fact that I haven't put a fraction of the time into this newspaper which the editor, assistant editor and feature editor have.

Ergo, I hate to see people complain about the staff of this paper and not bother to do anything about it but scream "Damn that Joe Johnson!" Many students and faculty have closed their minds to the idea of constructive criticism and opened their mouths.

Publishing a weekly paper for 3000 students with a staff of five can often lead to problems and complaints, but complaining does nothing for any of us while a little positive thinking and acting from students, faculty, as well as the people who put together this newspaper, would lead to a better situation for all of us.

It's great that the SGA has called for a "press conference" on The Rotunda — it may well prove to be a boon to all involved, but any negative attitudes taken into it will work to the detriment of such a result. We'll accomplish nothing if this forum is allowed to be no more than an open shoot on The Rotunda.

Your Turn

Dear Sir,

The article in the March 1 issue entitled, "Overcoming Gynecology Paranoia," contained much information which I believe will be helpful to students. There were two items, however, that were inaccurate, and I ask that you publish this letter in order to correct any misunderstanding that may arise among your readers.

First, the clinic is not medically staffed with a gynecologist, (physician who has received four years of specialty training in gynecology), but staffed with a nurse-practitioner who has received special training in the medical conditions of women. The nurse-practitioner receives her medical back-up from this writer, a physician but not a gynecologist. Health problems beyone our ability to handle are referred for care to specialized physicians.

Secondly, reference was made to the placing and removal of posters. There has not been a need to publicize the clinic and posters were never placed around the campus during the present administration.

Thank you for your help in clarifying these items.

Sincerely,
Sam Graham, M.D.

Dear Editor:

The Foreign & DOomestic Teachers Organization needs teacher applicants in all fields from Kindergarten through College to fill between five and six hundred teaching vacancies both at home and abroad.

Since 1968, our organization has been finding vacancies and locating teachers both in foreign countries and in all fifty states. We possess hundreds of current openings and have all of the pertinent information on scholarships, grants, and fellowships.

The principle problem with first year teachers is where to find the jobs!

Our information and brochure is free and comes at an opportune time when there are many more teachers than teaching positions.

Should you wish additional information about our organization, you may write the Portland Oregon Better Business Bureau or the National Teacher's Placement Agency, UNIVERSAL TEACHERS, Box 5231, Portland, Oregon 97208.

We do not promise every graduate in the field of education a definite position, however, we do promise him a wide range of hundreds of current vacancy notices both at home and abroad.

Hesselink to Give Lecture

The final lecture in this year's Faculty Colloquium series at Longwood College will be given by Dr. Paul Hesselink on Wednesday evening, March 30, at 7:30 in Wygal Auditorium.

Dr. Hesselink, who is associate professor of music at Longwood, will speak on "The Harmonic Language of Arnold Schoenberg's Variations On A Recitative for Organ, Op. 40: A Preliminary Report." The lecture is open to the public at no charge.

The work that Dr. Hesselink will discuss is Schoenberg's most extensive composition written for any solo instrument. Published analyses of the work "present a confusing picture," Dr. Hesselink said, and "have largely neglected the aspect of its harmonic organization."

In his study of the work, Dr. Hesselink used "pitch-class set analysis procedures" to more clearly define the composition's harmonic structure. He adds that this process has revealed "a compositional methodology" that had not been observed before.

Dr. Hesselink holds the doctorate in musical arts from the University of Colorado. He has played numerous organ recitals in the United States, Canada, and England.

In the summer of 1981, he was one of 27 American music educators invited to participate in a cultural exchange program to the People's Republic of China. He spent the first six months of 1982 studying in Paris.

Assistant Editor's Turn

Let's hear it for all those he-man truckers who go to Wilkes Lake and tear up the grass by spinning out. Yurrrrr-sooooo-baaaaad!! Yes siree. Nothing better for the good ole ego than hopping in the Bronco and trying to impress everybody out at the lake by doing doughnuts and tearing up the sod. Crank up the Skynard and put the pedal to the metal and make that dirt fly. You know the girls will be impressed when you throw out a beer bottle and give a rebel yell while your blazing down the drive, making your exit.

Actually, most people's reactions to that are about the same as how guys react to girls who wear those preppy shorts. They tell them they look great to their face and then laugh behind their backs. "Hey man! What did you think of that patch I laid out at Wilkes?" When you ask your friend that at the party that night you can be assured that while his mouth is going "Yeah, that was wild," his mind is going "You're an asshole."

Well, I've got some news for you Dukes of Hazzard spinoffs. The next time somebody screws up is going to be the last because if one more person chews up the grass or even drives out to the point, which forms ruts because the ground is so soft they're not going to let people in there anymore. So from now on if you have the urge to show off your big machine, go home and tear up your front yard. And if you see somebody do it, you'd better squeal for the sake of all of us who have legitimate reason to go to Wilkes.

SPORTS BRIEFS

LC Player of the Week

Junior leftfielder Sonny Bolton who belted a grand slam homer to pace the Lancers over West Virginia Tech March 13, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period March 11-18 by the Longwood sports information office.

"Sonny has provided us with excellent overall play and leadership early in the season," said Longwood coach Buddy Bolding. "He hit the grand slam against West Virginia Tech and also had some big hits in our doubleheader with Mount St. Mary's."

The Lancers' RBI leader with 11, plus a .310 batting average, Bolton has helped Longwood get off to a 6-3 start. He has also played excellent defense with no errors.

A member of the South Atlantic Region All-Tournament team last spring, Bolton was team MVP and finished up with a .379 batting average, 15 doubles, 41 walks, 16 stolen bases and 31 RBI's. He has been the Lancer sparkplug from his lead-off position in the batting order. Sonny, who hit .394 in his freshman season, earned a third team All-Region spot last spring.

Softball Season Opens

Longwood coach Nanette Fisher will unveil her 1983 softball team today when the Lady Lancers host Virginia for a twinbill starting at 3:30 on the Farmville Elementary field. Fisher's team had been scheduled to open play March 7 against Mary Washington, but rain forced postponement of the double header. The two teams will play at Mary Washington April 21 to make up the contests.

With a number of veterans back from last season, Longwood is looking for its third straight winning campaign. The Lady Lancers were 10-8 in 1982 and 11-6 in 1981, the first year Longwood fielded a softball team.

Lady Cager Recruited

Karen Boska, a 6-1 center who played for Fort Hunt High School in Alexandria, Virginia, has signed to attend Longwood in the fall and play for the Lady Lancer cagers, Longwood women's basketball coach Jane Miller announced today.

An All-Gunston District and All-Tournament selection, Boska averaged 11 points and nine rebounds per game for Fort Hunt and coach Paul Jansen.

Netters Stumble at H-SC

Longwood's men's tennis team, which hosts Radford Monday and plays at Mary Washington Saturday, dropped its second match of the season Friday as Hampden-Sydney took a 9-0 victory on the Tiger courts. The loss dropped Longwood's record to 1-2.

Freshman Greg Douglas and the doubles team of John Todd and Bryan Kersey played well in the loss. Douglas at No. 2 singles and Todd and Kersey at No. 1 doubles extended their matches to three sets before bowing.

Earlier, the Lancers had opened the season with a forfeit win over Averett March 5 and a tough 5-4 loss to King's College March 10.

Baseball Team Ranked Seventh

Longwood's basketball team, the defending South Atlantic Region champ, has been ranked seventh in the first Division II poll compiled by Collegiate Baseball. The Lancers, now 8-4 after a rugged early schedule and 10 rained out contests, host Virginia State for two Tuesday and visit Division I Virginia Tech Thursday in action this week. The Division II top 25 was published in the March 25 issue of Collegiate Baseball.

Last week, Longwood fell to Pittsburgh-Johnstown 4-1 and defeated Randolph-Macon 8-6. The Lancers continued to get strong pitching as the Longwood hurlers have now tossed complete games in 11 of the team's 12 starts and seven times in a row. With a team ERA of 3.26, the Lancer pitchers are off to a terrific start in 1983.

In Saturday's win over Randolph-Macon freshman Glenn Mitchell tossed a seven-hitter, struck out seven, walked just one, and gave up but three earned runs.

Mitchell also evened his record at 1-1.

Hitting standouts for Longwood were Roanoke natives Duayne Kendrick and senior Dwayne Kingery. Kendrick, a junior who plays right field and designated hitter, ripped a three-run double in the fifth inning when Longwood took an 8-3 lead. Kendrick is now batting .571 after seeing action in five games.

Kingery, a Division II All-American last season, went two for three with two RBI's and raised his batting average to a team high .324. The senior has now driven in 13 runs. Freshman Todd Thompson also had a productive day at the plate, going two for four with a double.

Friday, Longwood was unable to get its bats going against Pitt-Johnstown hurler Chris Cortazzo, who pitched a three-hitter and struck out five. Sophomore Allen Lawter drove in the only Longwood run with a single in the second inning.

Pitcher John Dipierdomenico lowered his ERA to 1.96, but saw his record fall to 1-2 as the Lancers were unable to back him up at the plate. Dipierdomenico scattered 11 hits and struck out four while walking just one batter.

Longwood's other pitching standouts thus far have been senior Mickey Roberts with a 2-0 record and a 1.38 ERA, freshman Scott Mills, 2-0 with a 1.93 ERA and freshman Todd Ashby, 2-0 with a 2.57 ERA. The Lancers have given up just 32 earned runs in 12 games.

DUANE KENDRICK

Trailing Kingery among the Longwood hitters is junior third baseman John Sullivan with a .316 batting average, six RBI's and 11 runs scored. Sullivan continues to make sparkling plays in the field at the hot corner.

Following the trip to Virginia Tech Thursday, the Lancers will resume play April 6, hosting Norfolk State for two.

Kersey Named All-American

Longwood's Jerome Kersey received two big honors last week when he was named to the third team of the 1982-83 All-America Division II squad announced by the National Association of Basketball Coaches and the college division All-State team picked by the Virginia Sports Information Directors.

A three-year standout for the Lancers, Kersey is only the second Longwood basketball player to be named an All-American. The first was Kenny Ford, a third team pick in Division III in 1980 by Basketball Weekly.

Kersey, a 6-7, 220 pound junior, averaged 14.6 points and 10.8 rebounds during the past season, helping Longwood compile a 15-10 record. A native of Clarksville, Virginia, Kersey led Longwood in rebounds (270), blocked shots (42), steals (71) and dunks (22), while ranking second in assists with 77. The power forward has 1,228 points, 779 rebounds and 161 assists so far in his college career.

Nicknamed THE COBRA, Kersey was a pre-season small college All-America pick by Street & Smith's in the fall and a second team All-South Atlantic Region choice several weeks ago. He earned first team All-Region honors as a sophomore.

Kersey, who has a career field goal percentage of over .590, has been named to six All-Tournament teams in three years.

Bolding Named To Poll Committee

Longwood baseball coach Buddy Bolding is one of approximately 25 coaches and sportswriters from around the country who was picked early this month to serve on the poll selection committee for Collegiate Baseball newspaper's Division II baseball poll.

Bolding, who guided Longwood to a 31-10-1 record, a regional title and a berth in the NCAA Division II world Series last season, is one of several coaches from the South Atlantic Region of Division II who will be providing input for Collegiate Baseball's poll.

According to Lou Pavlovich, Sr., Editor and Publisher of Collegiate Baseball, Bolding was chosen for the committee after being named South Atlantic Region Coach of the Year for 1982.

"We try to pick a cross-section of coaches from around the country," said Pavlovich. "We pick the region coaches of the year from the previous season as part of the 25 or so people on the committee."

The first Division II poll for 1983 was published last week, with the Lancers ranked seventh. Longwood was ranked fifth in the final poll for 1982.

Collegiate Baseball, which is published from January through June on a regular basis has a circulation of about 11,000. The official publication of the American Baseball Coaches Association and the United State Baseball Federation, Collegiate Baseball is published once in September and October and twice each month in January, February, March, April, May and June.

Lancers Land Top Recruit

One of the finest high school soccer players in the state of Pennsylvania, midfielder Brian Stum of Waynesboro, has signed to attend Longwood College and play for Coach Rich Posipanko's NCAA Division II state champion program.

Stum, who scored 16 goals and added 11 assists as a senior, was a member of the prestigious Maguire Cup Team for his region. In addition, he was MVP in the Blue Mountain League, All-League, All-State and All-Mid-Atlantic and captain at Waynesboro High School two years. In 1981, Stum was named to the Pennsylvania State Team under 16 and the All-Region team.

"Brian will be an excellent addition to our team," said Posipanko, Mid-Atlantic Region Coach of the Year in 1982. "He has the ability to step in and play for us as a freshman, and considering the kind of talent we have coming back that says a lot about how good he is.

Longwood, 15-4-1 last fall, won the state small college championship in only its sixth year of intercollegiate soccer.

Lady Netters Tie For Second

Longwood's women's tennis team got its spring season off to a strong start Friday and Saturday with a second place tie in the Emory & Henry Tournament. Junior Lisa Barnes won the individual title in number 2 singles for the Lady Lancers.

This week, the Lancers host Bridgewater Thursday at 3:00 and the William & Mary junior varsity team Friday at 2:30.

Emory & Henry won its own weekend tournament with 48 points while Longwood tied Lincoln Memorial (TN) for second place with 22 points. Ferrum, with 8 points, was fourth, Averett was 7 was fifth and Clinch Valley was sixth with one point.

Four Longwood netters advanced to the finals in singles. Barnes won three pro-set matches to claim the crown, triumphing 10-9 on a 7-2 tiebreaker in the final match. No. 1 Barbara Cathey advanced to the finals but lost a 10-8 decision to Lenhart of Emory & Henry.

Number five Heather Gardner and Number 6 Cathy Morris also reached the finals, but lost their championship matches. Longwood did not fare as well in the doubles.

"I'm extremely pleased," said Coach Carrol Bruce. "We got a trophy for finishing second. It's a great way to start off the season."

Lacrosse Team Falls to Macon

Season Opener Shows Potential

By JUDY PAINTER

With only four starters returning from last season, Longwood's lacrosse team fell to Randolph-Macon 16-12 in its season opener in Ashland Friday, despite five goals from freshman standout Sue Groff.

"We looked good on offense," said Coach Jane Miller, "but our inexperience showed. We made too many turnovers to beat a veteran outfit like Macon. Considering it was the first game I thought we did pretty well. We learned what we have to work on most."

Groff had a super game, with three assists added to her five goals. Junior Rala Heinen added four goals, Lisa Seivold two and Ellen Cykowski tallied one.

Next up for the Lady Lancers is a game at Sweet Briar Saturday at 2:00. The first home contest is scheduled April 6, when Richmond visits for a 3:00 tilt.

Moving from AIAW Division III to NCAA Division II this season, the Lady Lancers are shooting for an at-large berth in the NCAA Div. II Tournament.

Last year's team placed third in the VAIAW Div. III State Tournament, but there will be no state tournament this season. Coach Jane Miller's team ended up the '82 season 7-4-1 overall and 7-2-1 against Division III opponents.

"Even though this is a rebuilding year (having lost eight of 12 players from last year's starting lineup), I am very excited about this season," said coach Miller. "We have a good group from last year's second team and four new players who have played high school or club lacrosse."

Veterans Mindy Allman and Terry Chumley are expected to head up the defense, while Lisa Seivold, Cherie Stevens and Ellen Cykowski will be expected to lead the offense.

Freshman Sue Groff scored five goals against Randolph Macon.

Other returning players include Mary Garrison, Ann Holland, Mariana Johnson, Ann Masi, Brigetta Nelson, Stephanie Parker, and Gayle Shuler.

Women Golfers Finish Seventh

Playing in frigid temperatures, Longwood's women golfers managed a seventh place finish out of nine teams in the 27-hole William & Mary — Kingsmill Invitational Thursday and Friday at the Kingsmill Golf Course near Williamsburg.

Longwood scored 380 Thursday and 197 Friday for a 577 total. Play was stopped after nine holes in the second round because of the cold weather. William & Mary (524) beat Penn State (524) for the team title in sudden death after the two teams tied. Indian golfer Anne Bierman won the individual title with an 80-42-122.

Other team scores were: James Madison 541, North Carolina-Wilmington 558, Appalachian State 557, Dartmouth 572, Meredith 607 and Rutgers 624.

Leading the way for Longwood was sophomore Lanie Gerken with a 90-48-138. Gerken's score was good for a 13th place tie out of 45 individuals. Also for the Lady Lancers, May Semones had a 98-51-149, Carol Rhoades a 95-52-147, Robin Andrews a 98-50-148, Sue Morgan a 98-51-149 and Margaret Melone a 104-52-156.

Next up for Coach Barbara Smith's squad is the Penn State Lady Lion Invitational April 8-10.

"Red Ryder"

Rehearsals are proceeding well in preparation for the April 13-16 performances of Mark Medof's play, "When You Comin' Back Red Ryder?" It is the story of a man who looks back at the values associated with heroes of the old West. This tense drama also deals with individuals who are disillusioned after the failure of the 1960's "social revolution."

Soviet Union

"Nationalities in the Soviet Union" is the topic of a lecture by Dr. Michael H. Haltzel, Longwood College's vice president for academic affairs, on Tuesday evening, March 29, at 7:30 in the Bedford Auditorium on the Longwood campus.

The lecture, sponsored by the college's department of history and government, is open to the public at no charge.

The Soviet Union is a country of over 100 distinct nationalities among its population of nearly 270 million. These groups range in size from the 138 million Russians to peoples of the Siberian Far North that number only a few hundred individuals.

Recently, the rapid population growth of the Muslim nationalities of the USSR, especially in Soviet Central Asia, plus expressions of nationalistic feeling in the Baltic area and in the Transcaucasus, have given rise to speculation in the West about possible internal threats in the future to the integrity of the USSR.

Dr. Haltzel will put the nationalities question into its historical context, discuss the implications of the newest Soviet census data, and offer a prognosis for future developments.

Dr. Haltzel received the B.A. degree from Yale University, where he graduated with honors in history, and the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard University. He has traveled widely in Europe and the Soviet Union, has studied and lectured in Finland, and served as deputy director of the Aspen Institute of Berlin from 1975 to 1978.

Movie Break

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

It is a well known fact that Spring Break is a time when many a dedicated college student heads down that long ribbon of highway that leads to Florida and premature wrinkles. It is a lesser known fact that there are a few students who have neither the funds nor the desire to make such a trek, and who seek fun and relaxation in some other area of the globe. I was able to see several films that have eluded me in the past and also a few that I had never heard of, but still promised to be, at least, mildly entertaining. Here is a list of those I saw and my personal opinion of each, in hopes that it will be of some help next time you are trying to decide what movie to go see.

GALLIPOLI — a film directed by Peter Weir about Australian soldiers in World War I. The screenplay, directing, acting and photography are excellent. A superior film in every way.

GANDHI — a second time for me. This time, all of the minor problems I saw the first time were even more obvious and painful Ben Kingsley is excellent as Gandhi, but director Richard Attenborough could do with a bit more restraint.

LORDS OF DISCIPLINE an interesting story, but absolutely the worst photography I've seen in several years.

THE WEAVERS, WASN'T THAT A TIME! — a documentary about the reunion of this famous singing quartet. I bought a lot of folk albums after seeing this one.

DAS BOOT — a very well made German film concerning the Nazi U-boat campaign in World War II. There are now two versions of this film: the original German version with English subtitles, and a newer, more American version re-titled THE BOAT and containing the English over-dubbed soundtrack. I saw the German version, which most critics say is the one to see. The musical score for this film is especially good.

SOPHIE'S CHOICE — based on the novel of the same name, this film has received more than its share of Oscar nominations, including Meryl Streep's bid for Best Actress. Kevin Klein also gives a very fine performance.

LOOKING TO GET OUT — a little known 1982 film by Hal Ashby, starring John Voight (of COMING HOME fame) and Burt Young (who played Paulie in ROCKY I, II, and III). Voight and Young play a couple of New York con men who flee to Las Vegas and proceed to cook up a very interesting gambling affair with a local sharpy. A very nice film.

NASHVILLE — without a doubt, the strangest movie I have ever seen. By examining the lives of 24 people over a five-day period, director Robert Altman takes a shot at everything from country music to political assassinations. The film stars the likes of Lily Tomlin, Henry Gibson, Keith Carradine, and Karen Black, who all give very good performances. If anyone can explain this film to me, please contact me right away.

All in all, these movies made my Spring Break very enjoyable, but they probably won't compare to what this summer has in store. Be on the look-out for SUPERMAN III, and THE RUTURN OF THE JEDI, the latest chapter in the STAR WARS saga. Also worth watchinf for in the near future are THE BLACK STALLION RETURNS, THE OUTSIDERS and SAVANNAH SMILES. 1983 is already proving to be a better year for films than 1982.

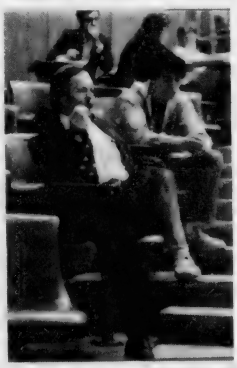
THE ROTUNDA

VOL. LVIII LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, APRIL 5, 1983 NO. 21

SGA Open Forum on The Rotunda



By MIKE LYNCH

"Ludicrous." "Embarrassing." Many Longwood students were not entirely pleased with the past Rotunda issue on drugs. One group of students was so displeased by the tarnished implication to the school's image put forth by the Rotunda's special drug issue that they approached Phyllis Mable, the Vice President for Student Affairs, asking for a way to put a stop to all this negative material dispersing from the student paper.

"A group of students was standing out in the Rotunda and they trooped into my office (after reading the drug issue), Mable told The Rotunda, "I told them the Student Activities Fees Committee allocates money (to the paper) and is responsive to the President. They could recommend to the SAFC that they withdraw the paper's funds. Or they could talk to the SGA."

From Mable's office the peeved students caught up with Trisha Boyle, SGA President, who subsequently brought the proposal before the Student Senate for consideration. "A group of concerned students came to us and said that they had some negative feelings about the paper and would like to put (the proposal) in action," Boyle said. "It went to the administration before it came to us. And the administration passed down to us that we promote their proposal of taking away the student activities fees. At a Student Senate meeting of March 2, we voted to oppose the proposal."

Instead, the SGA set up an Open Forum, which took place last Wednesday for informal discussion relevant to the problems of The Rotunda. A handful of the Student Senate was present along with a few Longwood Ambassadors whom the SGA had asked to attend. They were joined by some students and a few faculty members all with the purpose of discussing The Rotunda. The entire editorial staff of The Rotunda was present to justify the paper's position.

Don Winkler, Director of Public Affairs, addressing the crowd in Jeffers at the Open Forum.

The first hour of the forum went fairly smoothly with legitimate complaints and suggestions to Rotunda editor, Joe Johnson, being acknowledged and illegitimate ones being ferreted out gracefully. Particular objects of discussion were the accuracy of facts in the more controversial issues, sensationalism, fair representation of campus groups, writing style and the numerous typographical errors that have appeared.

The basic argument was that the paper is sent to other schools and shown to prospective students and their parents. Objectors to the paper's method pointed out that The Rotunda is taken by these people to be a representative of Longwood College as a whole. It hurts the chances of getting students and money into the college when the campus newspaper is so negative. Of particular concern at this stage were the two most ominous articles of the paper, the drug issue and Running Scared. Johnson justified the printing of the article on Walt, citing the harassment he was receiving at the time.

Accusations towards the drug issue did not have so much to do with the subject as they did with the sensationalism. Why, people asked, were so many articles on the same topic printed in one issue? Johnson countered that that edition of the paper was meant to be that way. It was a special issue, largely devoted to the campus drug scene.

David Areford made quite an interesting presentation when accusations of the paper being totally negative were brought up. By simply going through each of the year's Rotundas and stating the top story of each paper, Areford showed that such accusations of negativism are a falsehood. In fact, only two of the last 18 editions of The Rotunda displayed negative front page stories, Running Scared and Longwood or Bongwood.

The tone of the meeting started to change during the last half hour and the reason for the change was easy to identify. It was the first time Don Winkler, the college director of Public Affairs and a member of the Publications Board, spoke up. The subject was turning to the newly formed Publications Board which has been a sore spot in The Rotunda staff's side for quite some time.

Student publication editors and supporters listen to Winkler's argument.

To say that the administration had been inconsiderate of the paper during the formation of the board would be an understatement. For not only does the board represent a threat to the future journalistic freedom of The Rotunda, but the staff was entirely left out of any representation on the board and was never consulted as to how they felt about the board.

But now, finally, one of Longwood's P.R. good guys had placed himself right in the sights of The Rotunda staff and sensing that this might be the only chance the other side of the debate might get, we unloaded.

Actually, Winkler weathered the barrage quite well, but that was expected since he's a pro at handling the press. He displayed the two ploys that have become classic over the years at making your side look good whether it is or not. He answered close-ended questions (those that require a simple yes or no answer) with lengthy talks that allowed him to dodge the tricky points and he countered the anger that the newspaper staff displayed when they questioned him by displaying an even-keeled combination smile-smirk that Nixon's press secretary would have been proud to have. He never even once showed any lack of control.

When Winkler stated that the reason editors of publications would be ex-officio members of the new publications board, was that they would present a conflict of interest the bad vibes hit a peak. The point was immediately brought out that Winkler too, since his job is to keep Longwood smelling like a rose, which does not always imply the journalistic idea of telling the truth no matter how bad it is, was a conflict of interest.

Winkler countered that the majority of colleges in the state had publications boards similar in construction to Longwood's.

By now, the tone of the meeting had totally changed. The Rotunda was no longer taking the shots. They were dishing them out. Johnel Brown, Feature Editor, argued that another publications board existed and was being entirely ignored by the administration. Toby Thompson, Faculty Advisor, warned that college publications had been usually supported by the courts and if the board actually did fire an editor in the future, it would be standing on shaky legal grounds at best. Publications Board

By JOHNEL BROWN

"The publications board is a practice in hypocrisy," said Joe Johnson, current editor of the Routnda, referring to Longwood's new publication board, which will have its first meeting April 6 from 1:30 - 3:30 in Longwood's board room.

"What we're seeing established at Longwood is an organization consisting of 7 members, 4 of whom have vested interest in making sure Longwood has a good public image. To have such a body functioning in a ruling capacity over student publications can only lead to trouble." The new board which is the brain child of Phyllis Mable, Vice-president of Student Affairs, has actually "been on the books for a number of years." But Miss Mable pointed out "it just has not been functioning . . . it should have been functioning all along."

The difference between the original and new board is the key to controversy which has student editors of publications at Longwood steaming. In the constitution of the original board membership was held by "the editors-in-chief and the business managers of the publications, the faculty advisor for the publications and four student members selected at large and appointed by the senate (of the Student Government Association), plus the treasurer of the senate and the director of Public Affairs."

The membership of the new board, all of whom were selected by Phyllis Mable are Ronnie Brown, Sports information writer, Becky Dunk, Sports information writer, Nancy Lang Communication chairman for SGA, Robin Elder, winner of the Miss Longwood Pageant, Don Winkler, director of Public Affairs, Douglas Young, Drama professor and Amy Poore.

Phyllis Mable said "lay people receive the service of student publications therefore they should have an opportunity to have some input into the (publication) services." When asked why editors and faculty

Robert Stone to be Awarded Dos Passos Prize

Longwood College has announced the award of the 1982 John Dos Passos Prize for Literature to novelist Robert Stone.

The Dos Passos Prize, established in 1980 at Longwood, includes a medal and a cash award of $1,000. It commemorates one of the greatest of 20th century American authors by honoring other writers in his name. The winner is chosen by an independent jury appointed by the College each year.

The prize marks the most recent recognition of the work of the Brooklyn-born Stone, who has also been recipient of the William Faulkner Foundation Award for "notable first novel" in 1968 for A Hall of Mirrors, and the National Book Award in 1974 for Dog Soldiers. He published his third novel in 1981, again to critical acclaim.

In addition to fiction, Stone has written journalism and the screenplays to two of his novels: "WUSA" (adapted from A Hall of Mirrors), Paramount, 1970, and "Who'll Stop the Rain" (adapted from Dog Soldiers), United Artists, 1978.

The 44-year-old Stone has been hailed as one of the finest writers of his generation. Raymond Sokolov wrote that "Stone, of all the new writers, has gone farthest into the other America and the dark side of his own mind."

Stone's themes are as broad as his experience. He traveled with Ken Kesey's merry pranksters during the 1960s, and covered the war in Vietnam as a reporter. From these disparate experiences came backdrops to the construction of his first two novels.

Hugh L. Moore wrote of A Hall of Mirrors that "no recent novel has more contemporary relevance nor more radical themes." Nonald Newlove summed up the novel's main character, Rheinhardt, as "a matchless juicehead, an unregenerate rogue genius of the bottle, a 29-year-old alky-and-pothead disc-jockey who is the soul of the hip '60s, shipwrecked in Dixie."

Moore called Stone's view of modern society "a profoundly pessimistic one." A writer for Time said, "Stone's theme is the inextricable grip of the underworld on its inhabitants."

Stone turned to the world of drugs for his second novel, Dog Soldiers. It is the story of a naive American journalist in Vietnam who smuggles heroin into the U.S. and involves his wife and an unknowing friend in a harrowing attempt to sell the narcotic. P.S. Prescott called the novel "part melodrama, part morality play" and added, "It is a world in which innocence or vestigal remnants of decent behavior prove fatal to their owners . . ."

For his third novel, A Flag for Sunrise, Stone turned to the Central America of the 1970s. An imaginary country, Tecan, is its setting, and revolution its theme. The novel is a serious look at America's obsession with intervention and with the current political strife in Central America.

Robert Stone has served in the U.S. Navy, has worked as a journalist and as a college professor. His selection for the 1982 John Dos Passos Prize was made by a jury consisting of Terry McDonell, managing editor of Rolling Stone, Toby Thompson, author of Saloon and The '60s Report, and William Crawford Woods, journalist, novelist, and administrator of the prize.

The John Dos Passos Prize for Literature will be presented to Robert Stone in ceremonies at Longwood College on April 6.

ENTERTAINMENT

The Thorn Birds

By CINDY CORELL

The television mini-series was introduced to audiences with the famed "Roots," and the T.V. form was just as successful with the following "Rich Man, Poor Man," "Shogun", "The Winds of War," and most recently, "The Thorn Birds", the most successful so far. This is a young form of the entertainment media, holding well to its own with sky-rocketing ratings everytime it spends a week on network television, aiding network T.V.'s battle against the oh-so dangerous pay-T.V.

When the newest mini-series dictated ratings the last week of March, it spanned four generations of a family in Australia while sweeping over ten hours of prime time ABC. "The Thorn Birds" was watched by viewers before 59 percent of the television sets in the United States.

Not only did "The Thorn Birds" make a name for itself in the book form, a novel by Colleen McCullough, and as a record-breaking mini-series, it also was known for its unique plot. In the story, a young priest, Father Ralph deBricassett, in a parish in New South Wales, Australia, has as a parishoner, Mary Carson, the wealthiest woman in Australia. There, he meets Mary's young niece, Meggie, then ten. This meeting begins a relationship destined to affect the two for the rest of their lives. Throughout the story Father Ralph falls more and more in love with Meggie each time he sees her, and he feels his vow of celibacy threatened and finally consumed by their love.

This threat and vow breaking brings to light questions about this vow, and other characteristics which make Catholic priests men of mystery, as well as reverence. This topic came flying to the news media soon after the program was first aired. ABC's "Night Line", and other similar news programs grabbed the topic and tossed the positives and negatives of the issue around on the air. But as Father Andrew M. Greeley, a professor of Sociology at the University of Arizona, and a noted novelist wrote in his article for T. V. Guide, "Do Priests Fall in Love? Of Course, They Do," viewers may have missed tow important points in this mini-series: 1) "It is very unlikely that the novel would have been such a success if a priest had not been the central character in the romantic tragedy," and 2) "Father Ralph's worst sins were not of the flesh, but of the spirit — ambition and insensitivity."

This fascinating plot probably greatly encouraged the 59 percent of the T.V.'s to be tuned to ABC these four nights, despite any discomfort some may have found in the subject. David Wolper and Stan Margulies, who began their success and the mini-series with their production of "Roots", led this production also. Carmen Culver wrote the screenplay, strong, and yet relatively like the book. Daryl Duke's direction is seemingly faultless. It moves just right, holding interest to the story, the character's motives, and noted historical happenings.

The casting isn't quite as perfect, but when it's good, it's great! Richard Chamberlain is an extraordinary Father Ralph, and Bishop Ralph, and Cardinal Ralph. During this, it's impossible to find a trace of Dr. Kildare or Count of Monte Christo in Chamberlain's act, though they too were strong characters in Chamberlain's career.

Jean Simmons plays Meggie's mother, a cold forbidding woman whose experiences have played an evil game of cause and effect with her life. In the end, her character is complete when she finally reaches out to save Meggie the same fate.

Christopher Plummer also puts in good performances as Arch Bishop Vittorio, who looks after and into Father deBricassert.

Sydney Penny is a delightful young Meggie. Her character is not wanting from her performance.

The casting goof came with none other than the lead, though. Rachel Ward, a British model turned actress gave talented performances in her major films "Sharkey's Machine," and "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid," but she has come to her limits in "The Thorn Birds." Sydney Penny played young Meggie with vivaciousness that could charm a priest, all in keeping with experiences we as the audience know she has had, but when she is transformed to grown up Meggie, what happened? Young Meggie went upstairs to get dressed for a party one night, and came floating down with a petulent look on a Cover Girl face and a misplaced English accent. She outgrew all she was in the transformation.

"The Thorn Birds", may sound like a concentrated Harlequin Romance with a hot issue plot, perhaps it was. But 59 percent of the T.V. sets last Sunday through Wednesday night tell the story well.

Movie Survey Results

By FRED W. CAMPBELL

Some of you may remember an article of mine that appeared several weeks ago in which I offered a somewhat sad excuse for not reviewing the Walt Disney classic PETER PAN. In this same article, I also called for the Longwood College student body and faculty to voice their own movie opinions by sending in a list of their favorite and least favorite motion picutres. Those of you who remember that article may also be wondering what became of the results of that little survey.

One of the first and most in depth responses I received was from Dr. David James, who turned out to be, like myself, a hopeless movie fanatic. Some of his favorite films include such titles as Citizen Kane (he called it "the movie about the dark side of the American character) and Casablanca (what he calls "the movie about the bright side of the American character").

More faculty response came from Dr. Lund, who likes Reds, A Man For All Seasons, and The Graduate; Dr. Sprague, who counts Cabin In The Sky as her favorite and Friday The 13th as her least favorite; and J. A. Hardy, who likes Patton, The Sound of Music, and Star Wars, and dislikes Blazing saddles. An interesting view came also from Dr. Cook, who likes Picnic and Nashville.

The student response was as varied and unique as the faculty's. Bill Todd, a Longwood senior, names Cool Hand Luke, The Verdict, and Das Boot as three of his favorites, and The Rose and Reds as some of his least favorites. Mary Ruth Shields thinks Quadrophenia is a good film and considers smokey and the bandit "a read dog." Other student favorites include E.T., And Justice For All, The Grapes of Wrath, The Parallax View, The Rose, and Halloween; while other "dogs" included Dressed To Kill, Wolfen, The Greek Tycook, Victor, Victoria, and Jaws II.

Even though the scant response to my little survey was expected, it was still a bit surprising.

A solution to my problem came from Dr. Lund, who said that to ask people to name their favorite and least favorite movies is also asking them to review and evaluate their lives, which is something most people don't like to do. What more can be said?

Chris Sizemore: One Eve in Review

Cats have nine lives. That's eight up on most humans. However, Chris Sizemore, a very human middle aged woman, has 13 lives on the cat. That's 22 lives. If the numbers are confusing they should be. If the concept is perplexing remember that truth is stranger than fiction and the truth is Chris Sizemore has had more lives than an untouchable reincarnated to a Brahamn.

She was at Longwood March 24, lecturing to a packed Jarman Auditorium on her experience as a multiple personality. She is the "Eve" of the popularized book and film "The Three Faces of Eve," a fact that Chris does not want soon forgotten. She has recently (1977) published her own book and the title I'm Eve tells something of the personality which spoke that Thursday night.

"In the time frame of three months I saw a man drown . . . my mother's arm severely cut . . . a baby's coffin, and a man sliced in half at a lumbermill." She split like the man chopped in half, developing one of the most unique defense mechanisms ever conjured from the human psyche — she became another person. Literally ". . . I know she was there . . . I saw her . . . She had the skinniest legs and the knobbiest knees . . . her hair was cropped short, just below the ears . . . She had on a straight sleeveless dress and wore an old, shapeless sweater . . . she was real. I know it." She was Chris, taking up for Chris. She was one of the 22 "Eves" which peeled away from Chris's personality like onion skin. She was the first in a long line, during her 40 years of multiple personalities.

It's difficult to imagine the 57-year-old woman that appeared on Jarman's stage wearing a formal suit, pearls and broach as the end result of such an experience. She looked, as one student observed "like anybody's grandmother on her way to a bridge club." But appearances are fooling and Chris, though she may not look or act the part, has had a tempestous existence.

She has been painter and poet, blind and virginal, obsessed with the color purple and strawberries. She has been beaten and has tried to commit suicide. She has tried to strangle her daughter, Taffy, with a venetian blind cord.

It was the last incident which led her into treatment at the psychiatric ward of the Augusta University Hospital. Dr. Thigpen and Dr. Cleckly, her psychiatrist, originally diagnosed her as a dual personality. An under estiment, to be sure, but still the right idea. "They helped me enormously" said Chris.

Throughout the therapy, techniques ranging from hypnosis to role playing were used. Fascinating discoveries were made. One of her personalities would be allergic and the other's wouldn't. One personality could be given a tranquilizer which didn't affect another. At times Chris could perceive herself as a 21-year-old darling, running through the daisy fields and within minutes a 179 lb., 58-year-old woman. IQ's would alternate between personalities from a 115 IQ to a 165 IQ. Arthritis would strike the aged Chrises and not even be known to the youthful. Personalities wrote notes to each other, talked to each other and at times, died with one another while Chris, the body Chris, lived on. She was an exciting story. Dr. Thigpen and Dr. Clerkly decided to cash in on their patient.

Chris left the two psychiatrists "under the impression she was well." And Dr. Thigpen and Clerkly started the mills grinding on a book they were thinking of writing entitled The Three Faces of Eve. Chris, however, was not well and her personalities fragmented again and again in groups of three, like toothpicks out of pine. She found that other psychiatrists didn't believe her story. They assumed Chris had simply read the accounts of the spectacular multi-personality, Eve, which had been recently advisors were no longer included on the board, Mable said "to include editors on a publications board would be a conflict of interest." The editors of the publications at Longwood will be allowed to attend all board meetings in an "exofficio" capacity.

"What that means," said Joe Johnson, "is that we get to stand and twiddle our thumbs while rulings on standards and procedures are handed down by a board consisting mainly of people who function in Public Affairs, Sports Information or a similar capacity, people who want to make damn sure Longwood is always represented in the best light. Such a membership will go a long way toward compromising any objectivity that a publications board should have, and it follows any objectivity that an editor serving under such a board will have."

Johnson continued, "The constitution of the old board which had editors voting, faculty advisors voting and student representatives selected by SGA voting, allowed for more student control and a greater balance between those who would cry foul over a controversial story and those who would be willing to go with it."

The editor pointed out that in a review of publication boards at 12 Virginia colleges only three were found that did not include the editors or their advisors as voting members on the board. They were the University of Richmond, Randolph Macon College and Randolph Macon's Woman's College. And of those three, none have had Public Affairs personnel staffing the board.

He said, "In view of Longwood's current public relations barrage (i.e. the Richmond Times-Dispatch "Sunburst Over Longwood" article and President Janet Greenwood's interviews in that paper), I would think that the establishment of this board is a method of safeguarding the colleges manicured image by selecting editors whom they know will spout the college line."

Phyllis Mable said that the new publications board will have 3 functions. 1) It will select the business manager and editors of publications (also reserving the right to replace them) 2) It will establish a guide of ethics and standards for each student publication and 3) It will assure that the publications have adequate financing and also look into the possibility of future editors receiving pay or credit for their position. None of which do at this time. She added that there would be "No prior restraint" that is, the censorship of material before it appears in print.

Partly in response to the establishment of the board A Resolution on Student Free Speech was passed by Longwood's English Department.

The controversy over the board will likely continue few cuts in the future. At the heart lies a statement by Phyllis Mable. "I think we all have a vested interest in assuring that the public image of Longwood is a favorable one," and the editor of the Rotunda's response, "The responsibility of this paper has been and will be, to get the story to the students and if it happens to make Longwood look less than favorable, that's Longwood's problem."

Your Turn

Student Editorial

Dear Mr. Editor,

I am writing in reference to the editorial written by Jeff Abernathy in the March 29th Rotunda. Unfortunately, I know that Mr. Abernathy speaks for the majority of The Rotunda staff. I am also aware that his view is extremely defensive, one-sided, and critical.

Contrary to the view taken by many Rotunda staff, the whole college is not out to get or control the newspaper. Creating a battle ground between The Rotunda and the college community will not recruit new staff members or drum up support.

Mr. Abernathy apparently misunderstands the concepts of "responsible journalism." Blowing issues out of proportion, indulging in sensationalism, misrepresenting situations, misquoting, printing old news without identifying it as such, and distorting articles by poor editing are offensive to any intelligent reader of The Rotunda and cannot be attributed to lack of staff. Could the staff find more time to cover Longwood issues of interest to the students if they did not spend time interviewing unemployed derelicts living in condemned houses as a reporter did in an earlier issue?

As Art Editor of the Gyre, I too am responsible for the quality of the publication I produce with an extremely small staff. I refuse to be equated with those in the student body and faculty that are against innovation in and support of student run college publications. But I also refuse to support a close-minded publication that alienates its readers while denying that its views and journalistic techniques are unacceptable to its audience.

All Students

Honor's assembly is the time for any and all Longwood students to be recognized for their outstanding achievements on campus whether they be in academics, service to the college, or willingness to support student activities when called upon. As you have seen, application forms for various scholarships have been put in the Rotunda area but these are not the only awards that will be given out. Many scholarships are given by clubs and organizations to people who have not applied but rather were nominated by another person or persons. Many departmental awards will be given out in the same manner. This means that you could be receiving an award and did not apply for it. Find out what your department may be doing to prepare for the Honor's Assembly. If you see an application for a scholarship, apply for it. What have you got to lose??? And attend the Honor's Assembly on April 19, 1983 at 12:45 in Jarman Auditorium.

It will be important to attend if you did apply for any award. Remember that you may have already been selected to receive an award and do not know it. See who is honored for outstanding academic achievement, service to the college, and a willingness to support student activities. You may be one of these people.

Artist of the Month

Longwood College's Artist of the Month for March is Rebecca Ann Silberman, a freshman art major from Leesburg. She is the first freshman to win this award.

Her winning work is a drawing entitled "Self Portrait in the Style of Kathe Kollwitz," or "Self-Portrait: Exam Week." Ms. Silberman received a $50 cash prize, and her drawing is on exhibit in the Bedford Art Building at Longwood.

Since the age of four, Ms. Silberman has been apprenticed to her grandmother, Sarah Gettleman, who studied sculpture at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and taught at the Corcoran School of the Arts in Washington, D.C.

While in high school, she participated in county and statewide shows, the most significant of which was the Junior Woman's Club State Competition in which she won Best-in-Show. She was named a Merit Award Winner in the 1981 Arts Recognition and Talent Search, a program of the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts administered by the Educational Testing Service.

She is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Silberman, of Leesburg.

Rotunda Interviews
William Harbour

Dr. William R. Harbour is an Assistant Professor of Government at Longwood College. His first book, The Foundations of Conservative Thought: An Anglo-American Tradition in Perspective, explains the basic principles of conservatism and how these principles are applied in practice.

Following is a Rotunda interview with Dr. Harbour:

Rotunda: What prompted your interest in conservatism?

Harbour: I was always interested in the topic. When I was a freshman in high school I saw Meet The Press with Barry Goldwater and I thought that was interesting. I started to follow his campaign for the presidency in 1964. Since then I've been interested in the topic of conservatism.

Rotunda: Is your book meant as a defense of conservatism?

Harbour: It's meant as a sympathetic explanation. I try to be fairly objective in so far as I'm able to be objective on the subject. I try to assess the main principles but also the main problems. I try to point out some obstacles I think that conservative thinkers have to try to overcome. Basically, I tried to produce something that would be informative to the students and the general public as far as what are the main things that conservatives stand for, why do they believe these things, and are these beliefs consistent. I try to explore both the internal problems and the external challenges to conservatism.

Rotunda: What is conservatism?

Harbour: Actually, I don't think there's any easy sentence, paragraph, or definition that one can give. Any such simplisrtic definition would be too reductionist in nature and be unfair to the subject matter.

In your book, the first chapter is entitled "The Religious Who do you begin with religion?

Harbour: Conservatives are

Harbour: Conservatives are always talking about getting to the basics, emphasizing the more important things in life. Then you ask the people who call themselves conservatives what are the most important things in life and you start tracing that back. Sooner or later I think you get to the subject of religion.

Rotunda: Is this why religion is so important to the conservative?

Harbour: I think it is simply because some of the greatest conservative thinkers have emphasized that in their view, there is a god or there is some kind of supreme being; that there is more to man's existence than the mere physical existence that he has. It simply springs from the fact that leading conservative thinkers would have these religious beliefs. Therefore, it happens as they try to explain what is right about society and - what is wrong about society that you have these references. I think something else ought to be explained here. As you have the emergence of conservatism after the Enlightenment and around the time of the French Revolution, many critics of the Enlightenment, and critics of the French Revolution, who helped get the ball rolling for modern conservatism, were apprehensive about what they saw to be a danger to traditional religion by the Enlightenment.

Rotunda: If religion is so important, why do conservatives caution against the mixing of politics and religion?

Harbour: The problem there is that while most conservative thinkers have stressed the importance of religion, religion is not the only aspect to these thinkers. I think that among the greatest conservative thinkers - there has been an attempt to avoid a kind of theological reductionism where every social and political problem is imagined to have some kind of religious solution where one goes to the Bible and one finds the appropriate message. Therefore, one doesn't have to think about economics, one doesn't have to think about sociology or political science. I think most conservatives would reject that for several reasons. Their view of the nature of things is such that by nature they reject doctrinaire and highly ideological thinking — thinking which puts things into formulas and I believe for those people who reduce everything to a religious point that that's exactly what's taking place. Also in conservative thinking, there is a suspicion about any kind of fanatical, highly emotional political doctrine. What conservatives fear about the extreme mixing of the two is that you wind up with this kind of doctrinaire fanatical thinking.

Rotunda: Yet conservative groups such as the Moral Majority are involved in political campaigns and lobbying.

Harbour: That's the irony of this point. Twenty years ago, conservatives directed this point against liberal ministers. Today, on the new religious right, you have people who claim what God wants us to do about politics. I think this is very dangerous to religion. I think this is very dangerous to politics. You bring the same sense of absolute truth that you find in religion to political questions.

Rotunda: In your book, you raise the point that an orderly society is an essential theme in conservative thought and that tradition is a crucial ingredient to achieving an orderly society. Why does tradition play such a major role?

Harbour: I think for conservatives it is a real melee to organize one's existence. For most conservative thinkers it is impossible to prove every issue to be true. One has a problem of infinite regression in that in the end as they look at questions of order and stability, they're inclined to argue that what makes possible a decent society, where there's a degree of harmony, is where people are brought up with certain feelings of obligations toward their nation, towards others and these things are learned as a matter of habit. They're not something that one goes to school and one takes a class in ethics and through some kind of logical justification one discovers — hey, I ought not to steal, I ought not to murder. Rather, I think the conservative believes that the key to social order is stable traditions where people have a sense of security and belonging Where you'd have reduced alienation. People would have a greater sense of meaning to their lives.

Rotunda: In modern society, there's been some criticism that people are gradually leaving traditions behind. Doesn't this create an obstacle for conservatives?

Harbour: It certainly makes people who refer to tradition appear rather quaint at times. The conservative will probably argue that it creates far more problems for modern society because it's a source of disorder in modern society.

Rotunda: What are some of the main problems facing contemporary conservatism?

Harbour: I think one of the main problems for conservatives right now is given the nature of modernity and their critique of it, what do they suggest we do about all these problems? Especially the non-economic, non-political problems. The kind of social, cultural, religious, and personal problems that they see in society. What's the solution to all this?

Rotunda: Do conservatives offer solutions to these non-political problems?

Harbour: they do present alternatives — well, gee, we ought to take seriously these traditional beliefs. We ought to take seriously returning to more family authority, a greater reliance on religious and certain moral obligations. But to suggest that is only to say, "Hey, modern society is so defective, all you

Changes in Housing

Modernization is the theme — sunbursts, woodchips, and newly varnished floors. The most recent beam has been cast over Longwood's residence halls. Major changes have been made in the housing patterns — shifting males to traditionally female halls and females to male halls.

South Ruffner, Wheeler, Stubbs and French will remain female halls. Tabb, however, will house freshmen men on the first and third floors, and freshmen women on the second. Curry will have men on the third, sixth and ninth floors. Ground and first floors of Cox will be for freshmen women.

The most drastic change for Longwood is the introduction of a co-ed floor in North Cunningham. The third floor of North is designated for men and women with G.P.A.'s of at least 3.0 and who want to live in a high study area.

Randy Chittum, Resident Assistant for the co-ed hall, is conducting interviews of prospective residents for the hall. "One of the things we'll be looking for is people who are really interested. We're not as worried about G.P.A. as people make it sound. We're more interested in people who want to live in a 24-hour quiet environment." The hall will have Sunday through Thursday round the clock quiet hours. The high study co-ed hall represents another step towards broader option for resident students.

Finnish Diplomat to Speak

Jaakko Kaurinkoski, press counselor of the Embassy of Finland in Washington, DC, will lecture on Finnish foreign policy on Tuesday, April 5, at 8 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium, Longwood College.

His topic will be "How to Live Next Door to the Soviet Union and Prosper: Finland in the 1980s." The public is cordially invited to attend the lecture at no charge.

Kaurinkoski holds a master's degree in political science from Helskinki University and had a 19-year career as a journalist before joining the diplomatic service. From 1963 to 1969 he was Moscow correspondent of the Helsinki newspaper Uusi Suomi, and from 1972 to 1977 he worked in Peking as the correspondent of the Nordic News Agencies. He speaks fluent English and Russian.

Finland's foreign policy is largely dictated by the 788-mile border it shares with the Soviet Union. Although a Western country by history and culture, Finaland is careful not to offend the U.S.S.R., a situation that has caused some political scientists to use the term "Finlandization" to describe the kind of influence the Kremlin hopes some day to exert upon Western Europe.

Kaurinkoski will address this issue and will discuss likely developments in policy as a result of the new leadership in the Soviet Union and the new coalition government in Finaldn.

Golfers to Defend Title

Coach Steve Nelson is hoping his Longwood men's golf team can come up with a strong showing Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Virginia Collegiate Championships at Hot Springs, Virginia. Longwood is the defending College Division State champion.

The Lancer golfers may have to play over their heads to repeat as champs. The top two performers on last year's team, All-American Tim White and Bryant Reese, are no longer on the team. Veterans David Moore, Stan Edwards and Richard Miller performed in last season's championship.

"I hope we show considerable improvement and find some consistency," said Nelson. "We have an outside shot at winning, but we'll have to play superbly."

With Thursday's match at Radford rained out last week, the Lancer golfers have been out of action since March 27.

Lady Netters Host Hollins, Ferrum

Longwood's women's tennis team, 0-1 after a 9-0 loss to the William & Mary junior varsity Friday, visits Christopher Newport today, hosts Hollins Wednesday and takes on Ferrum in a home match Friday. Both home matches begin at 2:00.

Coach Carrol Bruce felt her team performed well against a strong William & Mary squad. "We proved to be competitive as several sets were close," said the coach.

Of this week's action, Bruce commented: "Hollins will be the toughest team we'll face this season, but we should be able to compete successfully against both Ferrum and Christopher-Newport. Both matches will be close, but we should come out on top."

Lacrosse Team Faces UR

With Saturday's game at Sweet Briar rained out, Longwood's women's lacrosse team will resume play Wednesday at 3:00 on First Avenue Field when the Lady Lancers host Division I Richmond in their first home game of the season.

Friday, Coach Jane Miller's team, 0-1, visits Roanoke. Richmond promises to be a tough foe for Longwood's young lacrosse team, which dropped an early season match to Randolph-Macon 16-12.

Tennis Team Hosts St. Pauls

Off to a 1-4 start, Coach Al Yoder's Lancer netters will be out to get on the winning track Thursday when they host St. Paul's at 2:00. Saturday, Longwood visits Randolph-Macon.

Last week, the netters fell to a potent Radford squad 9-0 Monday and lost to Mary Washington 5-2 Saturday in a match that was halted by rain.

Gaining wins for Longwood in the Mary Washington match were Carl Schwab at No. 4 singles and D. J. Walters at No. 5 singles.

No. 5 singles.

Following Saturday's trip to Macon, the Lancers will host Newport News Apprentice Monday (April 11) at 3:00.

Women Golfers To Travel to Penn St.

Longwood's women's golf team swings back into action this week in the 54-hole Penn State Invitational Tournament Friday, Saturday and Sunday

The Lady Lancers, idle since the William & Mary-Kingsmill Tourney March 24-25, will be facing strong opposition from a mostly Division I field of teams. Longwood will be led by veteran golfers Robin Andrews, Lanie Gerken and Sue Morgan.

Officials for next year, if you take volleyball and-or basketball officially first semester and pass the course, you will get paid more money if you officiate. It is also one credit toward P.E.

Intramural softball action began last week.

Barnes Named Player of the Week

Junior Lisa Barnes, who won the No. 2 singles title at the Emory & Henry Tournament March 25-26, has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period March 25 - April 1 by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Barnes won all three of her matches by scores of 10-9, 10-3 and 10-9 with the first and third matches being decided by tiebreakers. She rallied from a 5-1 deficit and won the tiebreaker 9-7 to defeat her first round foe from Lincoln Memorial. In the championship match, she won the tiebreaker 7-5 to take the title.

Leading Longwood to a tie for second place in the tournament, Barnes was the top performer out of a group of four Longwood netters who reached the finals.

"Lisa's tennis is definitely 'on the rise' right now," said coach Carrol Bruce .

Lancers Face Tough Schedule

Hoping for fair weather and a chance to make up some of the 11 games which have been rained out, Longwood's baseball team hosts doubleheaders Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday this week against some formidable opposition.

Now 10-4 and ranked seventh in Division II in the latest Collegiate Baseball poll, Longwood has home twinbills with Norfolk State Wednesday, Hampden-Sydney Thursday, Division I Maryland Eastern Shore Saturday and Division I Georgetown Sunday.

Defending South Atlantic Region champs, the Lancers have received excellent pitching thus far, but an uncharacteristic lack of hitting. Longwood pitchers have a sparkling earned run average of 3.14, led by Mickey Roberts 3-0, 1.50; Scott Mills 2-0, 1.93 and John Dipierdomenico 1-2, 1.96. The team batting average is just .283, far off of last season's .338.

Longwood baseball coach Buddy Bolding picked up his 99th and 100th coaching wins Tuesday when Longwood swept Virginia State 15-1, 11-2. Bolding has a record of 100-50-1 in 5 years. Senior David Rumburg had a tremendous day with two three-run homers (one in each game).

Also ripping the long ball were John Sullivan, Allen Lawter, with two-run homers, leading hitter Dwayne Kingery with a solo shot and freshman Larry Allocco with a three-run circuit clout.

Roberts pitched a complete game to get the win in the opener on a four-hitter. Highlighting the nightcap was a four-inning stint by senior Ron Jones. Jones, who had minor surgery on his arm recently, struck out seven in four innings and looked impressive in his first action of the season. Jones' return gives Longwood a solid eight-man pitching staff.

Chesterfield Sluggers Help Ballclub

By BECKY DUNK

"One of the keys to having a good season," says Longwood College baseball coach Buddy Bolding, "is to have a demanding schedule. By competing against good teams like Duke and Virginia Tech, we're forced to work harder and develop as a good team."

And Bolding has developed a good team. In four short years, he has led the Lancers to a combined record of 90-46-1, the South Atlantic Regional Championship in 1982, and a berth in last year's NCAA Division II World Series.

Without a doubt, the 1983 season looks good for the Lancers. With a 10-4 record to date and the help of Chesterfield natives Sonny Bolton and Chris Wilburn, Longwood may be on the road to another outstanding year in baseball.

Although both Bolton and Wilburn attended Clover Hill High School, this is the first year they have been teammates. Bolton, a junior, plays left field for the Lancers while Wilburn, a freshman, divides his time between right field and the designated hitter slot.

Bolton, a business major who hopes to open his own business one day, transferred to Longwood after one uneventful year at Ferrum. "Baseball was a relatively new program when I came here," he says. "I wanted to be here to help start it . . . I was also really impressed with the coach."

Bolton has made an impression of his own on Longwood college. In 1982, by far one of the best seasons of his career, he was named to the South Atlantic Region All-Tournament Team, the 3rd team All-South Atlantic Region, and was chosen as the team's "Most Valuable Player."

In addition, he batted .379 and had a team high 15 doubles and 41 walks, while tallying 5 homeruns, 16 stolen bases, 31 RBI's and 47 hits.

Thus far this season Bolton has played in all of Longwood's 14 games, batted in 12 runs, and slammed 3 doubles and 1 homerun. Defensively, he has recorded 14 put outs and 3 assists with only one error.

"I feel that I've improved since I came here," says Bolton. "For one thing, I've become a better hitter. My average doesn't reflect this because it hasn't changed much, but I'm more consistent now. I'm better at hitting the different pitches.

"My attitude has changed a lot, too. I don't argue with the umpires as much as I used to.

"If April's a good month, I can have as good a season as last year. It'll be hard though, because last season was one of my best.

"As a team, we have a lot to live up to after 1982. The weather has been a real problem . . . We've been rained out of 13 games. Maybe we're trying a little too hard, but we're looking to do good. I think we can win the region again."

"To me, Sonny is the ultimate ballplayer," says coach Bolding. "He's my kind of player . . . real gutsy . . . he never disappoints me on the field.

"Sonny has the rare ability to determine the outcome of the game. He has a lot of confidence in his ability which he carries onto the field. With this confidence, he often sets the stage for how the offense plays."

Last year, it was Bolton who asked coach Bolding to consider recruiting Chris Wilburn. He had seen Wilburn in action and felt he could add something to the Lancer attack.

Presently, Wilburn, a business administration major, is one of two starting freshmen. As a high school senior, he won All-State honors and batted .471 with 20 RBI's. In addition, Wilburn was named All-Metro his last three years at Clover Hill.

This season he has played in 12 games and had 8 hits with 4 RBI's. On defense, Wilburn has had 10 put outs and no errors.

"I came to Longwood because it has the reputation of being a good baseball college," Wilburn says. "I was also recruited by VCU but I chose to come here. My decision was also influenced by some friends here who told me Longwood was a good school academically.

"My strength in baseball is definitely hitting. I'm not doing too well right now, but I hope to bat around .350 with 20 to 25 RBI's and maybe some homeruns.

"I feel proud of being one of the two freshman starters. It puts me under some pressure because I have a lot to live up to, but I'll just do the best I can.

"As a team, we really want to do as well as last year. We've had some bad luck due to rain. It'll be tough, but we'll come along.

According to coach Bolding, "Chris is a young ballplayer and he's had a rough start. He has awesome potential though. I see in him the makings of an excellent ballplayer."

LC Ruggers Defeat Rams

By ROLISON SCHOTTA

The LC Rugby team raised its record to 3-1-1 after defeating VCU 11-9 Saturday. Coming off a victory over Washington and Lee, Longwood was more than ready to take on a VCU Club they had yet to beat.

VCU, who had a slight size advantage, was kept guessing during the entire match by the hard-hitting Longwood backs. Dean Driskill, a four-year veteran of the LC squad, played a key role in Longwood's offensive effort that kept the VCU team in their own territory for much of the match.

Keith Barnes recovered a losse ball deep in VCU territory and was able to lunge into the end zone for Longwood's first score.

Longwood's kicking game left much to be desired in the victory. Several short field goals which could have put the game away were missed, along with both extra point attempts.

The Rams, on the other hand, were able to stay close due to their strong kicking. Several unnecessary penalties brought the Rams to within two points. Only superb Longwood defense prevented VCU from stealing the match. A penalty kick late in the second half threatened to give VCU the win, but the attempt fell short, preserving Longwood's three-game winning streak.

have to do is believe what we believe." Then the question is how do you get people to change their basic beliefs? It is most difficult.

Another danger for contemporary conservatism is that there's been too much identification of conservatism with proposed economic ideas. For instance, much of the debate in the early years of the Reagan administration has been on Reaganomics, supply-side economics, and deregulation of the economy. This is part of contemporary conservatism, but in reality that's the part of contemporary conservatism that is pretty much borrowed from 19th century liberalism. It leaves out all together what I view as the more important principles of conservatism and that is the traditional attitudes.

Rotunda: Many people equate conservatism with this economic policy. Your book, however, stresses quite the opposite.

Harbour: The heart of conservative thought, I believe on a philosophical basis has little to do with whether Reagonomics is a miserable failure or whether we have an amazing economic recovery and we enter some kind of boom era. This is important in one aspect of conservative thought — the economic aspect. But it doesn't say anything about notions of tradition, authority, religion, or community.

So the forum ended for the time being. And as I left my mind lingered to an old Rotunda that I read months ago. Back then the administration had no feud with the paper. The articles were exactly what the people of the forum had expressed a desire for. No homosexuals or drugs. Just nice articles about the various campus groups and Student Union events and such. Anybody from out of town who had read that paper would surely have gotten a good opinion of the college. The editorial page was totally positive to the school with the exception of one piece. That piece was the editor at the time accusing the students of various ugly things because the week before, most students had only given that week's Rotunda enough time to tear out a coupon from Hardee's and then throw the paper on the floor.

But I'm sure the irate group of students that stormed in to Phyllis Mable's office last January would not mind such a situation. And that's probably what The Rotunda will be like if they have their way. Harmless, optimistic, and ultimately useless.

Softball Team Hosts VCU

Longwood's softball team returns home this week for a twinbill with VCU Tuesday at 3:30 at Farmville Elementary Field and travels to Lynchburg Thursday for the three-day Liberty Baptist Tournament.

The Lady Lancers, 0-4 after facing powerful Division I teams Virginia and George Mason last week, will be looking to get on the winning track that has produced back-to-back winning records the last two seasons.

Last Tuesday, Longwood Wednesday at George Mason, Longwood faced perhaps the top team in the state in fast pitch softball and suffered 4-0 and 14-0 setbacks.

fell to Virginia in a twinbill, dropping the opener 7-1 and bowing in the nightcap 8-3. Top hitters for Longwood were (in the first game) freshman Sharon Sculthorpe with two hits and Lynne Gilbert with an RBI. In the second contest Debbie Garcia had a double, two hits and an RBI, Cindy Walsh a double and April Poleski a hit and two RBI's.

Minithon Held Saturday

One hundred and twenty-six participated and 119 finished Saturday as Longwood held its sixth minithon (6.2 miles, 10 kilometers) on a course stretching from Hampden-Sydney College to Longwood College. The event was sponsored by Longwood College Athletics, Blue Cross-Blue Shield and Chuck Dowdy Insurance.

Wannie Cook of Richmond, a previous winner, had the fastest time overall and for wheelchair participants at 31:35 while James Alexander of Appomattox was the men's overall winner at 32:52. Top woman runner was Diane Taylor of Hampden-Sydney with a 39:17.

New minithon records were set by Carrol Bruce (44:42) for women 22-29 and Mary MacFarlane (43:28) women 40-49. MacFarlane also held the previous record.

One Eve In Review

publicized in the wake of Thigpen's and Cleckly's book, and that she was imitating "Eve" or lying about her own problem. She had also gotten married to a "wonderful" man, who, though supportive had a "difficult time understanding a woman that needed three wardrobes." Eventually she found a therapist — Dr. Tsitos.

While the 20th Century Fox version of the 3 Faces of Eve was showing (for which she received only $5000) Chris Sizemore underwent the last of her 20 years of psychotherapy. She also had another child — Bobby, who on occasion when Chris would change personalities in a breath's time, would ask "Mommy which one are you?"

Indeed, which one is she? One student at Jarman thought perhaps she wasn't the "real" Chris, but rather the 23 Sizemore. She had no answer except faith and 9 years with the same personality.

"I've had all the absorbed memories of the different personalities . . . I can identify the person I am now . . . clinically after 5 years with no change I am supposed to be cured . . . but besides that I have a confidence that I've never known before anytime in my life . . . I used to have feelings of weakness, I would see other people and would want to be like them."

So far as medical science and faith can predict she is like them now, one person — the "real" Chris Sizemore and surprisingly or not she is eager to tell her story.

Chris has appeared during the 9 years since her recovery on "Good Morning America," "Today," "Donahue," "60 Minutes," and P.M. Magazine. She has made a film entitled "Alive and Well" and is selling her paintings (created in 7 personalities no less) some at $10,000 a throw and exhibiting them 6 times a year around the world.

There is in her stage presence a definite taste for theatrics which she freely admits — "I'm a real ham." Later after the lecture at Jarman she signed a copy of her book. The real Chris Sizemore's personality was written indelibly on the inside cover page — the epithet for her life "I'm Eve" in clear velvet tipped strokes. And she is — the one and only.

VOL. LVIII LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1983 NO. 22

A Letter Home: On Longwood Survival

Dear Mother,

You would not believe what has been going on down here at Longwood. Last Friday, April 1st, all the vice-presidents called a special meeting, Don Winkler of Public Affairs nearly went hoarse from yelling on the phone that day and Phyllis Mable, vice-president for Student Affairs, stalked the halls like a wild woman.

The commotion was over an article entitled "Panel report to Robb hints at Major Changes at Colleges," that appeared in the Richmond-Times Dispatch, April 1, on the front page of the Area, State and Business section.

The story which was written by Charles Cox was relatively innocuous in itself. It said that Governor Robb had appointed a blue ribbon panel to raise questions about higher education in Virginia. A meeting of this panel was held on Thursday, March 31, at which time a document from the State Council of Higher Education (an advisory body to the Governor on higher education) was passed out to the panel members. Charles Cox of the Richmond Times-Dispatch quoted the document in his article. It read as follows, "Survival prospects (are) uncertain for Longwood College, plus Radford, Norfolk, State and Old Dominion University."

You can imagine the steam this caused down here, after Dr. Greenwood had spent the better part of last year making certain Longwood had a good image (remember the favorable "Sunburst Over Longwood" article and the interviews with the college president which appeared in the Dispatch?)

No one down here really knew what exactly had happened. It was inaccurate to suggest Longwood's survival prospects were uncertain after the school had just finished enrolling the largest number of students in its history (I know, tripling in the dorms was no fun, but we must make sacrifices) and it was difficult to pinpoint the origin of Mr. Cox's bulleted quotations.

From what Don Winkler at Public Affairs could piece together the document quoted was the State Council on Higher Education's "informal assessment of institutional enrollment potential" part of a larger document entitled "Background Notes." There were, however, major inconsistencies between what Mr. Cox had written in his article and what the document stated. "Background Notes" actually read "prospects uncertain" (in enrollment potential) for Norfolk State, ODU, Longwood College and Radford University.

Nowhere in Background Notes did it state "survival" prospects are uncertain. Mr. Cox had made a serious error. He had even, if you read closely put Longwood first in his article where it had been third in the original document. The barbarians are at the gate, mother, this man will stop at nothing.

To add to Longwood's chagrin, Associated Press picked up on Mr. Cox's article and that Saturday The Roanoke Times & World News ran a piece entitled "Robb Asks Explosive Questions — Close Some Colleges? Cut Some Programs ?" And this time the quote read "Longwood College, Radford University, Norfolk State University, and Old Dominion University face survival problems."

Things were getting entirely out of hand. Dr. Greenwood and Mr. Winkler spent most the weekend trying to get to the bottom of the conspiracy. They phoned the governor, they phoned the secretary of education, they phoned the State Council on Higher Education, they phoned The Richmond Times-Dispatch. They decided to hold an open forum on Monday at 4:00 p.m. in Bedford Auditorium to try and explain the whole mess.

At least 100 faculty members, administrators and students attended. Some were afraid, some were angry and some were just plain anxious. Was Longwood dying? Dr. Greenwood came to the podium with a bundle of papers, smiled and began the discourse. She said, "I asked on Friday that Secretary (of Education) Castine ask the governor to provide a news release that would address several things — first, that the document ("Background Notes") did not come from the Governor and did not come from Castine but came from a staff member in state council. . ." In response to that recommendation the Governor asked John Castine to go on public television Friday night and to refute the article. . . which he did."

It was a regular program on channel 23 public service. John Castine was in a question-answer format with a host. One question was about the Richmond Times-Dispatch article which John Castine answered to the liking of both the Governor and Longwood. "(He) indicated very emphatically that the article which had just appeared was erroneous, it was out of context, it was not something the Governor had said. He also indicated that the reporter had changed words in his reportage of the article. He went on to say that he was in no way aware of a state institution which was in danger of being closed."

Why then, did Mr. Cox print the article the way it was — "terrible reporting" as Castine labeled it. And why, if as Dr. Greenwood said "Longwood is approved for growth" were Longwood's enrollment prospects even labeled as uncertain? Theories were bandied about but no one at that Monday meeting was quite certain of the truth. Some postulated that Mr. Cox still had a grudge, from the feud which was carried on between the Dispatch and the Willet (the previous Longwood President) Administration. Others said it was a political manuever, but would not elaborate. Whatever the reasons, the damage had been done.

In retaliation Thomas Rust, Rector of Longwood's Board of Visitors wrote to the Times-Dispatch executive editor. Petitions were suggested at the forum, even letters to Mr. Cox directly to force him to print a disclaimer. All he had said previously was "I'm just a reporter, I report the story I get". He had said that the Administration's renunciation of the article was "the sound any bureaucracy would make. . . they're making the sounds of survival."

I tell you mother I was quite confused, and didn't know exactly what to do. Don Winkler at the forum had suggested writing letters home to parents and friends in order to allay the negative publicity. So I decided to write you, though as it turns out, it's rather anti-climatic

On Sunday, April 10th, the Times-Dispatch printed a retraction entitled "Statement is Issued on Story" it read "The Times-Dispatch in a recent story dealt with a blue-ribbon study of the long-range development of Virginia's colleges and universities and has been criticized for one conclusion drawn in the article.

The story said that "survival" prospects are uncertain for Longwood College and Radford, Norfolk State and Old Dominion universities.

Alf Goodykoontz, executive editor of The Times-Dispatch, said the story would have been more accurate if it had said enrollment prospects are uncertain, rather than survival prospects are uncertain. Goodykoontz said The Times-Dispatch regrets any confusion that may have been caused by this choice of words."

Just goes to show you what lousy reporting can do to a story. To keep the record straight Mother, Longwood is going to be here for awhile, so keep sending the checks, alright?

J. Stephen Hodges is currently Coordinator of the Richmond Peace Education Center in Richmond, Virginia — a non-profit community organization which promotes education and public debate on issues of war and peace. After growing up in South Korea as the son of American (United Methodist) missionaries, he earned his B.A. (1974) in biology at Earlham College, spent two years as a community social worker in Appalachian Kentucky, two years at Perkins School of Theology, and earned his Master of Divinity (1980) at Union Theological Seminary in Virginia.

As Coordinator of the Center, Hodges plans and implements public programs on international relations, the nuclear arms race, nuclear war, peace, conflict resolution, and disarmament. He presents programs to and acts as consultant for program planning in churches and community groups on these issues, and teaches two courses a year for a local public high school. In addition, he supervises the Center's collection and development of peace curriculum for children, youth and adults.

He has written and produced a slide-sound presentation called Christians and the Arms Race, and has written fact sheets,

Pianist/Comedian

Dale Gonyea

Dale Gonyea, a musician-comedian, will be featured in a Spotlight Concert on Thursday, April 14, at 8 p.m. in the Gold Room of Lankford Building, Longwood College.

Gonyea has toured from Los Angeles to London, entertaining audiences of all types with his quick wit and musical skills.

Having graduated from the University of Michigan's music department as a piano student, Gonyea has gone beyond his earlier ambition to become a classical concert pianist. While in college, he became involved in campus musicals and performing on the stage in a contemporary style.

He has written musicals as well as starred in them, and created his own touring act that is totally original. He combines his talents of piano, singing, comedy, and a creative script, earning a reputation as a one-man smash hit wherever he goes.

One of Gonyea's creations, a musical spoof on the style of a fellow performer's music titled, "I Need Your Help, Barry Manilow," earned a Grammy nomination in 1979. He also has been featured on top talk shows, including the Mike Douglas Show, the Merv Griffin Show, and Dinah. He was a guest on the HBO program "The Young Comedians" and Bob Stiver's "The All Star Tribute to Mother's Day."

The Spotlight Concert is sponsored by Longwood's Student Union. The program is free and open to the public.

Elderhostel This Summer

Interested in the lifestyle of prehistoric Indians? Want to know more about wine? Curious about computers?

Then sign up for one of the four Elderhostel programs that Longwood College is hosting this summer.

Inspired by youth hostels and folk schools in Europe, the international Elderhostel program offers a week of academic courses and extracurricular activities for persons age 60 and over. It is based on the belief that older citizens can enjoy intellectual stimulation and physical adventure. Participants may either commute or spend the week at the host facility.

Last year Longwood hosted an Elderhostel program for the first time. The first program this year, which runs from May 22-28, will consist of the same three courses that were offered last year. The following programs will feature different courses.

The courses in the first session are: "The Architecture of Virginia from 1607-1840," "An Archaeological View of the Culture of the Prehistoric Southern Indians" and "The South and Its Stories."

In the first course, taught by Richard Couture, architectural styles from the Age of Memory to American Federalism will be explored. The lectures will be illustrated with slides.

Participants in the second course, taught by Dr. James Jordan, will assist in the excavation of a Woodland Period (1000-1700 A.D.) Indian village near the Longwood campus.

The third course, which Dr. Martha Cook will teach, is a survey of the way the people and places of the South are portrayed by the best modern Southern fiction writers, especially in the short stories of William Faulkner, Robert Penn Warren, Flannery O'Connor and Eudora Welty.

The total cost for each program is $180. This fee includes air-conditioned rooms, all meals, evening activities and trips, and use of the swimming pool each

Red Ryder Saddles Up Wednesday

They rode the western plains in the comic strips and on the silver screens of America and they always did the "right" thing and punished those who didn't. Few will remember seeing Red Ryder, the Lone Ranger, Tim Holt, or Lash LaRue, among others, and how they stood up for the old American values and maintained unquestioned loyalty to God and country, but most people have heard the names and may have some knowledge of the mythology of the old west.

"When You Coming Back, Red Ryder?" by Mark Medoff, the final play of the season by the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, is about these old western heroes and the values they stood for — but mostly it is about how these values have changed in our own time.

"When You Coming Back, Red Ryder?" opens Wednesday, April 13 and runs through Saturday, April 16, at Jarman Auditorium on the Longwood College campus. Curtain time each evening is at 8 o'clock.

This contemporary play takes place in a New Mexico diner in the late 1960s and is a tense drama dealing with individuals who are disillusioned in the aftermath of the so-called "social revolution" of the early 1960s. Yes, there is a real Red Ryder in this play, but he is a product of a strange, contemporary world of misplaced and confused values that is our world today. And Red Ryder does "ride the range," the restricted area of a New Mexico diner that has seen better days. But this time Red Ryder doesn't ride to right the wrongs of the world, but rather out of fear of the man known as Teddy who is terrorizing diner patrons and holding Red Ryder and his friends captive.

Teddy's presumed motive for holding the diner patrons captive is robbery, but the big-mouthed, gawky kid at the counter who is called "Red Ryder" forces the cynical Teddy to look back in time to past forgotten values and dead heroes. Teddy becomes obsessed with the lost values and the old west heroes, and his robbery becomes a rape of the souls of the diner patrons.

The tension mounts as Teddy punishes, shocks, and humiliates the diner patrons while trying to recreate what amounts to a parody of American old west mythology. The play is a frightening study of contemporary life, but also a memorable dramatic experience.

Dramatic Arts major Jerry Dagenhart is featured as the frightening Teddy, the cynical and disillusioned "outcast" of the late sixties culture. Stephen "Red" Ryder, the 19-year-old modern "cowboy," is played by Vincent Decker, a Dramatic Arts transfer student from Boston University. Bob Lemieux and Mary Sue Gardner, both veteran Longwood Players, play Richard and Clarisse, a well-to-do couple who come to the diner for breakfast, only to be thoroughly intimidated by Teddy. Lyle Striker, motel owner and a regular patron at the diner, is played by Max Pantell. Isabelle Milburn is featured as Cheryl, Teddy's girl friend, and Jeffrey Thomas is Clark, owner of the diner.

Ginny Munoz, a Farmville resident and featured performer in past Longwood Players productions, plays the role of Angel, the good-hearted and dutiful waitress at the diner, whose crush on Stephen becomes a major source of Teddy's ridicule.

"When You Coming Back, Red Ryder?" is being directed by Douglas M. Young of the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts, assisted by student director, Lisa Magill. A. Moffatt Evans, Jr., the Department's Technical Director, designed the contemporary set. Lisa Swackhammer is the Stage Manager, assisted by David Gott.

Hesselink Lecture

The composer of a 20th-century masterpiece organ work, ironically, did not particularly like that instrument, a Longwood College lecturer said recently.

"Schoenberg's relationship to the organ was that of the typical composer of the early twentieth century: the instrument held little attraction for him as a medium of expression," noted Dr. Paul Hesselink, an associate music professor at Longwood. "In Schoenberg's case, his antipathy to the instrument can easily be documented. . . "

Hesselink delivered the lecture on March 30. He discussed the harmonic language of Arnold Schoenberg's "Variations on a Recitative" for Organ, Opus 40.

He has researched this piece since the summer of 1980, when he was a recipient of a National Endowment for the Humanities grant to study at Yale University.

The composition, whose harmonic organization has largely been neglected, was the result of a commission in 1941, Hesselink said.

"It is indeed an irony," he pointed out, "that this commission produced not only what is considered a masterpiece of the twentieth-century organ repertoire, but also Schoenberg's most extensive work for a solo instrument, in this instance an instrument which he obviously did not know well and for which he had little artistic affinity."

EDITOR'S TURN

Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., once theorized that the First Amendment was a gloat. A mere aberration dreamed up by Jeffersonian idealists to be put in a glass cage and watched but never to be utilized. For a while it would stand as the center piece of the new free nation and then quietly, bureaucracy with its mighty sweeping mechanisms, would brush it silently under the carpet to be stepped on. The national pride would be satiated without having to deal with the contingencies of such an amendment.

If one were to read the past as an indictment of the future Vonnegut's theory may not be too far from the mark. Nationally one can detect the footprints of the Nixon-appointed Burger court and their precedents which caused (and still cause) near constant hagglings with the press — attempting to force reporters to reveal sources, searching newsrooms for confidential information, even questioning a journalist's state of mind while writing or working on an article.

Fresher prints can be found during Reagan's administration. A Presidential directive requiring present and former government officials with access to highly classified material (known as "sensitive compartmented information,") to seek official clearance before any public statements are made (for the duration of their life) has recently been passed, ostensibly to prevent leaks which would threaten national security.

This is not to insinuate that all threats to the First Amendment's validity have come from above. Unfortunately, they have also come from below (from where, it may be argued, all antagonists of such an amendment originate.)

On February 15, Jean Kirkpatrick, U.N. representative for the U.S., was driven from a Berkeley College platform by hecklers, at Stanford Law School Jack Greenberg of the N.A.A.C.P. was also promptly quieted by protestors and at Longwood College a publications board was recently formed at least in part to assure that future editors meet all "proper" criteria before being selected, one of these being "a commitment to the college."

One has to wonder if all American editors have ever (or will have to) pledge commitment to the nation before being selected to their post. Perhaps they will take a lie detector test or sign a document which will read something like "Yes, I will be editor of the Los Angeles Times and love the United States," and farther one wonders just exactly how Longwood's publications board plans on registering this commitment — perhaps a signature in blood, or a pound of flesh.

One suggestion to the publications board may be in order here, and this comes from past experience. To be an editor of a paper as thoroughly disorganized, disheveled, and at times sensational (and in many respects I consider that a good word) as The Rotunda, one needs not a commitment to the college so much as one needs a commitment to the paper. It comes first and as any future editor will soon find, it is best to ignore the posturing of this institution lest he or she be caught up in its own narcissistic web and find the paper like Longwood at times, full of bluff and nonsense, and vain as a sorority girl on Saturday night.

Editor's Note: last week The Rotunda incorrectly printed the prices of the Virginian at $6.50 and $8.00 if mailed. The correct prices for the 1983 Virginian are $8.00 and $9.50 if mailed.

Your Turn

Hey Kiddies,

What'll it be next? Will we be sentenced to wear Longwood shirts everywhere we go so Longwood will get some exposure? That's what it looks like things are coming to.

Let me expound. When I chose Longwood I did not choose Longwood because of any student-ran publication. I chose Longwood because I was handed pamphlets (and lots of them) of nice architectual structures and smiling students. Everything was rosy in the pamphlets. Why then, may I ask, does part of the administration want to turn The Rotunda and the other student publications into recruitment pamphlets? Don't we have enough?

Secondly, the "Concerned Students" who want to censor the publication (I speak primarily of The Rotunda) seem to want to present a picture of happy students hand in hand. Well, that idea might be fine for a high school paper, but as adults it's kind of hard for us to be dictated to in such a fashion. You see there's this little document called the U. S. Constitution which says that we have the right to a free press. Since college is our transition to the real world, shouldn't we enjoy the same freedoms — that's what they'll say at graduation — "we have prepared you for life..." If this is the case the future of the country looks bleak.

What about this sensationalism? Think back a couple of years to the Son of Sam murders. If a plane crashed and killed sixty people, Son of Sam would have still taken the headline for knocking off one person. That's sensationalism, kids. Manson didn't kill that many people, but we all know who he is — would the "Concerned Students" attribute his fame to sensationalism. Personally I think what we are seeing is a thermidorian reaction (a reaction of forces after they have fallen from grace). The trend at Longwood recently has been away from the old traditions — Rah-Rahism — to a more realistic approach to day to day life. The Rah-Rahs are making an attempt to restore themselves to the throne. That's wishful thinking, because Longwood is no longer primarily a teacher's school. When it was a teacher's school the idealism at such an institution was condusive to elves, paint battles and class colors. Students today realize that the world is a hard cold place to be thrust into and Bachelors of Science is no longer a prerequisite to an instant job. Thus, school spirit is out and individual survival is in.

All this aside, who would read this new, censored Rotunda, with its peachy stories about Longwood? Not I, said the cat, I like to get the full story.

To the Editor:

As an Alumni of Longwood College I have over the course of the past three years received literature from the college that lead me to believe that very real attempts were being made to save the college from drowning in its own traditionalism, conservativism and authoritarian attitudes. Since I've returned to campus I've had the opportunity to talk with students, both in and out of the classroom, who are concerned not only with the quality of life here at Longwood, but with issues that go far beyond the ivory halls of higher education. Longwood has finally begun to be successful in attracting a more diverse student body, which is a plus for any institution. It is up to the administration and the faculty to allow this trend to continue.

My concern is that the desire of the administration to protect the image of the college will result in unnecessary regulations and a step back into a time (I had hoped had) gone by. Case in point — the new Publications Board. I can understand the administrations desires to protect the image of the college, but I feel that their actions are misplaced. I have always had the impression that the purpose of a college newspaper is to voice the concerns of the college community. Not to serve as an instrument for public relations. Yet, for a college to restrict, regulate and control what should be the voice of the students will surely portray a negative image to alumni, students and potential students.

"Highly prestigious" colleges and universities in this state have "allowed" their college newspapers to print articles that were much more controversial and sensational than anything that I have ever read in the Rotunda. As far as I can tell their prestige, nor their public image have suffered in any way.

Public image, if that is the issue here, has to be directed more towards (potential and present) students. As adults they want and deserve some basic freedoms. The most important function of higher education is not only to teach students to think, but to give them an atmosphere where they are allowed to think. To give them the freedom to question authority, to express their opinions and air their concerns.

Rotunda Interviews:

Robert Stone on A Flag For Sunrise

Robert Stone received Longwood's Dos Passos Award for literature last Wednesday, at 8:00 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium. At 46 he has completed three novels — A Hall of Mirrors published in 1967, which won a Faulkner Prize, Dog Soldiers which won the National Book Award for fiction in 1974, and A Flag for Sunrise which, as Jack Beatty wrote, "seems destined to be one of the books that will justify our time before the bar of literary history."

A Flag for Sunrise is set in the fictionalized Central American country of Tecan, which is on the brink of revolution. The plot traces chronologically the lives of three Americans: Frank Holliwell, a middle aged anthropologist on a lecture trip to Central America; Sister Justin Feeney, an American nun helping to run a mission on the coast of Tecan; and Pablo Tabor, a pillhead deserter from the Coast Guard. They meet late in the novel against the backdrop of a revolution in Tecan.

A Flag for Sunrise was the subject of a seminar discussion with Robert Stone last Thursday organized by Dr. William Frank of the English Department at Longwood College. Following are several excerpts from that discussion.

Q: Who or what influenced you to structure the novel as it is, without any clear distinctions between chapters?

A: It (the novel) unfolds in scenes, in which one point in time is connected to another — it's a little bit cinematic. Everybody writing since Joyce was probably influenced by the narrative rhythms of film. It's hard not to be. I think we all, since the second decade of this century, came to the story telling process partly through watching films. The novel is not strictly speaking cinematic but runs as a film narrative might even to the point of having quick cuts or dissolves at the end of a scene.

This enables me to leave out what I think I can leave out. The problem with a novel or with a story is that very often you go on too long. The hardest thing in the world is to cut a story or novel and yet if you go on and on at your own leisurely pace, you're going to end up doing the one thing in this business that you cannot do — and that is be boring. There is absolutely no patience, nor should there be, with boring literature, it can be anything, it can be pretentious, absurd, but never boring.

Q: Do you feel like you have to know what will happen at the end of the novel when you start it?

A: There are a number of things I have to know at the beginning. I have to know who the people are, I have to know how the book ends — I have to know what the emotional tone of the ending is going to be. It gives me a place to strike for, but I don't have to know all the stuff that happens in the middle. That will occur to me. Somebody once said about writing — everybody has a great beginning and everybody has a great ending — but it's the middle; that's the hard part — and it's true.

Q: When a person finishes a "Flag for Sunrise," is there any last comment or theme in general that the novel is supposed to end with?

A: The situation at the very end of the book is the situation where it begins. It ends at the point Where Holliwell comes out through the same door he went in, he has unlearned everything he has learned. He's back to basics after all that. It's not despairing or resolved, it's a place to begin again. It s moral if you want to call it that, is that nothing is free, we have to confront all varieties of human behavior. If we're going to moralize about the world we have to take it as it is and not the way we want it to be. We have to analyze the nature of illusion. Its purpose is certainly not to horrify or rub anybody's face in the awfulness of it all.

Q: I always wonder when I read a novel how much is from the actual experience of the author? How much of this novel did you actually experience?

A: I had first hand experience of Central America, yes. But I never write autobiographically, the writer is, of course, all of the characters. I invent them. I'm their daddy. I know all about them. But I'm not them.

Q: Is that why you used Tecan, a fictionalized country, instead of the Honduras, or Nicaragua?

A: Yes, I didn't want to be limited to the reality of one specific country.

Q: Do you see a lot of parallels between Central America today and Vietnam?

A: Yes, certainly there are a lot of parallels. There's a certain level on which all non-western countries are alike in the way that all western countries are alike, in terms of the economy and the way life is lived. It would be hard to have been in Southeast Asia and then go to Central America and not be reminded of the similarities. It's a square on the chess board, a pawn in a game which is really controlled outside of the area itself.

To give you an example, I was at a Vietnam reconsidered conference, at the University of Southern California last month and I was talking to the former Undersecretary of State for East Asian Affairs, a man named Thompson who actually worked for the Lyndon Johnson Administration. We were talking about the roots of the war and he said, "Well, in a way the Vietnamese were inheritors of the projection of American missionary zeal, they were the objects of American Beneficence," and he said, "you can tell the objects of American beneficence by the haunted look in their eyes." And this is true in Southeast Asia, and true in Central America. They're probably getting the worst side of the United States. I think what this country is about, is quite genuinely good stuff, but it does not travel well, it does not export well. And when we try to export it we often get ourselves into a lot of trouble.

In the case of Central America, we have always excused the way we behaved there (and we've behaved pretty badly), because the people down there were vague small brown funny people, who weren't quite as real to us. We thought, "Well, they're just a lot of confused little people and if anybody's going to straighten them out, it's going to be us." That was not the right way to go about it, we were kidding ourselves. And we were being patronizing and we were being contemptuous of the local population. Sooner or later that debt was going to come up for payment and that's what's happening now. They don't like us down there. We've just assumed what was good for us was good for them. So we're in trouble there and it is in an area of vital interest for the United States. We're caught in a contradiction of our method of exporting the American way of life. It's not because this country is a bad country, it's just one of those things — the youthful misjudgments of America as a great power are now coming up to haunt her.

Q: You spoke of a payback, a paying of debts, what do you see happening in Central America?

A: Well, I don't think it's too good. I think they would like to have a revolution all throughout Central America resembling the Nicaraguan revolution without quite as much socialist ideology. I'm not sure that's possible now. I don't think there is any middle ground possible anymore. I think there might have been 20 years ago, but I don't think there is anymore. They will eventually have to go to the Cubans for support and they may be very sorry that they did. They may find themselves hardly better off, with a pro-Soviet government. However, they probably will be materially a little bit better off. And even if they are subject to a lot of censorship and control that will be better than being murdered left and right the way they are now.

Q: Do you see yourselves as a type of Moralist, on the order of the 19th century Moralists, for the nation?

A: I think that's the job of the novelists, to be one of the makers of the national conscience, I don't think novelists are taking that seriously in the United States, which is not necessarily a bad thing. But I think that's my job, as a novelist, as an artist, and I think that it should be — to be a preacher, a kind of prophet.

Q: What are you going to be working on in the future?

A: I'm working on a novel now that I'm about 100 pages into about two people, a screenwriter and an actress on location in New lexico. Basically, it's about the film industry.

Q: Why the title, "A Flag for Sunrise?"

A: It's from an Emily Dickenson poem, "A bride at daybreak I shall be, sunrise hast thou a flag for me?" It's yet another one of her funerary poems. It begins with an expectation of a loss of virginity of being taken as a bride and of course we find that not surprising since we know this is Emily Dickenson, what she's actually talking about is dying. The great bride that she's expecting is Christ, who she's going to see. The poem goes on to describe her ascending the stair and seeing Christ. It represents the thing that everybody is waiting for in the morning. What's going to be there for us after all this night. After all this struggle, what do we have in the morning to greet the next day with? What kind of flag, what kind of emblem? What symbols of hope to get us through the next day?

Your Turn

It is 3:30 a.m., Thursday, April 7, as I sit and write this. It sounds like an odd time to be writing, but under the circumstances it has proved to be a most opportune time. You see, I have just returned from a fire drill, the first in Frazer dormitory since returning from break, but only one of many.

Students are to the point now where they assemble their fire drill clothing before retiring each night. There have been so many fire drills here that if there was ever a real fire the students would not be aware of it because of the mere size of the building. Students are now taking their time getting out of the building. They are tired of these false alarms. For them, it seems safe to say that it is a false alarm. What happens to those few stragglers in the dorm who take their time getting dressed and even take time to comb their hair and brush their teeth?

A fire knows no boundaries or patience. Most of all, it has no respect or consideration for human life or anything else in its path. A burning building can be put out and rebuilt. A human life is easily extinguished, often leaving nothing left to rebuild.

These few who are getting their jollies pulling false alarms must realize the seriousness of their behavior and possible consequences. It is not unreasonable to say that these irresponsible few have the safety of the entire college community in their hands, and if anything happens to any students here they will have it on their consciences.

To the Student Body:

As we all know, Phyllis Mable recently formed the publications board. The current board is a mistake and after a brief examination of the issue it should be clear why.

To begin with, the student body has no elected representatives on the board. If the board is going to control publications read mostly by the students, the students should be able to elect those they feel will act objectively.

The second issue involves having the editor elected by the board. The students, not an appointed board, have the right to decide who they feel will uphold the highest journalistic standards. It should not be the decision of a board concerned mainly with public affairs.

The third issue is leaving the editor out of the decision making process. Editors are the people who are ultimately accountable for a publication's content. Their responsibility is compromised when their vote isn't included in board decisions.

Longwood's publications board needs to be reorganized. A new board, with elected student representatives and editors comprising it, is the best way to ensure an accurate representation of the college.

Sincerely,
Will Huskey

Telefund Beats Goal

The 1983 Longwood College Telefund, which lasted from February 7 through March 10, received a record $73,821 in pledges from 4,127 donors, according to Alice Martin, director of Annual Funds.

Under the leadership of Telefund chairman John McMillen, the 51 Longwood Ambassadors — the "telephone force" — called alumni in all 50 states asking for donations. Ten Ambassadors worked each night for 20 nights or 720 hours.

This year's Telefund goal of $65,000 and 4,000 donors was surpassed. In addition, this year's totals represent a 21 percent increase in number of donors and a 20 percent increase in dollars pledged over the 1982 totals.

Of the 4,127 donors, 1,271 had never contributed before and 1,354 increased their 1982 pledge.

"If all of the pledges are fulfilled," said Martin, "we have a good shot at being one of the top 10 colleges in the nation in terms of donations."

Of all 51 Ambassadors, Geri Flanary recorded the most donors in one night with 48, while Tina Trice collected $1,050 in pledges, also the most for one night.

Overall, the most donors and the most dollars pledged were received by Bob Jensen. Mary Beth Hart received pledges from the greatest number of people who had never contributed before, while Lisa Swackhammer collected the most dollars from alumni who had never contributed before and those who increased last year's pledge.

More Classes

Beginning in the fall semester, Longwood's Office of Continuing Studies will offer three certificate programs for adults who wish to continue their education and training. The programs are: Human Resource Management, Office Management, and Records Management.

Each will consist of 30 credit hours of courses. These courses, which are already offered at Longwood, will be taught off campus in locations convenient for potential students.

The Human Resource Management program is designed for people involved in personnel, labor relations, training, occupational safety and health, and related fields. The Records Management program focuses on data processing, information systems and certain clerical functions, while the Office Management program is primarily for secretaries.

"It's a way for an individual to gain credentials in a highly relevant and technical area," said George Stonikinis, coordinator of Longwood's Institute for Advanced Studies and Regional Resources.

"You're allowing people to continue their education, to diversify and to move up in their positions. Instead of a four-year commitment, you're only talking about 30 hours. . . Perhaps most important, you're delivering education to adults in the way they need it and can use it."

The certificate programs are part of an effort to accommodate adult students who desire continuing education, or whose occupations demand that they continue their education, but for whom a conventional four-year degree program is beyond their reach.

An increasing number of college students are over 25 and study part-time. Analysts expect the demographic characteristics of college students to continue to change through the remainder of this century.

The new programs were developed as a follow-up to a detailed markert survey of local businesses and industries which the Longwood administration completed last fall. One of the survey's recommendations was the expanded availability of educational opportunities for various segments of the community.

Longwood President Janet D. Greenwood announced the programs in a March 30 address before the Virginia Division of Industrial Development Seminar at Richmond's Hyatt House.

"Longwood needs to be — and will be — more responsive to a new constituency: that of working adults in industry," Dr. Greenwood said. "Our certificate program will be focused on a distinct segment of learners who need to update their education and skills as new knowledge and demands are created."

Dr. Greenwood was the first Virginia college president to publicly endorse Gov. Charles S. Robb's "active partnership" between higher education and business and industry.

Also as part of this effort, Longwood is currently offering three new computer courses in the evening.

Vice-President Awarded

Phyllis L. Mable, Longwood College's vice president for student affairs, is the recipient of the American College Personnel Association's Professional Service Award.

The award was presented to Ms. Mable on March 15 during the ACPA's annual convention in Houston, TX. Described on the award plaque as "ACPA's Ambassador of Good Will," Ms. Mable received a standing ovation during the presentation ceremonies.

The award was given "in recognition of distinguished service in promoting student development practices, fostering cooperation among student affairs professionals, and generating professional standards of high quality."

Ms. Mable has donated the cash gift included with the award to the Longwood College Foundation for an award to a freshman student who has made significant progress in leadership and academic areas.

The co-editor of three widely acclaimed books dealing with student affairs administration in colleges and universities, Ms. Mable is a past president of the ACPA and serves as national chairman of the Task Force on Standards for college deans and counselors.

Last year, she was the recipient of the Mel Hardee Award for Outstanding Service from the Southern Association for College Student Affairs.

In a letter of congratulation to Ms. Mable, ACPA president Susan Komives wrote: "You serve as a model of commitment and involvement for us all. You have shown us how one stays involved and branches into new areas as an example of self renewal . . . On behalf of your colleagues in ACPA, I thank you for all you continue to do for our professional association, our profession, and our students."

Spring Seminars

Once your 1982 taxes are paid, it will be time to look ahead to your financial future. An upcoming program offered through Longwood College's Office of Continuing Studies will allow you to do exactly that.

The program will examine — in layman's language — such concepts as the need for insurance or for trusts and wills, and how investments and tax incentives can be used to increase your income. It will be held on Saturday, April 23, from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. in the Wynne Building on the Longwood campus.

The program, known as "Get Your Act Together Before It Is Too Late!," is the first of three "Spring Celebration Seminars" offered by the Office of Continuing Studies. The registration fee is $15 and includes lunch, refreshments, transportation (if applicable) and all workshop materials.

John Doyle, a trust officer for Central Fidelity Bank, will discuss estate planning from 10 to 11:45 a.m. After lunch Michael Madden, an account executive in Wheat First Security's Lynchburg office, will review stocks, bonds and limited partnerships from 12:30 to 1:45. William E. Watson, vice president of W.A. Watson & Sons Insurance Agency, will thoroughly examine insurance from 1:45 to 3 p.m.

The other two seminars also will be held on a Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., and also will have a $15 registration fee.

The second seminar, on April 30, will focus on Civil War battles around Farmville during the Appomattox Campaign. There will be field trips to Sayler's Creek, High Bridge and Cumberland Church following a lecture and slide presentation in Wynne Building. Titled "Journey Back In Time," it will be conducted by Tom Nanzig, a Civil War expert and Longwood's director of housing.

The third program, on May 7, is "Field Archeology," conducted by Dr. James Jordan, head of Longwood's sociology and anthropology department. After a lecture and slide presentation in Wynne Building, participants will make a field trip to the nearby Smith-Taylor Mound for excavation and field-work.

To register, or for additional information, contact the Longwood College Office of Continuing Studies at 392-9256.

Males Differ From Females More Than We Know

A study by a Longwood College psychology professor into how the time-of-day affects impulse control among 7th graders found surprising differences between boys and girls.

"The difference between sexes (in performance) was outstandingly unexpected," Dr. Madeline Simpson said during a March 31 Fireside Chat at Longwood House. "We found differences in every way you look at the data."

In the spring of 1981, Dr. Simpson tested 104 7th-grade students in the Nottoway County school system on two occasions. Each time she used two tasks — one involving delay of gratification, the other involving time estimation — and tested the students in the morning and again that afternoon.

She had expected to find no differences in performance between males and females, based on existing research. However, the boys did better in both categories, particularly in estimating 60-second intervals, she said.

"Repetitious counting may have accounted partially for the sex differences observed," added Dr. Simpson, citing research that girls become bored more easily than boys on repetitive tasks.

Dr. Simpson also was surprised

Softball Team Hosts Liberty Baptist

Longwood women's softball team, which won two of four contests last week, hosts Liberty Baptist Tuesday afternoon at Farmville Elementary field. Today's twinbill will be the Lady Lancers' only action this week. The doubleheader tips off at 3:30.

Now 2-6, Coach Nanette Fisher's squad pulled off a 14-13 victory over VCU Tuesday in 11 innings, after rallying from a 12-0 deficit. In the Liberty Baptist Tournament, played in mud and rain Friday and Saturday, Longwood beat James Madison 6-5 but fell to Cazenovia of New York 4-1 and Francis Marion 5-0.

In the big win over VCU, Cindy Walsh has three hits and two big RBI's, winning pitcher Donna Kanary drove in two runs and Sharon Sculthorpe had two hits.

The Lady Lancers, trailing 12-0, scored six runs in the fourth and seven in the sixth to go on top 13-12. After VCU tied the game with a run in the top of the seventh, Longwood won it in the bottom of the 11th inning, aided by a VCU error.

Kanary went the distance for Longwood and held the Rams to just one run over the last seven innings.

Friday in the first round of the Liberty Baptist Tournament, the Lady Lancers fell to Cazenovia's three-run rally in the top of the sixth. Pam Cauley had three hits in three trips to plate and Gilbert had two hits with an RBI.

Later Friday, Longwood rallied for two runs in the bottom of the seventh inning on a two-run single by Walsh to edge James Madison 6-5 and stay alive in the tourney. Walsh's big hit drove in Debbie Garcia and Cauley to give Longwood the victory. Soph Betsy Armstrong picked up the win in relief of Kanary. Jeanette Schoder had a run-scoring double and Sculthorpe also had a double to pace Longwood's seven-hit attack.

Saturday morning Longwood was eliminated from the tournament by a strong Francis Marion team 5-0. Kay Aultman had a double while Gilbert, Walsh, Cauley and Schoder also hit safely in the contest.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Lady Golfers Place Seventh

Longwood's women's golf team, seventh in the 45-hole Lady Lion Invitational Saturday and Sunday in University Park, Pennsylvania, takes to the road again this week with a trip to Wilmington, North Carolina, for the UNC-Wilmington Invitational Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Coach Barbara Smith's team totaled an 865 for 45 holes Saturday and Sunday to place 7th out of 11 teams in Penn State's spring women's golf tournament. William & Mary was sixth at 846 while Michigan State, Minnesota and Ohio State were the top three teams in the tourney. Saturday's 27 holes were played in a day-long downpour.

Longwood scores included: Robin Andrews 84-81-46-211, Lanie Gerken 85-83-45-213, Sue Morgan 86-84-46-216, Carol Rhoades 86-94-45-225 and Mary Semones 92-94-48-234.

The Lady Lancers will not be playing in the Duke Invitational April 22-24 as previously scheduled. The UNC-Wilmington tourney will wrap up regular season competition.

Lady Netters To Play Averett

Longwood's men's tennis team, 1-5 after a 7-2 loss to Randolph-Macon Sunday, host Newport News Apprentice Monday, visit Virginia Wesleyan Thursday and travel to St. Paul's Saturday in a heavy week of action.

Bryan Kersey won his match at No. 3 singles Sunday and teamed with Carl Schwab to win at No. 2 doubles, accounting for Longwood's victories in the loss to Randolph-Macon.

"Til the heavens stop the rain"

Lancers 10-4 and Holding

Longwood's baseball team holds the same 10-4 record and seventh place national ranking in Division II that the Lancers enjoyed March 29 after a doubleheader sweep over Virginia State. In the interim eight games were either postponed or canceled because of rain, frustrating players and enabling already frustrated sports editors to use Morrison quotes in headlines.

Coach Buddy Bolding is hoping his squad will be able to complete five games that are on tap this week. The Lancers are slated to play two at St. Paul's Tuesday, two at Mount St. Mary's Wednesday and one at VMI Friday.

In all 19 games have been rained out thus far in what has been a miserable spring weather-wise.

Following Friday's contest at VMI, the Lancers will travel to Maryland Baltimore County for a single game Sunday and to Maryland Eastern Shore for two Monday.

With 20 games still to play, barring further rainouts, the Lancers have their work cut out for them if they are to realize another trip to the South Atlantic Regional Tournament.

"It's going to be rough from here on out," said Bolding. "We have to play a lot of games in a short period of time and we need a bunch of victories if we hope to return to the playoffs."

The Lancers remained seventh in the latest Division II baseball poll put out by Collegiate Baseball last week.

Lancer Golfers Finish Sixth

Longwood's men's golf team failed to defend its college division state title Saturday, but senior David Moore fired a four-over-par 76 to place second in the college division in the rain-shortened Virginia Collegiate Championships at Hot Springs.

Radford won the college division with a one round 313 while Longwood was sixth at 333. Overall and university division winner was Virginia with a 289. The tournament was cut to 18 holes after rain made the lower Cascades course unplayable for Sunday's second round.

Moore played perhaps the finest round of his three-year career to finish second. Other Longwood scores included: Richard Miller 83, Glenn Bugg 86, Stan Edwards 88, Ty Bordner 91 and David Ritter 92.

This week the Lancers play in the Virginia Tech Invitational Friday and Saturday.

DAVID MOORE

RAMTAGGING — Longwood second baseman Sharon Sculthorpe stopped this Virginia Commonwealth runner as the Lancers edged VCU 14-13.

by her discovery that the performance of the girls varied more between the two testing days than did that of the boys. She had originally thought that the one-week lapse would affect the sexes equally.

Not surprisingly, she found that — generally speaking — both boys and girls performed better on both tests in the morning than in the afternoon.

This research was undertaken to examine the relationship among biorhythms, delayed gratification and time judgments.

"Time-of-day is related to the concept of biorhythms . . .," noted Dr. Simpson. "Humans develop rhythms that are synchronized with the periodic changes in nature. Because of this, it is said that humans have a biological, or physiological, clock. Some writers refer to internal mechanicms that synchronize such rhythms as 'living clocks.' "

Dr. Simpson authored an article about her findings that appeared in the journal Perceptual and Motor Skills last August.

Her lecture was the third and final Fireside Chat of this academic year. Previous programs were given by Dr. Jung Ra, an education professor, and Jacqueline Wall, an art instructor. Fireside chats provide an informal forum for Longwood faculty to share research or expertise with their colleagues and the community.

"Building Rainbows"

The Catalinas of Longwood College will present their annual spring water show this week. Show dates and times are: Thursday, April 14, 7 p.m.; Saturday, April 16, 2 and 3 p.m.; Sunday, April 17, 1 p.m.

The theme for this year's show is "Building Rainbows." Each color of the rainbow will be represented in six different routines. The entire team will form a rainbow in their final number.

Join the Catalinas at Lancer Pool for their last (and best!) performance of the 1982-83 school year.

Graduating members include Frances Vavloukis, Chris Tullington, Mo Rogge, Judy Luck, Elise McCarty, and Diane Doss.

Other members are: Joanne Weber, Anne Mulvihill, Susan Drewry, Lynda Stratton, Kathryn Schrader, Betty Lou Brogan, Suzy Crothers, Ellen Brown, Debbie Busko, Mindy Robinson, Cheryl Compton, and Berni Toner.

day. Participants are housed in a modern residence hall.

For commuters, the cost is $100, which includes all expenses except lodging.

The second program, set for June 19-25, will have courses in "Crafts: Pottery, Natural Basketry and Silkscreen," "Wines and Food" and "A 'Darling Amusement' and a 'Constant Tooting,' " which focuses on music in Colonial America.

The third program from July 17-23, will feature courses in "The Last Days of the Confederacy," "A Look at the World of computers" and the course on prehistoric Indians. The final program, July 31-August 6, will have the same courses as the third program.

Last year's program attracted 44 persons from up and down the East Coast. Only one of the 38 non-commuters came from Virginia. Across the country last year, 55,000 people participated in over 600 Elderhostel programs. Another 24,000 had to be turned away.

Since Longwood will be closed during the first program, more commuters can be accepted for this than for the other programs.

There are no exams, no grades and no required homework. Lack of formal education is not a barrier. Participation is open to persons 60 and over or those whose spouse or companion qualifies.

For more information, contact: Mrs. Brenda Atkins, Elderhostel Campus Coordinator, Office of Continuing Studies, Longwood College, Farmville, VA 23901, (804) 392-9256.

Lady Netters

Longwood's women's tennis team, 0-2 after a 7-2 loss at Christopher Newport Tuesday, swings back into action with a match at Averett Monday and host Southern Seminary Wednesday at 2:00 and Lynchburg Thursday at 3:00.

With its top two netters Lisa Barnes and Barbara Cathey of Suffolk out of action, Coach Carrol Bruce's team went with a revamped lineup at Christopher Newport Tuesday. Gaining wins for Longwood in doubles were Terry Justice, Cathy Morris, Karen Croun, and Heather Gardner.

Lacrosse Action Thursday

Rain canceled all of last week's lacrosse action, but the Lady Lancers have three games scheduled this week. Coach Jane Miller's squad, 0-1, visits Lynchburg Tuesday, hosts Mary Washington Thursday at 4:00 and travels to Bridgewater Saturday for a 2:00 contest.

Bad weather forced cancellation of last Wednesday's game with Richmond and a Thursday contest at Roanoke was postponed.

Hard Times At Nottoway High

AStudent Teachers Perspective

They're out there.

12th grade black boys twice as big and twice as dark, jiving through the doorway of the baby blue classroom, and slinking into the orange plastic desks sliding them across the dirty slick tiles — pop! against the wall and smiling with big teeth saying, "After-NOON, Miss Marton, After-NOON."

"Barton! Miss Barton! The name's been on the chalkboard for a week. B-A-R-T-O-N-Barton!" And the big one comes up, the basketball star with a 'fro out to his shoulders, throws his books down, meanders up to the teach, says, "Gotta go to the locker room" or "gotta go to the bathroom," and Miss Barton lets him go, 'cause he's twice as big and twice as strong and you got to let him go.

Nottoway County — 25 minutes from Longwood, 50 from Richmond, 40 from Petersburg — the heart of rural Nowheres-ville and Miss Sharon Barton's been student teaching there for 10 weeks — 25 hours a day, 7 days a week, with cartoon breaks at 3:00 and no hope in sight.

"I wasn't prepared at all, I'd been so indoctrinated to the ideal class situation at Longwood that I was scared to death when I went into that Nottoway 'Basics' class — a class for lower tracked kids, problem kids."

On a drizzly gray day — January the 24th — Sharon woke at three a.m., washed, dried, dressed and ate by 4:00 a.m. She was so eager she had to kill three hours before she could begin her first day of student teaching. She had completed two weeks of modules at Longwood which "can't possibly provide a student with the background information that they're going to need to test the kids, to discipline the kids, and to know about multi-cultural groups."

Nottoway County was the high school — rural, country, fresh scrubbed kids with freckles and white brittle starched collars, yes ma'am and no ma'am sensibilities, idealized parochial folk who wouldn't need a stick — multi-cultural? She would have no problems. She headed through Crewe on Rt. 360 to Nottoway, her head full of illusion.

Sharon met her supervisor on the first day, the teacher she would be replacing and observed the classes in which she would teach. English Honors, English Academics, English General and English Basic. "When I saw honors I thought bright, smart, intelligent — good class, when I saw academics I thought college-bound, probably Longwood College, or U. Va., or Old Dominion because they're rural kids and they want to go to small colleges. When I saw general it was like — unmotivated rednecks, when I saw basic I thought challenge, incredible, I don't believe this, I wasn't prepared . . . I'm scared, scared."

Basics — glassy, red-eyed Richard, quiet, brown wavy shoulder length hair, boots that are covered with mud, he smells of an automobile and he reeks of reefer, 17-18 years old, flannel shirt, jean jacket, cigarette behind the ear, langy, he slides into the desk in the class and when he slides into the desk it knocks against the wall and Sharon looks at him with her conservative tan skirt and pastel blue sweater, clean cropped hair and big brown eyes, and she thinks, "Oh, my God, you're stoned. What are you doing here?"

Basics — Homecoming queen Lisa, adorable Lisa, real sweet, soprano voice like a bird, doesn't know what a preposition is, hasn't written in complete sentences for 18 years, wants to go to college and her chances are slim to nil. She asks if the new teacher will tutor her, what could she say? "Yes, yes, of course, sure, spell Barton." "B-a-r-t-o-u-n-t."

Basics — twenty year old senior in high school, Charlie, 5'9", short hair, big black eyes, a "real stitch," had cheeks swollen out like a mouthful of apples, no matter how serious she is Charlie gets the best of her, so cute, everytime he laughs, nothing comes across as serious, she just laughs and says, "You crack me up."

And coked out Tommy and big silent Norman and Carl who lives in a shack and sleeps on a dirt floor — Basics, Basics, Basics.

"Honey, they couldn't write at all, they could barely write their names. It was that bad."

Most of them did drugs, looked for the instant gratification in life and didn't care about much else, particularly not school work.

"They wake up in the morning and take bong hits to make it through the day, they go out at lunch and they drink alcohol and they smoke their dope, they probably eat little or nothing and only when they're high because they get the munchies. They don't care about school, they feel like society has done some harm to them in some way or another, their parents are fighting or divorced, and they don't have any adult supervision. To be sent to the principal is no big deal because they're not afraid of authority. They don't care, they just don't care."

And what's a nice girl like Sharon doing in a place like this?

She came from a line of teachers, an inherited profession. Her father taught high school English for 19 years at Newport News. Her brother teaches there now and she wants to teach because, "When I was in high school I had a lot of problems with my family and myself — you know adolescence is adolescence, it's that constant — why am I living? loss of identity type syndrome." She met a teacher in her 10th grade class "who wasn't afraid to get close to the kids on an emotional level. He showed me that a teacher could do more than pass on knowledge, they could help a person be a better person."

Dan Cokely was his name, a balding football coach for Newport News who had a "classic broken nose — three times at that, he was always happy, always smiling." She tried to emulate him in her basics class, sitting behind her thick wooden desk thinking of how he would handle cases like Ricky — the big black boy who failed consecutively and purposely to keep on the easy level, the basic; or Tommy, the coke addict, who would excuse himself from class five minutes before the bell, snort two lines and come back sniffling, with watery eyes.

On the drug problem, she did what Dan might have done, "I let them talk it out, we would get off on the discussion of drugs, because they were drug addicts and they were alcoholics and they needed to talk about those things and nobody will let them talk it out — they certainly couldn't tell their parents, and with their peers it was like, "Oh, that's really great, you're a drug addict, that's wonderful,' so they needed somebody to talk to who was going to take a neutral stance — that was myself."

After the first three or four weeks the students became less wary of her. Some would hang around after school, wanting to talk personally about their problems, or just to talk.

"A lot of them just wanted me to say they were special, boost their egos a little — Lord knows they needed it." Sometimes it helped and sometimes it didn't matter either way.

A tall, bony boy named Clyde with a small squeezed face, Mo haircut and an affinity for Jack Daniels' baseball caps, approached her one day after class, it was not an unusual thing for him to do. He'd made a habit of going up to her, tucking his thumbs into his Levi's and saying, "Miss Barton, I just really can't cope with this, I'm just really getting sick and tired of school, and I get up in the morning and I take a bong hit to help me make it through the day, and then I smoke dope at lunch and then I go home and take a bong hit."

On that day Miss Barton looked at Clyde and he looked like walking death in cowboy boots — his face was taut and bony, as if cellophane were pulled over the skull and just as pale — he was killing himself and wanted an excuse, an order, or sanctification for his own self-destruction. She wouldn't give it to him.

"Look," she said, "you're standing here, because you want me to tell you one of two things, that it's o.k. for you to do drugs or that you're stupid for doing it and I'm not going to tell you either one . . . One day you're going to wake up and look at yourself in a mirror and say, 'Hey, I'm a really special person, I'm going to stop treating myself like that.' "

Clyde pulled the baseball cap lower and shoveled the boots, "Yeh, yeh. right, Miss Barton, right, right."

"A lot of the problem stems from their family life, they feel like they've been jilted, so far as their parents are concerned, they don't feel like the teachers care and in a lot of cases it's true."

Sharon saw the gamut of attitudes in her profession, from the 35-year-old lady in the teacher's lounge who rattled off students' IQ's and labeled them respectively trashy or worthless, the one who "teaches for the pay check" and rules a class like Big Nurse in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" tyrannizing with a fat stick and large store of intimidation, to the people she feels akin to, the person who teaches because they care, because they "love to teach."

Not that it is always easy.

"You can't love all your students, you can try, you will inevitably have those you favor and then you'll have those who'll drive God insane, drive God to be the devil, those you think, 'Why are you here to torture me? Why don't you stay out of class?' "

Take Eric, tall, acne-pocked Eric, laying his mud-laden boots on the desk in front of him, running his fingers through thick, greasy hair, picking at the holes in his Levi's and saying eternally, "Yes, Miss Marton" for the entire 10 weeks. Or the "heads," the majority of the class, coked out or stoned watching Miss Barton talk and not hearing a word.

"That was a big discipline problem because you can't teach somebody who's stoned, they look at you and they don't take notes, they just kind of mellow out like you're there to entertain them."

She cried a lot in her temporary room with another student teacher, Wanda Lloyds. For 10 weeks every day she arrived at the Lloyds' from Nottoway High at 3:00 o'clock, ate a piece of cake, drank coffee, watched cartoons until 4:30, smoked the last of her daily packs of Virginia Slims, worked until 11:00 at night on lesson plans and then cried. Because the students would not learn. Because it seemed the Basics

Which Will It Be? Longwood or H-SC

By GERE LYELL

Beverly steps out of the shower with her wet, dark hair curling gently around her young face. Her green eyes are sparkling with the anticipation of another Friday night, another party, a fraternity party at Hampden-Sydney. She steps to her closet and frowns. There are enough clothes in there to open a retail store but Beverly has nothing to wear. She stares for minutes, then shuts the closet door. She will find something to wear, she always does. She goes to the bedroom to dry her hair. Her roommate and suitemate are also contemplating what to wear and discussing who they will see. Beverly just smiles for she knows who she will see. A boy she has been dating all semester. A "Hampster," as all the girls on the hall call the young men from Hampden-Sydney.

Many girls, just like Beverly, eagerly go to the parties at H-SC while virtually ignoring the parties and events here at Longwood. Going to Hampden-Sydney has been traditional for Longwood girls for many years, but now that our college has gone co-ed what is the attraction 6 miles down the road? When asked her opinion of guys from Hampden-Sydney, one freshman said, "Generally, I find the guys there are polite and friendly enough. Their parties are great. Guys will come up and ask if they can get you anything and if you are having a good time." In comparison, when asked her opinion of Longwood men, she hesitated then answered, "Some Longwood guys are really nice but they don't have the charm and appeal of Hampden-Sydney guys. They don't give off the same atmosphere. I mean, like, a H-SC guy opens a door for you, a Longwood guy will just push you out of the way! But some Longwood guys are polite too."

Not all freshman girls seem to have the same reaction. Asked the same question about H-SC men, another freshman had quite a different opinion. "I've been to only one party there and I would never go back. RUDE is the only way I can describe those guys. No, I can also say they are immature, spoiled and disgusting. What I really think can't go into print." Are the Longwood men any better in her opinion? "On a one-to-one basis I think they are because I have to see them everyday in my classes. I date a boy from home so I don't really know how they would act on a date."

Senior girls have been exposed to both Longwood and Hampden-Sydney men for 4 years. They would seem to have a more in-depth opinion of both groups. When interviewed, a senior was asked to remember her freshman year. Four years ago, did girls go to Hampden-Sydney? She replied, "There were only two frats here, SPE and Pi Kapp so more girls went to H-SC. Out there they had more parties each week, one just about every night. There was always something to do. There was also the Red Lyon. Everyone went there." As a freshman, can you recall what your opinion of a Hampden-Sydney guy was? With deep contemplation, then a snicker, she answered, "I basically used to think they were all the typical Southern Gentlemen. They were all very preppy, it was the beach music era back then. Guys asked girls out more, or as a freshman, that's the way it seemed. I used to think that they were just "it"! All the parties were wild everyone drank and danced. I also used to think all those guys were wealthy and went to prep schools."

As a senior with four years of parties behind you, how do you view the same Hampden-Sydney crowd? This senior flipped back her long hair and answered, "They aren't any big deal, yet they still think they are a big deal and they act that way. I still feel that there are a few nice sincere guys. I found out that some pretend that they are wealthy, they are only psuedo-wealthy. Also, I've come to realize that many take Longwood girls for granted because we will always come to their parties. Since we are only 6 miles down the road, they feel we are at their disposal all the time." How do Longwood guys fare in comparison? "I really don't know that many Longwood guys other than seeing them in my classes. I have made my friends at H-SC and that's where I go to party. I think there are a few good guys here, but I don't know them well enough to make a comparison." Can you still see a difference between men at Longwood and Hampden-Sydney? "I feel Hampden-Sydney is more polished on the social graces are more attuned to pretending to be Southern Gentlemen, yet some don't pretend."

Another senior had a short and definite opinion. "I've been going to H-SC for 4 years and have taken all the people I have met there with a grain of salt. I've met people out there that I could never respect and others who I know have what it takes to become real men. People like that are a rare find wherever you are, at H-SC or Longwood or in a career situation. These are the kind of people you have to look for wherever you are. I'm sure there are guys that are great at Longwood as well as Hampden-Sydney. They are all just people."

Opinions will vary but it seems that some Longwood girls will always party at Hampden-Sydney. Whether the attraction be their "attuned social graces" or their wild parties, it is always fun to go to parties and meet new members of the opposite sex. What better place for a girl to meet one than at an all male school? . . .

Beverly is putting on the last touches of her makeup. She looks beautiful and ready for fun. She has found something to wear, her roommate's skirt and a blouse she forgot she had. Her suitemate and roommate are calling her from the elevator. She takes one last glance in the mirror and smiles. Beverly knows she will have a great time. She always does.

The Bare Essentials

At New Gate Prison

By LIZ D'SURNEY

"Are we ready to party with these honies tonight ladies?" screeched the voice of the M.C. Screams and cheers from nearly 250 girls rang in the bar. The entertainment that they had anxiously waited for was about to begin. The MC. made her final announcement. "Let me remind you ladies of the rules. No one is allowed on the dance floor while the men are on it. And remember, you are not allowed to touch the men, but . . . (her voice became slow and suggestive) . . . they may touch you!"

Again the screeching (squealing) filled the room. The M.C. continued, "and now will you welcome . . . (a long pause) . . . Pistol Pete!" The male craved ladies jumped onto the brown-rickety picnic tables on the benches, and tabletops, for a better view.

The place is New Gate Prison, located on Grace Street in Richmond. Every Monday night four male dancers perform and they may alternate every week. Buddy, the owner of the bar said, "Some come here because they really enjoy it. Some come only for the cheap beer." A dollar cover charge is required and pitchers are $1.50 all night long. Guys aren't allowed in until after 10:00.

The first of the male go-go dancers came running onto the center of the dance floor. The blue, red, green and gold lights cast hues like that of a kaleidescope onto the rough hewn concrete floor. The response from the girls was tremendous. Was it his full-thick beard and mustache or his two-toned red and black G-string that created such a reaction? And this was just the beginning. Pistol Pete danced around the floor trying to get the girls interested in him. His thrusting pelvic movements caught the interest and attention of some and disgusted others. He bounced up to tables dancing directly in front of the girls with his hands over his head and shaking his body. The song ended and he ran off, back to the dressing room.

The obnoxious, ear-piercing voice of the M.C. shot out from the speakers, "How'd you like that ladies?" more screams from the spectators. "Just wait 'til you see . . . Smoking Joe!" The door to the dressing room was thrown open and a greased-down body darted out. The screams seemed to grow louder this time. Smoking Joe stuck his thumbs into the black suspenders and looked down at his feet gliding across the floor. As he looked up he caught the eye of a girl and danced up to her. She turned away from him, rather embarrassed, and reached for her beer, anything to keep from having to look at him 3 inches in front of her. She looked to her friend for support, but she only laughed and shook her head. He moved to a few other tables then back to the middle of the floor. He was warming up but the music ended and he dashed away.

The M.C. really played up the next dancer. "Here he is ladies . . . Kinky Ken!" When she called his name, the girls went wild. Those who had been quiet and unstirred by the previous dancers became alive and invigorated.

Kinky Ken truly stimulated the crowd. The girls focused their attention on him. He seemed to be the main reason for the girls to be there in the first place. The clamour continued throughout his performance, which is exactly what it turned out to be. Kinky Ken knew how to respond to the girls. He knew how to keep their cheers and enthusiasm going and he loved every minute of it.

He boogied across the floor. His outfit was flashy and bright. He wore a red choker around his neck with a small black bow tie. Black leg warmers and wrist bands clung to his body and were trimmed with tissues which wiggled wildly as he moved. Red sequins glistened and reflected in the light as he made his suave, indicative movements in front of the girls. Many of the girls were on the edge of their seats with their eyes glued to the dancer. And when he left the stage, the girls turned to one another to express their approval and satisfaction and compare notes.

Johnny Fever appeared with a burst of energy and threw lollipops into the audience. The girls raced to retrieve them and keep as a memoir. His motions were rapid and jerky and consisted of dozens of turns. At times he seemed to be doing exercise movements on the floor, stretching and twisting. He headed right for the girls while showing them twitching movements. Many heads turned away in embarrassment.

The black G-string was rather tight for his slightly overweight body. But he didn't seem to mind. He flaunted his body in front of every table making eyes at any interested girl. He maneuvered his way off the dance floor as the song faded out.

This was the end of the "warm-up" period. From now on the male dancers would be working for money and handing out tokens in return. The M.C. kept up her talking throughout every dance. She encouraged the girls to support the guys with tips and made comments to the thought-provoking movement of each dancer.

Coming Events

Come to a HAT PARTY on April 28 at 4:30p.m.!

Students are cordially invited to a HAT PARTY on Thursday, April 28, at 4:30 p.m., on Bedford Mall. (The time has been changed from 6:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. due to the Senior Banquet).

The invitation requires that a) each guest must wear a hat; b) each guest must MAKE his-her hat; c) your hat must be copied from a work of art.

In the history of Art, there are many works in which the people portrayed wear marvelous hats. When we look at these works we often say "Wouldn't it be fun to wear a hat like that?" So this party is designed to give us the opportunity to wear Henry VIII's black velvet hat with jewels or Charles V's helmet. There are all kinds of hats or headdresses, scarves, helmets, turbans, feathers and headbands. Everyone has a chance to wear a favorite hat. For suggestions for hats, go to the Reserve Room at Lancaster Library and just browse through the books, look at the pictures, and have fun trying to decide which hat you like the best. List the title of the painting or sculpture and the artist. You must be able to authenticate your hat.

There will be three prizes awarded for the hats. The prizes will be a year's membership in the Smithsonian Institute. The membership has much to offer, including the monthly publication, "Smithsonian." If the winner already has a membership, then another suitable membership will be selected. The prizes will be awarded to 1) the Best Made Hat, 2) the Guest Identifying the Most Hats, and 3) the Judges' Prize. Category 2 is the contest. Therefore, do not tell others the title and source of your hat. Let them guess!

Miss Phyllis Mable, Vice President for Student Affairs, and Mr. Randall Edmondson, Assistant Professor of Art, will judge the hats under the Chairmanship of Mr. Homer L. Springer, Jr., Associate Professor of Art.

Punch and cookies will be served. PLEASE COME TO THE HAT PARTY!

PS: In case of rain, we'll gather in Bedford Building.

The 25-member company will perform 10 dances, ranging from "Prologue," danced by the entire company to "Je t'aime," choreographed and danced by Ed Fetzner and Shanna Eyer.

Rebecca Johnson, a senior psychology major who has danced with the company for four years, has choreographed "This Is It" as her final compositional work. It features seven dancers.

Other dances on the program are: "Friends," choreographed by Laura Cawthorne; "Equinox," choreographed by Nancy Nuckols; "Soaped Up," choreographed by Nancy Grimstead; "Classy Trash," choreographed by Lisa Snellings.

The final dance on the program is called "Frenzy." Choreographed and staged by Karen Hubbard, member of the dance faculty at Longwood, it is performed by 17 dancers with Ed Fetzner as soloist.

The music for these dances ranges from Bach and Handel to Men at Work and Stray Cats.

The public is cordially invited to attend the dance concert at no charge.

Jazz and Legit

On Thursday, April 21, at 7:30 p.m. the Department of Music will unleash its lethal Jazz Ensemble in the Commons Room between Curry and Frazer along with the Longwood Eight Jazztet, a group of rafter shaking ability. The evenings' charts are by Steely Dan, Chick Corea, Thad Jones, Chicago, Frank Ferriano, Al Cobine and others.

But wait! That's not all! On the following Wednesday, April 27, at 8:00 p.m., Lankford Gold Room, the Longwood College Concert Bank will present an equally exciting program of great variety. Music by the Concert Band covers many styles, from light popular pieces to dazzling works by internationally renowned composers both past and present. They include Wolfgang Mozart, Johannes Brahms, Clifton Williams, Claude T. Smith, Henry Fillmore, Vaclar Nelhybel, Francis McBeth, Leroy Anderson, and James D. Ployhar.

There is no admission charge for either concert and the public is cordially invited to attend. Come and feast your ears on these per-exam blasts.

Senator Wilder At Longwood

State Senator Douglas Wilder, of Richmond, will speak at Longwood College on Thursday, April 21, at 7 p.m. in the Red-White-Green Rooms of Lankford Building.

The first black Virginia senator since Reconstruction times, Wilder is a senior member of the General Assembly with considerable legislative experience and influence.

His visit to Longwood is sponsored by the college's Association of Black Students.

The public is cordially invited to hear Senator Wilder.

Jeanette Elder on "Orff"

On Friday, April 22, the Music Department of Longwood College will honor this year's distinguished music alumna, Jeanette Elder Crosswhite, associate professor of music, Milligan College, Tennessee.

Ms. Crosswhite will present a lecture demonstration on "Orff in Elementary Music Education" in Molnar Recital Hall, Wygal Music Building, 9:15 a.m. to 11 a.m. She has worked extensively and presented many workshops in this field of great current interest. The public is cordially invited to attend this lecture and the honors presentation during the spring choral concert at 8 p.m. in Molnar Recital Hall.

Hard Times At Nottoway High

didn't care.

"I wasn't prepared to walk into an 11th or 12th grade classroom and realize that the students didn't even have a grip on the language. It's difficult to imagine a situation where senior high students don't know what 'of' and 'about' or 'around' are, they didn't know the difference between 'they're' and 'their' and it made it all the more difficult walking into a situation like that, coming from Longwood; at Longwood we had been taught various methods for education, those methods included a lot of inductive learning, a lot of patience for the students, a lot of love, a lot of understanding; everything I had been taught at Longwood I did not see in the field. . . period. In other words, we are very idealistically trained and when you get out in the field, things are not very idealistic, things are very real."

She started them off like the sobriquet for her class — in the basics — letter writing and filling out job application forms, because "Let's face it, you can teach the Scarlet Letter all you want to, but when you're talking about kids who can't read and can't write it's useless to teach them about intrinsic value or about life through literature; you have to be pragmatic about it."

Sharon held mock interviews with her students, forcing them to dress the part, teaching them to say 'no ma'am' and 'yes ma'am' and if a student didn't meet her, the employer's, approval she said, "I'm not hiring you, get out of here, you bum," and they did and they came back again the next time prepared. "I was saying, 'This is the worst possible employer that you could ever meet, and this is how he's going to critique you; he's going to say it to your face.' "

She quizzed them on general information like, "Who's the President of the United States?" or "What's the capital of Richmond?" and sometimes they'd know and sometimes they wouldn't. She got close to them emotionally, even big black Ricky who "gotta go to the locker room" and eventually she said, "No, Ricky, you just came from there, sit down," and he did. And sometimes she wouldn't cry when she went home to the Lloyds. Sometimes there were breakthroughs and they would learn — LEARN!

It was a little project she had assigned for the last day of her class. Most of the students did not write anything. Two did. One girl copied verbatim out of the encyclopedia. But a wiry, muscular black boy in the back, who never said a word during class, who watched Miss Barton and said, "Yes ma'am" and "No ma'am" to her inquiries but offered nothing else, whose dark eyes seemed to rest blankly on the world, whose name was Norman like the Conqueror — wrote a complete sentence — "Homer was a blind poet who wrote Ulysses" and another and another and he made sense and actually wrote about Homer, a blind poet some 3000 years before his time and understood it.

Sharon left, appropriately enough on April 1st, and came back to Longwood to finish her remaining four weeks of modules. She will go on to teach, like her brother and father before her, at Newport News. She wants to teach basics again, if for no other reason than "We all learned something — we all learned more than what was in the books."

The 1982-83 school year has been a very successful one for the Longwood Players. They began the year with a very entertaining performance of TEN LITTLE INDIANS, and, keeping their educational purpose in mind, followed up with student directed one act plays and a superb production of THE THREE SISTERS. Their final production of Mark Medoff's WHEN YOU COMIN' BACK, RED RYDER? was a wonderful crowning touch to this rewarding season.

RED RYDER also seemed to be one of the more complex productions of this year. The play presents a startling juxtaposition between the idealism of the 1950's and the realism of the war plagued 1960's. Stephen (Red), representative of the 50's, is a dreamer; always looking for the good life that he is certain exists in New Orleans. Teddy, the image of the 60's, has learned the hard way (he is a Vietnam vet.) that Stephen's dream world does not exist, and that survival depends on doing for one's self — no matter who gets stepped on or humiliated. By the end of the play, several other characters have learned the same lesson. The credit for the successful presentation of such a complex situation goes to director Douglas Young.

It is very difficult to review a production of this caliber. After all, there are only so many superlatives in the English language. From the opening act to the final curtain, it was obvious that the cast had been worked, and worked themselves very hard. The characterizations were there. The ensemble effect was there. Bob Lemieux and Mary Sue Gardner were the perfect, stuffy, upper middle class New York couple; him with his wimpish spectacles and nasal tones, and her with her conservative dress and precious violin. Isabel Milburn was effective in her protrayal of the neurotic and anxious Cheryl. Max Pantall and Jeffry Thomas were good in their respective roles, although both actors were a bit hurried and muffled in their delivery.

The real acting laurels for this play should go to the trio of Ginny Munoz, Vince Decker, and Jerry Dagenhart. Munoz, as the diner waitress Angel, captured perfectly the personality of the typical forgotten lonely hearted female, lost in her own high schoolish world and trapped in the inescapable world of a dead-end job. Decker's northern accent seemed, at first, distracting and out of place, but as the play progressed, it took on an antagonistic tone that blended wonderfully well with his character. Dagenhart brought such an intensity to his role that the audience was unsure whether to applaud or attack him during the curtain call.

WHEN YOU COMIN' BACK, RED RYDER? is a superb ending to a beautiful year, and the end result to a great deal of inspiration and perspiration. The Longwood Players are to be congratulated on a fine selection, and the cast is to be applauded for a magnificent production.

Author, Dr. Nagel, To Speak At Phi Kappa Pi Initiation

The Longwood College chapter of the Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi will hold initiation ceremonies on Tuesday, April 19, at 7:30 p.m. in Wygal Auditorium.

The speaker for the occasion will be Dr. Paul C. Nagel, director of the Virginia Historical Society. Dr. Nagel is the author of Descent from Glory: Four Generations of the John Adams Family, which was the Main Selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club for February 1983.

The public is cordially invited to hear Dr. Nagel discuss the topic, "How Death Approached Henry Adams."

Selection for membership in Phi Kappa Phi recognizes superior scholarship. Undergraduates are eligible for membership as second semester juniors or as seniors. The 35 students to be initiated into the Longwood chapter have achieved a grade point average of at least 3.5 on a 4.0 scale.

Dr. Nagel became director of the Virginia Historical Society in 1981 after spending more than 30 years in higher education. He has been head of the history department at the University of Georgia, vice president for academic affairs and professor of history at the University of Missouri, and has taught at six other institutions.

In addition to Descent from Glory, Dr. Nagel has written numerous articles and reviews and three other books, including Missouri: A History which won in 1978 the annual award from the Society of Midland Authors for the best book in the field of history.

Dr. Nagel is a consultant for the Adams National Historic Site in Quincy, Massachusetts, and president elect of the Southern Historical Association.

The Phi Kappa Phi initiates are: Diane S. Allen, Donna M. Arrington, Gilbert W. Bates, Kathleen D. Bowers, Tonya R. Boylan, Ann A. Bryant, Eleanor D. Burks, Jane E. Campbell, Elizabeth J. Sunny's Cafe : A Profile

By JEFF ABERNATHY

Judy Johnson takes a long, easy drag off of her cigarette. She talks like that one cool teacher in high school — the one you really could talk to — the one who was a friend. "We thought we were buying a turnkey operation here — we wanted to bring a progressive, avante-garde cafe to Farmville."

When Johnson and Cornelia Graves brought Sunny's Cafe to Farmville in August of 1981, they were looking for a business with a top priority of serving people, establishing a restaurant with something more than pizza and frozen hamburger was important to them.

"It was never just an investment — never just the money. We're crazy about food, and that's where we've put our values," said Johnson.

Graves added, "We've gone through a lot of times when we didn't think we were going to make it — the only thing we could do is keep going. It's the creativity that has enabled us to survive." If we were still looking for high school metaphors, Cornelia Graves is a lot like a cheerleader without the frivolity — she makes you smile.

There were exactly two customers in Sunny's when I went over for an interview. They were lost somewhere behind the whiskey barrels and the hay bales. The cafe is quiet, relaxing; the checked tablecloths and red kerosene lanterns are conducive to the easy-going atmosphere. There is no juke-box in Sunny's — no top forty muzak to listen to — the speakers play low — Bob Dylan, Carole King, James Taylor.

Customers are regular — usually coming in to drink a pitcher and eat anything from jalapeno-covered nachos to cheese fondue. Most of them know Cornelia and Judy — know them and appreciate the friendly atmosphere they've created.

"We don't get the type of student that has to impress everyone in the room — they're kind of mellow," says Johnson, "they're independent — they like all kinds of music. When kids come in here and know the words to music written before they were born, you know you're doing the right thing. There are a lot of people who come in here and want to hear Olivia Newton-John, but we want a wider span of music — we want some of the off-the-wall type stuff — not the same top ten over and over again."

"We're trying to appeal to the individual," Graves said, "it gives me so much joy having people in here over a pitcher or two."

Since Sunny's has moved into Farmville, other restaurants have come in with menus much the same. Sunny's was the first restaurant in town to have a happy hour , and with others following suit, the competition has heightened.

Johnson commented that "new businesses in town have told the college students that they would drive us out — — that's not the way to compete. Competition should be through advertising — let your restaurant speak for itself. In the heat of competition is the learning experience — that gets down to creativity, advertising, and business management.

"Tony (Perini) is my favorite competitor, we don't slander each other. The community is large enough for both of us to make a living, and, in a small town, the idea is we're all in this together. We never came here with the idea of putting anybody out of business."

Cornelia Graves and Judy Johnson, owners of Sunny's Cafe sit back for a few minutes during a long day.

Bringing in live music each week creates a smokey bar, coffee-shop type of image which both owners are pleased with. "The biggest kick is being in the back and hearing people laugh," they both agreed. They bring in musicians who play in small, local bands; their music complements the atmosphere — from Dylan's "Blowin' In the Wind" to Stafford's "Wildwood Weed." They are paid with supper, beer, and applause from a small group of fifteen to twenty people, mostly Longwood students.

In years past, Johnson observed, the students "had learned to become a self-contained community on campus " but are now beginning to come out into Farmville more often. The image of Longwood as a "suitcase college" is fading as activities on and around campus are increasing.

I'd finished most of my interview and shot a whole roll of film, so I sat down to have a beer or two and relax. Arlo Guthrie's "Alice's Restaurant" was playing softly in the background. Judy came over to finish the interview as she sipped her cherry coke. She told me about Wintergreen, where she and Cornelia worked before coming to Farmville. She told me about traveling around Europe with a day-pack strung over her shoulder — about living on the Shenandoah River — about the Wells Fargo & Company sign on the wall — and she told me about Sunny's.

"It's all been a constant learning process — that's where the fun comes in — trying something and seeing what works. Do you want to make money or do you want to hold on to what you think is right? That's been a real value — judgment for us. It's just holding on to that value."

Softball Team Hosts Radford

Looking to get back on the winning track, Longwood's women's softball team visits Liberty Baptist Tuesday for a 2:00 twin bill, Mary Washington for two at 4:00 Thursday and hosts a club team from Radford Saturday at 2:00.

The Lady Lancers, 2-8, dropped a pair of decisions to Liberty Baptist Tuesday 13-9 and 9-3. Top hitter for Longwood in the first game was Debbie Garcia with a two-run single and in the second game Sharon Sculthorpe with two hits, including a double and an RBI.

Longwood will wind up the season next week, hosting Ferrum for two Tuesday (April 26) and playing in the Radford Tournament April 29-30.

Tennis Team Wins Two!

Longwood's men's tennis team upped its record to 3-6 last week, taking wins over Newport News Apprentice 8-1 and St. Paul's 6-3 while bowing on the road to Virginia Wesleyan 9-0. Three matches remain on the 1983 schedule. The Lancers host St. Paul's Tuesday at 2:00, Roanoke Tuesday, April 26, and Hampden-Sydney Wednesday, April 27.

Taking wins Saturday in the victory at St. Paul's were No 1 John Todd, No. 2 Greg Douglas, No 3 Bryan Kersey and No. 4 Carl Schwab in singles. In doubles, No. 1 Todd and Douglas and No. 2 Kersey and Schwab were winners.

Longwood's record will move to 5-6 (excluding the St. Paul's match) thanks to forfeits from Maryland Eastern Shore (Monday) and Virginia Union (Thursday).

Miller Has Solid Rounds

Longwood golfer Richard Miller fired back-to-back rounds of 76 Friday and Saturday in the Virginia Tech Invitational, but the Lancers could manage only a 15th place finish out of 16 teams. Coach Steve Nelson's squad closes out the season in a quadrangular match at Bridgewater Tuesday and a home match with Mary Washington Monday (April 25).

Other Longwood scores from the Virginia Tech Tournament were: Ty Bordner 80-83-163, Stan Edwards 82-85-167, Glen Bugg 81-86-167, David Ritter 80-87-167 and David Moore 79-92-171.

The Lancers had a fine showing Friday with a 396 but slumped to a 417 Saturday, playing under frigid conditions early in the morning. Longwood dropped from the 12th to 15th with their Saturday showing.

LC Baseball Team Wins 3 of 5

Still struggling to get a winning streak going, Longwood's nationally ranked baseball team won three of five games last week for a 13-6 mark. Looming ahead is an eight-day stretch in which the Lancers still play 13 games.

Longwood coach Buddy Bolding believes his team must put together a strong finish if the Lancers are to have any hopes of returning to the NCAA South Atlantic Regional Tournament.

"We still have a chance, but we've got to get on a roll in this last stretch of games," said the coach. Longwood has been hampered by the loss of 20 rained out contests.

The Lancers suffered a tough 8-6 loss at Maryland Baltimore County in their latest action Sunday, despite a three-run homer by Doug Toombs and solo shots from Allen Lawter and David Rumburg. Longwood held a 5-3 lead after scoring four in the top of the fifth on homers by Toombs and Lawter, but UMBC rallied for four runs in the bottom of the fifth to take the win.

Earlier last week, Longwood swept two from St. Paul's 8-7 and 3-2 Tuesday and split with Mount St. Mary's, losing the opener 3-2, but winning the nightcap 3-1

In the sweep of St. Paul's leading hitter Dwayne Kingery ripped a two-run homer, freshman Chris Wilburn had two hits and two RBI's and Toombs had two hits in three trips to the plate to pace the 8-7 win. Senior Sam Bagley turned in the defensive play of the day when he cut down a St. Paul's runner at the plate with a throw from center field to end the game.

Freshman Larry Allocco went three for three and third baseman John Sullivan had a homer and two hits as Longwood won the second game 3-2. Freshman Scott Mills pitched six innings and got the win with seventh inning relief help from Todd Ashby. Mills allowed just four hits.

Kingery (.365, 16 RBI's) and Sullivan (.352, 16 runs) are Longwood's top two hitters thus far (stats do not include UMBC game). Longwood has a strong team Earned Run Average of 3.25.

Lady Netters Blank Averett

The Longwood women's tennis team won two of three matches last week to raise its season record to 2-3. Longwood blanked Averett 9-0 Monday and Southern Seminary 9-0 Wednesday, before falling to Lynchburg 6-3 Thursday.

This week Longwood travels to VCU Tuesday and Roanoke Thursday before winding up the season Monday (April 25) with a home match against Bridgewater at 3:00.

Lisa Barnes, Heather Gardner and Cathy Morris were the three Lancer winners against Lynchburg in singles competition. Barnes, now 6-1 overall in singles, came back after losing the first set to win the next two sets and the match.

Barbara Cathey, Terri Justice, Karen Craun and Alison Butler along with Gardner, Morris and Barnes, were all victorious against Averett and Southern Seminary in both singles and doubles competition as the Lady Lancers did not lose a match.

Suffolk Natives Double Up For LC Tennis

By BECKY DUNK

Lisa Barnes and Barbara Cathey are two of the most talented tennis players in Suffolk County. They are also teammates at Longwood College.

Barnes and Cathey both graduated from Suffolk High School where they played No. 1 doubles together for several years. But they have also been opponents. While playing summer tennis with the Suffolk Tennis Association, the two have battled it out on the court

Even though they have been partners and opponents, Barnes and Cathey have remained friends both on and off the court. "Barbara and I get along real well," says Barnes.

"I don't mind playing No. 2 when Lisa's playing No. 1," says Cathey. "It's tough playing No. 1 because you play the other school's best player.

At Longwood, Barnes and Cathey are again playing No. 1 doubles. "We've gotten stronger as a doubles team since high school," says Cathey. "Our concentration has really improved.

Earlier this season, Cathey was the No. 1 seeded player, but Barnes recently took the honors from her. Presently, Barnes is No. 1 and Cathey No. 2. The two Suffolk natives challenge each other several times a season for the No. 1 position.

"We challenge each other and switch back and forth from one to two," says Cathey. "The challenge system is good because it keeps me trying to play my best."

Barnes, a senior sociology major, began her tennis career as a freshman at Suffolk High. "I had been playing since I was a kid; I used to hit a ball up against our garage. When I got to high school, I decided to try out for the team and made it.

"After high school I went to Virginia State University. They didn't have a tennis program so I transferred to Longwood so I could play again."

Coach Carrol Bruce has helped Barnes improve her game. "She gives me the incentive to push myself more," Barnes says. "When I make mistakes she encourages me to forget it and keep going."

Barnes' record speaks for itself: six wins against only one - loss this season. Barnes was also named LC Player of the Week in late March.

Cathey's 2-3 record so far this season hardly reflects her ability to play and win. While playing tennis in Suffolk, she won various local titles. In 1980, she was the runner-up in the 18 and under category of the Suffolk Junior Invitational Tournament, and in 1981 was the 18 and under champ in the same tournament. Last summer, Cathey won the Local Women's Championship and teamed up with Barnes to capture the doubles title.

According to coach Bruce, "Lisa has been playing very strong tennis lately. She definitely deserves to be No. 1. Lisa's biggest strength lies in her ability to keep cool and not get nervous."

Like Barnes, Cathey started playing tennis in Suffolk, only at a much younger age. She got involved with the Suffolk Tennis Association at age 10 and has been a member ever since.

"Tennis is a big deal in Suffolk," says Cathey, a sophomore majoring in Elementary Education. "They have a real strong program.

Cathey feels that coach Bruce has had a positive influence on her game. "Mrs. Bruce is a great coach," she says. "She's really interested in each player. She has helped me organize my time so I can get my work done and still play tennis. As a Longwood graduate herself, she can relate to all the work we have to do."

Even though Cathey's present record contains more losses than wins, coach Bruce feels her game is on the upswing. "Barbara has the potential for a winning season," she says. "She has a lot of strength and beautiful execution. She simply needs to calm down and not get nervous on the court."

In several weeks, Barnes will graduate and only Cathey will remain to carry on the Suffolk tradition.

Lacrosse Team Evens up With Wins

Coming on strong after an 0-2 start, Longwood's women's lacrosse team beat Mary Washington 13-7 and Bridgewater 13-5 in action last week to even its record at 2-2. Coach Jane Miller's squad faces a busy stretch of action this week.

Longwood hosts Randolph-Macon Woman's College Tuesday and Hollins Thursday with 3:00 starts and Saturday the Lady Lancers play at Sweet Briar (10:00) and face Notre Dame at 1:00. The four-game stretch will close out the 1983 regular season.

Freshman Susan Groff scored 13 goals in last week's two victories, nabbing seven in the 13-7 win over Mary Washington Thursday and six monre in the 13-5 triumph over Bridgewater on the road Saturday. Groff has scored 21 goals in four games.

Backing up the Lady Lancer scoring leader were Cherie Stevens with six goals in the wins, Lisa Seivold with three and Ann Holland with three. Teresa Alvis also scored a goal in the win over Bridgewater.

In an 11-7 loss to Lynchburg Tuesday, Groff scored three, while Holland, Stevens, Mary Garrison and Rala Heinen scored one. Lorraine Hall had several strong performances from her goalkeeper position last week.

Groff Named LC Player of the Week

Freshman Susan Groff scored seven goals and added two assists Thursday afternoon, leading Longwood to a 13-7 lacrosse victory over Mary Washington. For her efforts, Groff has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 8-15 by the Longwood sports information office.

Also a standout on the Longwood field hockey team in the fall, Groff has scored 21 goals and has more than six assists while helping Longwood compile a 2-2 record. The offensive leader of a young Lady Lancer team, Groff has displayed great quickness and leadership.

"Sue's contributions are not limited to scoring," said Coach Jane Miller. "She played persistent lacrosse this week all over the field. She turned in two super performances."

A graduate of East High School in West Chester, Pennsylvania, Groff played on exceptionally talented teams in both field hockey and lacrosse and also played basketball one year.

Each won the state lacrosse title in 1980 and earned a spot in the semi-finals the following two years. Susan made honorable mention All-League in field hockey in 1981. She was also named to Who's Who Among American High School Students.

For some girls the interest died down after the first few sets of dancers. But for others the fun was just beginning. Each time a guy would come out, he'd have some type of token to give to a girl as she slipped a dollar between his teeth or into his G-string. These tokens consisted of silk roses, clip-on feathers, buttons, necklaces, bumper stickers . . . To receive this money, the girls lined up in a circle waving their dollar in the air and the dancers went around to each one. He would dance for a minute then move on down the line.

Two of the dancers were running a close tie as far as popularity. The other two, however, left much to be desired. By working only for tips, they were having problems. Kinky Ken dances for a living in bars in different towns. For him, the money isn't so bad.

According to Buddy, the owner of this bar, "Kinky Ken runs the show. I pay him a set amount in salary and he recruits the dancers and organizes the show," he lights up a cigarette and continues. "We hold amateur night here once a month. Anyone can try out to be a dancer. It's open to the public so all can come watch. Kinky Ken picks the guys he wants in his shows. I stay out of it all."

Some workers at Newgate (males) expressed their toughts on the dancing. "It's disgusting. Bumping and grinding. It's pornographic except with clothes. They do everything but screw. And these aren't the kind of girls I'd bring home to mom."

A second statement was, "It's cheap. You can compare these girls to the same type of guys that go to strip shows . . . You don't see many Wall Street business men in there."

One guy likes to eavesdrop on girls' conversations while they're in the ladies room. "You can just stand outside by the backdoor and hear everything the girls say. And you wouldn't believe some of the things that come out of their mouths."

Come to find out, the ladies room is where the action is. This is the chance for girls to show off their collection of souvenirs . . . to see who spent the most money and danced the most times. Comments such as, "He's great, I love him," "Kinky Ken is awesome," and "I'm going to keep these forever!" (in reference to a collection of souvenirs) were the topics for many conversations.

One girl expressed her mad passion of Kinky Ken. "I'd love to pull the sequins off his outfit!" A second girl became the envy of all when she said, "The mother of a very good friend of mine makes all Kinky Ken's outfits."

The dancers danced from 8:00 to 10:00 and entertained girls from ages 18 to about 23. Newgate, with its cold brick walls, concrete floor, seemed to be a regular hangout on Monday nights for some girls. "I come here every Monday night," said one young girl who looked about 16 years old. Other girls come just for the one time exposure to such dancing and entertainment.

The dancers were assisted by a number of props which they used as additional entertainment to their dance. Punk-rock glasses, leather whips, bow-ties and bandanas added that extra touch to their performance.

The screeching and squealing encourages the dancers to continue their movements and flirting, which is what brings some girls back every week. Many girls could care less and lose interest quickly in the dancers. A dollar for a 60-second dance is heaven to some girls . . . others wouldn't waste their money, they just had to come for the experience.

VOL. LVIII LONGWOOD COLLEGE, FARMVILLE, VIRGINIA, TUESDAY, MAY 3, 1983 No. 24

Johnson Loses Battle - Wins War

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

The Publications Board of Longwood College met Wednesday, April 20, to hear charges brought against Joe Johnson, Editor of The Rotunda concerning the article "Hard Times at Nottoway: A Student Teacher's Perspective" that appeared in the April 19 issue. After four and one-half hours of deliberation, the Board voted "to reprimand and effective immediately to remove Joe Johnson as editor of The Rotunda for irresponsible and unethical journalistic practices . . ." on the grounds of "(1) Failure to provide an opportunity for the interviewee, Sharon Barton, to review the article prior to publication after telling the interviewee that he would allow her to do so, and (2) The use of real names of some of the high school students referred to in the article, despite his assurance to the interviewee that he would use anonymous names."

According to due process, Johnson had the right to appeal the decision of the Board and he chose to exercise that right. In a letter of appeal to Dr. Janet Greenwood, he said that "to be removed as editor because of a mistake is both unfair and illegal."

It was brought to Johnson's attention that there was no constitution, standards or by-laws that the Publications Board followed. At the very first meeting of the Board last month, Phyllis Mable, Chairman, distributed a copy of a constitution used by the 1974 Publications Board. When asked why Section 3 of the Constitution, guidelines and procedures for removal of editors-in-chief, was not followed in the firing of Johnson, Mable said, "That's not our constitution. That's only a copy of another Board's constitution for us to consider. I don't think we intend to form a constitution, but we will set some journalistic standards."

Johnson claimed that due process was not granted him in the hearing that led to his removal as editor. Johnson was given two hours to prepare a defense and to make arrangements for an attorney to appear with him. Due process guarantees adequate time to prepare defense.

In an appeals hearing last Wednesday, April 27, Johnson and his advisor, Dr. Frank, met with Dr. Greenwood. One of Johnson's main grounds for appeal was that firing him was the simplest political expedient for Longwood to "de-escalate the situation." And that his removal was not entirely based on his offense.

The situation has done everything but de-escalate, in fact it has mushroomed. Reporters from The Richmond-Times Dispatch and The News Leader covered the story and printed several articles. "Hard Times at Nottoway High: A Student Teacher's Perspective," appeared in full in the April 26 edition of the Crewe-Burkeville Journal. There have also been accounts printed in the Nottoway paper.

In an afternoon meeting with Johnson and Dr. Frank, Dr. Greenwood vacated the decision of the Board, and scheduled a re-trial for Monday, May 2. Johnson met with Greenwood again on Friday and filed a letter of resignation as Editor of The Rotunda under conditions to be met by Dr. Greenwood. They are as follows:

1. That Dr. Greenwood appoint an Ad hoc committee whose membership will be formed according to the consititution of the 1974 Publications Board (which included faculty advisors and editors of student publications) and Dr. Greenwood's newly appointed board. This Ad Hoc committee will unanimously ratify a

To the Student Body:

The article which appeared in the April 19 issue of the Rotunda entitled "Hard Times at Nottoway High: A Student Teacher's Perspective" was completely factual and an accurate representation of Nottoway's Basic English class, and Miss Barton's tenure as a student teacher there. I apologize for the use of actual names in the article. It was a mistake which should not have occurred under any circumstances.

Signed, Joe Johnson

BRRRRRING!

A hand slaps down onto the snooze alarm. It's 5:45 a.m. She rolls back over to catch that extra 15 minutes of sleep. But she doesn't sleep. She's looking ahead, thinking about the day's activities . . . a meeting with Dr. Haltzel and Don Lemish . . . the president of SPE . . . SGA activities . . . the Fireside Chat that evening . . . she's organizing her thoughts, planning a time schedule. BRRRRRING! 6:00.

Her thoughts are cut short by the snooze alarm. She reaches for the glasses on her bedside table, throws her blanket aside, and reaches for her robe. She heads towards Jerry's room to wake him up and get ready for school.

Her mother is downstairs cooking breakfast. At 7:00 the three of them eat together in the kitchen, where the family spends most of their time together. By 7:30 she and Jerry are walking out the door. She drops Jerry off at the bus stop at 7:45. By 8:00 she is in her office, preparing to start the day.

She opens her black appointment book. The time slots are penciled in with names, appointments, meetings . . . a day carefully planned, every hour occupied.

It's 10:30 a.m. She's in her office rocking in a black wooden rocker with a tan wide-wale corduroy cushion. The student she is meeting with chooses the green, orange, and blue flowered love seat. He has come with a problem with one of his professors, concerning a grade on a test with which he does not agree. He's not sure how to approach the teacher about it.

"Let's act it out," said Dr. Greenwood. "I'll be you, the student, and you be your teacher." She makes a fist and knocks on an invisible door. "Come in," replied the student. She opens the door. "I have a problem I need to talk to you about," she says. "I don't agree with the grade you gave me on this last test. I think it was graded unfairly." She proceeds to act out the role portraying herself as a frustrated, confused student.

A strong flow of communication between her and the student was established immediately. In one-on-one conversations Janet Greenwood is very alert and responsive. She is able to relate to a diverse group of people and modifies her behavior to the level of the person with whom she is speaking.

Her background in psychology obviously influences her in dealing with other people, knowing how to relate to them and role play. It helps her gain an understanding of people quickly and respond to them accurately.

Role playing may stem from

Archeology Seminar To Examine Early Indians

An upcoming seminar on early Indians will allow people to literally dig through the past.

The "Field Archeology" seminar, sponsored by Longwood College, will be held on Saturday, May 7. Participants will go to the nearby Smith-Taylor Mound site for actual excavation and fieldwork.

The program will examine the lifeways of Virginia Indians before contact with European colonists — food-getting techniques, settlement patterns and the day-to-day behavior of these Indians.

It will be presented by Dr. James Jordan, an associate professor of anthropology at Longwood. Dr. Jordan is coordinator of anthropological studies and head of the sociology and anthropology department. He has directed the Longwood Summer Field School in Archeology for the past three summers.

The seminar will begin with registration in the Wynne Building from 9:30 to 10 a.m. A lecture and slide presentation will follow from 10 to noon. After lunch, thre will be a field trip to the Smith-Taylor Mound from 12:30 to 3 p.m.

The $15 registration fee includes lunch, refreshments and transportation. For more information, contact Longwood's Office of Continuing Studies at 392-9256.

Marsh To Speak At Commencement

John O. Marsh, Jr., Secretary of the Army, will speak at Longwood College's 1983 commencement ceremonies.

The ceremonies will be held on Saturday, May 14, at 9 a.m. on the college's Wheeler Mall. Bachelor's and master's degrees will be awarded to 560 candidates.

Marsh, a 56-year-old native of Winchester, is no stranger to Longwood. His wife, Glenn Ann, is a Longwood graduate and was a member of the first Board of Visitors. Marsh was the Founders Day speaker in 1965.

Marsh was appointed Secretary of the Army in 1981. Previous government posts include assistant defense secretary for legislative affairs (1972-73), assistant to the Vice President (1973-74) and counselor to the President (1974-77).

He served on the U. S. House of Representatives from 1963 to 1971 representing Virginia's 7th District.

From 1977 to 1981, he was a partner in the Washington law office of Mays, Valentine, Davenport & Moore.

Marsh, who once practiced law in Strasburg, also has served on the Shenandoah County School Board, as a judge in Strasburg and as New Market town attorney. In 1959 Marsh was named Outstanding Young Man of the Year by the Virginia Jaycees.

He was a member of the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission from 1966 to 1970.

Artist of the Month —History

Nancy Anne Lang, a Junior Art History Major, wrote the winning Art History paper on Raymond Matthewson Hood, one of the leading proponents of the International style of architecture dominant in U.S. cities during the first half of the 20th century.

Nancy was born in Tacoma, Washington, on January 7, 1962, the youngest in a family of six girls. Following graduation from Osborn High School in Manassas, where she lives with her mother, Lenna Ruth Lang, she came to Longwood with a strong interest in Graphic Arts. She changed to a major in Art History during her sophomore year, and hopes to have a career working in museums.

Active in campus activities, Nancy is a Longwood Ambassador, a member of Geist, Communication Chairman for SGA, as well as a part-time assistant in the Art Department's slide room under the direction of Dr. Elisabeth Flynn.

Artist of the Month —Studio

Steve Kalata, of Farmville, whose coffee table made from five-inch oak pallet boards with raised panel doors, wins the studio Artist-of-the-Month award, is a Junior Biology Major enrolled in Mark Baldridge's woodworking class.

Married to the former Lydia Davenport, Steve works on weekends for his father-in-law, owner of Davenport's Custom Cabinets in Buckingham. The coffee table is part of a two-piece living room set made for his mother-in-law. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Kalata, are retired Navy people now residing in Homestead, Florida.

Steve says that because the table is made of oak, he hopes "it stays around for a long time."

The Artist of the Month Contest is sponsored by the Longwood Art Department, and is open to all students enrolled in art classes at Longwood. Judges for the competition, now in its third successful year, are members of the college's art faculty.

Second place for this month's competition went to Robin Brown, a sophomore art major from Mechanicsville, and third place winner was Lynne Kibblehouse, a Junior Art Major from Ocean City, New Jersey.

Department of Sociology & Anthropology Goes to South Carolina

Thirteen students and faculty members from the Department of Sociology and Anthropology participated in the Carolina Undergraduate Sociology Symposium April 14, 15, and 16 at Francis Marion College in Florence, South Carolina. The Carolina Symposium is an annual meeting of college students and their professors which gives the students the opportunity to present research papers on topics they have studied as undergraduates. Two Longwood College students presented papers at the meeting: Sarah E. Adams reported on "Factors Influencing Attitudes Toward Aging"; and Pamelo Trunko read a paper on "The Evolution of Humans and Their Tools".

Students from a number of other colleges in Georgia, South Carolina, and North Carolina also presented papers.

Dr. Ballard, Ms. Knighton, and Dr. Jordan of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology accompanied the students on the trip. The students who attended the meeting were: Shanna Eyer, Beth Hall, Trisha Alexander, Justine Young, Lydia Millar, Matt Henshaw, Doug Parks, Jo Ann Akers.

Janet Greenwood: A Profile

her background as a dramatic actress, one of her personalities. "In high school I was active in dramatics. I was on the stage a lot doing plays. At one point in time I had to make a decision about whether or not to go into drama full time. I chose not to for various reasons. I had the chance to have a part in the play, The Lost Colony, in North Carolina."

Acting and stage performance proved to be a basic overall shaping prior to her college years. It was an asset, having gotten used to being in front of a crowd of people. It built self-confidence and poise which is required in her position today.

Along with drama, Dr. Greenwood was active in the dance team and the band. "I believed in doing activities which people observed and there was recognition for doing a fine job." This belief obviously still holds true today, with somewhat of a spotlight on her and still the recognition.

The drive and motivation which helped her through the years started in her early childhood. "I remember being told of an aunt of mine who was a surgeon," she said. "Women in professions had it rough back then. That had a great influence on me." And as she grew older, especially in high school, she made an extra effort to fend for herself and develop her own ideas.

Janet lived her high school years to their fullest potential. "I always thought it better to be well-rounded than a bookworm," she began. "If making straight A's meant nothing but studying, I would never do that. With activities I always thought it important to participate in them actively rather than passively.

At 39 years of age, Janet Greenwood is vivacious and purposeful. She has set goals and standards for herself which she is determined to maintain and achieve. Her presidential disposition enables her to become active in many areas on campus at an Accrediting Review, "This is one of the busiest campuses I've ever been at. There is always something to do.

She has an extremely well-rounded background which is a great asset to her in her presidential position. Janet Greenwood has found, "There is no time for personal life."

Her life mainly centers around her career and she finds her personal life has diminished. "That's the price you pay. The competing demands of the job and the family are substantial enough. For example, what I call personal time is sitting down reading a book for enjoyment. And I get a chance maybe twice a year to get my hair done and be pampered. That's about it. There just simply is not the personal time."

As she found many of her friends in the same position say, "You have to put your personal life on the back burner."

Very rarely is Janet Greenwood's personal life ever removed from the back burner. When she can she tries to combine business with pleasure, but this chance does not occur very often. Working 15-17 hours a day with only minutes of free time between meetings has become a natural way of life for her. And she gets by with six hours of sleep a night.

When asked to describe a typical week, Dr. Greenwood laughed and said, "Is there a typical week?" Her schedule for days varies. She generally works from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., often without lunch. But the work does not stop there. Even at home there is paperwork and tasks to do which she couldn't get to during the day. Quite often there are college-related activities and entertainments which she must hostess or attend.

These evening activities are varied . . . dinners, cocktail parties, faculty meetings . . . all of which tend to be very casual as Dr. Greenwood puts emphasis on a casual and relaxed atmosphere.

It's Thursday, March 3, 5:00 p.m. Longwood scholars and prospective scholars are arriving at the President's House for dinner. ARA is serving one of Janet Greenwood's own creations — what she calls a Japanese Mountain Dinner.

Dr. Greenwood comes downstairs in her light blue Ultra Suede suit and walks to the kitchen, a final check to make sure everything is ready. It's time to play the role as hostess.

She walks into the dining room, pausing to talk to faculty members and students. The doorbell rings. She walks through the foyer with grace and style. She opens the door, greeting the guests with a wide smile, taking their coats and engaging them in conversation. She directs them to the parlor to mingle with the other guests.

Nearly 20 minutes later the guests are led to the foyer where the buffet is arranged. Poised on the bottom of the stairs, Dr. Greenwood gathers everyone in front of the long table with its white tablecloth and blue ruffle draped to the floor.

Her fondness of gourmet food may be her reason for such a distaste for junk foods. As it was in college, "I used to live off of pecan twirls, fritos, and Pepsis." However, when she misses lunch or dinner she said, "I often come home and drink three or four diet Pepsis and eat a few slices of cheese and an apple."

Her avoidance of junk foods helps Janet Greenwood to stay slim. "I don't believe in dieting to lose weight unless it is done with the aid of appropriate foods." She is a firm believer in proper food and nutrition.

Her style of dress is casual and conservative.

Casualness is also noticeable through Janet Greenwood's mannerisms. It is Wednesday, March 2, 7:00 p.m. . . . a Fireside Chat at the President's House. Faculty members are in the sitting room, conversing, drinking coffee and soft drinks.

Dr. Greenwood walks down the stairs. Pausing halfway down she turns around, relaying an authoritative "No" to her son . . . blunt and final. She walks down the last few steps ready to greet her guests. Her eyes are sparkling and she smiles.

Moments later everyone congregates in the sitting room. The chairs dispersed around the worn oriental rug begin to fill up. Janet Greenwood sits down in a worn, white wicker chair. She crosses her legs, adjusts her glasses and folds her arms in front of her. The speaker begins. As she progresses, Janet Greenwood becomes less attentive. Occasionally she glances about the room observing the guests. She fiddles with her nails, her fingers, a piece of jewelry, then directs her attention back to the speaker. From upstairs comes clatter and rustling, Jerry getting into something. She glances upward at the ceiling and shakes her head.

At the end of the night she settles back. She leans against a table, stretches her legs out in front of her, hands behind her back. She's thinking she will have a few minutes to spend with Jerry.

After 15 hours of business she looks fresh and alert. The bright yellow suit emphasizes her glowing personality. A faculty member approaches saying, "You look as if you haven't done anything all day." Dr. Greenwood replies jokingly. "Oh, No. I've just been resting up all day just for this entertainment." After two years it is obvious she has built up a tolerance to her tedious days.

She has a great sense of humor which she uses to her advantage at times. It is dinner. The table is set formally and with elegance. . . with her ARA dinnerware. A guest arrives late and tries to slip quietly into his chair knocking plates and silverware, causing a big scene. "Like I said, make yourself at home," laughed Dr. Greenwood, lessening his embarrassement.

At a social hour for the Accrediting Review her self-confidence and sophistication are visible. She talks slowly and precisely . . . properly. She folds her arms in front of her, shifts her weight to one side and swings her leg in front of her, slightly off to the side. She rests on the heel of her shoe, twisting it side to side, side to side . . .

She walks across the room into the foyer. She places one foot on the bottom stair and leans against the banister. There are two other women there, talking about their children and Dr. Greenwood talks about her 11 year old Jerry. The conversation shifts to the Miss Longwood Pageant.

She moves onto other guests. Her movements are smooth and distinct occasionally as she talks. She uses hand motions for emphasis.

The men and women here are from all over the U.S. They are fascinated by Janet Greenwood. "She's quite a lady," "She's remarkable", "a unique individual" were comments they use to describe her. They are curious about her, asking one another questions concerning her. They are interested in her many roles.

Thursday, 8:00 a.m. Janet Greenwood is sitting behind her desk checking her datebook. She sets it aside, time for coffee. She walks down the hall to the dining hall, making her daily visit. She is greeted by students and faculty members. She takes time to talk to everyone while she drinks her coffee. She is in no hurry, as if she has plenty of time to spare, just as she is in her office in meetings with individuals. She avoids being rushed and allows time for casual conversation whenever possible. She gets another cup of coffee, adds Sweet 'n' Low. . . back to the office. She and I are back in her office . . . I have been observing her for two weeks, attending meetings, dinners and speeches with her, following her all day long, watching her act out her roles and portray her many personalities.

She directs me to the chair behind her desk. "You be Madam President for the day," she says. "I'll come around onto this side. Make yourself comfortable, move whatever you need to move." The two make small talk which leads to Janet Greenwood's college days.

Her role as an R.A. is brought up. "I took an R.A. position in a dorm with apathetic students. My goal was to change its image." For Janet Greenwood the leadership and motivation was apparent even then.

She worked at various jobs during the summer to pay for college. "I found all of these experiences (her different jobs)

Green and Whites Show True Color
A Review

By DAVID S. AREFORD

One might call this a "review," but the subject matter of this article is hardly deserving of a detailed examination. It is a program that is so shallow and thin, so worthless that the effort of a "review" would be wasted. But in the name of justice, the following thoughts have been recorded. The inspiration for these thoughts took place on Tuesday, April 26 — "A day that will live in infamy." If you missed this event, do not be upset, for all you missed was the "Senior Assembly" — one of the worst events (next to Oktoberfest) to limp across Jarman's stage. Let us hope that the messy green and white trail they left behind can be cleaned up for good.

First of all, the title "Senior Assembly" seems to be a front for this all-too-familiar clique of "Rah-Rahs." You know who they are and they certainly do not represent Longwood's Senior class; they represent and promote themselves.

Just what do these people stand for?! They call themselves "Rah-Rahs"; they object to and criticize The Rotunda; they support the administration. But wait — the bulk of their assembly included skits which criticized the administration — not just light comedy, but vicious, biting "satire" (which is too fine of a word to stand for this trash). The final skit was "A day with Dr. Greenwood," in which each Longwood administrator reported to the president answering the question, "What have you done today to mess up the students?"

Are these people "two faced?" Do they work with administration to enhance their position when in actuality they could not care less about Longwood's administrators or the "sun-burst" image? They have certainly confused their position.

One skit confused me even more. The skit involved three characters: an Army recruiter, played by Ross Conner, interviewing two young men, one of which was "Blow Johnson," played by John Todd, and the other was "Walt," played by Mark Winecoff. The crude take-off on Joe Johnson's name and the stereotypical representations of homosexual speech, dress, and actions gave a clue to what was to follow. I'm sure that the individuals involved strongly objected to "Running Scared," a previous article in The Rotunda, and this skit was supposed to express that objection, but if "Running Scared" was crude and a bad reflection on Longwood, then this was equally crude and tasteless.

The recruiter's first question to "Walt:" "How big are you?" Then the "Walt" character asked what he would be doing in the army. The recruiter answered, "You'd be mostly in the rear." Then "Walt:" "I want to do something with my hands." "You mean a hand-job?," the recruiter asked. Then "Walt:" "Can I get a head?," to which the recruiter answered, "Oh, you can just hang out." Thank goodness that is all the puns that the writers of this garbage came up with.

What is this "blue and white" and "green and white" spirit, this "spirit of Longwood" that these people always brag about? I had assumed it was friendship, honor, commitment, love for your fellow man — in short, some of the main principles of Christianity — a "love thy neighbor as thyself" and "turn the other cheek" code of living. Boy! was I wrong.

The skit mentioned above proves my point. Not only did the writers pick one of the touchiest issues of this year, but these believers in "green and white love" showed their true colors — bigotry, cruelty, name-calling and a total lack of respect for their fellow human beings. The skit was a vicious and unwarranted attack on a member of the Longwood student body. Do these people have no sense of decency? It is hard for me to understand such cruelty and hatred.

An ironic twist to this evening of bad entertainment was the disheartening revelation that two of the "Walt" skit members, Ross Conner and John Todd, were members of one of the supposedly most well respected and prestigious organizations on campus — Chi.

If these people wish to display their faults in public, thank goodness that this was their last effort. The individuals who made up the program have twisted a knife into their own gut and have added another loss for the ragged "color-class" army. The battle is over. Let this group fade away. Their banner of green, red, and blue is tattered and there is no hope of repairing it. Let it fall to the ground and be buried and forgotten.

Letter to Nottoway High

To Nottoway High School,

I apologize for the use of actual names in the April 19 Rotunda article entitled "Hard Times at Nottoway High — A Student Teacher's Perspective." It was not meant to be an intentionally malicious article. The names appeared through an oversight on my part for which I take full responsibility.

Although damage has been done, I hope the student body and faculty of Nottoway High School can understand the reasons behind such an article as well as Sharon Barton's desire to go through with an interview leading to the article.

We had both hoped that it would lead towards an understanding of the difficulties facing adolescents today and towards a more practical approach in dealing with "problem" students that one could find in any high school in the United States.

Again, I can only reiterate how sorry I am that this article has caused so much pain. I wish it could have been helpful, as was my intention. A copy of this letter will appear in The Rotunda, Longwood College's student newspaper.

Signed, Joe Johnson

By Garry M. Callis

On Tuesday, April 19, The Rotunda released an article on the front page of this edition entitled "Hard Times at Nottoway High. . . A Student Teacher's Perspective." This contraversial article created a great amount of racial tension at Nottoway High School and here at Longwood.

The black students here at Longwood received this article as a direct slap in the face. The plot of the article itself, we would all freely admit, is one that would be classified as news anywhere (in that 18, 19 and 20 year olds lacking reading skills and are very close to illiteracy is something everyone would care to know about). But, of course, there is a way to present any type of bizarre and unusual situation or occurrance. The strong use of adjectives describing each individual was tasteless and unnecessary. The use of real names and the actual school system showed a lack of sensitivity and irresponsibility. When we (Alliance of Black Students) first sat down to discuss the article, everyone had mixed feelings. At the meeting, along with us, was the Dean of Student Affairs, Ms. Phyllis Mable along with Miss Sharon Barton (the student teacher that is mentioned throughout the article). The room in which we met was filled with anger and tension. The ABS wanted nothing less than a formal apology from The Rotunda. The article was taken apart at the conference line by line. Certain things like: "They're out there. . .12th grade black boys twice as big and twice as dark. . ." and other racial comments made during the duration of the article were the items of discussion that evening. The next day a few black representatives met with Dr. Greenwood. After this meeting things started falling into place.

The Rotunda is supposed to be representative of all Longwood students. The way the article was written was representative of only the white majority. But we, the black minority, are still represented by this paper and would not like to see this type of thing happen again.

Guest Editorial

They came out in blue robes at 10:00 to the parking lot of Wygal Music Building April 26 and sang their songs — CHI — decked out to the hilt in full blossom, who, if one didn't know their purpose, would assume they were a band of KKK looking for stray ethnics to burn crosses on their lawn or lynch, perhaps. But, of course, Chi is not the KKK. They are, according to Stephen Meyers, senior Chi member an organizational whose purpose it is to maintain "the spirit" of Longwood College, by giving commendations to those who do not always receive recognition and by handing out Chi stamped waxed sealed bottles of ashes.

The organization orginated sometime in 1900 at Longwood College and started such unique traditions as painting abstract symbols on sidewalks and wearing robes. No one knows exactly why they started or why they paint abstract symbols on sidewalks or why they give people commendations with ashes. No one is even sure who they are. They're a mysterious bunch — these hooded people.

According to what Chi members announced at the ceremony last Tuesday they are the personification of the "pursuit of sincere leadership, scholarship, fellowship and the continuance of the blue and white spirit. . .Chi is an ideal spiritt that cannot be found in any one person — You are that spirit, you are the Chi to whom we burn."

I'm Chi? Come on fellows, the only thing I know about you is your robes and the blue carnations you set in the dining hall when you're about to appear.

I've heard rumors though. When Chi was in its infancy and Longwood was still an all female institute it is rumored Chi would commend some students but would take disciplinary measures against others. They would single out students guilty of a certain offense and catch them alone in their dorm rooms or on campus grounds and circle them screaming mystic chants and accusations. It is rumored one female student died of a heart attack because of Chi efforts.

But that doesn't happen anymore, Chi just commends students, faculty or administrators in ceremonies like the one on April 26, where they burn boxes and chant names, make broad proclamations and single out people they feel are worthy of praise.

Membership in the organization is kept strictly secret and members are only revealed at the annual "burning" ceremonies when the seniors remove their hoods and show their proud faces.

Looking into the face of a Chi member is like watching Teriasis reincarnated, it's like wisdom and omnescience unveiled. These are the students who hold Longwood's spirit in their hands. They're prophets maybe, or augurers of some type. They read the entrails of Longwood and proceed to prophesize. It's really a beautiful scene.

Their genius for choice of people to be commended should be pointed out. Last year they commended a convience store. This year they commended Dr. Greenwood and Phylis Mable who it must be admitted do a fine job at being President and Vice-president of Longwood College, respectively. Years from now, people will look back at this commendation and say "imagine that, Chi knew enough to commend the President and one of the Vice-presidents of Longwood — can't pull the rugs over those Chi eyes. They know what's going on, yes sir, what foresight."

No doubt about it. When 200-300 people get together at 10:00 on a Tuesday night to watch a group of hooded students commend a person who makes close to $50,000 a year for doing her job — that's something really mystical. Downright miraculous, only Longwood could have pulled it off. . .with the spirit of Chi, of course.

consistent with the development of the kind of credentials that made the difference when the interviews came along."

Janet Greenwood attended Peace College in Raleigh, N. C., with a concentration in teaching. After two years she transferred to East Carolina and had a double major in English and psychology. "I joined a sorority where, after being an only child, I learned how to negotiate with people. It proved to be an enriched learning experience."

Born and raised in Goldsboro, N.C., Janet Greenwood stayed there through her fifth year post bachelor's degree. "At that time I finished my master's degree in counseling while I had been working in merchandising part time. After a two year counseling position in a hospital, I decided I wanted to work with college age and older adults. I went back to school to get my doctorate degree. It was around this time I decided there were three things I wanted to do in life and in no particular order."

These three things consisted of:

1) teaching graduate education; 2) become a university administrator; 3) do psychotherapy and organizational consulting.

"It was in 1973 I made the decision to become a college president. I started working towards that goal. I wanted to reach it within 10 years.

"I had to make a lot of compromises and give up a lot of things. I feel that I couldn't have done it unless I had a lot of support because there are so many obstacles and so many chances to quit and give up. Without adequate support and self-confidence, I know I would have never done it.

Janet Greenwood sat back in her chair and fiddled with a pen on her desk. "The easiest way to do it was just not to do it at all. But that was not her style. She enjoyed a challenge and was full of potential and determination.

Her office, decorated in contrasting blues and oranges allowed for a warm setting. The two love seats in their bold flowered print looked comfortable and "homey." A rocker was placed at the end between them, the chair Dr. Greenwood chose mostly during meetings. Scattered throughout her office were pictures, photographs, diplomas and odd knick-knacks, obviously sentimental memoirs.

Behind her desk two walls were shelved with hundreds of books. Among these were books on Freud and Gestalt, a Webster dictionary, books on counseling, the family, psychology . . . all of which were standing at different angles.

Her desk had a glass cover on it. Under it lay various comic strips. Amongst them was one of her favorites, Beetle Bailey, photographs . . . of Jack Nicklaus and of horses. A horseback-rider, another one of her characters. But there is not much time for that to fit into her schedule. A phone, a box of blue kleenex tissues, a lamp, mail, a pen holder and stacks of papers were neatly arranged on her desk. On her stereo she was playing classical music. The grandfather clock chimed to the time and echoed throughout the office.

Dr. Greenwood took a sip of coffee from the dining hall cup. She began talking about Jerry . . . the mothering role. As much time as possible is devoted to Jerry. This includes during the week as well as weekends. During warm weather they enjoy going to Kings Dominion and Busch Gardens. Extra effort is made to spend time with him and his friends, taking them on all day ventures. Dr. Greenwood also spends extra time with him on homework.

Between the two, they maintain an open relationship and communication. "We have a pretty good understanding of what we expect of each other.

"My basic belief of parenting is

Life in Cox: Broken Bottles & Shorty

By MIKE LYNCH

"Hey there! How ya doin?" The man making the small talk is a janitor. He turns around and is greeted by two more students. "Whaddya say? What's up this mornin boys?" His assignment is to keep clean the closest thing to a Hell-hole on Longwood College's campus; Cox Dormitory. His name is Ken Giles but all the residents of Cox simply call him "Shorty", and because of his hard work and congeniality on the job, Cox is a much better place to live than before.

To say that it looks as if a hurricane hit after two straight nights of partying in Cox is an understatement. As the typical man of Cox looks out of his door on a Sunday morning he can tell how things went. An unfortunate freshman limps back to his room after having wandered out into the hall, having learned one of the principles lessons of a morning in Cox before Shorty has been there. Don't walk barefoot in the halls. His foot is bleeding after having located a spot where somebody broke a bottle the night before.

Somebody else walks by and due to the beer covered floor, his Nike's sound like the soles are made of suction-rubber. It is as if somebody is ripping one of those rubber mats you put in a shower off the surface repeatedly as the student paces by. The Cox man looks back in his room at the bottles and food cluttered across it. Tables and lamps are knocked over. The closet doors are knocked off their tracks and are resting on the clothes that are still hamging up. "Must have had a good time, last night," the Cox man says to himself.

From inside the bathroom comes a nasty stench and the sounds of a young man who sounds as if he is gagging. "Oh Christ, I've got nothing left to throw up! Just let me lay down and die!" comes a voice reverberated by the bare tiles. "I guess he had a good time last night too," observes the Cox man. "For a while anyway."

Inside the bathroom are some empty kegs, the stale beer on top beginning to smell like it should be flushed down the john along with whatever the retching young man is depositiong in it. "Yeah, I definitely had a good time," the Cox man states.

For one final check, he opens up his wallet which is empty. "Great time!"

"It's unique. That's a good word," said Tom Nanzig, Director of Housing, when his opinions on Cox were asked of. "A lot of people have probably said nasty things about it. And that's unfortunate because there are probably many people who have enjoyed their friendships and their relationships." And the best relationship Nanzig mentioned was the relationship between Shorty Giles and anybody who should happen to meet him. "He is the most responsible, dependable custodial worker that I have gotten to know. He is just . . . he goes. He goes at his work with both fists."

First floor is the plainest looking full-size floor in Cox. No murals are painted on the wall and nothing is posted on the bulletin board. Anyone who has any intentions of posting announcements or Slater menues or relavent news articles knows that that piece of paper will probably be torn down before the end of the day. Shorty will often be up on first floor before daylight, doing his chores. And even that early in the morning he is open and talkative to anyone who might be alert enough to converse with him.

Unlike your typical student tour guide, who only points out Cox dorm long enough to identify it as a place to avoid, Shorty is fond of the men living in the building he nearly singlehandedly takes care of. "I think they're good guys and I have really enjoyed working with them. I haven't worked with anybody better." When reminded that these men are the rowdiest, noisiest, most destructive people on campus, Shorty seems unperturbed. "Well, they have their times." As for the mess, "When there's that many guys in one building, you're gonna have that."

On second floor, the green and yellow mural that extends halfway down the hall makes it obvious whose territory this hall is. Delta Sigma Phi, spelled out in the greek initials, dominates the view of the hall and the men of this fraternity likewise dominate the second floor.

"Cox would not be Cox with Delta," stated Doug Woods who, although not a Delta himself, prefers to live with Delta Sigma Phi, explaining why he prefers to live with men who have not nearly always gone out of their way to convey a 'nice, respectable, boy-next-door image.' "It's been interesting. When you've got to study you can study. But when you want to have a good time they're here. There's alwasy somebody on this hall you can have a good time with."

When you go to a party at Delta Hall, you would be well advised to follow the same rules for riding a roller coaster. "Expectant mothers, those with weak hearts or on medication, elderly people, children and those who are not prepared for anything and everything are not encouraged to enter this party."

The first eye catcher on second floor is the bulletin board. Unlike first floor, nothing gets torn down from this board, although some of it should be. A newspaper article on the highly important topic of dipping snuff seems to be the most recent thing attached to the board. Next ot it is the Delta shitlist with attached pictures with beards and moustaches drawn in for extra appeal. And above that is one particular item of concern for those who might elect the wrong mode of transportation after having had too much beer, courtesy of Delta Sigma Phi. "If you can see this let someone else drive. O.K?"

But the Deltas have definitely adjusted to life in Cox, as Mike Ellis, a member of the fraternity relates, "We love it. We wouldn't want to be anywhere else. That's the feeling of most of the guys." The Delta's have prospered in Cox, expanding their membership to its limits and not nearly having enough room for all its members who wish to live on the hall.

And like everyone else, the Delta hall is appreciative of Shorty for at least somewhat keeping the inherent chaos of second floor under control. "Shorty's made this place 100 percent better than it was before he got here. He's shown he cares, and by doing that, he's made us care," said Woods.

Proceeding down the hall on the third floow of Cox, the appearance is sharp. The predominant color is red, running halfway up either wall and extending the length of the hall. The red is trimmed by either black or yellow depending on which end of the hall the observer is at and the logos of three well defined social groups, the Heartbreakers, Force 25 and Thunder Row have been placed near the respective group members' rooms.

In a room near the Force 25 logo, Al DelMonte and Jamie Mariness were sitting with some friends in what was left of their room. They had held a weekend long party and the room could be aptly described as trashed. The uncarpeted floor was filthy with the exception of the hallway and all stationary objects in the room were obsiously not too stationary over the weekend.

"This is the coolest place I've known," said DelMonte, "it's got nice big rooms so you can build some decent lofts up here. "No loft would have survived what went on in this room last weekend. The fact that the hallway was clean while the rest of the room was demolished was explained by Mariness. "After the party, Shorty came in the room and mopped up my hallway." Del Monte harped in "Shorty's great. He gets things done for us."

Tom Nanzig summed up just what Shorty has to deal with in Cox Dorm. "Everybody has their favorite object to vandalize." And Nanzig reported, "in Cox, it seems the guys took out after the doors." Indeed, last year was evidence of this as the majority of the doors in Cox had these nice neat four inch circumference holes, resulting from a fist, which apparently could not find a face to hit instead. Last year, approximately 60 of the 100 room doors in Cox were replaced.

And if doors didn't thrill the aggressors enough, windows were next. It would seem that since an appreciable loss of blood and a hospital bill usually resulted from punching out a window, these incidences would - be almost nonexistant, but every once in a while, the shattered glass and resulting trail of blood would indicate that another Cox man had shown another Cox window who's boss. Actually, according to Nanzig, "Last year was the last real bad year for breaking windows."

Why the men of Cox seem to have such little appreciation for their "home sweet home" is largely unexplained but Nanzig speculated alcohol, a kind of macho image and resentment towards the college as a whole as some of the major reasons. "The term they used was 'rage out.' If you don't change the visitation rules, we're gonna rage out.

On the first floor bulletin board where nothing stays up for long there appeared a card for Thanksgiving. The card, signed "Shorty and Wife" was thanking the boys for the turkey they had given him. Nobody tore down the card.

Riding Blue: At the Station, Haddock and Bama Lamb

..Editor's Note: The following is an excerpt from a short story written about the Richmond Police ride-along program that Mr. Calihans "Administration of Criminal Justice" class participated in. Because of the nature of the article, the names have been changed.

The patrolmen were standing in the neat marble building of the precinct built across from the Richmond coliseum waiting to be inspected by a 4-month pregnant 1st sargeant wearing a yellow maternity dress.

Harison and Ricken who had left that Tuesday early in the afternoon through a fine drizzle from a small southern sticks town named Farmville, were sitting way to the left in two elementary school desks which had graffite still scarred across their top "Miss Thompson gives head" and "Julie loves Pedro". Before, they had watched the eight men in blue circle around a long oaken table in the center of the room and had listened to the confused conversation that had erupted and died and lingered like solidifying lava.

Hey Suz, I'm short two units.

Whatya want — everbody's short . . . make do.

You might pull one from Larry in 2nd precinct.

Forget it, Larry is up to his eyeballs in shortages — Harry's out with pneumonia and Tubbie's broke his arm.

Tubby, nahw, not Captain America himself.

Hey, he's alright

So what's going down over there on West Cary?

Why?

I hear Tipsys back in action.

Got parole already?

Jesus where's the coffee?

I got a bone to pick with you Malaney

What, the dude hit his head on my door, what'd he say anyhow?

Alright listen, I need 5 for Churchill.

Good luck.

I'm serious.

What's happening?

Mac can you help?

I'm task force Suz, you know that?

Alright task force on Churchill then.

Capieche?

yeh

ready?

yeh, yeh, ok. (unintelligible) shit.

Across from the rambling voices of the conference table on the wall above the blue-be-capped heads were maps of Richmond divided into precincts, and a locked wooden box for parking tags and traffic summons, file cabinets and a poster with the infamous take a bite out of crime hound dog pointing to a gruesome scenario. A woman and a man are sprawled behind a series of blackish grey garbage cans in some unknown yet archetypical dark alley. The woman is obviously screaming, her mouth wide and frightened, teeth bare, the logo reads "A Mid Summers Night Scream".

During the inspection the men stood as half-disciplined privates bemoaning the formality, yet standing slightly more erect than normal. The blond-haired 1st Sargeant named Suz, who had one more night left on active duty went up and down the line, eyes sharp for nothing in particular except perhaps the two "ride alongs" that sat in the corner and had not said a word for the better part of an hour.

She had seen their type before, interested and eager, wanting to learn about the logistics of police law and order, or, she thought, probably looking for a little excitement, the oft-blessed tingle of police work which could wear on you like a thinning penny. Had she been only half as impregnable as her personality, she would still be on the street too, as it was though, she was due for a 5-month leave and possible change of job — paper work would be coming her way in a hurricane of triplicate forms and typed carbon copies. C'est la Vie. The way of the working woman.

She smiled to the men as they got ready to leave. J. T. said, "See you later Suz" and grabbed her behind. "You do that again and your gonna draw back a nub, J.T.", he smiled, tried to look hurt, and said, "You saving it for somebody? Used to be share and share alike." The 1st Sarg turned red. "Get out of here . . wait a minut, wait a minute, you got a ride along." She pointed to Burgett who was still sitting in the elementary school desk.

"Yeh." J.T. turned to the blonde haired boy. He looked like the all American kid from New York — brown corduroy sports coat, brown corduroy pants, white shirt, hush puppies, blue eyes and a black spindle notebook. The other kid looked like his Jewish lawyer— that was Ricken who sat writing everything he heard and saw, "Come on" "what's his name?" "Harison" "Come on Harison."

From Haddock's view the city bristled with energy, like a cat running blind out of a shaken duffel bag, hot street lights and painted ladies priming their ware for furtive glances from streaming rows of bug topped volkswagens, cutlasses, trans ams, Jacuzzis and family stationwagons,all hurtling along the white limits of Broad Street. Monday is no exception, the city lights never go out and it is here, life in a maelstrom of ceaseless energy that Haddock sought refuge — a little R&R.

His prison-issued parolee jeans and blue work shirt were no mark of distinction nor scarlet letter in the heaving city. He is free; two days fresh from Powhatan Prison, where he had spent 5 years studiously denying all legitimate urges and Haddock means to live it up — to the top.

At 10:00 Tuesday morning, red eyed and still drunk, Haddock trundles down Broad Street catching hold of the parking meters like intermittent crutches. Swinging from each to each watching for a dry nook, to doze for awhile and collect the fragments of his thought. He stumbles into the street and back on the sidewalk bumping into a 40 year old, silver haired business woman. He burps and stumbles on. The rain pecks at his back and rolls down his collar, he slaps at the ubiquitous droplets, snarling. People walking down Broad Street get out of his way and turn to watch, in the wake of the stumbling drunk. Finally he lurches into the Greyhound Bus Station on Broad Street, where occasionally the residue of the city collects in a tribal like commune of drunks and Junkies to combine being firm with loving. I think a child's wants, needs and should be given expectations and standards to live up to. I don't believe in a laissez-faire approach, letting the child be and do whatever he wants to do and be."

She does not need to repeat herself with Jerry. Things are stated only once. A stern look is also sufficient at times. This sternness may be carried over from her days as an English teacher. "I gave students negative grades on papers, minus 20's and 30's. They had the chance to rewrite them. I believe writing is nothing but discipline.

The kaleidoscope turns once again, one sees Janet Greenwood — the fund-raiser. Fund-raising requires much traveling time. "On the average I'm out of town one day a week, 20 per cent overnight. I do just enough to get the job done. I try not to be gone overnight.

"You have to establish relationships with different groups of people, to help the college and get them interested. I'm a salesperson for this institution. I represent it. It's very important to be assertive. Traveling on a plane I don't sleep. I meet a lot of people this way and if there's any chance by the time I get off the plane the person sitting beside me will be a potential contributor to the college.

I'm a salesperson for this institution.

Her prospects are national foundations and all businesses. This traveling does not include vacation time. "I've had a two day vacation in two years."

Traveling and college related duties leave little time for leisure activities. While Dr. Greenwood enjoys all sports, particularly basketball, she said, "It's very difficult in time management to go to athletic activities. There are so many at competing times with so many other activities. I try to strike some sort of balance but it is tough to do. I go to some and would like to go to all, but it just simply is not possible.

Between traveling, sports, horseback riding . . . Dr. Greenwood is carrying out another role, that of a journalist. She is in the process of writing a chapter for a book on academic advising. She was asked by authors from Jose Bass Publishers to write. "It's titled Academic Advising in Student Development. It is designed to help students attain educational and personal goals."

Her community involvement reveals more personality and role-playing. "I try to stay active at a personal level. I'm a member of the Junior Woman's Club, Longwood Garden Club . . and there are events at the Longwood House and the college that we encourage the community to come to. At Christmas we have an open house and bring people from the surrounding community to help decorate. At Easter we have an Easter egg hunt for the children in the community.

"On at least one occasion I was a reader for our church service. Jerry has been an acolyte at the Episcopal church and has been in the choir. We try to get to church when we can."

Her role of a teacher appears again here at Longwood. "While in Cincinnati, my work led to the development of video cassettes, which deal with women and leadership skills. It focuses on assertive training, power, leadership, and androgyny and issues related to women in organizations and their power or lack of it. I use these tapes in a Senior Seminar in psychology which I teach. I taught the course here last spring and would like to teach it at least once a year."

Through her busy hours Janet Greenwood has taken the time to consider her plans for the future, playing more roles, portraying new personalities. "I see myself at Longwood at least through 1989. I see my work at the college taking years. One day I'd like to do psychotherapy again and work with psychosomatics. At one point I'd like to do full time teaching and research at the graduate level . . . at one point I'd like to be a chief executive at a business industry."

As far as politics . . . "I have no desire to become involved in politics. I can't even imagine what would get me into it."

"You have to establish relationships with different people."

It's late at night . . . 10:00 p.m. Jerry is in bed. She thinks about the paper work, at least an hour's worth of it. It has to be done every day. She proofreads letters to four institutions in France, formally inviting their presidents to Longwood College. Usually she would just sign her first name but she worries about protocol.

Tomorrow will be here shortly . . . the turn of a kaleidoscope brings new colors and patterns. For Janet Greenwood tomorrow brings new people and situations . . . more role playing . . . different characters and personalities. . .

Riding Blue: At The Station, Haddock And Bamalamb

spitting out pieces of broken luck — a snoring daydream of tourists, pimps, queens and black bolted quarter anhour televisions sets.

"Ricken."

Ricken looked up.

"You, Ricken."

"Yes sir."

A tall black man about 6'4" in the brown city of Richmond police force uniform looked down at him. This was Mac Tried of the Police Task Force who got drafted to Churchill for the graveyard shift 3 to 11 which Ricken would be riding along on.

"What ja got all the stuff for?" Mac nodded in the direction of the ridealongs Canon FTb which tangled, wrapped by a patent leather shoe string, off his left arm and in the direction of his notebook, that had been flayed open to a bare page and already had extensive scribblings half way down its blue and red margining lines.

"Working on an article for a class," said Ricken following the tall black man who was heading for the 1st precincts front glass door which has as its view the Richmond Coliseum.

"You go to school or something?" They stopped just prior to the glass door in the foyer to 1st precincts offices and conference rooms.

A light skinned receptionist with pulled back brownish red hair wrapped in a bun under her hexagonally pointed cap looked up at Ricken, "Take my picutre and we'll arrest you on the spot . . . you wired for sound too?" Ricken feigned guilt, "Who me?"

"You go to school around here?"

"I go to Longwood down in Farmville," said Ricken

Mac glanced over at the latin featured boy, "Longwood, I thought that was an all girls school," he picked up his two way radio with its squat thick black antenna and a wad of arrest report forms. Ricken pulled up his levis around his belly button and said, "Well, it used to be but not anymore."

"Uh huh-bet you like it down there with all them women."

"It's not bad."

"Whatcha doing up here, looking for cheap thrills?"

Ricken thought that might be the case as they walked out to Mac's car — number 215 — and watched Harison wave just before he ducked his blonde head into car 217 with J. T. and another patrolman. It was drizzling when Mac started the engine.

The first thing Harison noticed when they walked into the Greyhound Bus Station was the thin white stream of saliva running down the corrugated plastic sides of the pay television set and the small scar perpendicular to Haddocks right eye. "He was a mess, short and skinny, with two missing teeth, all the rest of them were brown."

Haddock didn't hear when J. T. yelled for him to wake up Had he known that a Richmond policeman will not wake up a drunk by slapping him, perhaps he would have obliged and driven himself out of his Narcoleptic state with the first clamoring of voices, but he didn't and instead shifted his scraggly beard a little for comfort on the black plastic pillow. This left J. T. no choice but to use the billy club in soft jabs at the arm and lower abdomen regions. "Hey you, come on, wake up."

Haddock felt the jabs and thought he was back in prison, thought a bastard guard was poking him for something, thought the billyclub was a sawed off shotgun aimed at hsi liver. He grapped at J. T.'s club and howled because he wanted all the inmates to know what was going down. The people at the bus station heard him. They turned and looked at J. T. who had swung his billyclub away from Haddock and at Harison the all American kid from New York and at the Rookie Patrolman who was staring wide eyed at the drunk who was now screaming at the top of his intoxicated lungs, "Leave me the fuck alone I ain't working today, I'm sick . . .I'm sick can'tdja tell!"

At 205 K Street 3 days before that Tuesday, Bama had walked a drunken line down the cracked mortar blocked sidewalks to Morris Buckley's house. Morris owed him $5.00 for a bottle of Gordon's Gin which he had bought the day before, ostensibly to be divided between the two of them on the front porch of his apartment. Morris, at the time did not want to "split no bottle of liquor with no sour mouth", and had taken Bama's bottle and "ran like a squirrel, the son of a bitch." Bama was out to collect that Sunday. He had knocked on the door to Morris' apartment wearing the same clothes he would wear when Mac would take him in. He had gone out and bought another bottle of Gin after Morris had stolen his, and had drank it the night before in rushing tearful gulps of anger until he had passed out. Bama had stood before Morris' door Sunday, still drunk and angry. He had yelled and slammed his fist against the heavy beige painted and chpped metal door. He was 63 years old.

Bama "couldn't rightly say" what happened next. Morris had thrown the door open and shoved Bama hard against the chest with the end of a broomstick and Bama somehow had found a brick in his hand and saw Morris lying near his feet with blood sticking to the back of his neck. Bama had wandered home — a little more sober, a little less angry.

Ricken and Mac were heading east on the 33rd street bridge lined with inward bent fences which kept the disillusioned from jumping and slowing the traffic below when they heard the call over the Master II solid state police radio.

"Car 215 pick up wanted person Harry S. as in Sam Leaving, black male, 5' 11", weight 165, alias Bama Lamb, at 305 M Street, warrant on file — felonious assault with a brick"

Mac lit the first Merit of his shift. He was a tall stocky veteran of Vietnam where he had spent 3 years as a chopper pilot flying combat missions,. His hair was cropped and if there was a toughness about him it was hidden under an open smile, devoid of cynicism. He had acclimated himself easily to police work. It had its militaristic aspects and he fitted easily into that sort of meritorous hierarchy with the usual "brown nosing" and internal politics which accompany any hierarchy.

He told Ricken on the way to pick up Bama that he had gotten into police work to help people and not to bust heads. Ricken wrote it on his pad and stared at Mac who watched the road, gunning the plymouth a luxury — he and Harrison would later decide — in which all policemen indulged.

Mac lived in the city which was required of all Richmond policemen. Urbanity, however, was not in his blood, he belonged to the Mason's and his wife worked in a child care center where surbanites left small children that Mac said got on her nerves. He had been born in Richmond though, and said he liked the city. Ricken nodded and wrote.

By the time Haddock opened his eyes to see what was going on in the bus stations, J.T. had his left arm and the Rookie Patrolman whose name was John Ward, had the right. Harison was standing to the side of the menage taking notes and occasionally glancing up to watch the crowd which had solowly gathered around the three screaming minuets of justice and crime.

"Goddammed psychopathic drunk" yelled J.T. in reference to Haddock who was gnawing on his left arm, leaving small ringlets of white bubbly spit. Psychopathic was one of J.T.'s favorite words. He had a theory that every human on earth was either a psychopath or good — that is, normal. J.T. had never classified himself, but later Harison would say it was difficult to tell the difference between J.T. and the people he busted. The Rookie on the other hand didn't yell anything. He was three weeks into his intership and didn't want to mess it up with some weird violation of an archaic obscenity code. And besides, Haddock wasn't gnawing on his arm.

When they finally calmed the drunk down enough so that he would speak in low tones instead of bellowing, he was semi-comatosed and nearly incoherent. The liquor he had drank the night before and this morning came reeking out of his pores in little beads of sweat.

The Rookie turned his head away and motioned with his free arm to the crowd of people which had begun to circle tighter like a dirty voyueristic bath ring around the three, to disperse, while J.T. in a low voice questioned Haddock, whose head was limp against the back of the orange plastic bus station chair.

"What's your name?"

"Shit man, I don't believe this, I aint't done nothing wrong."

"Come on, buddy, you in trouble for something?"

"You asking me? Hell, you the man, you oughta know!"

OK listen, you can't stay here, go on home."

"I gotta catch a bus — meet my parol officer."

"You a parolee?"

"Yeh, two days and I'm frigging busted —"

Haddock looked to the blonde haired boy in an intoxicated plea for support, "Say, I don't believe this shit — you believe this shit?"

Harison shrugged.

"Where are your green papers?"

Haddock handed J.T. his green documents of parol.

"Alright, look, I'm not gonna take you in because I know it'd screw you up, but you can't say in here, when's the next bus coming that you can catch?"

"8:15."

They didn't arrest Haddock that Tuesday for a number of reasons. J.T., who when off duty, drank like the proverbial stony eyed fish, had retained a certain empathy for relics like Haddock, and he couldn't see taking a 2 day parolee in, to be sent back to Powhatan for the duration of his sentence merely because he had done what any normal human would do once freed of the strictures and bonds of imprisonment. Besides J.T., as he told the Rookie John Ward later, had one solemn rule concerning the arrests of drunks and junkies, "Only time we take them in is if they haven't shit, pissed or puked on themselves From the smell of things, Haddock had violated all three.

Bama was lying face down on a brown flowered couch in the apartment of 305 M. Street, when he heard Mac knock on his door. A worn black lady in a blue "kenneth cleaning" blouse opened the door. The air was thick and dark inside the apartment. Bama remained faced down on the couch, his muddied brown working boots propped up over the right arm so that his body was flexed like a bow. A soap opera was playing way to the left on an ancient black and white which was capped with anachronistic rabbit ears of a decade past.

Mac tapped Bama on the foot, "You Harry S. Leaving?"

The lady, Dortha Leaving, Bama's daughter stood behind Mac and said, "Yeh that's him, we been waiting for you, he's pretty drunk though . . . been drunk for four days now. I don't know what gets into him, used to be a good man, dintja?" Bama remained face down, silent, undisturbed by the accusing tone.

"He came in here all drunk other night, didn't say nuthin' 'cept 'busted ahead hope I killed the sonabitch.' Well, I know that man ain't goina kill nobody lessin' its some old cripple, but he

SPORTS BRIEFS

Cheerleaders Chosen!!!

Newcomers to the cheering squad are: Daryn Garrette, Holly Hornby, Pat Johnson, Laurie Orange and Elise Patterson to varsity. Cheryl Reynolds was picked as an alternate.

Tryouts for stuntmen will be held in the fall.

Six new cheerleaders were chosen April 15 when the Longwood cheerleading tryouts were held. Cheerleader advisor Joyce Phillips reports that Tami Whitley and David Fowler, head male cheerleader, will be back from this year's squad.

Scholarships

Three outstanding high school gymnasts, Kelly Strayer, Deborah Malin and Kerri Hruby have been awarded performance scholarships and will attend Longwood in fall, Lancer gymnastics coach Ruth Budd announced today.

Strayer, who has seven years of gymnastics experience, is a member of the Class I team at Karon's Gymnastics Club in Northern Virginia. Competing for Jeb Stuart High School, she has qualified for the state meet four years and competed in regionals two years. In 1982 she placed 4th all-around in the state and has finished in the top six for three years.

Fifth all-around in the AAU Nationals in 1981, Strayer was unable to compete in the 1983 state meet because of a broken ankle. She has competed with her team in Germany and England. "Kelly is a strong all-around performer with good skills in every event," says Coach Budd.

Malin is also a Class I competitor at the Carolina Gymnastics Center in Columbia. South Carolina bar champ the past two years as well as third in all-around, she qualified for and competed in 1983 regionals. She is a veteran of nine years experience in gymnastics.

Hruby, a standout performer at Centennial High School, placed in the top six in all-around in county, district and regional championships during her three years on the team.

Also a gymnastics teacher in her spare time, Hruby has competed for the MG gymnastics team in Silver Spring as both a Class I and a Class II gymnast.

Willett Award

Recipients of the Henry I. Willett Scholar-Athlete Award were Mindy Allman (Essex, MD), a standout in field hockey and lacrosse, and baseball player Sam Bagley (Varina). The two seniors compiled 3.0+ academic averages while also making major contributions to their respective teams. Allman was a three-year starter in lacrosse and field hockey and made All-State in hockey as a junior. Bagley, a defensive whiz in the outfield, has made just two errors in two years on the baseball diamond.

Winners of the new Freshman Athlete of the Year honor are Susan Groff (Glen Mills, PA), another field hockey-lacrosse standout, and Lonnie Lewis (Richmond), a freshman basketball player. Groff was the leading scorer in field hockey with eight goals and has tallied 21 goals in four lacrosse games this spring.

83-84 Athletes

Andrews, Kersey Win Honors

Golfer Robin Andrews, basketball player Jerome Kersey, soccer coach Rich Posipanko and lacrosse-women's basketball coach Jane Miller won the major awards Wednesday night as Longwood college held its fifth Athletic Banquet.

Andrews, a senior, was named Female Athlete of the Year. The first woman golfer to receive the award, Andrews is a two-time All-American and a Dean's List student. She led Longwood to high national finishes (second and third) in AIAW Div. II tournaments in both 1981 and 1982. Andrews was also named golf MVP for the second year in a row.

Longwood's second basketball All-American, Kersey (THE COBRA) was named Male Athlete of the Year. The junior has led Longwood to three straight winning seasons while scoring 1,228 points, grabbing 779 rebounds and handing off 161 assists. The 6-7, 220-pounder is the consummate team player. He has ranked among the national leaders in rebounding two years.

Posipanko, who led Longwood to a 15-4-1 record and a state title in the fall, received the Male Coach of the Year honor. He was named Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association "Coach of the Year" and Mid-Atlantic Region "Coach of the Year" earlier. With a 39-25-1 record in four years, Posipanko has built the Lancer soccer program into a dynamo.

Miller is Longwood's Female Coach of the Year. Recently selected for the Athletic Hall of Fame at her alma mater, Northeastern University, Miller has compiled a 23-18-1 recorc in lacrosse. Her teams have won a state tournament (1981) and finished 7-4-1 last season. She was chosen to coach the South II team in the USWLA national tournament last May.

Toombs Player of the Week

Senior tri-captain Doug Toombs helped Longwood win seven of nine games last week with a hitting surge that boosted his average from .244 to .281. For his performance, Toombs has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period April 15-22. Player of the Week is picked by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Toombs, an All-American in 1980 when he hit .565, batted .391 in seven games last week (Sunday through Friday) with four homers and a double. He drove in eight runs and scored 13 to help the Lancers increase their season mark to 20-8.

Batting in the lead-off spot where Coach Buddy Bolding inserted him last week, Toombs got the Lancer offense rolling.

"Doug had a great week," said Bolding. "I felt like he would pick us up when I moved him to the leadoff spot and he certainly justified my confidence in him."

One of Longwood's top all-time players, the senior catcher came into the season as Longwood's career leader in batting average (.422), hits (139), RBI's (101) and walks (78).

Toombs hit .529 with a homer, two doubles and six RBI's in the South Atlantic Regional Tournament last May to earn a spot on the All-Tournament team and help the Lancers advance to the Division II World Series.

Athletic Scholarships

How Much to Pay

By KRISTY NICELY

"Considering what I know about Longwood College and the national trends, I think they should do away with athletic scholarships," said Steve Nelson, head wrestling coach.

A certain amount of money is allocated each year for athletic scholarships. All of the scholarships at Longwood are partial scholarships, but with other grants and aid, many athletes have their entire tuition paid.

Scholarships are not offered by all the sports at Longwood. Some sports that are allocated money for scholarships are basketball, soccer, and gymnastics. However, the wrestling and tennis teams do not use any athletic scholarships.

"There are a lot of built in inequities in the system," said Nelson. "People on the wrestling team feel that they are just as worthy as those in other sports."

Is the athletic scholarship system fair?

"Yes, I think it is a fair assessment," said Cal Luther, head basketball coach. "The system is related to the philosophy of the institution."

Ruth Budd, gymnastics coach, agreed that the system is fair. "The money is allocated according to the amount of people that participate. For example, if 60 percent of the participants are women, and 40 percent are men, then the women's sports get 60 percent of the money. The most emphasized sports get more money."

Steve Nelson also believes that the sports are evaluated fairly. "It is an administrative decision on what sports get emphasis. The high intensity sports, such as men's and women's basketball, soccer, baseball, and women's golf receive favoritism."

However, not all coaches agree with Longwood's scholarship system. Rich Posipanko, soccer coach, believes that the system should be changed soon — this year, if possible.

"The way the money is divided up now should be changed," said Posipanko. "I don't mean just the way it is divided up between men and women, but between emphasis sports. I think it should be changd on which sports are emphasized."

Budd also shares some of these feelings. "You're always going to think that your team deserves a little more, that another sport shouldn't be getting more than you, but when you think about it intellectually, you understand why."

Although the coaches agree on many points, there are some differences in their feelings about the future of athletic scholarships.

"I would rather have the money in the total budget and use it to take care of the team members," said Nelson. "This money could be used for travel, better practice equipment, and more equipment. I have coached teams with and without scholarships. The scholarships have little bearing on the individual's motivation and dedication. I think the scholarships should be given on financial need, not athletic ability."

Ruth Budd depends on scholarships to build the team. "We need the money as a drawing card. Our scholarships have really built up the team. Other schools may have better facilities, so without the money they would go somewhere else."

Cal Luther's opinions seem to be at the opposite end of the spectrum from Nelson's. "The men's program has entered a new league — Mason Dixon. This league contains many top notch Division II teams. These schools use full scholarships. If Longwood wants to remain competitive, they should start offering full scholarships too. We have made a commitment to this league. I think that this will create more interest, because the team will be playing the same teams from year to year. The schedule will be more standard than it is now."

Will the system change in the future?

"It is not likely," said Nelson. "Maybe if the national trends change, Longwood will change. The way things are now, Longwood will continue in the same pattern."

Lancer Sports

LC Attracts Top Recruits

Longwood soccer coach Rich Posipanko may have a pleasant problem when the 1983 soccer season begins next fall. The Lancer coach is going to have to find playing time for 10 talented recruits in addition to eight starters returning from 1982.

"We're bringing in a group of newcomers with superb ability who will have an immediate impact on our program," says the coach. "At least five or six of these players will likely have starting roles next season. With eight returning starters, the competition for starting positions will be fierce."

Joining Longwood's NCAA Division II team, which went 15-4-1 and won the VISA state title last season, is the finest group of recruits ever signed by Posipanko. Longwood was ranked second in the region and among the top 15 teams in the nation last year.

"With these new recruits, we will have a team that should be competitive with any Division II squad in the nation," says Posipanko.

Special Olympics

By BECKY DUNK

The 1983 Longwood College Special Olympics wre held April 13 on Iler Field. The four-hour event was sponsored by Longwood's Therapeutic Recreation Organization, which is headed by Virginia Timberlake of Powhatan.

Forty-three mentally handicapped persons from the Tri-County Sheltered Workshop and Prince Edward County Middle School took part in a day of fun and events. The youngest participant was 10 while the oldest was 42.

One hundred and fifty Longwood students worked as volunteers in a variety of capacities. Some were "huggers" who waited at the finish line of each event to award contestants with a hug; others worked one-on-one with a participant by helping him or her get to each event on time; still others registered participants, prepared food and gave out ribbons.

The Special Olympics began with the lighting of the torch and a parade around the track. Following the parade, the different events began.

Following the games, ribbons were awarded to the 1st, 2nd and 3rd place winners of each event by age groups. Each participant received either a ribbon or an award for overall good sportsmanship.

Donations for the Special Olympics came from the Farmville Moose Lodge, the International Order of Odd Fellows Lodge and the Chamber of Commerce. The Pepsi Company donated refreshments, and local grocery stores provided the food for lunch.

Delta Zeta sorority, by tradition, prepared lunch for all participants and volunteers. TRO members threw a party that night for the volunteers.

Anthony Brown, of Prince Edward County Middle School, receives one of his two first-place ribbons (he won 100-yard dash and broad jump.)

Miller Honored By Northeastern

Longwood College women's basketball and lacrosse coach Jane Miller has been selected for the Northeastern University (MA) Athletic Hall of Fame. Miller will be inducted, along with six additional Northeastern

"Jane was a coach's dream in her playing days at Northeastern," says Jeanne Rowlands, Miller's basketball coach and the women's Athletic Director at Northeastern. "She played for us when we had a decidedly small team. It took someone with a great deal of hoop savvy to make us a winner we were with Jane," added Rowlands.

Miller earned a grand total of 12 letters in field hockey, lacrosse, and basketball between 1968 and 1972. Also a Dean's List student, she earned All-New England honors in field hockey, basketball and lacrosse and captained all three teams. From 1971 to 1976 she attained national prominence on the U. S. Lacrosse and Field Hockey teams.

Miller, who received her B.S. in Education from Northeastern and her M.S. from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, has been head coach of Longwood's women's basketball team two years. As lacrosse coach, she led Longwood to a Division III State title in 1981 and a sixth place finish in the national tournament.

In 1981 Miller was selected as one of the recipients of the Outstanding Young Women of America Award. She is a native of Brockton, MA.

The Rotunda staff would like to thank Hoke Currie and the Sports Information Office for all their help this year.

Baseball Team Ups Record

Senior tri-captains Mickey Roberts and Doug Toombs led the way as Longwood won seven of nine games , upping its season mark to 20-8 with three regular season contests still to play.

The Lancers took two from visiting St. Paul's Saturday in the rain 8-2 and 5-0, giving Longwood its third straight 20-win season. The team's record over the past three years is 75-31-1.

With Toombs and Roberts leading the way Longwood beat Maryland Eastern Shore twice last Monday 7-1, 7-1, split with Baltimore Wednesday, swept Virginia State Thursday 12-2, 14-2, bowed to William & Mary 16-11 Friday and then bounced back to sweep St. Paul's Saturday.

Toombs, who hit .565 as a freshman, went on an eight-game rampage, ripping four homers, a double and a triple, driving in nine runs, scoring 14 and batting .400. Inserted into the leadoff spot by coach Buddy Bolding, the senior catcher helped the Lancers charge up an offense that had been sluggish.

Roberts played his iron-man role to the hilt last week, pitching 20 and two-thirds innings and picking up three victories as Longwood played nine games in six days. For the week, Roberts, who is now 6-0, had an ERA of 3.93, walked 11 and fanned 11. He pitched two complete games as Longwood swept Maryland Eastern Shore Monday.

Roberts came back to pitch against William & Mary Friday and then tossed the first four innings of Saturday's 8-2 win over St. Paul's. The four-year veteran now has a career mark of 20-2 at Longwood.

Other Lancers with particularly productive weeks were John Sullivan who hit .333 in eight games with three doubles and six RBI's, senior David Rumburg who hit .385 with six RBI's and shortstop Dwayne Kingery, with two doubles, a triple and a three-run homer to go with a .294 batting average and six RBI's.

Freshman pitchers Tommy Norris and Terry Spittler hurled complete games in the sweep of Virginia State while another freshman hurler Glenn Mitchell clouted a grand slam homer against the Trojans.

Sophomore Allen Lawter, out of action with an injury to his left arm, used his right arm to pitch a shutout against St. Paul's Saturday, throwing a five-hitter in the five-inning contest.

Freshman Mike Haskins saw action in four games and batted a hot .417 with five hits in 12 trips to the plate, four RBI's and a triple.

Also playing well for Longwood last week were freshman Dennis Leftwich and Todd Thompson. Leftwich hit .368 in six games, driving in eight runs. Four of those RBI's came in the 12-6 win over Division I Baltimore Wednesday.

Thompson played in eight games, ripping four doubles and a triple and driving in five runs while scoring six. Another freshman, Bill Catron, batted .313 for the week with a homer, a double and five RBI's in seven contests.

French Presidents Visit

Presidents of three French universities spent three days at Longwood College last week on a visit sponsored by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities.

Last fall, AASCU sponsored the visits of several American college presidents, including Longwood President Janet Greenwood, to colleges and universities in France and Spain.

The Longwood visitors were President and Mrs. Marcel Azzaro of the University of Nice; President Paul Bachelard of the University of Tours; and President Michel Despax of the University of Toulouse I (social sciences).

The presidents visited academic departments of their choice at Longwood and were guests at a French-speaking luncheon on Wednesday. Faculty and student exchanges were among topics discussed at several planning sessions.

Preisdent Greenwood and several members of the Longwood faculty and staff accompanied the French presidents on a visit to Monticello.

Seven Longwood students served as translators during the French presidents' visit. They were: Lesa Southall, a freshman from King George; Melissa Crickenberger, a freshman from Salem; Rosie Pulupa, a sophomore from Arlington; Vicky Edwards, a junior from Richmond; Frances Barner, a senior from Virginia Beach; Dana Shockley, a freshman from Arlington: and Karmon Davis, a freshman from Virginia Beach.

Arrangements for the visit were coordinated by Dr. Sarah Young, Assistant Dean for Student Academic Standing and Special Project Grants at Longwood.

Market Basket Down

Local food buyers have good news this month. The cost of the Farmville market basket is down slightly, from $62.73 in March to $62.60 in April.

Food prices nationally, however, are showing a modest increase. In Virginia, the Richmond and Tidewater area market baskets were up slightly in April, while the Northern Virginia basket was priced exactly the same as last month.

Details on the four Virginia market basket surveys are given below:

	March 1983	April 1983	% Change 3.83-4.83	% Change 4.82-4.83
Farmville	$62.73	$62.60	- 0.21	+ 3.35
Northern Virginia	62.45	62.45	0.0	+ 2.9
Richmond	60.37	61.05	+ 1.1	N/A
Norfolk-Va. Beach-Portsmouth	59.78	60.00	+ 0.4	N/A

Market basket costs in the four Virginia areas surveyed vary by only $2.60 this month, ranging from Farmville's $62.60 to the Tidewater area's $60.00.

In comparison with April a year ago, the local food basket is up 3.35 per cent.

The cost of the highest-priced basket (the total of the highest prices found in local stores for all of the 40 items) was $68.42. The low basket (total of the lowest prices found) was $57.40. This high-low spread of $11.02 indicates that significant savings can be achieved by - "being knowledgeable and shopping around," said Dr. Anthony Cristo.

In addition to the market basket study, the local Trivia Basket survey was taken this month. The Trivia Basket is composed of a variety of non-food items that the average consumer buys on a regular basis. Since Trivia Basket prices were not taken on Decmeber 31, 1982, the price changes referred to are increases or decreases which have occurred since October.

The most significant price increases during the past six months were for Band-Aids (+14.10 per cent), Everready batteries (+18.92 per cent), Tide (+16.57 per cent), Prell shampoo (+14.92 per cent), Kleenex (+12.66 per cent), Marlboro cigarettes (+13.19 per cent), Kodak film (+9.09 per cent), and Budweiser beer (+7.72 per cent).

Lower prices were found for notebook paper (-11.22 per cent), Bounty towels (-5.49 per cent), Bayer aspirin (-5.93 per cent), Bic pens (-4.54 per cent), Pledge furniture polish (-3.98 per cent), Jergens hand lotion (-3.72 per cent), and Top Job cleaner (-3.49 per cent).

The national trend toward higher gasoline prices held true in the local area. Prices for all brands of gasoline were up slightly at stations in Appomattox, Blackstone, Crewe, Dillwyn, Keysville and Farmville.

Prices at self-service stations in Farmville were up 8.4 per cent for regular gasoline, 7.7 per cent for unleaded, and 6.0 per cent for premium. Prices for all types of gasoine at full-service stations were up 3.6 per cent.

The studies dealing with local price fluctuations for food, trivia items, and gasoline are all projects of the Economic Seminar class at Longwood College and are directed by Dr. Anthony B. Cristo.

kept on saying it so I begun to get worried. He never done nothin' real bad, get drunk sometime and pass out on the porch but that ain't no problem. We just drag him in an' let im sleep it off. 'Cept he kept sayin' that 'busted head, busted head good' and I ain't never seem him that excited, spinning all around like he got chiggers or somethin' makin' him itch.

"So I tried sobering im up and asking him what the hell he'd one — couldn't imagine he'd really bash a fellows head. But ehn ole Morris called up — a swearing to high heaven, sure nough old man done bashed his head, bashed it with a brick — ain't worth a damn are ya?"

Bama rolled over on the couch, his eyes bleary and unfocused, a grow masters cap was pulled downward toward the joint of his nose. "Shoulda killed the son of a bitch."

"Yeh," Mac nodded, "you ready to go — we got a warrant for your arrest."

"Yeh," Bama said, "I got nothing to run from"

Bama raised himself up off the couch, his elbows pulling taut against his dirty green and yellow plaid jacket. "I won't cause no trouble" Dortha shook her head, "When can we pick em up? He gonna be in for a long time?"

"Can't say really, the magistrate will probably go easy on him though — we'll hold him one night — bail shouldn't be too much."

Mac caught Bama by the arm and led him to the doorway. Dortha's son. Alex. stood in the dark alcove to their staircase watching the scene. He mimicked his mother, "ain't worth a damn are ya?" Bama glowered, "Get the hell back in your room boy, ya don't know nothing about it." Alex backed deeper into the alcove as Mac and Bama walked by and out the doorway. His eyes shone white against the blackness.

Rugby

The Longwood Rugby Club defeated the Hampden-Sydney Tigers Saturday, April 23, 15-3 at the President's Field.

Longwood opened the scoring early in the first half with a field goal by Bob Schatta. Sydney was able to tie the score at 3-3 which is how the half ended. Penalties, which have plagued Longwood all season kept them from putting more points on the board in the first half.

The second half seemed to be going the same way until a couple of back-breaking tackles by Gary Lunsford and Joe Bass got the crowd and players fired up. Tackle after tackle by L.C. put the "Hamsters" into neutral for the rest of the half and Longwood into high gear.

Longwood finished the season at 4-1-1. The team expressed its gratitude towards the blood-thirsty support of the fans the entire season.

constitution of a Publications Board.

2. That until such a time as this constitution is ratified no actions dealing with Longwood student publications be taken by the publications board.

3. That a statement from Dr. Greenwood be made to the effect that the publications board's prior decision concerning my removal was not based on the content of the article in question and that the publications board will not determine the content of any future Longwood student publications.

Dr. Greenwood agreed to the conditions and accepted Johnson's resignation. She also agreed to "purge" the record of the former publications board's trial and removal of Johnson.

Johnson felt that resigning was the smartest thing for him to do. "I only had one more issue as editor, and resigning was a symbolic gesture in return for a reformed Publications Board." Johnson was particularly concerned with the partiality of the membership of the former Board and their self-declared arbitary power. Under the conditions of his resignation, future editors of publications will not be subject to the precedence set by the former Publications Board.

New Administrators: New Focus

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

Three new administrators are working to give a new name to the concept of Student Services at Longwood College. Kathe Allen, Bill Moore and Barbara Gorski were hired over the summer as Student Development Educators.

Longwood has never had Student Development Educators, in fact, it's a position that is relatively new across the country. The positions at Longwood, however, originated from within the Student Service program, a sort of combined modification of the Resident Supervisor's position, the Student Affairs and Assistant Dean of the Students offices.

The concept of student development as a major focus of administration is slowly working its way into campuses across the country, and Longwood is among the first to begin such a program. "Janet Greenwood and Phylis Mable are nationally known in our field" (student development), according to Kathe Allen. This new emphasis is a part of Longwood's efforts to become more "student life" oriented in relation to the Fourteen Goals.

"It's a campus-wide effort to relate to the students and to address the goals," said Bill Moore. The new emphasis will affect every facet of the student's life, from the classroom to the dining hall to the residence halls. There will also be some special programming for minorities, transfers, student leaders, work-study and off-campus students. There has already been a change in the reference to off campus students; in the past a student who did not live in the residence halls was called a 'day student.' They will be called 'off campus students', because, according to Barbara Gorski, "they are more than just students during the day."

Students are going to develop with or without Student Development Educators, but Allen, Moore and Gorski are here as consultants to that process as an intentional concentration on student development. "You are going to be different when you're a senior than when you're a freshman anyway, and we know that there are specific steps in that process," said Gorski.

Students at Longwood will be affected by the new focus on development because of the dramatic changes that the Student Services have in store. "They'll know by December what the Fourteen Goals are," says Kathe Allen, "we're here to make the goals come alive."

Options, levels of awareness, responsibility and decision making were shared goals of the trio for the students and faculty, and administrators. Even the secretarial staffs have been involved in workshops to personalize the office space; to make them more student centered.

Kathe Allen, Bill Moore and Barbara Gorski all have specialized training and experience in student development. Allen comes from the University of Maryland, where she was an academic advisor. Moore completed Ph.D. course work at University of Maryland and worked at Southern Methodist University in Dallas where he worked with special interest housing, expressive living and career planning and placement. Gorski did her undergraduate work at VCU where she was a Resident Assistant and her graduate work at Ohio State. She worked at Hofstra University in Long Island at a Living and Learning Residence Hall Center.

Vonnegut To Appear

Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., American short story writer, novelist, and critic, will speak at Hampden-Sydney College on Tuesday, Sept. 27. The speech entitled, "How To Get a Job Like Mine," will be given in Fleet Gymnasium and will begin at 8:00 p.m.

Vonnegut's literary career began while he worked in the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company; after working there for three years, he began to sell short stories to Collier's, the Saturday Evening Post, and other national magazines. Describing this first step, Vonnegut said: "I made what seemed like a lot of money, so I began a novel that mocked General Electric, quit my job, threw a party that was stopped by the police, and moved to Cape Cod."

The novel that "mocked General Electric" was Player Piano, a long and rather sober book about an automated world of the future run by organization men. In the end the hero, Paul Proteus, comes to see that the machine-smashing revolution he joins will only "recreate the same old nightmare": the indictment in general. The first novel appeared in 1952; over the next nine years, Vonnegut spent most of his efforts writing magazine stories.

Some of these stories were speculative and satirical and, together with Player Piano, they were enough to persuade book review editors that Vonnegut was a science fiction writer. This ruling was confirmed by The Sirens of Titan (1959), a highly sophisticated space fantasy which suggests, for example, that the whole of human history has been arranged by the inhabitants of the planet Tralfamadore in order to provide an inter-galactic traveler with a spare part for his spaceship.

His next novel, Mother Night, is about an American spy in wartime Germany who is able to stay alive and do his work only by masquerading as a Nazi and makes vile anti-Semitic broadcasts. It is a short book whole chapters, as Richard Schickel wrote, "are quick, deft sketches, almost review blackouts. There is no attempt at the realistic detailing of Player Piano, no believable plotting or rounded characterization."

Following the releases of Cat's

Vonnegut To Speak

Cradle (1963) and God Bless You, Mr. Rosewater (1965), Vonnegut climbed out of the science fiction "filedrawer" only to fall into another labeled "black humor." From the time he witnessed the bombing of Dresden, where more people died than at Hiroshima, Vonnegut felt himself under an obligation to make some kind of statement about it. He discharged that obligation in Slaughterhouse-Five, in which the author, lightly disguised as one "Billy Pilgrim," describes "his" war. The book has a double subtitle — The Children's Crusade, because it is an attack on all causes that demand human sacrifice, and A Duty-Dance of Death, because it was written as a duty and in the tradition of European gallows humor. There are no villains in it to lift the reader's sense of guilt for Dresden, "just people, doing what people usually do to each other." Slaughterhouse-Five became a best-seller and was filmed, making Vonnegut a literary celebrity.

In Breakfast of Champions, Vonnegut announced, he was celebrating his fiftieth birthday by "flushing out" of his head and into the novel a half-century's accumulation of foolish and incompatible ideas, and by "liberating" characters who had appeared in earlier books. This book, selected by several book clubs in the United States, was the beginning of a renewed interest in Vonnegut among the youth of the country.

Despite his fame and fortunes, Vonnegut worries about "why I write books when Presidents and senators and generals do not read them." He reassures himself, however, by concluding that the trick is to catch them "before they become generals and senators and Presidents, and poison their minds with humanity."

A five dollar admission fee will be charged at the door; student tickets may be purchased for three dollars.

Meredith Strohm, played a major role in the Resident Assistant training programs late this summer. They conducted workshops and discussions to encourage the R.A.'s to become more aware of the individuality and special needs of the residents on the halls. The R.A.'s were receptive, as one commented after the session, "They're offering an energy and newness that promises important changes in the way students are involved at Longwood."

Peter James spoke in the ABC rooms Thursday night to a crowd of eighty students, faculty, and community members. James was a spy for the Central Intelligence Agency in the early sixties. He spoke of his experiences in a speech entitled "The Embryo of an American Police State."

KEY EXCHANGE:
Wine & Cheese Instead Of Beer & Pretzels

By VINCE DECKER

Another Friday night at Longwood. The offerings for the evening are a mixer, a couple of Rush parties and about three other fiascos where the only reward will be beer-stained clothes and maybe a hangover. This particular Friday night, September 16, offered a very classy alternative.

Richmond Theatre Company's production of Key Exchange, a play by Kevin Wade, was played to a small crowd of alternative seekers in the lower dining hall. Key Exchange is the story of three young people, Philip, Michael and Lisa who cycle together every weekend. Philip, an arrogant but likable man, has been seeing Lisa for quite a long time, but has a terrible fear of making a commitment. The title comes from Lisa's suggestion that they exchange apartment keys. Michael has just recently been married but his wife, a dancer, spends most of her time with her composer, "rehearsing."

S-UN made a great choice in bringing Key Exchange to Longwood. Melissa Johnston, who played Lisa, is a Longwood graduate. While at Longwood she received the Best Actress of the Year award for 1974-75. The director, Jesse Reter, is also an alumnus.

The subject matter of Key Exchange was especially appropriate for the students. The ups and downs of relationships are familiar to all of us, and the show was on a simple but relevant level. Some of the older members of the audience may have thought it was base or even simple because of the frequent mono-syllable obscenities. The set consisted of three bicycles and a garbage can and lacked nothing.

I only heard two other complaints from the audience after the show. One girl found it very distracting that Lisa was riding a man's bike and several people weren't quite satisfied with Craig Tapscott's performance.

Tapscott gave a less believable characterization than the other two. He was very mechanical and obviously acting. However, this was easily forgotten because of Bass and Johnston's ability to bring Tapscott up to their level and carry the show. Ironically this show was dedicated to Tapscott because it was his last performance for RTC before leaving for New York to continue his acting career. According to one prominent drama major at Longwood, "Unless he has a lot of connections, I don't think he'll make it — but then again, most of us won't make it without the connections."

The best thing about the show was that it was here. It was a pleasure to be somewhere at Longwood where wine and cheese was served by waiters and waitresses wearing black and white, and students, faculty and administrators could mingle in a relaxed atmosphere of "culture." Events like Key Exchange should happen more often. I think it could catch on.

A month ago in Washington, D. C. 400,000 people gathered to pay tribute to civil rights leader Martin Luther King. In one of the largest demonstrations ever held in the capital, protesters came from over 350 cities across the U. S. The event commemorated the twentieth anniversary of King's "I Have a Dream" speech made at the Washington Monument August 28, 1963.

In that speech King declared, "I have a dream; that with this faith we will be able to hue out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope . . . that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character."

Last month, demonstrators in Washington denounced the Reagan Administration's Civil Rights policies which have allowed advances made in the past twenty years to backslide. They came to Washington to exhibit the fact that King's Dream is still in the minds and souls of citizens across the nation. They came to send a message to Ronald Reagan that social spending is more important to this nation than is defense spending.

King's voice waivered with emotion that sweltering August day twenty years ago, for he spoke with a heartfelt sincerity — knowing the battles to come would not be easy for him or those who walked with him. A struggle against ignorance is never an easy one in this country; it is a great wall which we have built, maintained and cherished. And King did not aim for easy targets — marching into the capitals of Mississippi, Georgia, and Alabama, states in which segregation was heavily engrained into the lives of both white and black Americans.

Through the Montgomery Bus Boycott of 1955, the Birmingham protests of 1963, and the passing of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, King led twenty million black Americans out of passive acceptance of their situation into the conscience of the American people using methods of non-violent protest written of by Thoreau and Gandhi. Sit-ins throughout the South were the most visible evidence of such resistance in the late fifties and early sixties. Blacks and whites sat in protest of segregation in restaurants and schools only to be dragged to police stations and thrown in jail. In his "Letter from Birmingham Jail" King wrote, "The nations of Asia and Africa are moving with jet-like speed toward gaining political independence, but we are still creeping at horse-and-buggy pace toward gaining a cup of coffee at a lunch counter . . . There comes a time when the cup of endurance runs over and men are no longer willing to be plunged into the abyss of despair."

While blacks fought against prejudice and injustice, many white Americans stood back and watched; like nervous spectators at a barroom fight they awaited the outcome of a conflict they didn't care to see.

And still — they wait today. In Farmville they wait, still using words like "nigger", and "boy". They wait. They're old white men and old white women partly. But not all, they're middle-aged and they're teenagers. They clutch ignorance as a child clutches a dollar bill. They stand in fear of any lack of superiority.

There are still two high schools in the Farmville area, one for those who can afford a private, white school, and one for those who can't, the public school with a majority of black students. Many whites in this area are raised to look down upon blacks, and higher education throughout the nation and throughout this state echoes still of prejudice and segregation.

And where does it end? Our attitudes won't change without forced effort, overcoming our biases and not laughing at them, working together for Brotherhood.

Forgotten Dream . ?

Brotherhood — a lofty goal which many of us won't understand, which we feel we don't need. But today it is a tangent, a plateau, that we must reach if we are to overcome the problems we face as a nation. Economic oppression of any people is a detriment to all, a sign that we are not willing to work for freedom. Such oppression abounds in the U. S. today as our President designs plans for killing people thousands of miles away while social spending is cut in this country, reducing each person's opportunity to get ahead in life rather than merely get by.

I sit in my room early today listening to King's speech on a tape called "Visions of America" — a janitor passes in the hall pushing a broom in front of him. He is a man without a college education, without the money to afford one, and it's doubtful that he will ever have the money to send his four little children to college either — he is a black man, a black janitor. Dreams are never impossible, but oftentimes it takes a great effort, a painful effort, to make them work. This man walks on as King is concluding his speech, his voice ringing with passion and sincerity, "I have a dream today — when we let our freedom ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual: 'Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, we are free at last.'"

Martin Luther King was assassinated on a warm spring day in 1968 by a white man, a white assassin. But it's fall now, and much later, and a black janitor passes by my door again.

World Premiere

ESPER'S WELL

A fascinating new play by a new playwright opens the season for the Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts this Wednesday through Saturday in Jarman Auditorium at 8 p.m.

ESPERS WELL, the award-winning play by Richard Lauchman of Washington, D. C., will be produced for the first time anywhere on the Jarman stage. It is an intriguing three-character play that offers three engaging characters who have fascinating stories to tell following a nuclear holocaust.

ESPERS WELL is set in an Appalachian mountain home and brings together a wandering stranger from New York City with a mother and daughter who are natives to the mountain countryside. A veteran cast has been assembled to play the three roles, including two students who received Best Performance Awards for the 1982-83 season for the Longwood Players.

Senior Sherry Forbes plays the role of Ma, a woman in her late sixties haunted by fears and fantasies which both delight and shock us. Freshman Jerry Dagenhart, who played the lead role of Teddy in last spring's production of WHEN YOU COMIN' BACK, RED RYDER?, is Jim Trepps, the New Yorker who seeks food and shelter and finds a bizarre kind of hospitality in the person of Ma.

Jamme Coy, who has been an outstanding performer in the community productions of the Waterworks Players as well as the Hampden-Sydney Jongleurs, is Emma, Ma's daughter. Emma is a woman of great strength and courage who is tested beyond endurance as events unfold in the play. Ms. Coy is in her first year as an adjunct faculty member of the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts.

Playwright Richard Lauchman has been at Longwood during the rehearsal period and assisted the cast and director in putting together this first production of his play. He will also attend some of the performances of the play.

Lauchman is president of a new Washington firm. Cooper, Wharton, Wagoner, Inc., a professional consulting company for industry, business, and governmental agencies. He holds a Ph. D. in Literary Studies from American University. A number of his other plays have been produced and published. ESPERS WELL was the winner of the nationwide Southeastern Theatre Conference Playwriting Award for 1983.

The production of ESPERS WELL is an American College Theatre Festival entry which means that adjudicators from ACTF will be on the Longwood campus to critique the production for the playwright and the cast and crews. The entry in ACTF makes the production and the play eligible for a number of awards sponsored by the festival.

The production is being directed by Douglas M. Young, associate professor in the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts. A Moffatt Evans, Jr., Technical Director in the Department, designed the set. Stage Manager for the production is Dramatic Arts major Cindy Jude, assisted by Tony Russo. The lighting designer is Dave Miller, assisted by Curt Walker. The Properties Manager is Leon Young, assisted by Belinda Anderson. Barbara Chalfont is the Sound Technician assisted by Rachel Bowling. The Costume Mistress is Collen Brennan, assisted by Patty Piedmont, and Lisa Magill is Make-up Mistress.

Longwood students are admitted free to the play when they present their student I.D. cards. Admission for other students is $1.50, and general admission is $2.00.

Deadline for mailing the entries is March 10, 1984.

Entry forms have been sent to the economics business instructors .

A blue ribbon panel of judges will score the entries and Dr. Friedman will rank-order the top eight and personally present the awards to the first three winners.

Booters Face Crucial Game

Longwood's status as the second ranked team in the Mid-Atlantic Region, it's unbeaten (6-0) record and a possible berth in the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Playoffs will all be on the line Wednesday when the Lancers journey to Ashland to take on always strong Randolph-Macon at 3:00.

Longwood, 1-0 in the VISA Central Division after a 2-1 win over Liberty Baptist Friday, must beat the Yellow Jackets and Radford (Oct. 15) to insure itself of an opportunity to defend the State Title the Lancers won a year ago.

In what is developing into one of the fiercest rivalries in the state, the Lancers have beaten Randolph-Macon two of the last three times the teams have played. The Lancers took a 3-1 win in 1981 and the teams split last season. The Jackets won 1-0 in overtime and Longwood took a 2-1 triumph at home.

"Randolph-Macon is probably our biggest in-state rival," says Lancer coach Rich Posipanko. "They're usually ranked high in the region and our games are always close. The game has a lot of importance for the VISA standings and in the region."

Longwood's "No Goal Patrol" defense gave up its first score Friday at Liberty Baptist, but the Flames needed a lucky bounce off Lancer Scott Thoden's leg to come up with a goal in the second half. Longwood has out-scored its six foes 11-1.

Mark McArdle notched his third goal of the season on an assist from Clay Mullican to give Longwood a 1-0 lead Friday. After the Flames tied the score 1-1 in the second half, Lancer captain Bill Foster scored from 15 yards out on an assist from Chris Wilkerson to give Longwood its sixth win.

Longwood, which plays at VCU Tuesday, October 4, hosts Mt. St. Mary's in its next home tilt Saturday, October 8.

Stickers 2nd In Tourney

Longwood's 5-1 field hockey team, which won two of three games in the Longwood Invitational Tournament over the weekend, faces a busy week of action with a contest at Radford Tuesday, a home game with Mary Washington Thursday (3:00) and an important tilt Saturday at 1:00 when Division I Duke visits.

With last Wednesday's game with Richmond postponed to October 31, Longwood dropped a 2-0 decision to Pfeiffer and beat Virginia Tech 3-0 Friday in the Longwood Invitational. Saturday, Longwood whipped Mount St. Mary's 4-2 in overtime to claim second place.

Longwood coach Bette Harris was excited about her team's comeback against the Mount. "Beating Mt. St. Mary's is a tremendous win for us because we came back from a 2-0 deficit," said the coach. "We had some defensive lapses early, but it turned out to be a really positive performance for us."

McArdle Leads Neptune Natives To Longwood

by RONNIE BROWN

It has been over ten years since Neptune, New Jersey's Mark McArdle started playing - youth soccer with or against his ex-highschool teammates Craig Reid, Mark Kremen, and his brother Shawn McArdle. Now they are together again on the Longwood College (VA) soccer team, the defending Virginia State Champions in the College Division.

Mark came to Longwood in the fall of 1982 as a freshman from Neptune to play soccer for the Lancers. McArdle and his new team not only won the state title, but were ranked in the top 15 in the country in Division II and posted a 15-4-1 record, the school's history.

But why do soccer players from the Shore of New Jersey come south to rural Farmville in the heart of Southside Virginia?

"Longwood is one of the top Division II soccer programs east of the Mississippi," said head coach Rich Posipanko. "Academically it is a fine school and the location and environment are also appealing to the players."

Mark carried on the message to his friends.

"I told them about the improving record of the team and the competition we faced and they liked it (the school) when they came down," noted Mark. "They also like the majors in business and math."

Since Mark Kremen, Mark McArdle, Shawn McArdle and Craig Reid played together in the youth leagues and at Neptune High School, it is natural that they would want to play together on the college level. Posipanko believes they will eventually be on the field together.

They have had excellent coaching at the club and high school levels and technically they are very sound," noted the coach. "The Shore area is one of the top soccer areas in New Jersey."

At Neptune, Mark McArdle was named All-Conference and All-State and played on the 1980 New Jersey State Championship team. His brother Shawn played forward in high school and earned All-Conference and All-Shore honors. Mark Kremen was tabbed to the All-Shore and All-Monmouth County teams while Craig Reid was All-Conference as a junior. Reid sat out his senior year with an injury.

"All four will be starters at one point in their careers," added Posipanko. "It may take anywhere from a game to next season."

The quartet, who are listed as midfielders, may not be playing midfield, but Posipanko may use their skills elsewhere in the Lancer line-up.

The Lancers were 5-0 as of September 19 and Mark McArdle had already contributed to the team. He leads the Neptune natives with two goals, while his brother Shawn scored his first goal against Maryland-Baltimore County, Sunday September 18. Reid has been in four of the Lancer's games while Mark Kremen has seen action in only one game. Kremen has been suffering from a stress fracture in the foot and will be out for two to three weeks. He was expected to be a key performer and possibly start for the Lancers.

Mark McArdle has proved he can do big things on the soccer field, but he also does the little things required of superior players. One of his important qualities is leadership.

"Mark is one of the leaders on the team. He has matured a great deal from a freshman to a leader as a sophomore," said Posipanko. "I expect the others to do the same."

Mark doesn't mind the leadership role one bit.

"I always adapted to being a leader," says Mark. "I looked at the leaders on the team when I was a freshman and do the things they do."

The 1983 season promises to be the best in history of Longwood soccer and with talented and willing teammates, the Lancers will be successful. Mark McArdle, Shawn McArdle, Craig Reid and Mark Kremen are quality additions to a progressive soccer program.

Rich Posipanko, who is in his fifth year at the Lancer helm, sums it up best when saying "you have to have winners to get winners."

These student athletes are winners.

Lady Netters

Longwood's women's tennis team picked up its first win of the fall Wednesday, topping Christopher-Newport 5-2 in a match that was shortened by rain. Now 1-2, the Lady Lancers play at Lynchburg Thursday in action this week.

Taking singles wins for Longwood Wednesday were No. 1 Ann Pitzer, No. 2 Barbara Cathey, No. 4 Cathy Morris and No. 5 Laura Baines. Pitzer and Morris teamed up to win No. 1 doubles, but No. 2 and 3 doubles were rained out.

Earlier last week, Longwood absorbed its second loss when the William & Mary Junior Varsity took a 6-3 win Monday. Longwood got two forfeit wins and a triumph at No. 5 singles from Baines. Baines and soph Karen Craun, who plays No. 6, have 2-1 records in singles thus far.

Riding Team Opens

After winning 86 ribbons and taking nine first places last year, the 1983-84 Longwood riding team opens its season October 1 in an intercollegiate horse show at Mary Washington. The Lancer riders will be led once again by Mary Whitlock, who is beginning her fifth year as coach.

"I think we'll have a real strong team this year," said Whitlock, "We have seven experienced riders back and some talented newcomers. With this blend of youth and experience, I feel we'll have one of the best teams we've had here."

Veteran performers include: Kristen Birath, Kirsten Ladendorf, Carol Turner, Martie Wilson, Beth Wiley, Mary Brockwell, and Bryan Farrar. Both Farrar and Brockwell have had experience in riding national championships.

Qualifying for regionals last year were: Brockwell, Birath, Turner, and Wiley. Birath placed fifth in novice on the flat and fourth in over fences at regionals last spring.

Newcomers to the team include: Lisa Nelson, Martha Chase, sister of former Lancer rider Cathy Chase, and Lea Anne Lawson.

Captain of the team for 1983-84 is Bryan Farrar.

Kurt Vonnegut On Southern Comfort And Republicans

By JEFF ABERNATHY

An interesting sideline to Kurt Vonnegut's speech at Hampden-Sydney last week was the fact the average haircut of the Hampden-Sydney student is about two inches shorter than Vonnegut's. He took it all in stride, though, noting with some apprehension, "I am told that 90 percent of you are Republicans."

Vonnegut explained the vast difference in the issues on college campuses of today and those of his college days. Today, Vonnegut said, "the burning question on every campus is, 'Do you use a word processor?' When I got out of college Hitler was in power. The burning question at that time was 'Does penis size really matter?' " His sarcasm on modern technology was hard to miss.

Vonnegut typically showed little respect for the sensitivity of his audience. He alienated students in the computer field by saying, "If you go into computers your job is figuring out how to put your neighbors out of business." His lack of regard for the rising level of technology was clear throughout his speech. "I'm against it even if it harms bluebirds," he noted. Vonnegut's dislike for the scientific advancement called the nuclear warhead is clear in his novels and was obvious in his speech.

Comparing alcoholics to, in his words, "compulsive war preparers," Vonnegut insisted that the American people have repeatedly made poor choices for leaders. "We should recognize that there are those of us who are hooked on preparations for war." Vonnegut believes that Americans should tell these people, "Honest to God I couldn't be sorrier for you if I'd seen you wash down a handful of amphetamines with a pint of Southern Comfort."

In not-so-many words, Vonnegut denounced the Reagan administration's defense build-up, particularly the construction of the MX missile. Noting that both the U.S. and the Soviet Union can already destroy all life on his planet several times over, Vonnegut clearly sided with nuclear freeze supporters on the build-up issue. Proposing a group called "War Preparers Anonymous," Vonnegut called for the group's first member to introduce himself by saying, "My name is Western Civilization and I am a Compulsive War Preparer."

Clad somewhat paradoxically in a blue polyester suit with a yellow and dull green tie, Vonnegut was at ease with the crowd of 1,750 people. His shock of curly brown hair didn't quite fit in with the bifocal glasses and greying moustache yet Vonnegut never once talked the part of a man born in the 1920's.

His eyes glistened when he joked with his audience, peering over his glasses to see the reaction he got, as if laughter wasn't quite enough. He was never formal with the crowd, quickly noting that, though the first rule of public speaking is 'Never Apologize,' "I apologize, I'm sorry about everything, and I'll do my best to make it up to you."

Soonafter, Vonnegut pointed out to the younger members of Crime Prevention At Longwood: Campus Police

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

Since Eric Shoemaker arrived at Longwood last November as the new chief of Campus Police, he has emphasized shifts in priority and policy. He has worked with a limited staff of eleven policemen and an even more confining budget to try to improve the effectiveness of campus security. "Our main priority is personal safety of the students and their property," said Shoemaker.

Many students have complained because the campus police are not as likely to take them to or from the Farmville bus station as in the past. This, according to Shoemaker is a matter or priority. "If there's only one car patrolling, I can't send it to the bus station. Some students are going to get turned down. I would like to continue the service, but I need my officers on campus. If a student called a campus police at one of the larger universities, for a ride to a bus station, by the time the guy stopped laughing at them, the bus would've already left . . . if we're here as a taxi service, then they should take away our guns. We're here for police work."

Crime prevention has also become a prime focus of the campus security force. Suggestions for improvement of the lighting on campus are still being considered. Longwood is the only institution in the state that is researching Environmental Security, a relatively new crime prevention angle, that considers how architectural design of buildings, and landscaping can contribute to crime. Chief Shoemaker recently presented a paper on the research of Environmental Security, and looks forward to developing the program further.

In regard to the actual crime rate at Longwood, Shoemaker points out that students are very rarely the source of any real crime. Between November of 1982 and July of 1983, there were only seven arrests on campus, none of which included Longwood students.

One of the biggest problems with crime solving is in the reporting of offenses. Either because people don't consider the offense serious enough, or because they are afraid of getting too involved for whatever reason, people are too slow about reporting crime. "That's why we instituted the 'Call a Campus Cop First' program". Shoemaker felt that a great deal of the crime at Longwood could have been prevented. There was a series of incidents last fall where a man was arrested for entering girl's dorm rooms through doors that the residents had left unlocked.

Shoemaker made several references to the tight budget that the department is working under, alluding to the "Robb bare bones" approach to government. "Longwood is not a rich institution, I can't expect to have any more (money) than any other department."

"The End Of Things" A Review

ESPERS WELL

Sherry Forbes

By DAVID S. AREFORD

Last week, the Longwood Players and Department of Speech and Drama presented the world premiere of Espers Well, a play by Richard Lauchman. The performances by Sherry Forbes (as Ma), Jamie Coy (as Emma), and Jerry Dagenhart (as Trepps) were excellent. Their acting and the characters they portray outshine the play as a whole.

The play presents "the end of things." No, it's not a test or a hoax. The buttons have been pushed. The earth is a wasteland, where a few wander, searching for food and other survivors. Jim Trepps, a New York artist, finds both: a little stew and two women, Ma and her daughter, Emma, living in a house in the Appalachian Mountains. A place called Esper's Well. A strange place.

Jim is suffering from the effects of radiation, and even though he says he is not ready to die, his body is slowly deteriorating and mentally he is feeling more and more like a dead man. His home of New York is gone and along with it an ice-skating rink and other physical reminders of what life was. There is nothing.

Emma is pregnant and burdened by epilepsy and by having to care for her mother. Little by little, she is giving up life, preparing for her death, planning her and Ma's suicides. Her child is no hope to her, for how could she bring a child into such a world. Whether it is born dead or alive, she will birth the child over the well and let it fall into the darkness.

Ma, even though a murdering, vicious person, is a lonely, insane woman who we pity. She is afraid Emma will abandon her, and Ma will even murder to keep Emma from leaving.

Not only do these characters face "The end of things", but also they must deal with the mysterious setting of Espers Well. This is an eery place filled with strange images and stories: a dog that dives into its reflection in a pond and doesn't come up, where nothing comes up; an imaginary play-mate of Emma's childhood who gobbles up an imaginary baby; Ma's imaginary friend who gobbles up a corn cob doll; an old hag of a woman from Ma's dream who spits fire; a legend of a man named Esper who drank the well water and went crazy, killing his family of eight with a hatchet; images of blackness, of a pit; and a cave that Emma's father shows her when she is a child, a cave that he says was the backdoor to Hell.

And if the cave nearby is the backdoor, then Espers Well is the front door. A pit — an abyss — drops below the house, as Trepps imagines, and the old woman spitting fire is a demon from the pit as are the little imaginary children-gobbling friends. Ma is an extension of these creatures, she drinks the well water — the spring of Hell — and like Esper becomes a crazed murderer.

Even though all these elements add to the hellishness of this play-world, they seem to diffuse the unity of the play. On one hand, we have characters facing the results of a nuclear holocaust; and on the other hand the same characters trapped in some kind of "Twilight Zone" or "Amityville Horror"-like story. The two stories do not really mesh, for this mysterious place with crazy Ma would have existed without the fact of the end of the world.

The story of crazed Esper who killed his family and threw them in the well because hungry beings told him to and the images of gobbled-up children seem to fit, but we can not be led to believe that some kind of tangible "evil" haunts the house. This conclusion is shattered by the "real" humanness of Ma. We understand her loneliness and desperation.

There are also biblical overtones; the first scene of Act II, for instance, ending with the idea of Emma, pregnant with the new Christ-child of the Second Coming. Ma thinking that Trepps is a modern-day wiseman bringing a can of peaches as a gift.

But this is just a flicker of hope, for Emma does straddle the well to birth her child. A horrible image. It brings to mind what Pozzo says in Becket's Waiting for Godot, "They give birth astride of a grave, the light gleams an instant, then it's night once more." The difference here is that there is not a "gleam" of hope. Emma says, "There was nothin' in me." No child, no hope of continuance, nothing at all.

The haunted house story and the added biblical allusions simply confuse what is lasting and most important, characters facing the end: Trepps with his initial disbelief and his longing for an ice-skating rink; Emma's decision to have her child astride the well; and the final image of Ma, alone, wearing her funeral hat, staring into the rat water, preparing to die. There are the words of a prayer on her lips. But there is no God, nor is there a devil or "evil". God does not exist, except in the head of a crazy woman who hardly deserves to be loved by a God. If there is a God, then he "had nothing to do with this", as Emma tells Ma. It is the fault of mankind.

What remains is summed up in Archibald Macleish's poem, "The End of the World" — There with vast wings across the canceled skies, / There in the sudden blackness the black pall / Of nothing, nothing, nothing — nothing at all."

From Behind The Scenes

By VINCE DECKER

"It's the hardest role I've ever done," admitted Jerry Dagenhart about his role of Trepps in Espers Well. The show was another big step for the Longwood Players. When You Comin' Back Red Ryder, last year's final production was the first step. "We're progressing politically and liberally," says Dagenhart. The reactions to the progress range from irate to ecstatic. "One lady wrote to the Board of Visitors saying she was going to revoke her donation because of the subject matter in Red Ryder." The last two shows have been geared toward mature audiences and are offering variety and challenge for the audience, technicians and actors.

The playwright, Richard Lauchman, attended several rehearsals, which provided a rare opportunity for college actors to work one on one with the writer. In addition to the director's point of view and their own interpretations, they get the exact character direction and conception from the creator himself.

Espers Well was a big challenge for its audiences as well. Anyone who saw it might have walked out of Jarman feeling like they had just seen a live episode of the "Twilight Zone." Close enough. A shorter version was originally written for "The Dark Room" series, a short-lived TV show in "The Twilight Zone" tradition, but the show ended before Espers Well appeared.

Dr. Douglas Young selected a veteran cast for Espers Well to represent Longwood at the American College Theatre Festival (ACTF): Dagenhart, Jammie Coy, an adjunct faculty member of the Drama Department, and Sherry Forbes, who is in her last semester at Longwood before doing her internship at Virginia Museum Theatre. If the show is judged favorably at the ACTF it could go on to the national competition at the Kennedy Center in Washington. Preliminary judging Friday night was positive.

When I close my eyes really tight, I can almost imagine what Lebanon must be like in October. The land is dry and the sun is bright. There aren't any oaks or clouds. And the men carry M-16's instead of briefcases, and their faces are hard and tired. The women walk with their backs hunched and hold their children tight with fear, by their sides, slapping them if their laughter penetrates the thick silence.

American Peacekeepers lie on the ground with full green garb, and their faces are covered with sweat and sand. Their weapons are loaded with real live honest-to-God, peacekeeping gut-ripping rounds, and the medics are carrying four more fallen angels whose bandages or caskets will raise the stakes.

There are 2100 Marines stationed in Lebanon as a Peacekeeping force against the insurrection there, from first the Syrians, and now even other Lebanese.

For the sake of economy or for the sake of security, lives are being sold and our nation's leaders are the one's who are selling out.

Economy. Our bellies will be full, our taxes decreased, while men are being shipped home to mama in plastic bags. Security. Whose security? Certainly Congress is sleeping well tonight, and Reagan — or Mr. Reagan, you won't hear the shelling through the safety of your white walls.

And now it's all settled. Congress finally decided that it's all right with them if Reagan extends the Marines' stay for 18 more months. Did someone mention War Powers Act?

How much longer will it take this Peacekeeping force and how many more men will die before Reagan is satisfied that our job is done. Peace — that is what you're after, right? And that is what you've named these armed troops? Sometimes I forget.

The Senate also defeated a Democratic suggestion that the Marines be brought home within 60 days, unless Reagan provided Congress with his objectives for the Peacekeeping Mission. Is that because Senate is afraid to face the reality of their motion, or is it because Reagan has yet to formulate any definable objectives? Is it a show of the every almighty all powerful United States' biceps — a show that the pawns are paying for?

How long will the people of America be silent while being led blindly through the mine fields? Has it been so long ago that we've forgotten Vietnam? How long will people continue their day-to-day routine, refusing to question our leaders? The fear of facing the fallibility of the American government is nowhere as great as the horror of what is going on in the lives, deaths and minds of our men in Lebanon.

Letter To The Editor

"Dream Remembered"

I want to commend you and J. Abernathy for his moving article, "Forgotten Dream." As I read in utter amazement, yet with genuine pride, tears swelled in my eyes . . . Tears of pain as I remembered the day that one of the truly great giants was shot down in cold-blood because he believed in "love, peace and freedom" for all people . . . Tears of joy because we still celebrate and remember his greatness . . . Pride in the Rotunda for having "come a long way" . . . Pride to be a part of the growing Longwood family that is working towards seeing that the dream is not deliberately deferred, even in Farmville, Virginia.

En route home, I continued to bask in the warmth of the good feelings. As I waited at the crosswalk for a group of laughing white male students to cross towards the hi-rise dorms in front of my car, one of them referred to me as a "bitch".

Reality is a fascinating personality dimension. I would be less than honest if I said I wasn't hurt. For a brief shining moment, I too, felt the essence of a possible Camelot. The pain made me aware that there is still much to be done. Moving forward means letting go of the pain, and to pursue continued movement towards personal growth and development . . . leaving space for challenge and change.

To the young men involved, there is little that I can do to alter your behavior, for we all are a sum total of our experiences . . . you, yours, and me, mine. I can understand you, and I do. But you need to know, I am not disappearing because of your ignorance, disrespect and impotence. In every experience there is some good, even when one has to work hard to see it. Often it is out of pain and despair one discovers inner depth unknown. You see, I come from a long line of survivors, a blessed and capable peopel with the will and destiny to overcome. For you, I wish to paraphrase Sterling A. Brown's "Strong Men": "One thing you cannot prohibit . . . are the strong black people coming on / The strong black people gettin' stronger / strong black men and women / Stronger . . ." Thank you for keeping me on my toes!!!

his audience that "if you want to upset your parents and don't have nerve enough to be a homosexual, the least you can do is get into the arts."

As in his most popular novel Slaughterhouse Five, Vonnegut's speech was fragmented. Ranging from Charles Dickens ("a superb performer of pre-electronic TV") to firearms ("firing a gun is about as difficult as operating a lighter"), Vonnegut seemed to be rambling through much of his speech. As in his novel however, it all began to fit together near the end.

"Just because we can build something doesn't mean that we should build it," Vonnegut told a silent crowd. "The raging question of your generation is "What are people for? What are they to do while they are here?"

In the face of a choice between automation of nearly all facets of human life or nuclear holocaust, Kurt Vonnegut stands appalled.

"What would you do with a human being if you owned one of them, — uh — open a McDonalds?"

Archeology Field School

The Search Continues

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

While most of us were lying on the beach this summer or sipping daiquiris by the pool, 36 Longwood students were on their hands and knees in an open field, under a roasting sun, digging through dirt inch-by-inch looking for God only knows what. This was the third summer that Dr. Jordan held the Archeology Field School at Longwood. "You've got to be deranged in part or highly motivated to do this kind of thing," according to Jordan.

This summer the group spent eleven weeks excavating a site in Prince Edward County, just a few miles from Farmville on the Appomattox River, called the Smith-Taylor mound site. The Smith-Taylor excavation was particularly significant not only to Longwood's archeology department, but to the entire scope of archeology in the state of Virginia. Southside Virginia holds many buried secrets from a prehistoric past. "We are in a dark room and we're lighting a small candle," Jordan explains. This area served as a barrier between different tribes of Indians, and was probably used primarily as a hunting ground or a refuge for the Indians, according to Jordan's speculations. The Smith-Taylor mound site is the first major archeological undertaking for the group, and because of it's significance to Longwood and to the archeology of Virginia, Dr. Jordan urged the Governor to visit the site and examine the findings.

Governor Charles S. Robb agreed, and visited the site June 15. He arrived in the standard governor attire, his three piece suit, to take a look at what these sweaty sunburned archeologists found so intriguing in the dirt in 104 degree weather. Even the Richmond based, Eyewitness News Team from Channel 8 came out to see why these students were spending their summer in a prehistoric sandbox.

So far, the field school's findings have included pottery - pieces, that date as far back as 5000 years ago, and were probably used to store food. They have found projectile points, blades, pieces of wall and hand axes. "It's conceivable that when you find a stone, you are touching something that no one else has touched in 4000 years," Dr. Jordan explains the rewards of the search.

Dr. Jordan describes the ground that is excavated as a book — a very old book. "It's the only copy of the book in the world, and the point is getting every piece of information. And that's why we use a trawl instead of a bulldozer." Participation in the field school gives students a "chance, maybe their only chance in the world, to make that leap backward in time." The students are not all archeology majors, or even minors, they are a group of interested people who find a challenge in digging up pieces of an age old puzzle.

The Smith-Taylor mound site was named by Dr. Jordan's archeology group in honor of the landowner, Mr. Robert Smith, and for Mr. Robert Taylor, president of Taylor Manufacturing, in Farmville, who brought the potentiality of the site as an archeological interest to Dr. Jordan's attention. The field school will continue at the site next summer, as they have only covered 8 percent of the area so far.

It takes something special to spend a summer digging through the ground little by little. "Archeologists tend to be more earthy, playful and introspective about their business than most academic fields," explained Jordan. "You can be more holy and fully human in archeology. It involves your mind, your senses, your fingers, your knees and your back, — and you're still a scientist."

Longwood's field hockey team, 6-2-1 after last week's action, was ranked seventh in the nation in the NCAA Division II Field Hockey poll, marking the first time ever the Lady Lancers have been ranked in the nation.

Longwood hosts Division III power Lynchburg Tuesday at 3:00 and visits Bridgewater Thursday in action this week. Last week Longwood tied Radford 1-1 on Tuesday, blanked Mary Washington 3-0 Thursday and fell to Division I Duke Saturday afternoon 1-0.

Coach Bette Harris, who is chairman of the Atlantic Region Selection Committee, expressed surprise at her team being ranked.

"I was a bit surprised and also pleased," said the coach. "We can take pride in being ranked, but we have to continue to do well if we hope to get one of the six spots in the playoffs."

Sophomore Sue Groff scored two goals last week, one against Radford and one against Mary Washington to give her five for the season along with five assists. Sharon Bruce is in second place in scoring with four goals.

Longwood senior co-captain Terry Chumley has given up just eight goals in eight games, giving her a goals against average of just 1.00 per game.

Senior co-captain Jaudon Conkwright had a goal and an assist in the win over Mary Washington and Mary Garrison also scored against the Blue Tide.

Gerken First At Yale Invitational

Longwood junior Lanie Gerken fired a three-over-par 73 in the final round of the Yale University Invitational Sunday afternoon, capturing the individual title with a two-day total of 158. Longwood finished third out of seven teams in the predominantly Division I tournament.

Gerken had shot an opening round 85 on the rain-soaked Yale University Course Saturday, but Sunday the veteran Lady Lancer golfer turned in by far the best round of the tournament, losing just three strokes to par. Also for Longwood, Sue Morgan shot 85-83-168 for sixth place, Cheryl Dufort 92-90-182, Carol Rhoades 93-89-184, Leslie Oscovitch 102-94-196 and Kim Marie Sylvaria 90-92-182.

Penn State (679) was first, North Carolina-Wilmington (680) was second and Longwood (690) was third, finishing ahead of Dartmouth (703), Boston College (780), Rutgers (780) and Princeton (789). Longwood had rounds of 355-335 for its two-day total.

The Lady Lancer golfers had rounds of 332-329 last Monday and Tuesday for a 661 total and an eighth place finish out of 10 teams in the Blue Ridge Mountaineer Invitational, hosted by Appalachian State. Duke won the tournament with a 303-304-607.

Longwood was led by Lanie Gerken with a 79-78-157. Gerken's score ties her with Kay Smith for second place among Longwood's all-time best for a 36-hole event.

Other Longwood scores included: Sue Morgan 77-83-160, Cheryl Dufort 86-83-169, Leslie Oscovitch 90-85-175, Mary Semones 92-88-180 and Kim Patterson 96-89-185.

This week Longwood takes part in the Duke University Invitational Friday, Saturday and Sunday in Durham, North Carolina, against a mostly Division I field of teams.

Lancer Booters Fall To R-MC

Longwood's 6-1 soccer team, stung by a 2-1 loss at Randolph-Macon Wednesday, will try to bounce back at Virginia Commonwealth Tuesday and at home Saturday when Mount St. Mary's pays a visit.

The VCU contest begins at 3:30 Tuesday while Saturday's contest kicks off at 1:00. Coach Rich Posipanko says his team must come back strong if it hopes to earn a spot in the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Playoffs.

"Randolph-Macon is in the driver's seat right now in the Central Division, but we can still get in the playoffs if we have a good record and get the wild card berth," said the coach. "We've got to take advantage of our scoring opportunities. We could have been ahead of Randolph-Macon 3-0 at the half, but we missed some easy shots."

Freshman Shawn McArdle gave Longwood a 1-0 lead in the first half on Wednesday's contest, but that was the only one of 14 first half shots that found the mark. Macon got a 35-yard direct kick just before the half and dominated play in the second half. Longwood had 21 shots to the Yellow Jackets 17.

"Our defense is still doing a solid job," said Posipanko. "We've got to find a way to increase our offensive production."

Top scorers for Longwood have been Mark McArdle with three goals, his brother Shawn with two and Bill Foster with two goals and two assists.

Duncan To Coach Lady Lancer Basketball

The Kentucky native has a varied background in basketball and women's athletics. A well-known basketball official, she chaired a national basketball officiating committee on principles and techniques, served as rules interpreter for three national women's basketball championship tournaments and was the first president of the Virginia Association for Coaches of Girls and Women's Sports.

Duncan has conducted numerous basketball clinics, and she planned, organized, and conducted her own basketball camps in 1974, 1976 and 1977.

The new Longwood coach, who met the Lady Lancer cagers for the first time Monday, says the program will continue to emphasize excelience in both academics and athletics.

"From what I know, it looks like we have a strong nucleus of players back," said Duncan. "We're anxious to get started."

Commenting on the style of play she favors, the coach said: 'Coming from Kentucky, the style of play I like is fast break basketball."

Duncan replaces Jane Miller, basketball and lacrosse coach at the University of Virginia.

Assistant coach Nanette Fisher, in her third year with the program, has been working with the Lady Lancer cagers in the interim.

SHIRLEY DUNCAN

Shirley Duncan, former coach at Eastern Kentucky and West Springfield High School, has been named to a one year appointment as head coach of Longwood's NCAA Division II women's basketball team, Longwood Director of Athletics Carolyn Hodges announced today.

"I am delighted to welcome Ms. Ducan to our staff," said Hodges. "She comes highly recommended as a 'master teacher' and 'exceptional coach'. She has had outstanding success at both the high school and collegiate levels. She will be a tremendous asset to our program."

Duncan, who currently resides in Virginia Beach where she is in the sporting goods business, coached at Eastern Kentucky 1975-79, winning a state championship and runner-up spot in AIAW Region 2. At West Springfield, her teams won four district and two regional titles from 1971-75.

"I'm very excited about the opportunity," says Duncan. "I have been in Virginia a number of years and I'm familiar with Longwood's excellent tradition in women's athletics. I'm looking forward to being a part of that tradition."

Duncan is a 1956 graduate of the University of Kentucky. She received her Masters in physical education from Indiana University in 1961.

Sullivan Chosen

Longwood senior shortstop John Sullivan was among the final group chosen at the Virginia Olympic Tryouts September 24 at the University of Virginia. Sullivan is a native of East Quogue, New York and a grad of W. Hampton Beach High. While only one player was picked to go on to the regional tryouts in Louisville, Sullivan was one of three shortstops picked for the final cut. Former Virginia State player Steve Ellerbe, a left-fielder, was picked by the tryout staff to go to Louisville in October. Sullivan batted .347 with 6 doubles and 4 homers in 1983.

Longwood coach Buddy Bolding, a member of the tryout staff, said it was the consensus of the group to send the player with the best opportunity for making the national team. Baseball will be a demonstration sport at the 1984 Olmpics in Los Angeles.

LC Golfer

Longwood's men's golf team, which winds up its fall season this week, placed fifth out of 10 teams in the Old Dominion Collegiate Tournament last Monday and Tuesday at Dee Run Golf Course in Newport News.

The Lancers play a three-team match Tuesday at Randolph-Macon with Mary Washington to wrap-up the fall campaign.

Macon won the Old Dominion tournament with a 653 while Newport News Apprentice was second at 658. Chowan finished third at 689 while Mary Washington was fourth with the same score. Next came Longwood at 690, Virginia Wesleyan 699, Christopher-Newport 709 and St. Augustine's 710. The Old Dominion "B" team and Livingstone were disqualified.

Athletic Scholarships

By LAURIE POOL

For the 1982-83 school year approximately $100,000 supported between 70-73 athletic students at Longwood College. Over half of the financial support came from student tuition athletic and intramural fees. The other portion came from a combination of donnations from the Lancer Club, concession sales, business sponsored tournaments, and private donations.

Four women's sports receive athletic funding at Longwood: basketball, field hockey, gymnastics, and golf. The three male sports include basketball, baseball, and soccer. Carolyn Hodges, Athletic Director (AD), along with the Inter-collegiate Council (IAC) determine the allotment of money to Longwood's athletes. To determine the amount available to each sport, the AD and IAC focus on the sport's participation level in proportion to the total number of male and female students attending Longwood.

Marvin Ragland, Director of Financial Aid, stated that the overall G.P.A.'s of students attending Longwood on athletic scholarships does not significantly vary from the overall student average.

Day Care Center Proposed

By GEORGIA COCKILL
Journalism 110

Longwood College is considering the operation of a day care center on the grounds of the college. The day care center will be located in the Wynne Building, which is the college's former laboratory school. The center will be separate from the operation of the nursery school in the Coyner Building.

The center will have a capacity of 60 children, ages 2-12. It would be open daily, except weekends and legal holidays, throughout the year. The hours would be 6:30 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Pre-schoolers will be able to attend the whole day, and school-age children will be able to attend before school opens and after school closes, and full days during school vacation periods.

The center will be staffed by 7-8 people, including a director, teachers, and aides. Pre-schoolers will be offered a combination of learning programs and recreation activities. School-age children will be offered recreational activities after school and a combination of learning programs, and recreational activities during vacation periods. The latest equipment and a substantial supply of learning materials will be available.

If the college were to proceed, the center could open January 2, 1984.

The charge for a child enrolled full days will be $43.00-$45.00 per week, including noon meal and snack. For children attending after school, the charge would probably be about $15.00 per week.

At present surveys are being distributed to determine whether there is enough of a demand to open the center.

LC Impact On Fast Foods

Longwood College students have a great impact on the business of McDonalds and Hardees. McDonalds Manager Carolyn Reed and Hardees Supervisor Vickie Lee both said that they get more business from Longwood students than Hampden-Sydney students. The Longwood community greatly increases the sales by a rough estimate of 21 percent at McDonalds and at least 30 percent at Hardees.

Both Hardees Supervisor Lee and McDonalds Manager Reed said that there is a marked decrease in sales during summer vacation and when the students are on break during the school term. Lee said that the peak months for Hardees are September, March, and May. Reed said the busiest times for McDonalds are spring and late summer and that business is very slow during the winter months January-March.

Scholar Speaks On Role In Soviet History

(Public Affairs) — Blacks have traditionally played a larger role in Russian life than their small numbers would indicate, a scholar on the subject recently told a Longwood College audience.

Dr. Allison Blakely, an associate professor of history at Howard University, discussed the role of blacks in both Imperial and Soviet Russia on Sept. 29. His talk, sponsored by the Association of Black Students, was the first in a series of lectures by black scholars.

Although there has never been more than 20,000 people of direct African descent at any one time in Russia, "their role and presence is much greater than numbers would suggest," said Dr. Blakely. The majority has lived in small, scattered settlements in the Caucasus mountains near the Black Sea.

There is evidence of blacks in modern Russia as early as the 5th century, but most "go back only a few centuries and can be traced to slaves of Arab, Turkish or Georgian nobility," he said. Most blacks from the Black Sea region are of mixed blood, perhaps of Persian or Turkish ancestry.

The first black to attain high status in Russia was Abram Hannibal, who was a favorite of czar Peter the Great, according to Dr. Blakely. Brought to Russia as a servant in the early 18th century, Hannibal obtained a formal education and advanced to the rank of general in the army engineers. He was the maternal great-grandfather of Alexander Pushkin, the famous 19th century poet.

"Hannibal was accepted into Russian nobility," Dr. Blakely said. "If you had high connections, it didn't matter what color you were. Class and wealth were more important than race."

Most blacks, however, were servants, and many served in the czar's court.

Since the beginning of Soviet Russia, Communist Party officials have recognized the propaganda usefulness of American blacks, the professor said. They have sought to portray blacks as oppressed and "downtrodden" — to the point of rejecting blacks for film roles because their skin was too light.

Most of the blacks who visited the Soviet Union in the 1920s, after the Russian Civil War, did so out of curiosity or to seek a better life, rather than for ideological reasons, said Dr. Blakely. Many of these black visitors, such as poet Claude McKay, were treated as celebrities by Soviet authorities. Very few blacks ever stayed.

Many blacks have found a discrepancy between Soviet rhetoric and reality, said Dr. Blakely. One who didn't was singer-actor Paul Robeson, who was black-balled and whose career was ruined in the 1950s for his pro-Soviet sympathies.

Artist Of The Month

Robin Valerie Brown, of Mechanicsville, is Longwood College's Artist of the Month for October.

The faculty of Longwood's art department awarded Ms. Brown this honor for her untitled acrylic painting, citing the "outstanding sensitivity and quality of execution" in the still life composition.

She received a $50 cash award, and her painting is on display this month in the Bedford Art Building at the college.

A junior art major at Longwood, Ms. Brown plans a career in the field of illustration. She serves as head hostess and assists with gallery-exhibit work in the Bedford Building.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Brown, of Mechanicsville, and a 1981 graduate of Lee-Davis High School.

Ski Steamboat

By JIM SCOTT

A lone figure swooshes a path through the fresh champagne powder snow of Mt. Werner; another couple has just skied into Thunderhead Restaurant for brunch; a party of four is getting ready to use the sauna at Ski Time Square Condominiums. The place, Steamboat Springs, Colorado. The date, January 5, 1984. The group, participants on Frazer Hall Council ski trip.

Steamboat Springs is a community in the northwest portion of Colorado, approximately three hours from Denver. The town captures the rustic flavor of the Old West. Shops, restaurants and night life, all within walking distance of the condominiums, provide ample opportunity for guests to explore and get to know the Steamboat Springs resort. Steamboat Springs Transit (SST) services the community for those tired folks who wish to ride and view the surrounding area.

January 5, 1984 falls in the middle of National College Ski Week and Steamboat will be alive with students, faculty and staff from many U. S. colleges and universities. This year Frazer Hall Council has decided to be part of the "aliveness" and offer you an opportunity to join them in a week of skiing, relaxation, entertainment and excitement.

Included in the package is: round trip air fare from National Airport in Washington, D. C. and all transfer from Denver to Steamboat; seven night accommodations in condominium housing; five day lift ticket (one day can be exchanged for a free lesson and lift ticket); two Wild West parties; one major concert; an hors d'oeuvre and beer party on the slopes; and a discount booklet for restaurants in the area. Not included are meals and equipment rental. A special discount rate of $7.00 per day will be offered to participants who wish to rent equipment.

This trip is being offered to you for $475.00 per person for the week of January 3-10, 1984. A $100.00 deposit is required by October 30 to reserve your space. Remaining payments are due November 30 ($150.00) and December 15 ($235.00).

Registration forms can be obtained by contacting the Frazer Office at 392-9374 any day between noon and midnight. An informational meeting will be held on October 20 at 6:30 p.m. in the small recreation room located in First Floor Frazer. This trip is open to all of the Longwood community, their families and guests. We hope that you will be able to join us January 3-10 as we SKI STEAMBOAT!

The President wants to sell materials for the production of nuclear energy to the Indians. They won't promise not to turn the plutonium into bombs, but that's o.k. because the Supreme Court is keeping up the world balance by approving the constitutionality of a ban on hand guns in Morton Grove, Illinois. The Senate is reviewing a proposal to institute a "peacetime" draft, and Ted Kennedy is speaking in Lynchburg to 5000 Moral Majority supporters. Something's gone astray, and we're all in for big trouble.

Dumbstruck by all the confusion, I called a friend in D. C. — Ginger O. Pricely — who's a secretary on Capitol Hill for some bigshot conservative in the House. I asked her who was planning all of this madness, but she wasn't quite sure. She didn't know too much about Kennedy ("fruitcake" I believe was the term she used), and she took to screaming when I told her that this nation is being guided by a seventy-five year old milk fanatic who wants to arm every third citizen with a personal nuclear warhead for use in the event of defense.

When she had calmed down she told me not to worry, that the Russians, being the vile and immoral heathans they are, were going to blow us up within two months with their newly developed remote control laser blasters. Zowie.

"Yea, they're gearing up for World War Three here in the capital," Ginger tells me. She's not exactly sure just how it's going to go down, though.

"Reagan told the U. N. that 'nuclear nonproliferation must not be the forgotten element of the world's arm control agenda,'" Ginger said.

"So he turns around and is trying to sell the Indians, the South Africans, and the Argentians these radioactive playtoys," I noted, "without a nonproliferation treaty."

"Only because he supports nuclear energy."

"But still they can make bombs with the surplus plutonium if the notion hits them."

"They say not — you can't tell — that's the First Opportunity for the big boom."

A friend of Ginger's boss is U. S. Ambassador at-large Richard Kennedy (no relation). "He knows how it is," Ginger insists, "the other day he told the Senate that 'if we don't (sell the nuclear materials to India), someone else will.'"

I thought I'd heard the line before, but I decided not to press it, so I changed the subject — "What's this about a peacetime draft?"

"Opportunity Number Two. I'm not sure, it's not your average annual draft bill. Now you're got six dead bodies from Lebanon and more from Central America. Senator Hollings, who proposed the bill of course, is up for the Democratic Presidential Nomination, so he's serious about it. He wants all men age 18-24 to serve at least two years in the armed forces."

"At any rate, we won't be getting any federal aid for school for another year unless we register to be drafted, right?"

"At least a year; the Supreme Court won't even see the Solomon Amendment dictating that until next year. The Selective Service will be dropping you a little red card in the mail if you registered, though, so you can show the world that you're a hell-raising, battle-hungry, registered American man.

Confusion In The Ranks

"Before you know it they'll be locking up Matt Dillon for carrying a gun in Dodge City."

"I don't think it matters anyway, ya know, damned liberals in the Court have let those gun-control fanatics win a big one. Opportunity Three."

"Morton Grove?"

"Yea, before you know it they'll be locking up Matt Dillon for carrying a gun in Dodge City. All we're gonna have left in this country is a bunch of defenseless liberals. Communists will walk right on up to the White House."

"I take it you and your boss didn't approve of the Court's vote."

"I haven't seen him so mad since Carter got elected. I think he's out at target practice now. Last thing he said before he left the office was "Handguns don't kill people, damn it, people do."

"More familiar logic, I see."

"Anybody with any sense knows how to fire a gun these days. Hell, the military is turning out new recruits like they's going out of style, and every one of them is a crack shot."

"Something like that — yea ROTC is up all over, Berkeley's got 3 percent enrollment in the program. It's amazing, news like that."

"It's great — I feel like I'm part of a real nation now — strength, baby, strength. It's the best defense any nation ever had. Show some muscle, kick some a., don't take nothin' offa nobody — Carry a big stick and all that.

"Korean Jet Liner, Ginger. What happed to Ron Reagan — the all-American, bullet-bitin' cowboy?"

"All a simple slip-up, anybody could've done it, and he's still a damned-sight better than Carter. He knows about a strong America. Build up defense — MX'em off the planet! Start the draft — I'd fight if they'd only let me — Join the Army, damnitall, it's the only way to go."

Letter To Editor

Discontented Din(n)er

This year during dinner meals the dining hall is too crowded for the 'rush-in rush-out' schedules that many students have to keep. Night classes and meetings are scheduled right around dinner time. It's too rushed to be able to get through long dinner lines in time. Something must be done.

The waiting lines ran from the food counters, out around both the Rotunda and the New Smoker. While standing in the lines, you'll always hear students complain of being on a tight schedule, having to run here and there. Students have skipped meals or had to spend money to go elsewhere because of the long lines and limited time. This year during dinner, there are too many students for ARA and their student help to manage, in the time allowed.

During weekday lunch meals, the students are divided between the upper and lower dining halls. This would be a beneficial idea for dinner meals, too. The flow of traffic would go much faster. Those involved with food preparation wouldn't necessarily have to make more food, they could simply transport some of it to the lower dining hall. Another suggestion might be to have the dinner lower dining hall meal similar to the lunch menu.

Opening the lower dining hall for weekday dinner meals would cut down and speed up those long and dreaded lines. Sure, it might be a little more work for those involved with preparations and service, but aren't they supposed to cater to the students?

OLIVER: A Review

By JEFF ABERNATHY

"Oliver," alias Bill Soafford, played for a small crowd of thirty to thirty-five people in the Gold Room on Tuesday, October 11.

Especially popular in the early seventies, he sang "Morning Starshine" and "Jean, Jean," both of which sold over one million copies.

Coming out in a bright red shirt, black corduroys and brown leather boots, Soafford looked the part of a Texas cowboy. The singing, however, improved on the image.

His raggae version of the Hall & Oats hit "Rich Girl" was a strong lead for the show. "Barnyard," a blues song which he wrote, featured nice lyrics ("You could've heard the vegetables scream") and rhythmic Do-do-doo's which, if the listener pushed the imagination a little bit, brought to mind a white male version of Ella Fitzgerald. "We Will" ("Our hearts will know the freedom of the wild majestic stallions"), a song written but not accepted for The Trial of Billy Jack, was the best of the evening. Soafford's audience picked up the emotion of the song and appeared to enjoy it.

Many of the songs played Tuesday will be featured on the artist's new album In Our Time which will be released in February. "Slow Down," a song which brought the vocals of Jim Croce to mind, is one of the songs on the album. He played the title cut six songs into the show.

Soafford played Brian Adams' "Straight From the Heart," and his acoustic version improved significantly on the 1983 hit song. Surprising many in the audience, he also played "King of Pain" from the Police.

My notes said "class comes to Longwood," and I've got to stick by them. This was the best single artist show I've seen all year. It is, however, unfortunate that more students do not show up for these events. The Longwood Student Union presents artists for students, not for a handful of local citizens and S-UN staff.

"You could've heard the vegetables scream."

Scholar Speaks

"He worshipped the Soviet Union," Dr. Blakely said. "It was kind of an infatuation that failed to recognize reality. He worshipped the ideal; he refused to see the concentration camps, for example."

Dr. Blakely believes the Soviet government has dispersed blacks to different parts of the country to avoid possible embarrassment. Such a policy may have been a result of a book by Josef Stalin's daughter, now an ex-patriate in the West, which describes blacks living in squalor in villages near the Black Sea, he added.

Today, African college students study in the USSR and receive generous stipends from the government, he said. Those stipends have led to resentment on the part of some Russian citizens and allegations of mistreatment. Most African students return home after their studies are completed, Dr. Blakely said.

Unfortunately, the Soviet census isn't very detailed, so scholars do not know how many blacks live there or where they are concentrated, he said.

Dr. Blakely is a member of Longwood's advisory committee for the department of history and government, which met the day after his lecture. The author of numerous articles on blacks in Russia, he is a former Woodrow Wilson Fellow, was a Scholar-in-Residence at Spelman College in 1981-82, and previously taught at Stanford University.

Soccer Needs Some Respect

Soccer. Some call it a minor sport along the lines of swimming, cross-country or fencing. Since it received national attention in 1975 with the appearance of Brazilian star Pele in the North American Soccer Leage (NASL), soccer has grown by leaps and bounds. Oddly enough, it has come from the pro ranks down to the sandlot leagues. But even with increased support in the NASL and the collegiate level, soccer still gets no respect.

Yes, football is the American sport, but why has soccer been lost in the shuffle in the back of the sports section in the major papers?

Soccer is played continuously for two 45 minute halves and requires great stamina. Indeed, a soccer player who stays on the field for the duration of the game runs up to five or six miles almost non-stop. Timeouts are taken when an injured players is on the field and substitutions are made while the game is still in play. This not only increased the fluidity of the game, but deletes the dead spots that are common in football.

Excitement! Let's talk about the bicycle kick by Pele or the somersault throw-in by Virginia's Voga Wallace. Longwood fans can remember Gus Leal's scissor kick into the goal last season. How about those headers into the goal off a corner kick! Yes, you may have to wait a while for this to happen while you are sitting on the bleachers on First Avenue Field, but it is worth it. Instant replay would do justice for soccer.

Longwood has also treated soccer as a second class sport. For example, Darryl Case, the mainstay of the Lancers' defense, had been named All-American for two consecutive years, but has never been named Male Athlete of the Year. He is the only male athlete to ever achieve All-American at Longwood.

On the national level we can look at Sports Illustrated. Soccer will only appear on the cover or as a feature article every four years with the World Cup or if one

Booters Win Gobbler Classic

Longwood's soccer team closed out a 3-0 week Sunday afternoon, shutting out host Virginia Tech 1-0 to win the championship in the Gobbler Soccer Classic at Blacksburg. The Lancer booters boosted their record to 10-1-1.

The Lancers, ranked third in the Mid-Atlantic Region, will return home to face a strong Virginia Wesleyan team Saturday at 2:00, before hosting Roanoke Wednesday, October 26.

Longwood notched its sixth shutout of the season Sunday behind freshman goalie Rob Liessem and got a first half goal from senior Tim Brennan. Coach Rich Posipanko's team out-shot the Hokies 26-7, but failed to cash in numerous scoring chances.

The Lancers, who beat Mary Washington 3-1 last Wednesday, had a tough battle in the semi-finals of the Gobbler Classic before taking a 2-1 triumph in overtime from Radford. Senior Chris Wilkerson scored on a breakaway via a Johnathan Kennen assist to tie the game 1-1 and bring on overtime Saturday afternoon.

Sophomore Sam St. Phard scored the game-winner on a pass from Clay Mullican. St. Phard's goal, which came on a breakaway, enabled Longwood to trim the Highlanders, who had a 20-18 edge in shots.

Thoden named most valuable

Most Valuable Defender

Longwood junior Scott Thoden was named Most Valuable Defender in the tournament and was joined on the All-Tournament team by Brennan, Liessem, Mark McArdle and Darryl Case.

Wednesday, St. Phard, Wilkerson and Brian Allmendinger scored goals as the Lancers stopped Mary Washington 3-1.

Field Hockey

Ties E.Kentucky; Player Injured

Longwood's field hockey team, ranked eighth in NCAA Division II, battled Division I Eastern Kentucky to a 1-1 tie Friday in the James Madison Invitational on a first half goal by Mary Dey.

The Lady Lancers, now 7-2-3, travel back to Harrisonburg Tuesday to play James Madison, before hosting Appalachian State Saturday morning at 10:00.

Coach Bette Harris' team suffered a severe blow Friday when senior goalie Terry Chumley was knocked out of action near the end of regulation play with a broken wrist. Sophomore Lorraine Hall filled in admirably in the remainder of the game and two overtime periods.

The Eastern Kentucky contest matched Dr. Harris against two of her former players. Eastern Kentucky is coached by Lynn Harvell, who played for Dr. Harris at Madison, and assisted by 1983 Longwood graduate Mary Milne, a field hockey and lacrosse standout with the Lady Lancers.

The apparent loss of Chumley, who had to have her wrist placed in a cast, is a tough one for Longwood. The senior co-captain had allowed less than one goal per game. Coach Harris, however, expressed confidence in Hall, who played well Friday.

"Lorraine did a good job when she came in for Terry," said the Longwood coach. "I was pleased with some aspects of our play on astro-turf. We did a good job defensively."

Player Of The Week

Sophomore Karen Moye played a key role in Longwood's volleyball win over Chowan last Tuesday and for her performance, the Lady Lancer co-captain has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period October 7-14. Player of the Week is picked by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

"In our win against Chowan (6-15, 15-10, 15-9), Karen played an outstanding game," said coach Sherry Will. "She was very strong on spiking with 12 aces and made several key blocks, two solo. She was definitely a strong factor in the win. She showed her versatility by responding well to her switch to setter-hitter."

Moye made good on 22 out of a possible 25 chances as a setter for a percentage of 88. Will also cited the sophomore for her leadership.

Lady Lancer Duo Strives To Succeed

By CINDY CORELL

To say that Longwood golfers Sue Morgan and Lanie Gerken have a lot in common is putting it mildly. Boty are from New York, both are business majors and both have made tremendous improvement in their golf games over the past two years.

In fact, the two roommates have made big enough strides in golf that they are both pondering careers on the women's pro golf circuit after graduation.

Several weeks back, Sue shot 230 and Lanie 231 for 54 holes in the Longwood Invitational Tournament. For Sue that was 36 strokes better than her 1981 Longwood Invitational and for Lanie, a 23 stroke improvement from the same year. The Lady Lancer duo have come a long way in two short years.

Sue's 230 gave her a third place finish in the Invitational, and she came within two strokes of beating former Longwood golfer Robin Andrews' three round record of 229. Her first round 73 (73-83-74) was the lowest round by a Longwood golfer since 1980.

A player with less integrity than Morgan could have scored four strokes lower. The senior accidently played the wrong ball on the 9th hole of the second round. She reported the mistake and was required to practically play the hole over. The penalty cost her four strokes as she took a 10 on the hole.

"When I realized that it wasn't my ball," she said, "I thought about not saying anything, but I had to. I could've putted it in and switched it on the next hole, but you've got to live with yourself. It's a game of honesty, you know. I would've won the tournament; you chalk it up to experience."

Coach Barbara Smith was very pleased with Sue's honesty in the matter. "I told her Sunday," said the coach, "that I thought more of her for doing that than any score she could've gotten. It's simply the thing to do; it's just playing by the rules of golf."

Both golfers and their coach have noticed more improvement in their mental approach to tournament play than in their actual scores. "They've improved tremendously," said the coach. "I think the big difference is their collegiate experience. They've bot worked hard on their games this summer. Their mental composure is very good. They're both mature players, and they both have the potential to have a very outstanding career in golf."

Sue adds that "my biggest improvement is in my mental game. With a little experience, you're able to to do better mentally. I still need more experience."

Lanie's college golf career has been shorter than Sue's, as Lanie is a junior and Sue will graduate this spring. Lanie's career at Longwood suffered a major setback when she broke her collarbone after playing in just two tournaments her freshman year. She then stayed out the next semester for recuperation. But when she finally came back, her comeback was tremendous. She recently won the Yale Invitational in early October, with a two-day total of 158. Her scores of 85 and 73 brought Division II Longwood to third place in a predominantly Division I tournament.

Lanie's stroke average so far this year is a fine 78.7. If she maintains that pace throughout the year, she will beat the Longwood stroke average record of 79. Seven of Lanie's ten scores have been in the 70's. Sue is close behind with five out of ten scores in the 70's and a 79.7 average.

"Laps For Lancers"

WALK-JOG-A-THON

The third walk-jog-a-thon "Laps for the Lancers" will be held Sunday afternoon at 4:00 starting in front of the Rotunda. Over 100 participants are expected to walk or jog around a .4 of a mile layout as many times as possible in one hour.

Participants will raise money for Longwood Athletics through pledges for each lap completed. Over $3,500 was raised for Longwood Athletics last year as more than 130 walkers or joggers took part in the one-hour event.

Groups or organizations from the college or the local community are eligible to participate. Outside groups who take part in "Laps for the Lancers" will receive one-half (50 per cent) of their total pledge money with the other half going to Longwood Athletics.

Any group, organization or individual who desires to participate is welcome. For more information, contact Rich Posipanko at 392-9323 or 392-9268. It is not too late to take part.

Lady Lancer Golfers 12th In Duke Tourney

Longwood's women's golf team ran into some stiff Division I competition Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the Duke University Invitational as the Lady Lancers ended up in twelfth place with rounds of 341-336-321 for a 998.

Next up for Longwood will be the equally tough Lady Tar Heel Invitational October 21-23 at Finley Golf Course in Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

Top performers for Longwood were senior captain Sue Morgan with an 85-79-75-239 and junior Lanie Gerken 79-79-83-241. Other scores included: Carol Rhoades 89-87-81-259, Kim Patterson 88-91-82-261 and Cheryl Dufort 93-89-87-269.

LC Football?

It's October and the weather has begun to turn cool. Fall sports are well underway. But, something is missing at Longwood College — a football team. Since Longwood has gone co-ed, we have men's basketball, baseball, soccer, rugby, etc. But they don't seem to create the same effect that football does. We have enough guys for the other sports, why not football?

Without football, we don't have a Saturday game to look forward to. We don't have parties afterward to celebrate a win against a big rival. Without football, Longwood doesn't have a homecoming game at which big crowds turn out for. The parents can't watch their sons play football during Octoberfest weekend.

A football team would improve the impressions that people have of Longwood. It would generate more interest. It would make Longwood more well known. Longwood's scores would be announced along with other school scores. Having a football team would also encourage more men to apply to Longwood and this would further increase the male population.

Football creates a certain kind of excitement and school spirit that the other sports don't seem to do. Students, parents, and faculty members would turn out for the games, even willing to pay a few dollars to see Longwood football. It would be something else for our school to be proud of.

Hopefully sometime in the future, with more money and support, Longwood will have its very own football team. After all, we need something else to beat Hampden-Sydney in.

LC Ties For Third

By JIM WINKLER

Liberty Baptist College won four straight matches to capture the championship of the third annual Cindy Smith Memorial Invitational Tournament Saturday afternoon. Six teams competed in this year's tourney which is held in honor of the late Cindy Smith, a Longwood alumnus and former volleyball player. Liberty Baptist defeated Radford in the finals 15-9, 8-15, 15-13.

Longwood went 1-2 in the tourney defeating Ferrum 15-1, 15-1, and losing to Radford and Liberty Baptist 15-3, 15-4 and 15-4, 16-14 respectively.

Earlier in the week the Lancers split two matches with Chowan. Longwood coach Sherry Will was pleased with her team's efforts, especially those of co-captains Bonnie Lipscomb and Karen Moye. "Bonnie played outstanding, contributing with 9 spikes, 4 blocks and a successful serving percentage of 92 percent," said Will. "Karen was able to hold up the enthusiasm of the team and showed leadership ability. She made several key blocks and was strong on spiking."

Longwood's record is currently 6-17, but Coach Will is not disappointed at all with the team. "We are playing well and our performance is improving," said Will. "The girls have nothing to be ashamed of." The Lancers record for the week was 2-3, but one of those losses was a hard fought battle against Liberty Baptist in the playoffs of the Cindy Smith Invitational.

The Lancers travel to Bridgewater Tuesday (October 18) and compete at tourney champion Liberty Baptist Thursday of next week (October 27).

subject in the everyday lives of the good friends, they don't talk golf much except when they practice together. "If we don't have a scheduled practice sometimes we just go out on the course ourselves. Sometimes when we're out there," she grins, "we talk about quitting school and going south to open a pro shop."

Quitting school is definitely not seriously on their minds, but they both plan to keep golf in their futures. As Sue says, "I want to keep working on my game and try pro golf. I know I have a long way to go, but it's a desire that I have. I don't want to just go into business and then regret not trying golf."

MARKET BASKET

With the start of the fall semester at Longwood College, the Economics Seminar class has resumed its surveys of local prices for food, gasoline, and "trivia" items.

Food prices at the four major outlets in Farmville rose 2.35 percent since the last market basket survey in May. The four stores surveyed are the Big Star, Safeway and Winn-Dixie chains and the independent food market, IGA.

Although food prices were up this month, the total cost of the 40-item market basket in September 1983 ($63.08) is 25 cents less than in September 1982.

Market basket surveys in Northern Virginia, Richmond, and Tidewater all show a small decline in food prices between August and September. According to the Virginia Department of Labor and Industry, this is a seasonal trend due to late summer and fall harvests.

The department predicts, however, that "this summer's long drought can be expected to force most food prices up in the coming weeks." Dr. Anthony B. Cristo, director of the local market basket study, agrees, saying that "local consumers can expect to see higher prices for meats and grain products in the immediate months ahead."

The local survey for September revealed a range of $13 between the "high" and "low" baskets. If a consumer paid only the highest prices found for the 40 items, the basket would cost $70.53. The total of the lowest prices found for these items was $57.53.

"The moral of this spread," Dr. Cristo said, "Is that it pays to shop around and to be knowledgeable regarding food specials and price leaders offered by local merchants."

The Longwood students also surveyed changed in gasoline prices at stations in the immediate Farmville area since May.

For those who are willing to pump their own gasoline, prices were down for all brands of regular, unleaded, and premium unleaded. At the full-service pumps, however, prices were up slightly for all brands and types of gasoline.

The difference between full-service and self-service prices is significant. Full-service prices are about eight cents a gallon higher than self-serve for all types of gasoline.

player takes the NASL by storm. It may have a story on the NCAA Championships, but the majority of soccer is found in the back with recaps on everything from horseracing to sailing.

Longwood has been treated with an excellent small college soccer program and has supported it well. Of course we at LC don't have a football team. Would we support a losing football team before a winning soccer team? I hope not.

"The Blues"?!

Why is it that at a growing college like Longwood, we can't even put out a decent yearbook that supposedly represents the college and its students, faculty and administration. We paid $9.00 for a wonderful crossection of staff member and her buddies.

I flipped through the pages and found not one fraternity or sorority composite, not one club or organization represented. No photo of our present Miss Longwood. There were, however, over four photos of the illustrious editor, herself.

I understand that Ms. Hughes had problems getting people to work on the staff, in fact that seems to be her chief excuse for such a poor book. It seems unless you worked or lived in Frazer, you weren't to be seen.

The few truly interesting student life photos, such as the one of Joel King on page 15, were taken by Steven Heinzman, which the editor modestly took credit for, leaving Steven in the darkroom undeveloped. There were even students who wrote to the Virginian staff, and asked - that their photos not be published. The staff, in their arbitrary omniscience, chose to disregard those request.

There's talk that there'll be no yearbook next year, and with The Blues of '83 I certainly understand. I could surely have found better use for my $9.00 rather than the charitable donation to the Virginian.

Kings And Heroes

Since reading the September 27, 1983 issue of The Rotunda, I have read MJA's article "bypasses" several times and have concluded I must respond. It is one of the most bias, prejudicial articles I have ever read.

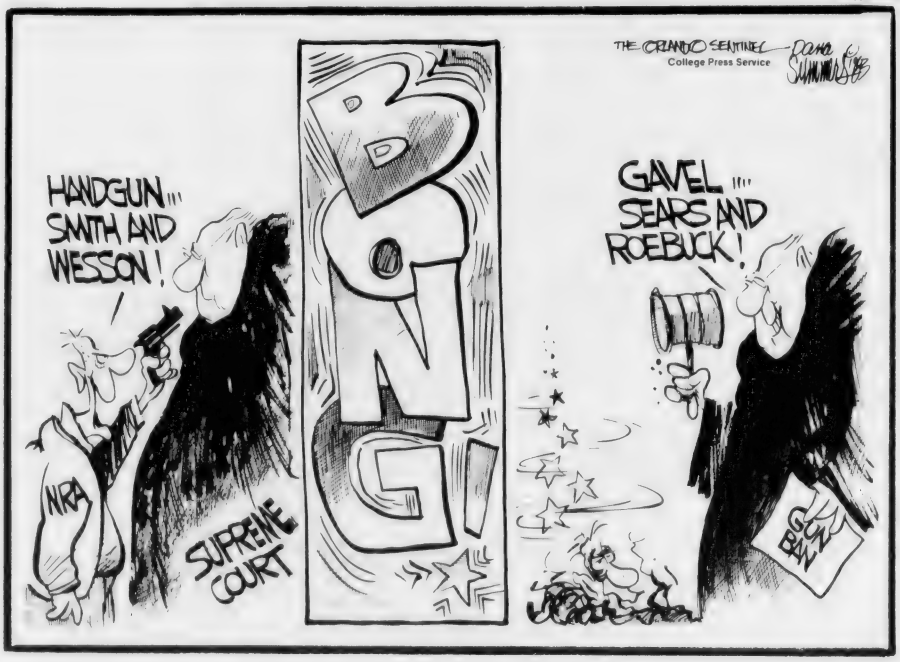
The article implies King was some kind of a hero (a great knight in shining armor). I suppose Attila the Hun, Hitler and Gudhafi are also heros. During the "civil rights movement", everywhere King went there was trouble. Records will show the troublemakers were King and the outsiders he brought with him.

Some of our world leaders praised King for the "great work" he was doing. John F. Kennedy was one of them. That is, as long as the riots and trouble stayed in the South, everything was ok — but the moment it moved North look what happened. Burnings, riots, deaths. Even Boston, Mass., Kennedy's home grounds, raised more hell than any city in the South when they were ordered to bus their children.

Another leader praising King was L.B. Johnson. He praised King publicly for his efforts of desegregation and bringing about racial equality, something Mr. Johnson knew nothing about. Mr. Johnson had hundreds of acres of land belonging to Mexican Americans condemned in Texas so a LBJ National Park might be built. Could you imagine King marching on the University of Texas, SMU, or Texas A&M, colleges where segregation was practiced just like Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina and others? Could you imagine King marching on West Point, Annapolis, Harvard or many of the other Northern Colleges who knew more about descrimination and still practice than anyone in the South?

King was a troublemaker from the very beginning. If an Indian, Oriental, Caucasian or any other race tried such an act, they would end up behind bars before they could get started. Study your history a bit, MJA, and look what happened to the Indians when they tried what King did.

Besides being the center of trouble spots there is strong evidence King was affiliated with the Communist Party. Is this someone our Country should honor?



I certainly hope you just needed something to fill space in The Rotunda and I don't really believe any of that garbage. Perhaps you should investigate further when you are going to write about an individual.

YES INDEED, KING HAD A DREAM AND THE REST OF THIS COUNTRY WERE VICTIMS OF A NIGHTMARE . . .

JOHN DUNCAN

Editor's Note: I no more believe that Martin Luther King was affiliated with the communist party than I believe Ronald Reagan to be, JD, although sometimes I'm not even sure about the old man. Also, you're quite right — Attila the Hun is one of my favorite guys.

Peace, love, and pleasant dreams!

I. B. Dent: Profile

By JEFF ABERNATHY

In the guest books at I. B. Dent's house, line after line of drunken poetry lies between sentimental remembrances from the countless artists from around the nation who have performed at Longwood. Poets and singers, actors and spies; their writing is collected in six or seven of these books which read like a brutal mix of Hunter Thompson and Ranger Rick.

Such a mix may aptly describe I. B. Dent himself, in Thompson's words "a monster reincarnation of Horatio Alger, just sick enough to be totally confident." Add the element of Ranger Rick: the cheesy mustache and curly, brown hair create a friendly atmosphere right away.

There is a constant sense of lunacy-on-the-edge-of-reality in talking with the LC Student Activities Director, as if laughter is a necessity to deal with life. "Sometimes I get tired just smiling," writes one of the drunken poets.

A member of the Longwood faculty since 1970, Dent was a Geography professor for six years, teaching in part about the geography of Africa, where he spent two years with the Peace Corps. His switch to Student Activities in January of 1976 gave him time to work with students on a more personal basis. "I'm very fond of the students," he noted in an interview this week, "I like a small school because you can get much more personable; you can build friendships much easier than at a large university."

In the eight years in which Dent has been Student Acitivities 'participate' at a time when Director, the Student Union has more than doubled the campus activities which it presents. Additions to the program include Spotlight Concerts, Snack Bar programs and Saturday Night Alive. S-UN now presents three live shows each week, including mixers, gold room concerts, and lectures.

A large factor contributing to Dent's acceptance of his current position was Longwood's switch to a co-educational institution in 1976. "I saw an exciting opportunity to sort of Longwood was going through some major changes. I had been vocal about wanting Longwood to go co-ed, not a very popular stand to take in the very early '70s. I thought that it'd be good to play a role in an amazing transition period. It was and still is."

Student Union members relate to Dent in a manner which is rarely seen within a faculty-student relationship. Many entertainers on campus stay at Dent's house where they meet Student Union members after the evening's performance. This gives Dent and the students a unique opportunity to hear the attitudes of artists from across the U. S. Often, a musician will pull out his or her instrument and play with students both singing along and listening, or perhaps an actor might share his experiences backstage with the small group."

The endless entertaining doesn't often visibly wear on Dent, "If I had too much time alone, I'd probably go batty," he insists, "if I had to do this job like I guess most people do it, I wouldn't want the job. Not only would I be missing, but the students would be missing."

At the majority of colleges and universities, performers aren't given the opportunity to meet one-on-one with students and faculty. Longwood, however, is well-known for its sociability, and many artists sacrifice money to entertain on the LC campus. "Leaving Farmville is like Carson going off the air," writes Nina Kahle. To which singer Michael Guthrie adds, "You people are a vanishing breed."

I. B. Dent's personality plays a large part in attracting entertainers to Farmville. "My personality, I'm sure, drives some people away. You're not going to be able to relate to all kinds of people. Certain people will like your method and others won't, they'll consider it pushy, or fake . . . or something. It doesn't really mean that it's right or it's wrong — it's just mine, and it works for me."

Though he sees some positive element in today's college student Dent notes some negative changes in the past ten years. "I see what I call a lot of 'snoopys' — students dancing on top of the doghouse when there's really a lot of important things going on. The volunteer feeling is not as high as it was a few years back; I guess money seems to be more important today . . . going through life just meaningful to yourself, you don't get anything out of it. It's worthless if you're going to make a million dollars for yourself; I don't see any reason to. If you're going to make a million dollars quote for 'good,' whatever that means, assisting people, then it's useful. If you haven't done something with it as you went along, there's no sense in having it."

At 5'6" in elevator shoes, Dent occasionally gets lost in the shuffle of this bustling office. Upcoming events, acts, and dates are seemingly always in his mind, and his energy is always present, no matter how late the previous evening's entertainment.

At the end of the Oktoberfest weekend, his schedule had taken a toll. Late Sunday night, his voice grainy and tired, Dent was talking of the up-coming week. The dates, performers, and people were still in his head as if he was ready for Monday morning. And of course, he would be.

"That old line was 'you go through this life but once,' and therefore you should really make use of every minute of it, every minute of it in relating to other people."

A page in one of the last guest books I read was from Arne Brav, "This is the only place outside the confines of my house that I feel I can not only relax but be myself." And another from Bill Pound, "We're all glad that we could share our lives — our music — with you."

Physicist To Speak

Dr. Delmar Bergen, a nuclear physicist with the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico, will speak at Longwood College on Thursday, October 27, at 7:30 p.m. in Jeffers Auditorium (adjoining the Stevens Science Building).

The public is cordially invited to hear Dr. Bergen discuss "Technology and Future Careers." A question-and-answer session will follow the lecture.

Dr. Bergen has been associated with the Los Alamos National Laboratory for 25 years and is currently Deputy Division Leader of the Applied Physics Division.

His work involves the design of nuclear weapons, but in a recent interview at Longwood he stated his fervent hope that these weapons will never be used and stressed the necessity for interaction with other countries and "learning to care about people and the overall quality of life."

He is a native of Kansas where he grew up on a farm. He holds degrees from Greenville College in Illinois, the University of Kansas, and the Ph.D. in physics and mathematics from the University of New Mexico.

For 18 months in 1979-80, he was special scientific adviser to the Assistant to the Secretary of Defense (Atomic Energy). He is the author of papers and unclassified reports published in professional journals, as well as numerous classified reports on nuclear warheads for strategic systems.

Dr. Bergen is a member of the Departmental Advisory Committee for Longwood's department of natural sciences.

Scholarship Service Offered

Today, furthering one's education beyond the high school level is a necessity. Yet, as the demand for further schooling increases, the costs are rocketing sky high. It is a shame that a person must consider costs above the quality of a school when making such a pertinent decision. What is the solution — the National Scholarship Service.

The NSS offers any individual computer assisted scholarship help. In a recent survey by the American Legion's Education & Scholarship Program, it is estimated that over three billion dollars in scholarships, loans, and part time jobs is available This is where the advantage of using our service lies. Our advanced computer can find those means of financial aid for which any student qualifies. Our research is constantly being updated so that we leave no stone unturned and can offer every possible source to the individual.

The student will receive a computerized report with the sources of financial aid he qualifies for. This depends on the individual and in the specific areas of his concentration. He will also receive the name and address of the source, its monetary worth, and eligibility characteristics.

The NSS guarantees to each student a minimum of five sources (and up to 25 sources if available).

Students wishing for more information should write to National Scholarship Service, Dept. CA03 P. O. Box 37, Benson, MD 21018.

Lancers Top 8th Ranked Blue Marlins

Longwood came up with a solid performance Saturday afternoon in defeating eighth ranked Virginia Wesleyan 3-1 as the Lancers begin to look more and more like a team worthy of post-season play.

Now 11-1-1, Longwood hosts Roanoke Wednesday at 3:00 and visits Eastern Mennonite Saturday for a 2:00 contest.

Coach Rich Posipanko's team never trailed in dispatching Virginia Wesleyan, which came into the game with a 10-3-1 record and eighth place ranking in Division III. Soph Clay Mullican put Longwood ahead for good just 37 seconds into the contest when he headed in a pass from Brian Allmendinger.

Pint-sized Mark McArdle gave Longwood a 2-0 edge with 10:50 elapsed with another header off a rebound shot. After the Marlins scored to close the gap at 42:26, senior scoring leader Chris Wilkerson shook loose on a break-away and rifled the ball into the net at 42:54 to take all the air from Wesleyan's sails.

Posipanko picked goalie Rob Liessem as Beegle's Player of the Week for his performance in the contest. Liessem had a total of 11 saves and came up with several crucial plays in the contest. Saturday's win gives Pospinko a 50-26-6 career mark.

Three Lancers were knocked out of action in the roughly-played contest. Mark McArdle suffered a split lip, back Scott Thoden sprained his knee and forward Johnathan Kennen suffered an apparently serious injury to his left knee.

With the win, Longwood moved into solid contention for the wild-card berth in the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Playoffs. Randolph-Macon, Eastern Mennonite and Virginia Wesleyan have clinched berths in the VISA Playoffs, leaving one spot open.

Field Hockey Hosts Spiders

Longwood's field hockey team, now 7-3-3 after a 4-2 loss to Appalachian State Saturday morning, visits High Point Wednesday and hosts Richmond next Monday (October 31) as the regular season heads toward its conclusion.

The Lady Lancers got goals from Sue Groff and Pam Esworthy against the Mountaineers Saturday but fell to a second half Appalachian St. rally. The Apps broke a 1-1 halftime tie with three goals for a 4-1 edge before Esworthy closed the gap near the end of the game.

Longwood coach Bette Harris was disappointed in the outcome of the game.

"I felt that we were capable of winning the game," said the coach. "We made some defensive errors that helped Appalachian score."

With four games left on the schedule, Longwood could finish with its best field hockey record since 1977 when the Lady Lancers ended up 11-6-2. The 1980 squad rang up an 11-7 mark while competing in Division I.

Harris praised freshman Hilary Silvera for her play on defense in Saturday's defeat. Silvera had "a good defensive effort" and "made some critical saves" against Appalachian State, said the coach.

The Longwood coach said that starting goalie Terry Chumley, who is out of action with a broken wrist, might be able to play next week for home games with Richmond (Monday), Virghinia Commonwealth (Wednesday) and at James Madison (Thursday). Chumley will not be able to play in this week's game at High Point, however.

The tilt at James Madison was to have been played Tuesday, but was moved to Nov. 3.

IN POSITION — Longwood's Sue Groff moves to get in position for second half shot attempt. Appalachan State won the game Saturday morning 4-2.

Netters Finish Season

Longwood's women's tennis team winds up its fall season this week with a match at Randolph-Macon Monday and a home contest with powerful Mary Washington Friday at 3:00.

The Lady Lancer netters, now 1-5, dropped an 8-1 decision to Mary Baldwin Wednesday. Captain Cathy Morris got the win for Longwood in single.

Corrections

Terri Chumley was last week's Beegles' Field Hockey Player of the Week. Her name was inadvertantly left out. Congratulations, Terri!

Darryl Case is the only male athlete to ever achieve All-American at Longwood twice. The word 'twice' was left out of last week's Sports Commentary.

"Recuperation" was spelled wrong on page seven of last week's Rotunda — sorry, English majors!

Women's Golf

Longwood's women's golf team, which ended up 18th in the rain-shortened Lady Tar Heel Invitational Saturday, wraps up its fall season November 7-9 in the North Carolina State Invitational in Raleigh, N. C.

Kentucky took the top prize in Chapel Hill over the weekend with a two-day total of 612. The tournament, scheduled for 54 holes, was shortened to 36 by a steady downpour Sunday as the final round was canceled.

Other team scores were as follows: South Florida 618, North Carolina (White) 628, Ohio State 630, Duke 632, Georgia 633, South Carolina 637, N. C. State 640, Wake Forest 641, Florida International 650, North Carolina (Blue) 650, Minnesota 657, Purdue 669, Iowa 670, Penn St. 670, James Madison 675, Appalachian 685, William & Mary 691 and Longwood 705.

Longwood scores included: Lanie Gerken 80-86-166, Sue - Morgan 83-86-169, Carol Rhoades 90-85-175, Leslie Oscovitch 95-90-185 and Cheryl Dufort 99-97-196.

The Lady Lancers had a first - round 348 Friday, but slipped to a 357 Saturday.

Gymnastics Exhibition

Longwood's 1983-84 gymnastics team will put on an exhibition Thursday night at 8:00 in Lancer Hall. The exhibition performance is open to the public at no charge.

Coach Ruth Budd's team, which opens its season December 2 when Duke visits, has been looking good in preseason workouts. Longwood will be led by veterans Dayna Hankinson, Gray Stabley, Kim Owens, Lisa Zuraw, Kim Kenworthy and Cindy Weinstock.

Newcomers on the squad include: Kerri Hruby, Sonya Knur, Debbie Malin, Kelly Stayer and Shay Woolfolk.

"I have been impressed by the teamwork and spirit of this group," says Coach Budd. "We have some talented gymnasts who I think will put on a performance worth watching Thursday night."

"Laps" Rained Out

The walk-jog-a-thon "Laps For The Lancers", which was to have been held Sunday afternoon, was rained out and re-scheduled for Sunday, October 30 at 4:00.

Over 100 participants are expected to walk or jog around a .4 of a mile layout, starting in front of the Rotunda. Participants will complete as many laps as possible in one hour, raising funds for Longwood Athletics through pledges made for each lap completed. Over $3,500 was raised last year for Longwood Athletics as more than 130 walkers or joggers took part in the one-hour event.

College Presidents Report

By JEFF ABERNATHY

The cost to each student of a diploma from Longwood and other state colleges in Virginia has increased an average of 75.6 percent in the past four years according to a report from Virginia's State College and university presidents.

This trend is due to a decrease of state funds being aloted to higher education the presidents said in a fifteen page report on the financial status of their institutions. State monies for higher education have decreased eight percent in ten years; from 55 percent of the total cost of a four-year education in 1973 to a projected 47 percent next year. Only seventeen states nationwide charge their citizens more for a public education, the presidents indicated.

The statement was released to the public Thursday in an effort to make Virginia's citizens more aware of the situation now facing the Commonwealth. The report stated that "a deterioration of the quality of our academic programs will sorely result from continued erosions in State support, and the future of literally thousands of Virginians will be jeopardized,"

The report expressed dismay with the budget plans of Governor Charles Robb, claiming current funding is neither adequate for present needs or for future ones:

"Virginia colleges and universities are faced with a crisis — a crisis provoked by a continuing decline in an already inadequate level of fiscal support."

Robb has ordered budget reductions three times in the past two years in addition to a state hiring freeze ordered early last year. 950 college and university jobs have been eliminated.

In the midst of the freeze and budget cuts, the number of applications to State colleges and universities rose sixteen percent between 1978 and 1972. The number of admissions applications to Longwood was the largest ever for the current semester.

The president's report did not, however, propose where the needed funds would come from. It avoided any discussion of tax increases or bond issues which have been proposed in the past.

Governor Robb's Secretary of Education, John Casteen, pointed out Wednesday that if the presidents want more money for their institutions they should come up with a proposal indicating where the needed funds could come from.

Though Thursday's report is likely to ignite some tax increase proposals in Richmond, Chairman of the Council of Presidents Donald Dedmon of Radford University, said the State would be better off to reexamine its spending priorities before examining the possibility of a tax increase for higher education.

Market Basket

Local Food Prices Drop Sharply

Area food buyers found a number of good bargains at local food stores in October. The total cost of the Farmville market basket dropped a surprising 1.76

The October market basket cost $61.97, as compared to $63.08 for the September basket.

The cost of the market baskets in Richmond and Northern Virginia increased slightly this month, and both were higher than the Farmville basket. The Tidewater area basket showed a very slight decrease and cost $1.42 less than the local basket.

This month's Farmville food basket is priced 2.15 percent less than a year ago. The cost of the same basket in October 1982 was $63.33.

Dr. Anthony B. Cristo, director of the local market basket study, cautions that October's good news "should be enjoyed, for food prices in general are expected to rise noticeably in the months ahead."

The difference between the "high" and "low" baskets this month was $11.91. The total of the highest prices found for each of the 40 items was $68.32; the total of the lowest prices found was $56.41.

The Trivia Basket survey (nonfood items purchased by most consumers) was taken for the first time since April. The total cost of the 30-item Trivia Basket has increased 3.94 percent since April, due primarily to sizeable increases in the cost of cigarettes, beer, notebook paper, Alpo and 9-Lives pet foods, Bayer aspirin, Windex window cleaner, Downy fabric softener, Kodak film, and the news-stand price of The Reader's Digest.

All of these studies are projects of the Economics Seminar class at Longwood College and are directed by Dr. Cristo.

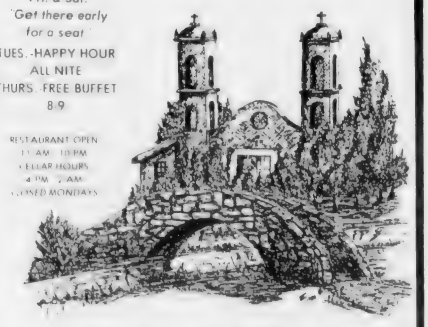
Miss Longwood

CONTESTANTS SOUGHT

A Miss America preliminary will be held at Longwood on March 3. The winner will receive a projected $1,000 scholarship, other gifts, and the title of Miss Longwood. She will compete in the Miss Virginia Pageant next July.

To qualify for the Miss Longwood Pageant, students must be single, must be taking at least 12 or more credit hours, must have no less than a 2.0 cumulative GPA, and must be between the ages of 17 and 26. Also, contestants must find an on-campus sponsor to pay the $10 entry fee.

Application forms are available at the Public Affairs Office on the second floor of East Ruffner. The deadline for filing the application is Nov. 22.



Auditions will be conducted in December to determine the final 10 contestants for the pageant in March.

Contestants will be judged on talent, poise, private interview, and appearance in swimsuit and in evening gown. The audition will not include evening-gown competition.

The 1984 Miss Longwood Pageant will be a cooperative effort of students, faculty, staff, and community leaders. The student chairman is Robin Elder, the current Miss Longwood.

The Miss America Pageant, at the local, state, and national levels, represents the largest private scholarship foundation for women in the United States.

Review:

CHIP FRANKLIN

By JEFF ABERNATHY

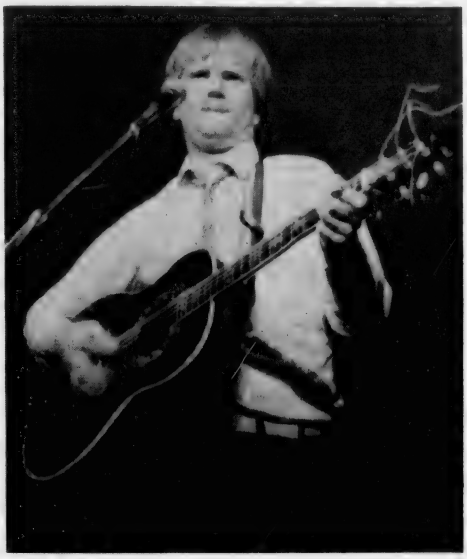
"When I was in College my motto was if I wasn't wasted, then the day was!"

Chip Franklin assailed Longwood Saturday night with a comical and musical performance which was entertaining, somewhat intellectual, and refreshingly insane.

The show began with a twenty-minute comedy routine which was fragmented with raging on the latecomers ("You guys late — do you have a pass?"). He spoke on his affection for modern economical wonders like K-Mart, "Why is it that mothers bring their children to K-Mart to beat them?", and his favorite postage stamp commenorating the first P.A.P. test.

The evening's first song was "Hip Survivors", a cut from Franklin's forthcoming album, Tragically Hip. The space-echoe which he uses on his vocals along with his electric guitar work gave the song a fast-paced, new-wave bend which the audience wasn't quite ready for but received well. "Damn, This Traffic Jam" had a blue-sy beat to it, and Franklin easily pulled his audience into it to sing a few bars.

"That's Why I Hate the Beach Boys," also on Tragically Hip, was the first set's best song: "The jocks always got the California girls; that's why I hate the Beach Boys!" His impression of Elvis — "the way he is" — was hillarious.



Memoirs of his childhood school life: "I went to some tough Catholic schools, like Our Lady of Charles Manson. The nuns are just like Seven Up — never had it, never will."

The second set opened with "Missing" and "Night Train," the latter of which was the evening's strongest song. The lyrics were haunting between the fast, rolling chords.

Both "Missiles in Europe" and Franklin's version of Warren - Zevon's "Werewolfs in London" had strong political statements. Something about Jerry Falwell and Jesse Helms in a Capitol Hill bathroom, I believe.

The title cut from the album, which will be released on A and R records, was madness. Donning his mohawk and armed with a toy chainsaw, Franklin danced through the audience while the "band" (a pre-recorded background) played. On the album, vocals will be done by Jon Carroll and Margot Kunkel, both formerly of the Starland Vocal Band.

The Student Union presented another good show for a large crowd of about one hundred students. Franklin also performed Sunday night for a somewhat smaller group. I wouldn't be surprised at all to hear some of the music played Saturday night reverberating around Longwood's campus a few months down the line.

Congratulations Longwood. We've finally done it. After I heard about last week's bombing in Beirut, I walked over campus — and I saw not a single Lancer marching in the streets. Not one of us carried a banner that read "Bring Our Boys Homes," or "Make Love Not War," and not one chorus joined together in "Give Peace A Chance." In fact, not a single student dared to wear a "Nuke Those Lousy Lebanese" button. Once again Longwood, in the never-ending dynamic world, we've chosen to remain unheard.

And I hear you're unhappy with the dining hall. The food, the hours, and the gripes never end. But with much planned effort, surely we've managed to let the dining hall committee of the SGA go impotent and inactive, "due to lack of interest".

And the judicial board this year, originally to be chosen from the students in a formal election, ended up being hand-picked by our SGA, because there weren't enough applicants to constitute an election.

In the last Student Government election, less than five percent of Longwood's students voted.

It's taken years and years of practice, and we've finally done it — we're completely, complacently and incredibly lukewarm. The sleepy dragon, right? We've become so controlled, so cool and collected that nothing can move us. No sireebob!

Last year the administration - initiated a new-fangled $100 damage deposit fee that's been collected from every student. For those who aren't math majors, that's over $200,000 in damage deposit monies. What's being done with the incredible 9-10 percent interest that could be drawn on that money in a single year? Who knows. No waves. Don't rock the boat — pay your bills and never question why. Sh-h. Quiet.

And the Student Union puts on lots of concerts — those horribly boring top name performers, ballets (Yuk!) — things we'd rather go to Vegas, or New York and pay $30 to see. We resist with all our might — and keep the attendance down to a maximum of eight percent. Just last month, Longwood presented a world premier play — Chester's — or Esper's something or other. And we slacked up a little guys — a little over 10 percent showed up. What's happening? Dissent in the ranks?

And did you know — the Virginian yearbook is about to fold — only 200 of us bought one — and they just can't stand it any longer. Yipee!

And even here at the newspaper — mum's the word. There's news everywhere — but everyone's keeping quiet. Damned reporters. All they want is a story. Who the hell wants to hear about blood and guts in Lebanon. We want to know where the next keg of beer is!

Yep — celebrate — next Tuesday's election day, the SGA is looking for people to run in its election the 14th. Slater still serves liver, the USA has invaded Grenada, Lebanon is still a mystery — does anybody know who's running in '84? How old do you have to be to register?

Outraged

I am writing in response to a letter written by John Duncan regarding Martin Luther King. I found myself completely outraged by the contents of this letter. The only word, which I can use in print, to describe his position is ignorant. I realize that this word is inadequate, because it connotes a sense of innocence which I found totally lacking in his letter. His statements consist of untruths, half-truths, and malicious slander.

First, it is untrue that the University of Texas was segregated in the late 1960's. Although the number of black students was relatively small (1500 out of about 50,000), it was an integrated university. It is untrue that only Indians or orientals would end up behind bars for civil rights activities. Mr. Duncan conveniently forgets that Dr. King was jailed many times for his activities.

Second, the accuracy of the characterization of Dr. King as a troublemaker really depends on your point of view. The English considered Henry, Washington, and Jefferson to be troublemakers. The Southerners considered Lincoln to be a troublemaker. Gandhi was so characterized by British colonialists. Sadat, more recently, by Arab extremists. So if King was a troublemaker, he is in good company.

Third, ignorance is no excuse for comparing King to Hitler, etc. While Dr. King's work in civil rights is well known, we should not forget his emphasis on non-violence and his opposition to war. His dream included a vision of not only a time when black and white children would play together in the red clay of Georgia, but also a time when young men would not die on foreign shores. Putting a man who stood for justice and peace in a category with men who committed outrageous acts of violence is a purposefully malicious slander. Furthermore, there is not a shred of evidence to support the statement that King was affiliated with the Communist Party. Given Hoover's hatred for King, he would certainly have used any suggestion of Communist affiliation to discredit King. Shame on you.

I encourage all of you to follow Mr. Duncan's suggestion to MJA and read up on your history. I recommend a reading of Goebber's writings on the believability of the "big lie," followed by a review of McCarthy smear tactics which he used so successfully in his rise to power. We must indeed know our history to prevent the re-occurrence of past nightmares.

"WOULD ANYBODY REALLY OBJECT TO HAVING A MIDTERM EXAM NEXT WEEK SOMETIME?"

Letter To The Editor: 'Blues' Rebuttal

Dear Editor:

In Jerry Dagenhart's and Sheri Fitzsimmon's recent letter to the Rotunda, I found many comments that were made in ignorance, not fact.

First I'd like for everyone to know that Mr. Dagenhart volunteered his services to the Virginian staff last year. He wanted to cover organizations and clubs. He never showed up. Like others his was an empty offer. And now he finds the nerve to complain?

The Virginian would like to apologize to Steven Heinzman and those students that didn't want their photos in the yearbook. To begin with if anyone is curious and has access to a yearbook, check page 15. I didn't see my name listed as the photographer for that photo. The fact that it didn't have Steven's name was due to not knowing it. Secondly as to the students mentioned we never received your requests from the photographers. It was their oversight not ours.

As to the statement of Mr. Dagenhart and Ms. Fitzsimmons that there were over four photos of myself, they were right! One was of me with a hat on and my hand over my face, one was a nice shot of the back of my head. They counted my student photo editor photo and begrudge me one that I liked.

Forgive me for I have sinned.

I sincerely hope that the majority of you enjoyed the last edition of The Virginian. I know many that did. It's a real shame Mr. Dagenhart and Ms. Fitzsimmons expect me to be perfect as they project themselves to be.

GUEST EDITORIAL

The Reaper's Pissed

I slept in till 2:00 again this Saturday. People had been knocking on my door intermittently for a couple of hours. I didn't care. When I finally read my message pad I saw that one of the notes was from my old girlfriend, Barbara. I didn't care. I walked over to Par-Bil's to get a coke and some cigarettes and on the way back I saw Barbara. She said, "Remember Kathy's boyfriend who was in the Marines?" "Yeah." "He was killed in Beirut." My initial thought was "I don't care."

I've always prided myself on my apathy, especially on things like politics and war. I like to think that the only war I'd be willing to fight in would be started by an invasion of our coast. The thing is I really do care. The editor, Johnel, once wanted to write an editorial on Lebanon, I said, "Who at Longwood really cares?" This was different though, I knew him. I can't even remember his name, Mark something or other. The point is I knew him, I liked him and now he's dead. There are other people at Longwood who know some Marines —— boyfriends, friends and brothers. Some of these poople now have dead boyfriends, freinds and brothers. They are probably having difficulty understanding why God or the Grim Reaper took them so early. And Lebanon has become a reality for them.

Ironically, I went to a Halloween costume party Saturday night as the Grim Reaper. After wearing the garb, I have developed what may be a perverted affinity for Death. He's really not a bad guy. He usually takes people when their time comes. Once in a while a little kid will go because he swallowed some poison or got hit by a car. These are accidents. Mark's situation is different. One person or a group of people sent another person to his death. For what? I'm sure the Reaper is pissed. All these untimely deaths screw up his schedule and his inventory. He can understand when someone dies in an accident or for a purpose. But to him pointless wars and murder amount to the same damn thing.

So now Mark is dead. I hope he knew what he was getting himself into. He wasn't a gung-ho "kill them Commies" Marine. He thought it was a good way to get some bucks and learn a trade. Mark only had a few more months to go before he got out and then he was going to look for a nice civilian job. But now he can't. He's dead.

THE "NO RISK CAREER" —

By BILL MOORE
Student Development Educator.

Now that's what I call a catchy title — or, depending on your point of view, you could call it false advertising. Because the reality is that "no risk" career. Since I've only recently joined the Longwood staff and have a career planning and placement background, I'd like to take this opportunity to let you get to know me better as I share a few of my thoughts on this pressing subject.

First, THERE ARE NO GUARANTEES because there is competition in every field, even those fields experts label as "open". With 50 per cent of 18-year-olds going to college these days (up from 10 per cent in the 1950's) the supply of college graduates continues to outstrip the demand — except in specific, high-demand areas.

Second, today's popular, open field can easily become tomorrow's overcrowded one if everyone rushes into it. Look at teaching — in the mid to late 60's the word was thre was not enough teachers. Now? Ask any education major. Engineering has gone through the same kind of swing in reverse,and may be swinging back. Law schools are bursting and in many urban areas the number of lawyers is staggering. Business and computer science have become the majors across the country, (computer science enrollments are up 500 per cent over the last decade) yet there is no way the work force can absorb that many people into those areas (witness, for example, the current slump in the video game-personal computer field).

One conclusion to be drawn at this point is that the process of making career decisions implies risk, at least in the sense of our acting on incomplete and sometimes inaccurate information and not being completely sure about what lies at the end of the tunnel. Yes, we take risks in these decisions, but at the risk of sounding cliched, isn't that what life is all about? Risk-taking is an integral part of our daily lives, like it or not. Like it or not we need to be able to take risks — and our career decisions are no exception.

Professor In Faculty Exchange

Always Out In Front

By KENT BOOTY

Dr. Vivian Gordon Howard has always been a pace-setter.

During her childhood on Virginia's Northern Neck, she was taught at home by her mother and "only went to the elementary school to see if the other kids had caught up with me." She was an honor graduate of Virginia State University, editor-in-chief of VSU's first yearbook and charter president of Kappa Delta Pi, an honor society in education. Later, while completing her doctorate at the University of Virginia, she became the first black graduate student assigned to classroom teaching.

And, today, Dr. Howard, a professor of mathematics at VSU, is involved in the first "other-race" faculty exchange of state colleges and universities in Virginia.

Under the Commonwealth Faculty Exchange Program, Dr. Howard is teaching at Longwood College during the 1983-84 academic year and Dr. Carol Altizer-Tuning, an associate professor of mathematics at Longwood, is teaching at VSU. Three other faculty members in state institutions are taking part in the program, which encourages exchanges between traditionally black and traditionally white campuses. The program is administered by the State Council of Higher Education under the direction of the Secretary of Education.

"It's been quite interesting; a learning experience," Dr. Howard said recently.

Dr. Howard is teaching four courses in the department of mathematics and computer science. She thinks the program will foster closer ties between faculty of different institutions.

"Atleast we'll find out about each other," she predicted. "I don't think we know anything about each other. We're isolated. I think there are some linkages that can be made. Possibly faculty from Virginia State can come here for short visits and talk with black students."

A member of the VSU faculty since 1968, she wrote the graduate mathematics education program. Among other professional activities, she chairs the biennial Statewide Conference for Gifted and Graduate Potential Minority Students in State-Supported Institutions of Higher Education. She has been a consultant to the National Institutes of Education, the State Department of Education, and other organizations.

Market Basket: More Than A Survey

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

A group of twelve juniors and seniors, under the direction of Dr. A. Cristo, are giving new meaning to practical field experience in their Economics Seminar class.

The class conducts the only student researched market basket survey in the state of Virginia. The group is led by chairman, Mike Ellis, and assistant chairman, Keith Hamlett.

The Market Basket Survey is conducted once a month, and requires the students to go to the three major chain grocery stores, and the one independent grocer, and compile the prices of 71 food items. The items used for the survey are in accordance with the same 71 standard items that are used by the only other market basket survey in the state, conducted by a professional research group.

The group's work was highlighted in a Richmond News Leader article, recognizing them as the only student research team doing market basket surveys, working to adhere to professional standards.

Dr. Cristo recently nominated the group for an award that would enable the group to do more involved studies, and would absorb some of the expense of the research that so far has been covered by the students.

The survey informs the townspeople of how the prices in Farmville compare to those statewide. The study can speculate on the overall cost of living, as seen in food prices, and even "evaluate why prices generally dropped or went up," according to Ellis.

"Dr. Cristo has put a lot of emphasis on learning and having responsibility," said Hamlett. Cristo pushes the group for accuracy and professionalism. "He'd drop the program immediately if we started getting slack," said Ellis.

The group is also responsible for the Trivia Basket survey, the only trivia basket done in the state. They survey things like beer, cigarettes, toilet paper, panty hose, and other popular consumer goods.

Radioactive Termites

(CPS) —

The biology department of the University of Maryland-Baltimore County (UMBC) has a gnawing problem: termites are eating up low-level radioactive waste in a disposal area in the biology building. Some officials fear the radioactive termites could spread low-level radiation across the campus.

We've rectified the problems by having exterminators in," contends Phil Martin, who is in charge of the biology stockroom.

Others aren't so sure. "We believe we caught the incident in time," says George Arman, who is radiation safety officer of a sister campus — the University of Maryland at Baltimore (UMAB) — and who discovered the storage problem. "But we are still nervous. We can't afford to go back and decontaminate the whole building."

"All you need is for one queen to get away," he points out. "They lay eggs by the thousands."

Arman minimizes the danger to human life posed by the radioactive bugs, though he notes extra exposure to even low-level radiation is never good.

Moreover, he's fearful that other parts of the campus may already be infested. He's especially worried about bugs in and around chemistry labs where carcinogenic waste material is stored.

Campuses have been plagued by an ongoing series of mishaps involving low-level radioactive waste generated in biology, chemistry and medicine departments.

Most recently, University of California-Santa Barbara discovered radioactive material spilled in a biology department hall and elevator.

The University of Chicago recently began a clean-up of low-level radioactive waste deposited during the 1940s, when scientists there were performing pioneering atomic research.

West Virginia University, moreover, ran out of storage space in August for radioactive waste generated by its medical center.

The problem is "basically a nuisance rather than a hazard," says Stephen Slack of WVU's University Hospital.

"It's a nuisance more than anything" agrees Frank Gallagher, Cal-Santa Barbara's radiation safety officer.

Nut only at UCLA — where a group is concerned that radiation from a small campus reactor may be contaminating the air and water in a nearby classroom — and at UMBC are there worries about anything more than localized radiation spills.

Arman discovered the problem the first week of October, when he went to pick up the waste at UMBC and transport it back to a permanent waste disposal site.

"It was terrible," he recalls. "We opened the door and found there were bugs all over the place. And not just termites, but centipedes and spiders and all kinds of insects."

He found the bugs had chewed through the bright orange plastic bags and cardboard boxes to feed on the waste inside.

"That isn't good news," he says. "If the bags are damaged, the radioactive material may contaminate the area, and whatever (the bugs) eat of the waste can be carried through the building."

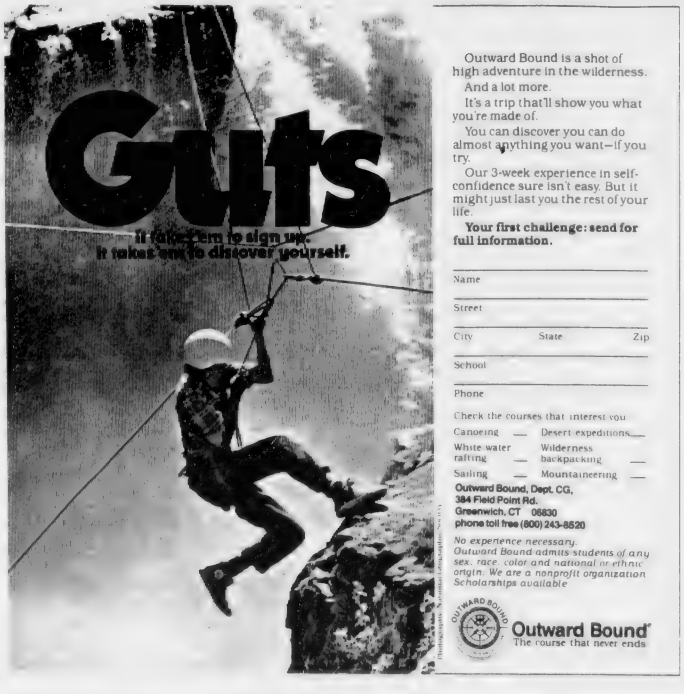
Arman says he hopes to convince UMBC to renovate its temporary waste storage facility soon. 'You can't just throw (the waste) in a room and close the door. You must have some system to control the lighting and humidity. The boxes should be set on pallets."

Swimming Requirement

Does It Hold Water?

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

It takes more than completing all of your major and minor requirements to graduate from Longwood. A would-be graduate must also "demonstrate swimming proficiency" in order to get a diploma. The swimming requirement has been the source of many questions and protest.



"Minimal swimming skills" according to Cindy Peake, Aquatics Director, means that a student must be able to do the front, back, side, and breast strokes, and tread water. "We feel those skills are important to survival," according to Judy Johnson, Chairman of the Health, Physical Education and Recreation Department. "With 73 percent of the earth's surface covered with water, much of our leisure time activities involve water," said Peake, "and the requirement is two fold, one is that you may have to save your own life, and two, perhaps someone else's." According to the American National Red Cross, out of 7300 drownings, 4800 were nonswimmer fatalities.

The Department constantly evaluates its requirements, and the swimming requirement, in particular, was examined by the department in 1972, and ironically, Johnson was the only member who voted against it. Later, in 1979, the requirement was brought back up for evaluation, and it was passed again, this time with Johnson's vote.

Student's who need to waive the requirement, can do so for only health reasons. And even those cases are investigated individually. Johnson emphasized that handicapped and blind students have been taught to swim, and that health problems are not always qualification for exemption. Have any students been exempt from the requirement for reasons other than those of health risks? "Truthfully, yes. But that didn't come through this department," explained Johnson.

Why the ability to tread water and do the "four strokes" was so important that it be a graduation requirement was never really clear. "It probably has nothing to do with what you're going on to do as a career," said Johnson, "But I feel we have a responsibility to give basic foundation skills."

There are only an average of 60 nonswimmers each year, and both Peake and Johnson indicated what a "joy" it was to teach the beginners, and watch them progress and learn to enjoy water. "We're not trying to be hard to get along with, it's just something we believe is important," emphasized Johnson. As far as the requirement keeping students from the graduation ceremony, Peake said, "I will stay there until the day of graduation helping them, and I have."

Longwood Players

The Longwood Players and Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts have begun preparations for their next major production of the year, The Imaginary Invalid, by Moliere. The script of this play has been revised for the Jarman production scheduled November 16 through 19th. The music for Imaginary Invalid was written by Charpentier for the original cast in Paris 1673 and has been arranged by Dr. John Molnar. It will be performed by Longwood musicians under the direction of Mr. Darrell Harbaum.

The cast of twelve combines the talents of four Freshmen, three Sophomores, four Juniors and one Senior. The Freshmen include Rob Robertson, who plays the central role of Argan; Jamila Smith, as the pert French maid, Toinette; Linda Stanley, as Argan's nine year old daughter, Louison; and Anastasia McDonald, as Argan's lovesick 17 year old daughter, Angelique. The Sophomores include Mike Foster, as M. Bonnefoi, David Turk, as M. Fleurant, and Jerry Dagenhart as Argan's brother, Beralde. The Juniors are Connie Watkins as Beline, Curt Walker, who plays M. Diafoirus, a wealthy doctor, and Vince Decker, as Cleante, a young man. The Senior is Mark Winecoff, who plays Argan's physician, Dr. Purgon.

Work on the set has already begun. Mr. Moffatt Evans has designed a set reflecting the age of Louis XIV. Costumes are designed by Jerry Dagenhart. Betsy Duncan is coaching and providing rehearsal accompaniment for the lover's duet, and the choruses, roared by the cast in the finale.

Dr. Patton Lockwood is directing the play, Leon Young is serving as the stage manager. If the laughter that is being heard at rehearsals is any indication, The Imaginary Invalid should be a smash. The play makes a nice contrast to the complex Espers Well which opened the Longwood Players' season.

NO SMOKING CLINIC

Dr. Sandra Cross of the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation will conduct a no smoking clinic for persons who are interested in stopping smoking and who wish to be part of a support group. Time and frequency of sessions to be determined.

RESEARCH STUDY

Smoking is one of the risk factors associated with coronary heart disease. The level of HDL cholesterol in the blood is affected by smoking and the cessation of smoking presumably results in a return to normal levels. What is not clear is: When does the HDL cholesterol reach its normal level once a person has stopped smoking? In this study we will investigate HDL cholesterol levels at different intervals during a six-week no smoking period.

If you wish or need to stop smoking or if you have a friend who would like to stop, we would appreciate your participation in our study, "The Effect of Cessation of Smoking on HDL Cholesterol." Please contact either Dr. Mary Heintz or Dr. Gerald Graham or fill in the attached form and send it to one of us at Longwood College. This study is made possible through a faculty research grant from Longwood College.

No Risk Career

What is the response to this situation? To many students and educators, the response is a mad dash to vocational training and more clearly career-related college majors. And for some, I am sure that is a wise choice. But the choice may be shortsighted for many people, and they seem to be making this choice for all the wrong reasons. To me, the choice should be on the basis of what you enjoy and do well and not what seems to be the "logical" choice based on job market trends. (Remember what I said about what can happen to those trends?)

An alternative response is to get a broad liberal arts education and concentrate in an area which you find most interesting. But what about getting a job, you say? Well, a mid-1970's study revealed that 80 per cent of a - sample of fathers of college-bound students aren't doing ANYTHING connected with their college majors. And they overwhelmingly said the best bet for a satisfying life is getting an education regardless of what the major is. Other studies show that liberal arts graduates, specifically, seem more satisfied with their lives — and often are better paid once they survive the credentialism problems in entry-level jobs.

Let's face it — specific job skills are much more often than not taught on-the-job, not in the classroom. What you need from an education, especially "higher" education, as college is so nobly called, is confrontation with yourself and your values, the ability to THINK independently and problem-solve, the ability to communicate effectively, both in oral and written form, and opportunities to lead and cope with change. These are the skills found to be most significant in studies done on successful people, and not so coincidentally, the skills embodied in the 14 student achievement goals Longwood has defined. You certainly have to judge for yourself the extent to which you are, in fact, developing in these areas, but it seems to me that the opportunity does exist here at Longwood; it's up to you to take advantage of it.

This is NOT to say that a liberal arts major is inherently more functional in the world of work and careers. A Wester College Placement Association survey reveals a strong bias against liberal arts grads in some work sectors, most notable finance, manufacturing, oil companies, and electronics-communications, at least in terms of the number of recent hires of college graduates. However, the insurance, the utilities, and retail areas all hire about the same number of liberal arts grads as business grads, and in government, which remains the largest sector of the work force, the majority of hires are liberal arts grads. So while there may be a period of "floundering" in the early post-graduation years for liberal arts grads, there are job possibilities, nonetheless, and the long-term benefits of flexibility and overall satisfaction may be worth the early problems.

The implications of the research mentioned earlier is that the skills cited, not the specific major, are the crucial concerns. It makes considerable sense to try to blend liberal arts with more technical training, but whatever direction you go, the skills need to be on your mind. Take some time to think through what YOU really want, and if you need to discuss the issues with someone there are plenty of willing people around — Niki Fallis and Linda Dove in the Placement Office, J. Cox and Anne Barlow in the Counseling Center, your advisor — all ready to help you clarify what you want out of your time here at Longwood and your career. Your senior year may be too late to being that, too — why not start now?

Dr. Howard grew up in Richmond County, a few miles outside of Warsaw, during the era of segregated schools. Education in her rural community was a family affair — her grandfather donated land for the elementary school, her father donated lumber and her mother later taught there. But she attended that school ver little.

"My mother taught me at home," she recalled. "She had been educated in a Richmond (city) normal school and was the intellectual of the community."

She did attend the local high school, which was located in a building that previously had been the Northern Neck Industrial Academy, a boarding school for blacks who had finished the 7th grade. Her graduating class numbered 11.

"Six of us went on to college," she said. "Five of us went to Virginia State and all five of us finished. Two of us have the doctorate . . . I still keep in touch with those classmates."

Although the school's physical facilities were inadequate by today's standards, according to Dr. Howard, the quality of teaching was top-notch.

"I had excellent teachers," she said. "They were the finest teachers that I've seen anyplace. I haven't found any better anywhere."

It was at VSU, then called the Virginia State College for Negroes, that she met her late husband, Dr. Roscoe C. Howard. Professor Howard headed VSU's biology department. "I didn't have him for a teacher, but all of my friends did."

One professor she did have was the late Luther Porter Jackson, a famous black historian and author. Jackson, a prolific writer and researcher, conducted research into black history long before it gained popularity.

"Luther P. Jackson taught me," she said with pride. "We would wait all morning is he forgot to come to class. He was a great teacher; everybody loved him. He was ahead of his time."

Among Dr. Howard's diverse interests and areas of expertise are the metric system, computer science, education of handicapped and gifted students, and training programs to upgrade mathematics teachers.

Dr. Howard's three children have emulated her accomplishments. Her daughter, who once worked for President Carter, is legal counsel to the president of Hunter College in New York. One son is a lawyer for the Federal Trade Commission, and the other is a news broadcaster and sports director for a Tallahassee, Fla., radio station.

Dr. Howard said that she is much like her mother, who always demanded that her children be treated with dignity. "She never would take a back-seat to anyone. She always said if they won't let you sit in the front of the bus, don't ride it."

NOTE: Under the Commonwealth Faculty Exchange Program, Dr. Robert Solomon, an associate professor of management at the College of William and Mary, and Dr. Richard O'Daniel, an associate professor of business at Norfolk State University, have also exchanged positions this year. In addition, Dr. Clementine Hansley, an assistant professor of psychology at VSU, is teaching at Radford University. The five were chosen from 73 applicants. Fifteen faculty members are expected to participate in 1984-85 and 15 again in 1985-86.

HAVE NOT BEEN SHUT-OUT IN 16 GAMES

Longwood's NCAA Division II soccer team shut-out Roanoke 3-0 Wednesday and battled homestanding Eastern Mennonite to a 1-1 tie Saturday as the Lancers played the 16th straight game in which they have not been shut-out.

This week Longwood hosts Hampden-Sydney at 2:30 in the battle for the Farmville Herald Challenge Cup and Saturday the Lancers visited Richmond for a 2:00 contest. Longwood has beaten Hampden-Sydney the last four times the teams have played, including a 2-0 decision in the Longwood Invitational in September.

In gaining a win and a tie last week, Longwood stretched to eight straight the number of games in which it has avoided losing. The eight-game unbeaten streak is a new school record, breaking the old mark of seven set in 1981. The Lancers have also run up a streak of 16 straight games in which they have not been shut-out.

Senior forward Tim Brennan scored two goals for Longwood last week, one in the win over Roanoke and the other in Saturday's tie with Eastern Mennonite. The college's second leading career scorer with 35 goals and 10 assists.

Also scoring for Longwood in the win over Roanoke were Shawn McArdle and Sam St. Phard. McArdle, Dan Dubnis and Brian Allmendinger had assists in the two games.

Longwood also earned its seventh shutout of the season against Roanoke with junior Brian Sprinkle in goal.

The Lancers will find out this week if they will earn a wild-card berth in the Virginia Intercollegiate Soccer Association Playoffs.

HOCKEY TEAM BEATS HIGH POINT

Longwood's field hockey team shut-out High Point 3-0 Wednesday to run its season record to 8-3-3 and the Lady Lancers close out their season this week, hosting Richmond Monday at 3:00 and VCU Wednesday at 3:00.

Sue Groff scored two goals and Sharon Bruce one as Coach Bette Harris' team notched its fifth shutout of the season. Sophomore Lorraine Hall filled in admirably at goalie for injured starter Terry Chumley.

Chumley, who suffered a broken wrist in a game with Eastern Kentucky two weeks ago, may be able to play this week with a flexible cast.

Should Longwood win its final two games, the Lady Lancers would finish with a 10-3-3 mark, best in field hockey since 1976 when the stickers went 12-4-3.

"We will have to play very well to win these last two games," said Dr. Harris. "It would be nice to finish the season with two more victories."

The coach said she has been pleased with the performance of her team, looking back on the season as a whole.

"On the whole, we have played well, and we have gotten some big contributions from our freshmen."

Sue Groff has been singled out as Beegle's Player of the Week after scoring two goals in the win over High Point. Groff, a sophomore, has eight goals and six assists for the season to lead Longwood's offensive attack.

LADY LANCER NETTERS DROP END OF SEASON MATCHES

Longwood's women's tennis team ended its fall season last week dropping matches to Randolph-Macon 9-0, Sweet Briar 8-1 and Mary Washington 9-0. The Lady Lancers, with a lineup made up mostly of freshmen and sophomores, had a record of 1-8 for the fall.

Gaining the win for Longwood in the loss to Sweet Briar was freshman Ann Pitzer who scored a 6-3, 6-2 win over her opponent at No. 2 singles Wednesday.

Coach Carrol Bruce credited her team for its hard work and dedication.

"We'll be looking for an improved spring season with the experience our young players have gained this fall," said Bruce. Longwood's fall lineup featured two freshmen and two sophomores in the top six.

Men's Basketball Outlook

From Sports Info

Despite a decided lack of experience and size on his 1983-84 basketball team, Longwood coach Cal Luther says he is excited about this year's squad. Gone from last year's 15-10 season are starting guards Joe Remar and Mike Testa and center Ron Orr. Remar and Orr were four-year starters and rank 1-2 among Lancer career scoring leaders. Testa was a hard-nosed competitor and team leader.

"You've heard of rebuilding years," says Luther, "well, we're having a reconstruction year. We're going to be a very young and inexperienced team. In comparison with our opposition we'll be very small. Our tallest player is only 6-7."

On the positive side, Longwood returns two starters: senior All-American Jerome (THE COBRA) Kersey and sophomore forward Lonnie Lewis. Kersey, a 6-7, 220-pounder, is one of the top players in Division II with 1,228 points and 779 rebounds in three seasons. Lewis broke into last year's starting lineup in January and averaged 10.4 points per contest, while establishing himself as a deadly long range shooter.

The only additional returnee with moderate game experience is 5-8 point guard Frank Tennyson. Tennyson ended up as Longwood's top reserve at guard in 1982-83. Guard Stan Hull, who saw limited action on the varsity, and forward John Rusevlyan spent most of last season playing for the Lancer junior varsity squad.

"We have only two players back with a lot of game experience and Kersey is the only senior on the squad," said Luther. "Our starting lineup could include several freshmen and junior college transfers."

Longwood will have nine new faces on its squad: four freshmen and five transfers. Expected to provide immediate help are transfers Dave Edwards, 6-6 center-forward, and Vance Marsh, 6-2 guard, and junior college transfers Tim Wilson, 6-3 forward, and David Strothers, 6-6 forward. Adding depth is quick 5-11 guard Gary Cason, a sophomore transfer.

The four freshmen are: 6-3 swing player Kevin Ricks, 6-2 guard Eric Pittman, 6-2 guard Bobby Almagro and 6-5 forward Kevin Custis.

Luther rates Pittman, Edwards, Marsh, Wilson and Ricks as leading candidates to break into the starting lineup and Strothers, an excellent shooter, could challenge if he recovers from a preseason knee injury.

On paper at least, it appears that Longwood may have superior depth and balance when compared to last year's squad. This apparent depth and balance are two of the reasons that Luther is enthusiastic about the upcoming season.

"I'm very excited about this team," says the coach. "Despite our lack of size and experience, we have great enthusiasm and spirit. We have some players who really go after it. We may turn out to be an exciting team and I'm hopeful that before the season is over we can surprise some people."

Luther says that Longwood will have better team speed than a year ago and he's hopeful that the 1983-84 Lancers will be able to maintain the accurate shooting of past teams. Longwood, which shot 53.2 per cent from the floor, has ranked among Division II leaders in field goal percentage each of the past three seasons.

Longwood will begin play in the Mason-Dixon Athletic Conference in January and Luther feels it will be the strongest Division II league in the country. With a number of tough non-conference foes, like Virginia Union and Virginia State, plus the Mason-Dixon teams on the schedule, Luther says he may have over-scheduled for his young team.

The Lancers open play November 18-19 in their own Par-Bil's Tip-Off Tournament with St. Paul's, Elon and West Virginia Tech providing the opposition.

Parking Complaints

By VALERIE FABRIZIO

This year a new system was begun on Longwood's campus in which students were assigned to park in designated areas. When students signed up for rooms last year, they were given an opportunity to register their vehicles. This was used to assign those students spaces in the general vicinity of their dorms. Remaining students were assigned to the spaces that were left.

There are 1,052 cars registered and not enough spaces for all these cars. Last year, students were parking in unauthorized areas and town and faculty members complained. According to Chief of Police Eric Shoemaker, designated areas "put the cars where the spaces are and lets the police know where the demand is". Campus Police are patrolling as best they can and there has been no reported vandalism to cars. So far, there have been a lot fewer complaints from the faculty and the town.

The areas assigned to day students are Madison St. from Griffin Blvd. to Venable St. and part of Pine St. Jarman lot, Graham lot, and Pine St. from High to Madison Sts. are for faculty and staff parking. On campus this year, 614 parking tickets have been issued. Only 174 of these have been paid. If the fines aren't paid, the Registrar may withhold transcripts or cancel pre-registration for classes.

For the first time there is an official Appeals Committee which reviews written appeals to tickets. This committee is composed of faculty, staff, and students. A student who can't find a parking space in his assigned area should notify Campus Police. They will permit parking somewhere else for a few hours without issuing a ticket. This will also let them know where the problems exist.

Where Do We Come From?

The Road To LC

By NATALIE WACK

The Admissions Office accepts and recruits students for Longwood College all along the east coast of the United States; this year totaling 2,637. The admissions counselors get their main recruits from Virginia, Maryland, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

The most desired major the Longwood students come for is business. "Many students think they need to major in business in order to get anywhere in the business world, and this isn't necessarily true," said Candy Dowdy, one of the admissions counselors. The major you decide on should depend on what you're good at, she added.

Longwood's sports programs also help recruit students, many of whom are out-of-staters. Rich Posipanko, soccer recruiter, recruits students from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland and Virginia. Longwood's basketball team also recruits students from Connecticut and North Carolina.

Some Longwood recruits are termed "special applicants." Special applicants are accepted on the basis of artistic talent by the art and music departments. Near the end of the recruiting period of a semester, if two students with basically the same credentials are applying, and one of them has some "artistic potential," or recommendations for the music or art departments; that one will then be accepted.

The majority of Longwood students come in "pursuit of career," and are "in mid-economic levels," Mrs. Dowdy said. The freshmen's average SAT scores are 940. Most of them graduated in the top one-third of their classes, though the catalogue states that Longwood will accept those in the top one-half of their high school graduating class. The admissions counselors take a combined consideration of facts and recommendations, when they decide on a prospective student.

Longwood's main competitors are Mary Washington and James Madison University. Their tuitions are approximately the same as Longwood's: $3,925 for Virginia residents, and $4,675 for out-of-state students.

Longwood is on a "Rolling Admissions" program, explained Mrs. Dowdy. Beginning the week of November 7, Longwood will start accepting or "holding" students for the Fall '84 semester. Holding pertains to accepting students even though they will not have to choose their college until April 1, when their deposits are due. Longwood's biggest weekends for visiting and prospective students are Oktoberfest and Spring Weekend.

Brav In Concert

By JEFF ABERNATHY

Arnie Brav's voice sounds like its been stored in a giant vat of Jack Daniels for the past five years and has just been brought out for the show. Deep — you can't exactly tell how he holds it — and smooth, like that charcoal-filtered JD.

Brav smiles once every minute or so while he's performing; maybe to get away from the intensity of his guitar — work, maybe to display a quick flash of control. It's a sort-of degenerate Shirley Temple smile that makes you laugh right along with him and wonder where that smile is coming from, showing up like that smack in the middle of his music.

Arne Brav performed at Longwood November 12th and 13th. His album, "Ready To Go" will soon be available.

His Sunday night concert at Longwood began with "Dealing with the Devil," which came close to what might be termed new-wave country. Brav explained his affinity for country music, noting that the three kinds of people for whom he holds the highest esteem "are farmers, cowboys, and hillbillies." Second was "Double Nickel Tickle," an instrumental composed of speeding chords, Brav's hand flying up and down the neck of his guitar. This tune is featured on his current album, Ready To Go.

His first set included Steve Goodman's "City of New Orleans." Brav's voice was much stronger than the guitar on this tune, his emphasis clearly on vocals. He also played Merle Travis' "Smoke, Smoke, Smoke That Cigarette" calling it his "Brookie" song. "I don't mind anti-smokers, but I do mind Brooke Shields. I just don't like jail bait telling me what to do . . . or how to do it." Brav closed the set with "Ten Degrees and Colder," by Gordon Lightfoot. Brav's voice is similar to Lightfoot's and his audience recognized how well this song worked for him.

The second set included another instrumental, "Doe's Guitar," by Doc Watson, as well as a traditional song, "Dark Hollow," which was made popular when released on Bear's Choice, an early 70's Grateful Dead album. Brav's guitar work was superb on "Dark Hollow" racing like a child down a hill, just about to fall down. Unlike the child, Brav did not fall. Nice.

"Sixteen Tons," a blues tune written by Travis and popularized by Tennessee Earnie Ford, was the second song from the album. Sunday was Brav's seventh show in seven days and he was perhaps most fit for the blues; yet his performance did not reflect the schedule. His next song also on Ready To Go, was "Back On The Road," one of the evening's best. It was emotional for both the artist and audience. "One Man Country Band" followed; its soft chords flowed well to close Brav's second set.

The final set included the "Masochism Tango," a trite Mexican serenade, which the audience enjoyed. Another ditty "Qualudes" followed, "It's easy to see as she buckles and bends that she's doing qualudes again." After quite a few such songs, Brav pointed out that he could do some real music," yet he seemed to prefer not do. He went into "Warm and Free" which involved the intricate details of free drinks and cheap women.

The mood did get serious before the evening's last song, The Boxer by Paul Simon. Brav told his audience that he was now on his final full-time tour, that he would have few future performances. Before beginning the song, Brav had very much set a tone for the pensive lyrics of "The Boxer." The emotion in Brav's voice touched the audience, was somber but warming:" 'I am leaving, I am leaving.' But the fighter still remains." Maybe I'm reading too much into this choice of songs, yet somehow I doubt it.

All in all a good show. Bravo . . . indeed.

Longwood Exhibit Illustrates The Way We Were

The Longwood Fine Arts Center's major exhibit this year "should bring back a lot of memories," says Barbara Bishop, head of Longwood College's art department.

The exhibit, entitled "American Illustration 1880-1940," is on display in the Bedford Gallery at Longwood through November 20.

The 30 works in the exhibit, each by a different artist, are on loan from the Society of Illustrators Museum of American Illustration in New York City. This is the first time the Society has loaned a sizable selection of its original works for exhibition.

The time span covered by the exhibit includes what is known as "the Golden Age of Illustration." The works appeared in such magazines as Harper's, The Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal, American, Collier's, Redbook, Cosmopolitan, McCall's, and Motion Picture. Some also were published as book illustrations.

Eleven of the works are black-and-white drawings in charcoal or pen-and-ink. The remaining 19 color works are in a variety of media — watercolor, tempera, pastels, and oil.

"Illustration is a chronicle of the times," Bishop said, "as well as a method of communication." The works depict styles of clothing, furnishings, and manners from the turn-of-the century and from the decade of "the flapper."

And, from the 1930s, there are the illustrations designed to lift people from their worries and reassure them that "the good life" was still possible. As one viewer remarked, "The women were beautiful, the men were handsome, and they all were rich!"

The largest work in the exhibit is a 50-by-26-inch oil painting by Mead Schaffer. It was published in Redbook in 1930, illustrating "Women America Remembers: Molly Brandt" by Arthur D. Howden Smith.

Other artists included in the Longwood exhibit are: Norman Mills Price, Daniel Beard, Charles Davis Williams, William Thomas Smedley, Thomas Nast, Frederic Rodrigo Gruger, Lawrence Fellows, Joseph Clement Coll, Frank Vincent Dumond, John LaGatta, John Gannam, Pruett A. Carter, Ralph Pallen Coleman, Arthur Ignatius Keller, and Albert Beck Wenzell.

The American Illustration exhibit is open to the public during regular Bedford Gallery hours: Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 12 noon and 1 to 5 p.m.; Saturday, 2 to 5 p.m.; and Sunday, 5 to 9 p.m. Additional hours may be arranged by request for group visits; call the Longwood art department at (804) 392-9359.

perspectives

Anger is the first step to courage, according to St. Thomas Aquainis, but Bishop Walter F. Sullivan looked anything but angry. His voice was quiet, but quivered with a sense of urgency as he addressed a crowd of over 200 last Thursday, November 10 in Lankford.

Bishop Sullivan's discussion on Peacemaking was the final program in Longwood's first Non-Violent Week — (a rather successful week I might add).

His message was clear — it was peace he wanted. No bombs, bloodbaths or war. And who can argue with that. He thought that young people should stand up and be heard. He told us that no one would survive a nuclear war. He told us that people were starving while bigger and better bombs are being built, Russia is as afraid as we are, people are dying in Lebanon, Grenada is a stepping stone to Nicaragua and that it's time for America's "moral aboutface."

So tell us something we don't know, Bishop. Nobody wants to see women and children blown up, and nobody wants to rot slowly and have their hair fall out after the nuclear bomb is dropped. On that we all stand together, the young people, the old people, the ROTC's and the conscientious objectors, the democrats, republicans and even the communists. Peace, and long lives are things everyone wants, there are just a lot of very different ideas on how peace can be achieved. For Reagan, it's with his MX — and for Bishop Sullivan's quest for peace is in his emotional dramatics.

It's terrific that Longwood hosted a figure as important as Bishop Sullivan — and it's not so bad to see the clergy out of the pulpit and up on a soapbox.

When he was questioned by the audience about communism, Grenada, Lebanon — and other things he had only touched on in his lecture, his replies were circular, contradictory, and in some cases unfounded.

To address an audience with "I feel like there were many untruths and falsehoods that were told to Americans about Grenada," and "If Nicaragua is going Marxist, it's because we're driving them there," leaves us with nothing but a lot of Bishop Sullivan's ideologies. Nothing to hang onto.

The best thing that could've happened last Thursday, is that maybe — just maybe — someone else was sparked to care about peace and war enough to find their own answers. But we certainly cannot credit the Bishop for any answers they stumble upon.

It was an intense lecture, Bishop, you told us of all the horrible parts of death — especially nuclear death. But the emotion and the melodrama reminded me of Sunday mornings on hard benches.

A lot of heat and no light.

Letter To The Editor

★ ★ ★ ★

Your little debut about the "reapers pissed" makes me pissed. You say this poor guy Mark is dead because, "One person or a group of people sent him to his death. For what?" I'll tell you for what, for your damn freedom. To live where you want to live, to talk to whomever you like, and to let you write these bull shit columns found in our Rotunda. Sure Mark's death may not have had any direct significance in our freedom, but he died like thousands of other soldiers have over the years, for something he believed in, his Country. Don't you think Mark knew at anytime he could die. Death was part of his training. There's no need for you to write such propaganda as you have. The United States' intervention in Lebanon has many reasons behind it, many more than you or I will ever know. That's the problem with you and people like you; you would rather sniff the roses and let communist or some other Marxist life strife make its advancements across the world until the U.S. is next in its cresshairs. Whatever action the United States undertakes anywhere in the world its people should give complete support. Not a bunch of hypocrites saying, "Oh Marky's dead, let's run scared." Don't you think there are other people mourning for their friends and loved ones? Freedom has a price, baby; and any person who signs the dotted line knows that death can be the ultimate price. I'll be damned if Mark didn't die for a reason.

If you're gonna' die, die with your boots on

If you're gonna' try, well, stick around,

If you're gonna' cry, just move along,

But you're gonna' die.

—Iron Maiden (Piece of Mind)

When it's all over none of this will really matter and mankind's epitaph will read- "We died for our freedom". How very noble.

So You Want To Be A Professor...

By GEORGIA COCKHILL

Dr. Edmond C. Conway, Dean of the Faculty, is responsible for the general implementation of the appointment, reappointment, promotion and tenure policies of the College.

As stated in the Longwood College Faculty Handbook, requests for new faculty appointments originate with the Department Head; then approval from the Dean of the Faculty is necessary before the initiation of a search to fill a vacancy or a new position.

All initial appointments of full-time faculty, librarians, and athletic staff is on a six year probationary basis with eligibility thereafter for annual contracts. The handbook outlines the following conditions for instructors and professors: 1 — Instructors shall be appointed annually, but are not eligible for tenure. 2 — Assistant professors, associate professors, and professors shall be reappointed annually during the six year probationary period.

The terminal degree for faculty in all departments is an earned doctorate. While all faculty are expected to hold the terminal degree, Longwood College recognizes that the possession of a doctoral degree may not properly measure an individual's capacity for contributing to the intellectual life of the College. Exemptions from the doctoral degree requirement may be given on a case-by-case basis in writing by the Dean of the Faculty. Out of approximately 156 faculty members, 98 have a doctoral degree, according to the 1983-84 Longwood Student Handbook.

The probationary faculty member is reviewed by the department tenure committee during the first, third, and fifth years of full-time teaching. Primary consideration is given to teaching effectiveness, professional activities, and participation in departmental and College activities.

The general criteria for promotion, as outlined in the Faculty Handbook, are possession of a doctoral degree, teaching effectiveness, professional activity and achievement, and participation in departmental, faculty, and College activities. The specific criteria for promotion to each rank are as follows: 1 — For Assistant Professor, the candidate must have had two years of full-time teaching experience. 2 — For Associate Professor, the candidate should show evidence of professional achievement which is recognized within and beyond the state and region, and have completed at least seven years of full-time college teaching. 3 — For Professor, the candidate should have produced creative work, professional publication or achievement, or quality research judged significantly by peers both within and beyond the state and region. The candidate must also have a minimum of twelve years of full-time college teaching including at least five years at the rank of Associate Professor.

The Imaginary Invalid

On October 16-19 at 8:00 p.m. the Longwood Players will present Moliere's farce on the Seventeenth Century medical profession. The Imaginary Invalid. Rob Robertson plays Argan, a hypochondriac who places himself at the mercy of several pompous, rather incompetent doctors in order to get attention. He wishes to marry his daughter Angelique (Anastasia McDonald) off to a young nit-wit doctor Thomas Diafoirus (Dave Miller) in order to get free medical attention. Angelique, however, is in love with another young man. The situation lends itself to many ironic and hilarious twists.

Other cast members include: Jerry Dagenhart, Vince Decker, Jamila Smith, Mike Foster, Curt Walker, Linda Stanley, Dave Turk, Mark Winecoff and Connie Watkins. The show is being directed by Doctor Patton Lockwood with the assistance of Leon Young.

Tickets are free for Longwood students, so come on over to Jarman Auditorium end enjoy the show. How can you go wrong for free?

Risk Censorship?

Television Violence

By J.D. BROWN

Dr. Robert Alley, Jr., from the University of Richmond, spoke at a luncheon-lecture Tuesday, November 8, in the Virginia Room at Longwood. The topic was "Television Violence and its Effects on Children," and it was the second in a series of five programs in Longwood's first Non-Violent Week (Nov. 7-11).

"Television is not responsible for violence — it's too simple, the question of causality is far more complex." Television is a part of popular culture — one whose effects and affects cannot be overlooked. "If we call television the ogre that causes violence, we're missing the real causes instead of looking at television as a reflection. The culture that TV reflects is at the same time part of that culture," according to Alley.

After what Alley called "Prime Time Legislation" that worked to keep violence off the networks during hours 7-9 p.m. (typically the hours most popular with family viewing), there was a surge of concern for the effects of graphic violence on people's minds, with special consideration to the reactions of children to violence.

The "blood and guts" violence was replaced with a more comic approach with shows like "The Dukes of Hazard" or "Simon & Simon." That tongue in cheek approach to violence, according to Alley, "presumably makes it more acceptable." The programs like "Dukes of Hazard" are potentially more influential in the lives of children than more serious shows. Comic violence makes light of the law and light of violence. In "Kojak" or "Hawaii Five-O," the violence and the law are taken very seriously. When the characters in "Dukes" have car accidents, or brawls, they dust themselves off and there's no consequence. In other shows, characters are shot and they die, and when they have car wrecks, people are hurt and don't always walk away.

"Violence with a smile is far more serious," said Alley.

Although the question of violence in television is one worthy of consideration, Alley was sensitive about the possible implications of censorship, however. "How much violence is too much? And who would you want deciding that for you? Would you want Jerry Falwell to do it — or Norman Lear?"

Violence is a reality of society, and especially American society. Alley doesn't think the answer is to obliterate all forms of violence

Artist Of The Month

Ellen Cykowski is Longwood College's Artist-of-the-Month for November 1983. She is a junior majoring in Elementary Education (K-4).

Ellen's pencil drawing is a grid-enlargement of a double exposed photograph which hangs in her room. "I've always been intrigued with the emotional impact of that photograph," explains Ellen. "I tried to express that emotion in my drawing." The untitled drawing was completed in a class project for Mr. Homer Springer's Art for Elementary Teachers class.

Born in Boston in 1963, Ellen resides in Newport News with her parents, Stanley and Elizabeth Cykowski.

Ellen's drawing is on exhibit in the First Floor Hallway, Bedford Building, through November 28. In addition to the honor of a one-woman-exhibit, Ellen received a cash award of $50.

The Artist-of-the-Month competition is open to all art students at Longwood College. In addition to the first place award, second and third places are also acknowledged by a cash award. In November, a three-way-tie for second place was given to Steve Kalata, Tony Joseph, and Rebecca Silberman.

Activities For Alumni

By JUDY PHILBROOK

Founders Day, Black Alumni Weekend, and a Basketball Tip-Off Game for all young male alumni are just some of the events the Alumni Relations Office are working on for this year. Mrs. Nancy Shelton, Director of Alumni Relations, said that no matter what time of year it is, the Alumni Office remains constantly busy.

With over 14,000 alumni, planning activities is not the only factor of alumni relations the office handles. Six times a year a newsletter is sent out in conjunction with the Public Affairs Office asking for suggestions and evaluations as well as address corrections to everyone. The office also solicits any pictures taken from the past to get an accurate history of Longwood.

From this came the knowledge that the Freshmen Class in 1976 was not the first class to have males enrolled on campus. Males can be traced back to 1934 as day students through 1968. From 1969 to 1976 there were no undergraduate males at Longwood, according to Alumni records.

The oldest active living alumna lives in Richmond, again according to the records. Miss Ruby Leigh Orgain from the Class of 1899 presides at Windsor Nursing Home, and remembers Longwood (then the State Normal School) well. Entering at the age of 15, she became one of the Founders of the Zeta Tau Alpha social sorority. Today she is still busy with all kinds of handwork and sewing. "Miss Ruby" is just one of over 400 alumni in the area.

Mrs. Shelton is also in charge of giving out a scholarship in conjunction with the Alumni Association. Given to a graduate coming back to Longwood to study, or to financially needy students, the scholarship or loan can go as high as $500. Alumni Chapters located around the state assist local students also.

Working under the Office for Institutional Advancement, the Alumni Office operates with a state budget and through donations. The Longwood Ambassadors, a volunteer student organization formed to assist in the promotion of Longwood College to potential students, alumni and friends not only hosts alumni functions, but assists the Director of annual funds with the Annual Alumni Telethon in the spring. The Alumni Office provides the telephone numbers for the telethon.

The other main event that occurs second semester is Founders Day, to be celebrated June 22-24. Last year the classes of 1933 and 1943 supported the weekend with a large attendance. That weekend, the alumni stay in the Curry and Frazer highrise residence halls and participate in different activities during the week, which are still in the planning stage. Mrs. Shelton said that those who are most active in alumni activities are not always those who were most active in school. The office does try to have something planned to interest everyone, so sends newsletters asking for comments and evaluations, to remain in contact with all alumni possible.

from television. That would be as misrepresentative as gratuitous violence.

The key is to examine each case individually. "Are we going to abolish all murder mysteries. Should Shakespeare's Hamlet be shown with a different ending? Should Macbeth to shown with out a head?"

Violence should be portrayed intelligently and realistically and not violence just for the sake of itself. The responsibility lies with the producers of the shows, the actors, and the audiences, and the parents of young audiences. Do we care enough to be responsible viewers and to teach responsible viewing without resorting to censorship. Censorship is far more dangerous than anything else I've seen.

PUNT FOOTBALL LC

(First of a two-part series)

Last summer, a group of the Board of Visitors kicked around the idea of Longwood fielding a football team. A few of the reasons were to cater to the male enrollment and for a center of excitement in the school.

The exaggerated rumors quickly spread through the student body. Some said Dr. Greenwood wanted to change Oktoberfest to Homecoming to accommodate the football season. Ranges of prices for the start-up costs were from three to five million dollars. Rumors are rumors and are probably inaccurate.

All this hoopla about the gridiron at Longwood scares me. Longwood does not need a football program. Look around the state at successful athletic programs without the pigskin: ODU, VCU, Roanoke, George Mason and Lynchburg are a few. With already 15 intercollegiate sports, football could spread out the athletic emphasis too thin. Football could not be treated as a low emphasis sport, but as a major commitment. I don't think the people who want to use football as a social affair realize this. Buikding a football program is not like a basketball program. It requires 20 or 30 quality players and an experienced coaching staff at the minimal. It also requires a college president and athletic director who will be supportive. If the school does not have enough emphasis on the program, it will reflect a loser in not only a losing record, but general apathy. For example, the Richmond Spiders only drew 3,500 to one of their Division I-AA contests; and look at Virginia, the laughing stock of the ACC for so many years.

The Longwood community, especially the student body, will not support a losing football team in the building years. If you don't believe me, look at the other losing sports and see if the fan support is good. The attendance will be further hurt by the competition down the road at Hampden-Sydney. No one wants to see a losing struggling team when they can see an established and competitive team. Even with a good team, it would be hard to lure fans away from the glitter and spectacle of a fall afternoon at Death Valley.

BASKETBALL 83-84

Lady Lancers To Open Season

Longwood's women's basketball team opens its 1983-84 season at Maryland Eastern Shore Friday night at 6:00, but the Lady Lancers will have to play without leading socrer and rebounder Florence Holmes.

Holmes, who averaged 12.4 points and 7.1 rebounds last season, has been out of action for the past week because of illness, and she may be on the sidelines for several additional weeks.

"It does not look promising for Florence to get any playing time soon," said Longwood coach Shirley Duncan. "It certainly hurts to lose a player of Florence's ability. We hope she'll have a speedy recovery."

Duncan, who began her first year as Longwood coach in October, plans to start senior Robin Powell and freshman Caren Forbes at guards, freshman Karen Boska at center and juniors Mariana Johnson and Valerie Turner at forwards Friday night.

"We're anxious to play," says Duncan. "The outlook is filled with questions right now, and the first few games will answer a lot of those questions."

Duncan and assistant coach Nanette Fisher have six players back from last year's 9-16 team and five of those either started or saw considerable action. On the other hand, graduation claimed Longwood's top two centers and second leading scorer Cindy Eckel, who surpassed the 1,000 point mark in career scoring last season.

Six new faces have joined the Lady Lancer squad and several of those newcomers will have to produce right away.

"When you have a new coach and so many new players, it will take time to get things sorted out," says Duncan.

Expected to pick up some of the slack during Holmes' absence are juniors Johnson, Turner and Bev Powell. Johnson was team MVP last season while Turner was the team's second leading scorer (7.8) and rebounder (6.3). Robin Powell, sister of Bev, has been a two-year starter at guard. She dished off 58 assists and also had 58 steals last season. Reserve guard Amy Cook returns for her sophomore year.

Newcomers include: freshmen Melanie Lee, a 5-11 center-forward, Reeva Spradlin, 5-7 guard, Boska, a 6-1 center, and Forbes, a 5-6 guard, plus sophomores Kim Rhodes and Kellie Jordan, both 5-9 forwards.

Duncan is counting on Lee and Spradlin to be her top reserves, and Bev Powell could also be a big plus off the bench if she recovers from a pre-season knee injury. Powell was one of Longwood's top rebounders last season until a back problem forced her to the bench.

"I expect both Forbes and Robin Powell to make significant contributions at the guard position," said the Lady Lancer coach. "Caren is an effective outside shooter, while Robin is probably our best defensive player. Amy (Cook) is also a fine outside shooter."

Duncan says that Longwood's main goals are to improve on last season's record and to win the VAIAW Division II championship. The Lady Lancers will be competing with Radford, Randolph-Macon, Liberty Baptist ahd Hampton Institute for one of four spots in the VAIAW Division II Tournament March 2-3 at Radford.

"With only six players returning, the success of the team will depend greatly on how quickly our freshmen mature and adjust to the college game," said Duncan. "In the meantime the returnees will have to perform well for us to achieve early success. Every game on our schedule is going to present us with quite a challenge. We cannot and will not take any opponent lightly."

Par-Bil's Tip-Off

When Longwood's men's basketball team hosts the Par-Bil's Tip-Off Tournament Friday and Saturday to kick off the 1983-84 season, the Lancers may find themselves in the position of not being favored to win their own tournament.

The Lancers, 15-10 last season, open the tournament Friday night at 7:00 when they take on always tough St. Paul's. At 9:00 Elon will take on West Virginia Tech. The consolation and championship contests will take place at 6:30 and 8:30 Saturday night. The tournament is being sponsored by Par-Bil's Food Store of Farmville.

Longwood coach Cal Luther is bringing in an exceptionally rugged field of teams. On paper, at least, Elon figures to be the favorite with West Virginia Tech, St. Paul's and Longwood battling for the runeer-up spot.

While the Fighting Christians were only 12-17 last season, they will have the tallest team in the tournament and perhaps the most talented. Elon has a pair of 6-9 centers in soph Andre Hines and junior Jay Lee, plus 6-6 Robert Leak, a previously highly-touted junior college cager who transferred in from Auburn.

"The tournament is going to provide an exciting challenge for our young team," said Luther. "All three teams coming in figure to be strong. We're hoping we can make at least a representative showing."

Luther has two starters back from last season and those two veterans are the only Lancer cagers who have locked up starting positions. Senior All-American Jerome (the Cobra) Kersey will start at center while soph Lonnie Lewis will open at one of the forward positions. Battling for the other forward slot are juniors David Strothers and Tim Wilson, both newcomers.

In contention for the guard positions are veterans Frank Tennyson and Stan Hull, both sophomores, and freshmen Eric Pittman and Kevin Ricks.

Luther has been pleased with his team's hustle and defense in preseason scrimmages, but he says Longwood must make major improvements in its shooting and ball-handling before the Lancers can be considered a good team.

Following the Par-Bil's Tournament, Longwood will face a tough road game at Guilford Tuesday, November 22, before taking part in the Cystic Fibrosis Tip-Off Tournament at Valdosta State (GA.) November 27-28.

Longwood has eight new players on its 13-man roster.

Player Of The Week

Howard Wins Tourney Title

Freshman wrestler Bill Howard won the title at 167-pounds in the James Madison Takedown Tournament November 5 and for his efforts the first-year grappler has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period November 4-November 11. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

"This was Billy's first collegiate competition," said coach Steve Nelson. "He defeated his opponent from George Mason 7-6 and then beat Washington & Lee's senior team captain 6-0 in the finals. If he continues to improve, Billy has the potential to become an outstanding collegiate wrestler."

Fan In The Stands

Dick Shultz, the Virginia Athletic Director, summed it up best when he said:

"Yes, this is at the university level, but football and basketball are the most publicized sports at any collegiate level. I don't want people to ask me where I go to school and say, 'Oh, yeah, they have a rotten football team.'" The success of athletic teams also reflects interest in prospective students, according to UVA's Shultz.

My last criticism pertains to the need for a football team to rally around. Do you need a football team to get fired up? No. Take a look at Old Dominion, who put the school on the map with a women's basketball team that was second to none. If that's not enough, take a journey down "Tobacco Road" to Raleigh and look at the remnants of the couch burning rallies for the "Team of Destiny" (1983 NC State Men's Basketball Team). As I recall, a former girls' school in southside Virginia rallied when their team was headed to the Division III Final Four in Men's Basketball in 1980. Even soccer is becoming appealing to the students and LC community. What do these groups have in common? They are winners and people love winners.

Longwood has built up a fine athletic program in men's and women's sports. No one wants to go through the trials and tribulations of building another team.

Sit tight, Longwood, and build what you already have.

Grapplers Compete

Longwood's wrestling team, which competed in the Winston-Salem St. Invitational Tournament over the weekend, takes this week off before opening its home schedule next Monday (Nov. 21) when Lynchburg and William & Mary visit for a 6:00 tri-match.

Monday's tri-match will mark the start of dual match competition for the young Lancers. Longwood won 11 out of 24 matches in the Winston-Salem St. Tournament against the likes of Division I Campbell, North Carolina A & T, Pembroke St., Livingstone, Barber Scotia and Winston Salem. The tourney was held Friday night and Saturday.

Finishing fourth for Longwood, in their respective weight classes, were Mike Hackett, who went 2-2 at 126 pounds, and Steve Albeck, 3-2 at 142 pounds. Also reaching the semifinals were Bill Howard, 2-2 at 167 and Scott Gregory, 1-2 at 177. Tim Fitzgerald had a 2-2 mark at 118 pounds for the Lancers.

"We improved on our showing in the James Madison Takedown Tournament," said coach Steve Nelson. "We lost a lot of very, very close matches. We faced some even competition and just came out on the short end."

Nelson, who has eight freshmen on his 15-man squad, feels his team is beginning to make progress, particularly for this early in the season.

Longwood faces an uphill battle in most dual matches since the Lancers will likely have to forfeit the 190-pound and heavyweight classes, but Nelson feels he has some fine grapplers in the lower weights.

Lady Lancer Golf Tourney

Longwood's women's golf team wrapped up its fall season last week, finishing eighth out of 10 teams in the Lady Wolfpack Invitational Tournament at MacGregor Downs Country Club in Cary, North Carolina Wednesday.

The three-day, 54-hole tournament was won by Duke which carded 320-297-310-912 to beat second place Wake Forest (928) by 26 strokes. Other team scores were as follows: NC State 939, North Carolina 952, North Carolina-Wilmington 1,002, William & Mary 1,010, NC State (Red) 1,020, Longwood 343-340-338 — 1,021, Meredith 1,030, James Madison 1,038.

Top performers for Longwood were Lanie Gerken and Sue Morgan, both of whom shot 252. Gerken had an 80-85-87-252 while Morgan compiled an 87-82-83-252. Also for Longwood, Carol Rhoades had a 92-85-82-259, Kim Patterson 84-88-87-259 and Mary Semones 92-91-86-269.

The Longwood women golfers will resume play in the spring season in late February. Coach Barbara Smith is looking for improved play from her team in the spring.

"We had some good individual scores in different tournaments," said Dr. Smith. "We hope to do better in the spring as a team. All our golfers had some good rounds in the fall, just not at the same time."

Record Setting Booters

Longwood's soccer team met defeat in the final game of the season last Wednesday as William & Mary broke a scoreless deadlock mid-way through the second half and went on a 5-0 triumph. The shutout ended a string of 18 straight games in which Longwood had avoided being shut-out.

With a final 12-2-4 record, the Lancer booters had the best record of any Longwood soccer team in history while breaking four team and two individual records. Longwood, however, was once again overlooked in the NCAA post-season playoff picture.

VISA state champ in 1982, Longwood was also unable to qualify for the VISA playoffs, despite the fact that the Lancers had a better record than three of the four playoff teams.

Longwood set records for fewest goals allowed in a season (20), longest win streak (6), most consecutive games without being shutout (18) and longest unbeaten streak (10). Goalie Brian Sprinkle recorded six shutouts for a career record total of 12. Freshman goalie Rob Liessem rang up the best goalkeeper average ever at Longwood with a 0.72 for 11 games. Sprinkle was right behind at 0.85 for 14 games.

Leading point producers for Longwood were senior Chris Wilkerson who had five goals and five assists for 15 points. Another senior Tim Brennan was next with five goals and two assists. He had 36 career goals. Sophomores Clay Mullican and Sam St. Phard both had 11 points and sophomore Mark McArdle had 10 points.

With only three seniors on this year's squad, Longwood should field another strong team next season.

Longwood: A Helping Hand

By KENT BOOTY

Longwood College will literally lend a helping hand to the community one Saturday next March.

In an ambitious project called "LIVE '84" — Longwood Initiates Volunteer Energy — some 2,000 student, faculty, staff, administration and Board volunteers will perform varied odd jobs in the Farmville area on Saturday, March 31. The services, to be determined in cooperation with area officials, will assist senior citizens and nonprofit organizations.

"It's a hand-in-hand project with the town," said I.B. Debt, director of student activities, who heads the steering committee. "The people in town will get to know students on a personal level; they'll realize that these students are just like their kids or grandchildren. They will also see that we have students who care about the community."

One interesting feature of the project is that, in addition to students, members of Longwood's faculty, staff and Board of Visitors will be taking part. "Quite a few of the faculty and staff have already told me they'll participate," Mr. Dent said.

"Churches and garden clubs, for example, might need some work done," suggested Mr. Dent. "People might need a hand moving furniture or helping with a flower garden. The Sheltered Workshop, hospital auxiliary or nursing homes also might have different jobs. There are so many possibilities."

The Volunteer Coordinator committee, one of six committees under the overall steering committee, will try to generate widespread student participation. LIVE '84 has been scheduled for the first weekend after students return from spring break, when many traditionally remain on campus.

"We have to come up with the volunteer workers and also, by working with the town, determine what type of jobs need to be done," said Tom Bailey, a senior who is chairman of that committee. "It might be raking leaves, painting street signs, cleaning up a park, planting flowers — whatever needs to be done."

Organizers say they will create interest though competition between and among student organizations, such as fraternities, sororities and residence halls.

"Once people start doing publicity, we hope there will be a snowball effect," Bailey predicted. "For example, if the residents of Curry (hall) become heavily involved, the people in Frazer will want to become involved, too. One group is not going to let the other group out-do them."

Afterwards, awards and prizes will be presented to organizations with the highest percentage of participation. There will be competition both between residence halls and among the floors of the halls.

There's another incentive for people to participate — the Student Union is sponsoring a mixer that evening in which admission will be free to those who worked.

"We're hoping the entertainment (mixer) and competition will be enough to attract a large number of students, plus the fact that people are doing something good for the community," said Bailey.

Market Basket

Local Food Prices Still Dropping

The cost of the Farmville area market basket was 10 cents lower in November than in October. The 40-item basket was $61.87 this month, compared to $61.97 in October.

Market basket surveys in the Richmond and Tidewater areas also showed slight decreases in food costs. The Richmond basket was $61.13 in November, down from $62.47 in October. The Tidewater area basket, the lowest priced one in the state, was down from $60.55 in October to $59.60 in November.

The Northern Virginia basket was the only one in the state to show a small increase. It was $64.77 this month, up from $64.50 in October.

Local food buyers are paying 1.15 percent less for food this November than they were a year ago. The cost of the market basket in November 1982 was $62.59.

In the November survey of four local food stores, lower prices were found for 16 items. Thirteen items were priced higher, and 11 items were priced the same as last month.

The difference between the "high" and "low" baskets this month was a sizeable $14.09. The shopper who selected only the highest priced items would pay $68.58 for the basket; for the shopper who selected only the lowest priced items, the cost would be $54.49.

The news is good on the gasoline front, too. Ten of the 16 local stations surveyed offered lower gasoline prices in November than in October. Lower prices were found for regular, unleaded, and premium unleaded gasoline. As usual, the best prices were at self-service stations.

These price studies are projects of the Economics Seminar class at Longwood College, under the direction of Dr. Anthony B. Cristo.

— Big Blue —

Norman Simpson as "Big Blue."

What the heck is that? Well, it's really a bunch of blue bathroom mats sewn together to look like a giant aardvark or something like that. But once Norman Simpson crawls inside, it comes alive as "Big Blue," Longwood's new basketball mascot. "Big Blue" was conceived by the basketball cheerleaders and created by Norman Simpson and Julie Mobley.

"Blue" was greeted with enthusiastic cheers for his debut at the first home game. Simpson says he gets psyched-up for games by working out with the cheerleaders before hand and although the rubber lined suit gets awful hot and sweaty inside, Simpson's performance isn't hindered. In fact, "Big Blue's" leg fell off while he was jumping around during the second game.

Right now, "Big Blue" is on a trial basis as Longwood's mascot and if he proves popular "Blue" will be seen at sporting events other than just basketball. "Big Blue's" purpose in life is to promote school and team spirit. "Blue" can be seen again next Wednesday, November 30, 7:30 p.m. at home against VCU.

Library Use Figures Cited

By CINDY MORRIS

An average of 270 books are checked out each day at Longwood College's Lancaster Library. Over 215,000 books are housed in the library. During the 1982-83 school year a total of 98,417 books was checked out. Of these books, 85,656 were checked out by Longwood College students.

According to the State Statistics Staff Technical Report for Academic Libraries in Virginia for the year of 1980-81, Longwood's library rates an average of 15th when compared to 72 other institutions.

The total budget for the library during 1982-83 was $565,882 or $1,550.36 per day. The budget for materials, books, and periodicals was $180,000 for the year or $493.15 per day. The largest donation the library has ever received was $4,000 from a former Longwood student who was a student worker at the library.

The addition of computers during the summer of '83 has made the employees at the library very busy. The employees at the library consist of six librarians, 12 support staff, three part-time, and 17 student workers. By January, the library hopes to have all material listed from '77 to date in the computers.

The General Assembly turned down a plan two years ago to add three floors to the back of the library. The proposed plan will be reconsidered at the beginning of next year.

College Exceeds Minority Goal

By BETH PARKER

The goal was reached for the number of minority students at Longwood College in '82-'83 for the first time in the history of the college. In fact, the college exceeded its goal for minority students.

Out of the 2,500 students, 180 are minority students. The college also has seven minority faculty and administration members.

There are 15 state supported colleges in the state of Virginia. Thirteen of these colleges are predominately black. Only three out of the 13 predominately white colleges didn't meet their goal.

According to the admissions office, Longwood was proud to exceed its goal and hopes to do just as well or better in the future. They plan on doing more high school recruiting in the future to keep minority enrollment up.

perspectives

Before the broadcast of ABC's The Day After, I was already convinced that it was going to be a waste of my time. Propoganda I tell you — political hype — sensationalistic and all that.

And I was right — mostly. The best part about The Day After was Longwood's "The Day After The Day After" panel discussion. It wasn't that the discussion, or the points brought out were anything terrific, but it was absolutely terrific that first, Longwood even dreamed of such a display of political concern, and secondly, that Jeffers Auditorium was filled with students, faculty and administration.

Dr. Conway, Dean of Faculty, headed the panel, and the rest of the group was a combination of faculty and students, all from the English, Philosophy and Foreign Languages Department. And they all predictably wanted peace — a freeze on nuclear arms. Nothing real original but certainly a landmark for any organized group at Longwood to vocalize.

The composition of the panel was more than a little lopsided — and a member of the audience noticed enough to ask why there was no dissenting member, like from the Military Science Department, on the panel.

Dr. David James, Professor of Philosophy, explained that Major Crawford, head of the Department of Military Science, had been invited to either appear at the discussion, or send a representative. But she declined, and apparently not by choice. According to Major Crawford, she had been given direct orders not to comment on the film The Day After "probably because of the sensitivity" she explained. (Hm-m. Freedom of whose speech!) I'm not sure I understand why anyone would be expected to commit their life to a cause and then accept orders not to defend that commitment.

But in light of the imbalance of the panel, it still showed promise that Longwood would gather and brainstorm ideas and feelings on a topic so potentially controversial as nuclear war.

Who knows? In time, maybe some kind of peace movement will spring from the people at Longwood — marching in the streets, banners and black armbands, Bob Dylan — the works.

And maybe more people will start talking — communicating their fears, feelings and questions — and start searching for answers.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

An Open Letter To Steve Ewell

An Open Letter To Steve Ewell:

I commend you on your support of and believe in freedom and the American way, Steve, but I would ask you to think more carefully about what it is you are actually supporting. When you say things like, "Whatever action the United States undertakes anywhere in the world its people should give complete support," you are advocating, in effect, a totalitarian state — one in which dissent and the rational dialogue upon which a democracy is founded seems to have no place. Are you suggesting that "the price of freedom" is that, Steve? Elected politicans are self-serving, fallible human beings like the rest of us — are you suggesting that somehow they become perfect in their public roles and decisions? I agree that our interventions in Lebanon (and Grenada) have many underlying reasons — unfortunately, as you suggest, "many more than you or I will ever know." You seem to suggest that it's appropriate for our government to withhold these reasons and-or lie to us, in which case you again are advocating a totalitarian state — not a democracy which depends, in theory, on an informed citizenry and free press to have input to significant national decisions. Clearly such input is quite indirect in today's complex world, but if we are to maintain "freedom," we deserve accurate information, not misinformation (as was the case in Grenada).

Finally, your argument implies a heroic vision of Mark's death in Lebanon. As Richard Cohen suggests in his October 30, 1983 column in the Washington Post, the Marines killed in Lebanon were not heroes, but "... victims. A soldier killed in his sleep is hardly a hero. He has no chance to be, no opportunity to do anything heroic." The questions about our involvement in Lebanon, Grenada, or anywhere need to be raised — why are we there? Whose interests are we serving? Historically, our global use of force — most recently Korea, Vietnam, Nicaragua, and now Lebanon — have produced stalemates at best, not to mention draining our precious human and economic resources dramatically. So I think the price of freedom is continual self-analysis and critique — otherwise there is little real freedom left to defend.

And Another. . .

To the Editor of the Rotunda:

This is a plea for common sense. Realize the fact that you believe that your and only your ideas are right. That's fine. Everyone is entitled to his own opinion, but this is a plea to base your opinions on logic.

The article in which the Reaper was pissed made logical sense. Think about it. Nobody likes war, it's stupid. It doesn't matter what you are fighting for, the stupidity far outweighs the cause where death and destruction are involved. It just proves how incredibly base our modern and "highly technological society" is. Who are we trying to kid? We're not getting any smarter, we're just learning how to make more destructive weapons, It's all surface; expended time and energy that could surely be directed toward something worthwhile.

There's no propaganda in wanting to live for your freedom rather than to die for it. My freedom is established, thank you. That was taken care of when the American Revolution was fought and the Bill of Rights was placed in the Constitution of the United States.

Please don't push the theory of communist aggression on me. What about DEMOCRATIC aggression? Where the hell do you get off deciding what is right for everyone else? It is possible for communism and democracy to exit together without hostilities. In your eyes communism is bad because you know only democracy. There are good and bad points for both sides. Communism is suitable for the large population in Russia; it is much easier to place their economic standards on a collective level. We can base our economics on a free enterprise system because that was the whole point of the United States in the first place. Notice, however, that as the country and business expands, so does governmental control. Neither communism nor democracy is completely right, but by the same token neither is completely wrong. The situation of social crisis is what ultimately decides which form of government will be most successful for the majority of the people.

Imaginery Invalid: A Review

By JOHNEL D. BROWN

A nice night of thoughtless, easy-to-swallow entertainment — no nuclear fallout, Vietnam vets, sophocles or parables. Just Moliere. (Just Moliere?!) Longwood Players and the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts presented "The Imaginary Invalid," Nov. 16-19 in Jarman Auditorium.

Freshman Rob Robertson who had the lead (by the Grace of God) was annoying as the whining, Argan, which was called for in any hypochondriac. But Robertson just wasn't enough — he gloated in the spotlight and entertained the audience but forgot he was on the stage with other cast members. His delivery was expressionless, and his presence was nil.

He never interacted with the other players, but acted AT the audience instead. Tacky at best.

Junior Connie Watkins was good as Argan's insincere, patronizing wife. She worked more at trying to compensate for Robertson.

Freshman, Anastasia MacDonald showed promise as the weak, lovesick Angelique. She maybe could have been better with a different part — one without the musical demands.

And Junior, Jamila Smith seemed to improve as the play progressed. She began a little uncomfortable, nervous, and overacting, but by the second half, Smith turned out in full form, certainly capable and full of expression. She was always in character, (unlike Robertson, MacDonald or Watkins) if not in her delivery then in her silent expressions.

Curt Walker and David Miller as the father and son duo worked well with each other. Miller was exceptional in his Longwood debut. His knees never stopped wobbling as he carried the part of the dominated nerdly son.

The real question, when it comes to the rest of the players is the casting. Sophomore Jerry Dagenhart, very obviously one of the strongest actors at Longwood, was cast as Beralde, Argan's brother. His role was minor, and his lines few — and still he outshone Robertson blatantly.

Dagenhart's presence and sensitivity to the other actors and to the audience was remarkable as he delivered lines that could have been lost in the scene, but instead were hilarious because of Dagenhart's communication with the audience.

His sensitivity even carried over to players not nearly as sensitive, as he smoothed over Robertson' broken, forgotten and displaced lines with the greatest of ease.

Dagenhart could have done much more for the production — and the production could've been more had he been cast in a stronger part. (Did someone say Argan?!)

Junior, Vince Decker was also miscast. He pranced around looking studly, basking in the curls and limelight. Had I not seen Red Ryder, I would have thought Decker to be an amateur. His talents outweighed the demands of his role as Cleante.

The costumes were colorful — (but Decker in pink?! C'mon Jerry . . .) and very well designed. The makeup ranged from adequate to horrible. Mike roster looked like a clown, Mark Winecoff needed a little help on the age lines — and maybe the voice. (The "hunch-back" walk was good though.) And Connie Watkins' penciled-in cleavage was a nice touch.

It was almost 8:00 and the stage was set — a simple but tasteful set — (congrats Mr. Evans). I'm still puzzled though — why Elise McCarty, the Property Mistress, was lounging around on the set, I just can't figure out. And during the set change she arranged and rearranged, removed and shifted the set with no great speed — and what happened to the "all-in-black" the crew is traditionally supposed to be sporting? Where's your professionalism, tighten up, crew!

The Imaginary Invalid, in spite of the haphazard casting (which could've proved disastrous if it hadn't been for the handful of strong actors who knew how to compensate on stage), and the unprofessional set crew, was still a success. The audience loved it — it was time for a few laughs, a break from the intense.

Dress For Success

"Dress For Success," a fashion show aimed at graduating seniors, was held last week in Blackwell Dining Hall. Designed to assist the newcomers to the business field in choosing a proper wardrobe for a successful career, the show offered many alternatives to the traditional business suit. Local clothiers supplied the many fashions worn by the models. The show was well received by those in attendance and proved to be very informative as to proper attire to be worn on an interview.

Mark Winecoff models clothes for the new Renaissance man.

Dr. Barbara Smith Named LPGA Coach Of The Year

Dr. Barbara Smith, Longwood women's golf coach for 17 years, has been named as LPGA "Coach-of-the-Year" for 1983. Dr. Smith won the national award in competition with coaches from colleges like Rollins, Iowa and Lamar. Members of the Ladies Professional Golf Association voted for the award.

A coach with a national reputation, Dr. Smith has led Longwood to more than 130 victories in matches and tournaments. The Lady Lancer golfers finished second and third in the nation in AIAW Division II Tournaments in 1981 and 1982, respectively.

"I'm excited," said Dr. Smith after learning that she had been chosen for the award, perhaps the highest honor she could receive. "I don't really know why they picked me, but, I'm pleased."

The LPGA established the "Coach of the Year Award" in 1980. The honor is bestowed upon a lady teaching professional who is actively engaged in the teaching and or coaching of golf at the college, university or high school level.

Qualifications for the award are that the recipient be a Class "A" member or Master Professional of the Teaching Division in good standing; she must presently serve as a head coach at an accredited educational institution; she must have shown exceptional leadership and dedication to the game of golf; she must have actively contributed to both LPGA section and national events; she must demonstrate responsibility in areas of coaching, recruting, program development, instruction, tournament organization and professional involvement in Associations governing athletics.

An LPGA rules official, Dr. Smith was recently appointed to the NCAA Women's Golf Committee, which is responsible for setting up and administering the NCAA Women's Golf Championship.

Current chairman of the nominating committee for the Northeast Section LPGA, Dr. Smith is also a representative of the Northeast Section LPGA testing division. Selected as Longwood Female Coach of the Year in 1979, Dr. Smith is an area consultant for the National Golf Foundation, author of a number of research articles on the teaching of golf and LPGA teaching professional at Longwood Golf Course.

Dr. Smith is a member of the LPGA Teaching Division Class "A". She is listed in both Who's Who of American Women and Outstanding Young Women of America. In 1972, she received the Longwood College Board of Visitors Distinguished Service Award.

She earned her B.S. degree from Limestone College and has the distinction of being the first graduate of that institution to earn a doctorate in physical education. She was awarded her master's at the University of North Carolina and her doctorate at UNC-Greensboro.

Gymnasts Open Season Host Duke December 2nd

The 1983-84 Longwood gymnastics team opens its season against a strong Division I team — Duke, December 2 at Lancer Hall.

Longwood coach Ruth Budd feels Duke is one of the stronger teams on this year's schedule. The Lancers' schedule is a challenging one as exactly half of their opponents are Division I schools. In addition the Lancers will compete against William and Mary, the defending NAIA champion and Radford, a strong Division II rival which has beaten Longwood by less than a point twice in the last two years.

Coach Budd had been optimistic about the upcoming season. She felt the team would be competitive as long as they could avoid the injuries which plagued them only a year ago. Unfortunately the injuries are haunting them once again. Sophomore Kelly Strayer injured her arm in practice, but is doing well in rehabilitation and should be in full strength against Duke. Junior Gray Stabley injured her ankle and probably will not be in full form December 2. Stabley is a third year returnee for the Lancers.

Also returning from last year's team are Dayna Hankinson, Kim Kenworthy, Kimi Owens, Cindy Weinstock and Lisa Zuraw.

Coach Budd feels the Lancers will be greatly improved on bars, the event which troubled Longwood last year. Newcomers Debbie Malin, Kerri Hruby and Kelly Strayer are all strong on bars. Malin was the USGF State Champion on bars in South Carolina the last three years.

Coach Budd feels that it will be beneficial to the Longwood gymnasts to open the season against a strong Division I team. "It will be a good experience for the freshmen to see some of the better gymnasts," said Budd. She also added that it will be a good way to show the strength of the schedule. The Duke meet can show the Lancers how good they will have to be in order to be a strong, competitive team.

Duke is the only team scheduled to compete against Longwood before January. Longwood travels to William and Mary on January 20 and East Stroudsburg on the 28th.

WUTA: Back On Track?

J. D. Almond and Jeff Hawkins team up to spin a variety of albums.

By JEFF ABERNATHY

"This is WUTA — Longwood College — 90.1 on your FM dial." The DJ's voice is smooth and rich as he speaks into the microphone which is center stage for the small, cubelike room. He is at once confident and interested, comfortable and soothing while speaking to no one in particular save his strange black ball jutting out over a mass of equipment.

He occasionally wonders if there is anyone "out there, but he maintains his composure. Not knowing if anyone is tuned into the station is a frequent worry of Longwood disc jockeys — a small and highly individualistic group — but there is always hope that some friends are listening in, if no one else. Still it is with a slight sigh of relief that he answers the phone for a request.

Faced with poor funding and a small group of supporters, the Longwood Radio Association has been plagued with inoperative periods throughout the current semester. The longest lasted nearly four weeks, beginning when the station's transformer broke down in late October. Upon returning to school in August, Radio Association members could not begin to broadcast until new needles were bought for the station's two turntables because the old needles had been damaged over the summer. Such problems have been typical in WUTA's four-year history. Current vice-president Jamie Mereness notes that the station "lost a lot of credibility when we went off the air."

Due to the small size of WUTA and other college stations, they are often overlooked by the industry. "If you're a 10 watt station, you're basically ignored in the music business," Mereness said. This means that promotional albums and singles are rarely received from record companies. The station does have a relatively small collection of records, but for the most part disc jockeys use their own albums and tapes.

During the 1982-83 school year, WUTA purchased two new turntables, a reel-to-reel tape deck, and a cassette tape deck in addition to remodeling the studio. This year plans were made to purchase a new mixer at a cost of approximately $3,000. The mixer in use is over thirty years old and inadequate for the station's needs.

When members returned this semester, however, they found they had only $300 left from last year to operate on for the '83-'84 school year. No representative of the Association had applied in March to the Student Activities Committee for funding and no money was allocated for the radio station this year. All of the remaining funds have been spent, and the Association is now applying for surplus funds.

In recent weeks WUTA has experienced a rise in its listening audience, which is documented with a growing number of requests being phoned in nightly. However, President Jay Carey still feels the station is "suffering from obscurity. I think that people don't know the potential we have. Until they do, we're still the lowly ten watt station that nobody knows about, despite all the hard working members."

The "five-year plan" for WUTA may be a boost to 100 watts and stereo. Currently mono at ten watts, the station's signal is weak in comparison to that of the 100-watt station at the University of Richmond. New equipment is needed, and Association members are anxious to work such expenses into their budget.

At present, smaller problems are being dealt with, such as the station's interference with Richmond's TV channel six (WWBT). When both Farmville station WFLO and WUTA are in operation, reception of channel six has been poor across campus as well as in Farmville. Interference between the two stations has created a jamming signal in the past, but WUTA solved the problem last week. Reception of WWBT is now free of interference.

To solve WUTA's financial difficulties, a meeting has been set up with Vice-President for Student Affairs, Phyllis Mable to discuss the station's function on campus and the need for funding. In addition, Association members "are striving to create a fair and well balanced format . . . for the Longwood student body," said Mereness.

"I think we need to be more in touch with the students . . . we want to have a good, professional operation," added station treasurer, Brad Schwartz.

After playing a request, one DJ gives the Selective Service a spot, while another sings "America the Beautiful" in the background. "It's quick, it's easy, and it's the law."

They finish the ad, crank the Beatles' "Revolution" and get ready for the next song.

Lancer Edition Logo Designed

By CINDY CORELL

In search of a logo for Lancer Edition, the academic departments of Art and Music have successfully combined talents to produce one such logo, plus a graphic design to be used as the Lancer Edition program cover.

Art Professor Tamara Mischenko's graphic design class was asked to design a logo for Lancer Edition; the designs were judged by the show choir's director, Dr. Lee Egbert and the current members of Lancer Edition.

Senior Art major, Kristen Celmer's design was chosen as the best, and will become the designated logo. Kristen plans to become a commercial artist after graduating from Longwood. Junior Art major, Patricia Dewey's design, a sketch of three spotlights, was chosen as the cover for Lancer Edition performance programs. Patricia also plans to go into commercial art.

This effort to help out campus organizations will be repeated as the class designs logos for The Series of Performing Arts.

As Ms. Mischenko says, "This is a good opportunity for two of the departments of Fine Arts to work together in an effort to enhance the appearance of printing concerning performance groups."

Doris Betts, winner of the 1983 John Dos Passos Prize for Literature, chats with well-wisher at a reception Nov. 21 at Longwood's Alumni House. Prior to the reception, Betts read from her short story, "This Is The Only Time I'll Tell It," which was published in "The New Orleans Review" in 1977. Betts also is the author of four novels and three collections of short fiction. She teaches at the University of North Carolina.

"We Aren't Shouting Anymore"

By TOM JENNINGS

KENT, OHIO — Thirteen years after four of its students were killed at the climax of the anti-war movement, and after 13 years of almost unrelieved confrontation between students and administrators over how to remember the tragedy, Kent State University trustees finally voted last week to work with students to concoct and build a campus memorial to the dead students.

KSU's unwillingness to accede to student and faculty requests to build a memorial was arguably the last vestige of the anti-war movement of the sixties and early seventies.

"We aren't shouting at each other any more," says Steven Thulin, now a grad student at Kent State.

"The feelings of ill will have largely disappeared," adds Kenneth Calkins, head of KSU's Faculty Senate.

The trustees voted to join community groups and the May 4th Task Force — the student-faculty group that has led the long struggle to memorialize the tragedy — in a committee to find an appropriate physical memorial to the slain students.

The students were killed on May 4th, 1970. Students nationwide had declared a national strike to protest President Richard Nixon's sudden invasion of Cambodia, which marked the first widening of the war in Vietnam. The reaction at home was marred by occasional violence, some of which occurred in the town of Kent. Ohio Gov. James Rhodes called in the National Guard to maintain order on the campus. But on May 4th, Guardsmen abruptly opened fire on a peaceful campus demonstration, killing four and wounding nine.

The outrage and tension that exploded at Kent State long outlived the anti-war movement and the war itself.

Ongoing lawsuits against the university and the National Guard, and the university's often-bungled efforts to downplay the tragedy's significance in subsequent years often exacerbated the tensions.

Among the more notable confrontations over the last 13 years was the university's 1977 proposal to build a gym annex in the area of the shootings. The proposal led to large protests and sit-ins to try to stop construction workers from starting. The gym was finished in 1978 despite the protests.

Kent State refused George Segal's memorial sculpture, which now is on display at Princeton.

Also in 1978, a Cleveland foundation commissioned world-renowned sculptor George Segal to build a memorial for the campus.

But when Segal presented the finished sculpture to KSU administrators, they rejected it.

Segal's sculpture depicts the biblical story of Abraham and Isaac, showing an older man holding a knife over a kneeling youth, whose hands are tied.

"It was inappropriate to commemorate the deaths of four persons and the wounding of nine with a statue which appears to represent an act of violence about to be committed," then-KSU President Brage Golding explained at the time.

Princeton quickly asked to take the sculpture, and placed it on its campus in 1979.

Golding then proposed to build a Roman arch as a memorial, but met almost unanimous disapproval. Critics noted the traditional military connotations of the arch, while others complained it looked like a fireplace.

Golding withdrew the proposal, and no substantial proposals emerged for years afterwards.

About the only official acknowledgments of what happened at Kent State were a library room dedicated to the victims' memory, a small plaque at the campus Hillel Foundation, and an annual candlelight vigil on May 3rd and 4th.

But last week's meeting indicates times have changed.

"I feel there is a more receptive climate on campus now, and there is a general feeling that we need some kind of public memorial, some kind of physical thing," says Dr. Jerry Lewis, a sociology professor and advisor to the May 4th Task Force, the student-faculty group that unsuccessfully has pressed the trustees for a memorial for 13 years.

"We've been through this before," says Thulin, who used to be a task force member. "But for the first time, all the concerned groups — students, faculty, administrators, alumni — seem to be on the same general wave length."

"The state of KSU," concurs Robert McCoy, an English professor who was a KSU vice president under the Golding administration, "is one that

Challenge '84

CHALLENGE '84, a liberal arts career fair for seniors from Lynchburg College, Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Sweet Briar College, Longwood College, Hampden-Sydney College, Virginia Military Institute, Washington and Lee University, Hollins College, and Mary Baldwin College was held Wednesday, Nov. 9, from 9:30 a.m. until 6 p.m. at the Holiday Inn South in Lynchburg.

Over 300 students from the nine participating colleges attended the all-day session which provided them with opportunities to talk to representatives from 30 companies, located nationwide. The representatives spoke to the students informally and conducted individual interviewing. There were also several workshops taking place throughout the day on such topics as interviewing techniques, dressing for success, and business correspondence.

Joy Flowers, conselor in career planning and placement at Lynchburg college, noted that it was the first time that the colleges had sponsored a liberal arts career fair but because of the success of the event she was sure there would be more held in the future.

"I think that this is an excellent way for students to find out about employment opportunities after graduation and to make those important contacts that will help them in the job search market. All of the companies represented were interested in students who had a broad educational background and the flexibility, analytic and communication skills that would qualify them for a variety of jobs. I think this underscores the long-term benefits of the liberal education," added Flowers.

The following is a segment taken from a short story currently being worked upon. It is printed here for the consideration of Longwood Students.

Cathy woke with a thin line of red blood dried along her lip. Her eye was swollen and she knew it would be darker when she got back from her morning classes. She knew that. Her tears stung the cut on her lip as she stared at the bruised face in the bathroom mirror. After washing the tears away she sat at her desk and put her head gently upon folded arms.

Bill watched, not knowing what was wrong. Getting out of bed he asked her. As she turned toward him memories of the party rushed back to him. They were blurred, dreamlike memories of anger and frustration, but his picture was more vivid of hitting Cathy, throwing her against the wall, screaming as she fell. Memories of stuttering apologies came to him, and he felt more guilty knowing it had all happened countless times before.

And like all of those times, Cathy had forgiven him and asked him to come to her room. Like the other times he told her that he loved her. "I love you, too," Cathy had said before they went to sleep.

Bill got dressed and walked to her. He massaged Cathy's shoulders. "I'm sorry. I really am, Cathy. I love you." She closed her eyes and turned to hold him. Each time it happened Cathy felt this way. She felt responsible; "if only I hadn't said that, if I hadn't forgotten to call..." The excuses never stopped. She sometimes thought their "fights" never would either.

Cathy and Bill had been dating since their freshman year. Her friends often wondered why she stayed with him, but they never interfered except to occasionally tell her how bad she looked. Bill's friends often consoled him when he was angry at Cathy. "She's such a bitch sometimes," he'd say.

Cathy woke up on a sunny Saturday morning in Southside General. She had a concussion after falling down a stairwell in her dorm late Friday night. No one knew how it happened. She'd been found by a friend of hers.

Cathy's parents were sitting next to her bed when she opened her eyes. Her mother was crying. Bill wasn't there. Later, when Cathy's father asked her what happened, Cathy said that she couldn't remember.

Three days later Cathy came back to Longwood. There were red roses in her bedroom and on the card was written, "I Love You."

A Christmas Carol At Longwood

By JOYCE ROLLANDINI

The auditorium was full. There was a tenseness for the curtain to open. All eagerly awaited for the classic story to begin, not sure what to expect from the production. The lights dimmed, a hush fell, all eyes opened wide and dared not to blink. The curtain opened with instant applause. It was clear to the overjoyed audience that the performance would prove to be "a visual masterpiece." The antiquated setting was so real, beautiful; "snow gently fell upon the bustling, energetic town. The city street, full of cheery cheeked children, last minute shoppers and convincing peddlers. It was as if looking back to one's ancestral past."

The Longwood College series of the Performing Arts presented A Christmas Carol on November 28, 1983 at 8:00 p.m. in Jarman Auditorium. Charles Dickens' cherished tale was retold by the Nebraska Theatre Caravan. With a cast of thirty, a five-piece instrumental ensemble, vivid costumes and a most impressive set, the stage of Jarman became a living "turn-of-the-century Christmas card." Old, well-favored carols were sung throughout to add to the dramatic atmosphere and set the holiday spirit.

The perfect timing must be commended. Surely those who entered with an unfeeling attitude, left remembering that there is a special message in Christmas.

If the smiles held by those leaving Jarman said anything at all it would be that of refound memories and of future dreams — "Christmas in the mind of a child."

Collectables In Bedford

The ninth annual Craft Collectables show and sale opens Friday, December 2, in the Bedford Gallery at Longwood College.

The show spotlights the work of 12 Virginia craftsmen. Among the works on display are handmade baskets, pottery and porcelain ware, jewelry and small sculpture, functional forged iron pieces, handwoven clothing, pillows, fiber belts, caps, and containers.

The public is cordially invited to view or purchase these "collectables." Gallery hours are: 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday; 2 to 5 p.m. on Saturday; and 5 to 9 p.m. on Sunday. The exhibit will close at 5 p.m. on Monday, December 12.

Steven Glass, resident potter at the Virginia Museum in Richmond, is showing functional and decorative porcelain ware with brightly colored slip decoration. A graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University, Glass has studied with Robert Eckels in Bayfield, WI, and Myrna Krasnik in Paris, France. He was associated with Craftsmen of Chelsea Court in Washington, DC for two years and has maintained his studio in Richmond since 1980.

Alan Landis, a member of the art education faculty at Virginia Commonwealth University and former head of the department, is exhibiting jewelry and small sculpture. He has sold his work, particularly pewter pieces, in shops and galleries in Richmond and Midlothian and in Maryland, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

Handweaver Gretchen Rogers, of Farmville, brings "beauty to the every day" in her clothing creations. She has been weaving since 1971 but says that she has "wanted to weave forever." She finds in weaving "a way of keeping faith with the past in the creations of the present."

Other fiber works in the show are pillows and handwoven scarves by Jan Russell, of Charlottesville; fiber belts, caps, and containers by Gertrude Shook, of Keysville; and quilted pillows by Homer Springer, of the Longwood art faculty.

Ms. Russell is an adjunct faculty member at Longwood this year and also teaches weaving and other fiber crafts at the Virginia Museum. Ms. Shook has taught many workshops and crafts courses for Longwood, Southside Virginia Community College, and for school systems in Chester, Roanoke, and Prince Edward County.

Springer's quilted pillows are a departure from his usual forms of artistic expression. They are the result of a "summer research interest" in quilting and other American folk crafts. Springer's paintings, drawings, and mixed media works are well known in the local area and have been exhibited in Richmond, Roanoke, and other areas of the state.

Carol Edmonson is showing "natural" baskets, made of grapevine and honeysuckle, and ceramic whistles. A 1982 graduate of Longwood, she is the wife of Randy Edmonson and currently teaches art at Amelia High School.

The handwoven oak baskets in the show are the creations of William W. Wilkinson. He is a member of the PCAB Crafts Cooperative, an association of senior craftsmen in Prince Edward, Cumberland, Amelia, and Buckingham Counties.

Peter O'Shaughnessy, a full-time production smith with headquarters in Vesuvius, VA, has been creating candleholders, trivets, hooks, and other functional forged iron pieces for a decade.

Jazz Band

By PAUL GILLESPIE

What kind of place is a classroom to build a contemporary, well-rounded taste in music? Most of the grade-school music classes you grow up with don't offer much hope do they? They'll hand you "Comin' - Round the Mountain," warmed-over opera or foreign lullabies and waltzes until music looks like a terribly bland and spineless waste of time.

How different from all that is the Longwood Jazz Ensemble? Well, their repertoire of material for practice includes rock, Latin and swing styles, plus a medley of Big Band material. A 1982 Grammy nominee, "Birdland," composed by John LaBarbera, pianist for the rock group "Weather Report," is also scheduled for performance. The band, taught and conducted by Frank Coffey, has even played original material in the past, and has tentative plans to do so this Spring.

The band has acquired a fine reputation, according to Mr. Coffey, having received a Chi award in 1978, and performed on request at a winery as well as at a basketball game for Liberty Baptist College, the latter having been in the spring of this year. Coffey himself, however, has only been with the band since this August. His previous jobs include teaching band in Appomattox, and teaching flute playing at Sweetwater.

The band members seem to take an enthusiastic interest in what they do, although the best possible playing can demand diligent daily practice for months. Gigs that the band hopes for in the near future include a Spring Weekend concert here at Longwood behind the Lankford building, and a concert at the Holly Manor retirement home.

Students' goals for joining the band are varied, although more than one of them has found good preparation for a career in what they have learned. Linda Scharer is aiming to prepare for a career in music teaching as well as learning to play the saxophone better. She enjoys playing jazz and the way it makes people feel good. Brian Jungen, in his own words, is playing "for fun", but does have the larger goal of eventually joining the Madison Scouts Drum and Bugle Corps. Theresa Fowler, the band's president, had no comment on career goals, seconded the idea of the band's playing for Holly Manor, as well as some high schools, and notes that the hours demanded for practicing with the band do not conflict with other classes.

Use And Abuse

Drinking At Longwood

By KRIS HODGSON

In recent years alcohol has been a major part of campus life here at Longwood. Beer is served at most social functions, such as mixers, concerts, and fraternity and sorority parties. Although soft drinks must be served at all functions, these are not well publicized and kept back in the corner where they are hard to get to. Students have grown to accept alcohol as a part of their activities, and therefore its use is becoming more widespread.

Barbara Gorsky, Student Development Educator for Longwood, is in charge of implementing plans to reduce alcohol use and abuse. Since she has only been here since August, she is not as acquainted with all the activities yet, but she feels that Longwood has no more problems than anywhere else.

"Students here are very open about alcohol and drug problems in their families or with themselves," she said. There is no support program for students when they are having problems with alcohol or dealing with someone else who has problems with alcohol or drugs, she added.

In a survey of 20 students, all but one strongly agreed that drinking is an important socializing mechanism on campus. Out of six males and 14 females, all agreed or strongly agreed that some activities are more important than drinking, and that drinking should not be the major activity of parties. Four out of 20 surveyed drank to build up their confidence, while 16 drank to escape pressures. Only two felt pressure just to drink, and no one drank for social acceptance.

To solve some of the alcohol problems, Ms. Gorsky has many ideas.

"Alcohol needs to be de-emphasized on campus," she said. "A good way to do this is to have parties without alcohol," she added.

Ms. Gorsky and RA's have talked about having hall activities to educate students about alcohol and having activities without alcohol. A peer support group for students that have problems, or for friends of students who have problems with alcohol is needed, she said.

"I feel that a support system is also needed for drug users, but since marihuana is illegal a lot of the situation deals with the judicial board or the police," she said. "Students have left the college because their roommates had drugs, and we need to eliminate this kind of practice. Since alcohol is not illeghal and its use is more widespread, I would like to deal with that issue first."

Until these programs go into effect, there are many things the students can do to help, she said. These include:

Make sure that there is an alternate beverage that is appealing to students who don't drink and keep it out where the alcohol is served.

Have foods that won't make a person more thirsty.

Serve high protein foods, such as cheese and bread, since these foods absorb some of the alcohol.

If someone is drunk and getting out of hand, act responsibly and help them to their room — the best thing to sober them up is sleep, but make sure the person is lying on his side and not on his back.

"Have you been drinking? Please don't drive...please."

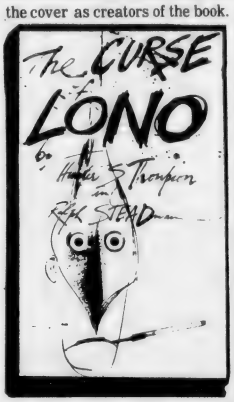
The Curse Of Lono



By JEFF ABERNATHY

Hunter Thompson is back in not-quite-so-rare form with a new book in "gonzo journalism" style, The Curse of Lono. It is the tale of Thompson's journey to Hawaii with his fiancee and illustrator Ralph Steadman and family. As in Thompson's earlier work, Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas, the journey turns into a crazed, twisted, drug-induced adventure. Unlike Fear and Loathing, however, the book apparently does not accomplish whatever it may have been Thompson set out to accomplish. On the whole, the book is a dull, slow narrative of Thompson's vacation in Hawaii, which, true to gonzo style, is vastly exaggerated.

The first give-away to the basic weakness of this book is the back cover, on which Thompson's four earlier works are praised by other big names, Kurt Vonnegut and William Buckley included. "Paddling each other's boat" as it were, and the publishers of The Curse of Lono are trying to put a 200cc engine on Thompson's skiff.

Second was the fact that the work is "profusely illustrated in black and white and blazing color by Ralph Steadman." Steadman's drawings are superb — they are typical Steadman, horrible and wondrous at once. They aid the plot of the narrative well, but, unfortunately, they also are the saving grace of the book.

For the first time, Thompson and Steadman are both listed on the cover as creators of the book.

It is as if Thompson's work isn't enough to sell the book so Steadman gets the job of making it suitable for sale. Steadman's work is as depraved and disgusting as ever, and, as the paperback costs ten bucks, it may well have sold the book.

Thompson's journey is paralleled with that of Captain James Cook, the first European to discover the islands. Cook was at first revered as the long lost Hawaiian king Lono returned, but he was savagely murdered before he could leave. The excerpts of Cook's story are unnecessary and slow the book down significantly. They are also at times, however, more interesting than Thompson's story. I suppose Thompson had to make a choice between using the nineteen excerpts in the work or not, and, in light of the alternative, he may well have made the best choice.

Thompson's writing is not uncommonly confused, but it fails to come to a central point at the conclusion or elsewhere in The Curse of Lono. It is another of Thompson's weird tales, but falls far short of the superior Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas.

I would not, however, deny Thompson's creative genius. His writing can be hillarious, and it often is:

"What are you talking about?" Ralph screamed. "The Dumb Dust, man," Skinner said. "The lash, the crank, the white death . . I don't know what you limeys call it . . ." "You mean drugs?" Ralph said finally. "OF COURSE I MEAN DRUGS!" Skinner screamed. "You think I came here to talk about art?" That finished that. Ralph limped away in a funk, and even the bartender got weird."

Pure, twisted Thompson. But when I invested in this book I was expecting more. I hope to see it in the future, but it isn't here in The Curse of Lono.

Outward Bound Adventure

Over 8,000 men and women, both adults and students, will take part in a unique program called "Outward Bound" this year. Designed so that participants will meet challenging experiences in wilderness settings, Outward Bound courses take place year-round in sixteen states. While many come to Outward Bound seeking a taste of high adventure — and they'll probably get it — most will leave with a new understanding of themselves after discovering they are capable of doing things they might previously have thought "impossible." Outward Bound believes many limits are self-imposed.

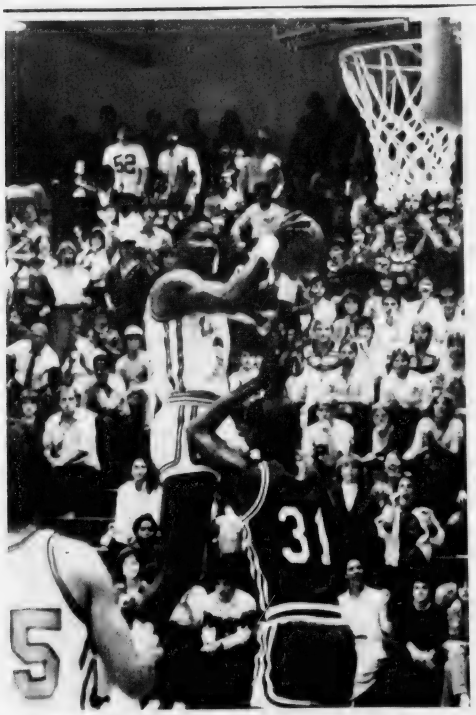
Mountain backpacking, canoeing, skiing and snowshoeing, sailing, kayaking, cycling, rafting, and even dogsledding form the core of the Outward Bound experience, depending on the environment in which the course takes place. Previous outdoor skills are unnecessary, as is special equipment other than personal clothing and boots. Each small group of students has one or more expert instructors and specialists who help them develop outdoor and interpersonal skills, culminating in a "final expedition," with minimal instructor supervision, relying on what they have learned during the course. Academic credit is often available, as is financial aid based on need. In addition, several Outward Bound schools offer no-interest tuition loan plans, some for up to three years.

Outward Bound courses are offered year-round and last from 4 to 30 days. For information, write Outward Bound USA, 384 Field Point Road, Greenwich, CT 06830, or call toll free 800-243-8520 (except in Connecticut.)

Career Night In Business

Career night in business was held in Jeffers Auditorium on Monday, November 7, 1983 starting at 6:30 p.m. The opening session was an inspiring inspirational by Dr. Wilfred Jacques who is chairman of the Business and Economic department at Longwood College. After his welcoming speech, the students had a choice of twe out of four sessions to attend.

One of the sessions was accounting in which Cheryl Parks was the guest speaker. Ms. Parks was a 1980 Longwood graduate in this field. Presently, she is financial control manager at F&M in Richmond.



Finace was another field of choice of sessions to attend. Susan Harwood, who was the guest speaker, is manager of the First Federal Savings and Loan in Farmville.

Mr. Harry Schneider, a faculty member at Longwood, spoke on the field of management. Frank Gilbert, director of marketing research at A.H. Robins in Richmond, was the guest speaker for marketing.

The concluding session dealt with what the employer expects of you in which Steve Musclewhite was the speaker. He is presently working at Shenandoah Life Insurance Company in Roanoke. Mr. Musclewhite feels that a goal for students is to get work after graduation and they have to prepare academically for this to be a professional. The reasons for bringing these employers to Longwood is to give out information to students and to allow the employers to see the students so they might consider hiring them after graduation.

A reception followed the sessions in which everyone got to talk to each of the speakers individually.

Lancers Seek To Rebound In Two-Game Homestand

Stung by three straight losses to tough opposition, Longwood's men's basketball team will seek to bounce back this week with a two-game homestand and a trip to Mary Washington. The 2-5 Lancers won't play again in 1983 after Thursday's trip to Fredericksburg.

After hosting Division III Christopher-Newport Monday night in Lancer Hall, Longwood hosts NAIA Lincoln (PA) Tuesday night. Both game tip-off at 7:30. Longwood's next tilt after the Blue Tide will be January 11 at Atlantic Christian.

Last week the Lancers split a pair of contests in the Valdosta State Cystic Fibrosis Tip-Off Tournament, beating St. Leo 65-56 Sunday (Nov. 27), but losing to Florida International 65-58 in the championship contest Monday. Thursday in Lancer Hall, Longwood fell to Virginia Union 55-48 after hanging close til late in the game. Elon handed Longwood its worst loss since last December Saturday night on the road 81-64.

Contributing to Longwood's demise against Virginia Union and Elon was the illness of second leading scorer Lonnie Lewis. The 6-3 forward missed the Union game and was ineffective against Elon. Lewis had been averaging 15 points per game.

Senior captain Jerome (The Cobra) Kersey leads the Lancers in scoring and rebounding. Kersey, who moved into second place on the Longwood career scoring list last week, is averaging 19.7 points and 12.3 rebounds. The 6-7 cager also leads the team in assists (26), steals (25), blocked shots (6) and slams (6).

Starting in place of Lewis against Union and Elon was sophomore forward Dave Edwards. The 6-6 newcomer scored eight points against the Panthers and came back with 11 points and five rebounds Saturday night at Elon.

Freshman Eric Pittman came off the bench to score eight points Saturday night. Freshman guard Kevin Ricks suffered an ankle injury against Elon and is doubtful for this week's action.

Longwood Wins Show; First Ever

The Longwood College riding team competed in an intercollegiate horse show at Randolph-Macon Women's College in Lynchburg Sunday, November 20, on a cold, rainy afternoon. When the show concluded Longwood was the high-point-college among the seven schools competing. It was the first time in the college's history that its riding team had received top honors.

Coach Mary Whitlock was thrilled with Longwood's performance. "We were all tickled to death afterwards," said Whitlock. "Everyone rode exceptionally well even though it was raining. We (Longwood) really had a great day!"

Freshman Lisa Nelson received the individual high point honor. In addition she received two first place ribbons in the novice division. Also gaining firsts for Longwood were Martha Chase and Lee Anne Lawson.

Longwood received several ribbons in the intermediate division as well. Kristin Birath and Mary Brockwell each earned two ribbons, and Marty Wilson and Beth Wiley won a ribbon apiece in the intermediate division. Bryan Farrar added two third place ribbons in the open division.

Not only did the Lancers win both the individual and team high point awards, but Longwood captured a total of twelve ribbons, four of which were firsts. An afternoon which began as an ordinary cold and rainy day, ended in a successful-history making day; the day the Longwood riding team captured its first even high point college award.

Gynmasts Open Season

The Longwood College 1983-84 gymnastics team opened its season Friday night at Lancer Hall against Duke. The Lancers performed well scoring a 156.45, but the strong Division I rivals finished ten points better scoring a 166.35.

Sophomore Kelly Strayer finished with the top Longwood all-around score 32.75. Strayer led the Lancers on the vault (8.65), the balance beam (8.15) and on floor (8.6). She placed second and third on the beam and floor respectively.

Third year returnee and former All-American Dayna Hankinson finished just behind Strayer in an all-around, scoring a 32.35. Dayna placed fifth on floor exercise and bars and finished sixth on beam and vault. Her 7.85 on bars tied sophomore Lisa Zuraw for the top Lancer score in the event. Zuraw scored a 30.35 on all-around for Longwood.

Longwood travels to William & Mary, the defending NAIA Champion, January 20.

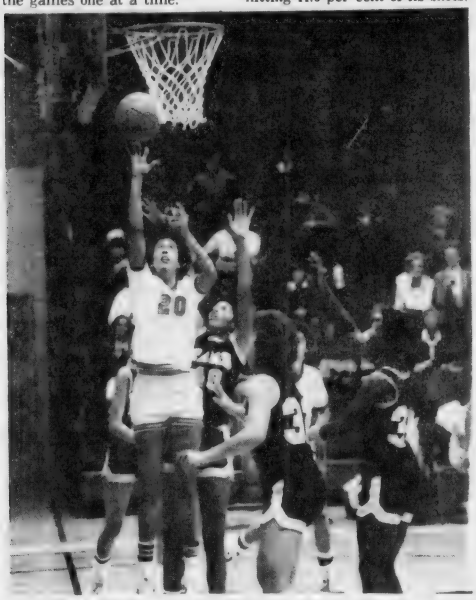
Unbeaten Lady Lancers Host Appalachian Wed.

Longwood's women's basketball team, off to its best start since 1976, plays at Hampton Institute Monday night and hosts Appalachian State Wednesday night to close out its pre-Christmas action. The contest with Appalachian tips off at 7:30.

The 3-0 Lady Lancers notched two wins last week, beating Concord on the road Monday night 67-64 and holding off Virginia Commonwealth 74-72 Wednesday behind some late game heroics from Karen Boska and Florence Holmes. The last time Longwood got off to a 3-0 start was 1976 when the Lady Lancers won their first four games before losing.



First year coach Shirley Duncan says she had no idea before the season started that her team would be where it is now.

"Being new on the job, I had no idea what to expect from our team or the competition," said the coach. "We just try to take all the games one at a time."

In the win over Concord freshman Caren Forbes scored 23 points and fellow-guard Robin Powell scored 12. The Longwood guards, both of whom are shooting at a school record clip from the floor, combined for 34 points against VCU, hitting 16 of 32 shots.

Freshman center Boska, averaging 11 points and 11 rebounds, put Longwood ahead for good against VCU 73-72 with a bucket at the 59 second mark. Then Holmes, in her first action since recovering from an illness, came through with a key steal and free throw with five seconds left to sew up the win.

Forward Valerie Turner pulled down a whopping 17 rebounds and scored nine of her 11 points in the second half to aid the win. While Forbes is averaging 18.3 points to lead Longwood, Turner is next with a 14 ppg mark and 14.7 rpg. Powell is scoring 13.7 ppg while hitting a phenomenal 57.6 of her shots. As a team, Longwood is hitting 44.6 per cent of its shots.

LOOSE INSIDE — Longwood's Valerie Turner (20) gets an easy bucket in win over VCU Wednesday.

Grapplers Face Lynchburg, VMI

Longwood's wrestling team, with its ranks reduced by illness and injury, travels to Lynchburg for a dual match Wednesday night and to Virginia Military Institute Thursday night in action this week.

Friday and Saturday Coach Steve Nelson's team competed in the Washington & Lee Invitational Tournament, but Longwood was able to send just six healthy grapplers to compete.

The top Lancer wrestler was sophomore Tim Fitzgerald who won three out of four matches to finish third at 118 pounds. Fitzgerald lost his first match 10-9 and won the next three by scores of 6-5, 7-6 and 12-4. Among his victims was the 118 pounder from Division I VMI.

"Tim did very well," said Coach Nelson. "He faced touch competition, but he met the challenge for the most part."

Winning at least one match for Longwood were Mike Hackett at 126 pounds, Scott Gregory at 177 and Chris Douglas at 134.

"We're having a tough time with our injury situation and the kids who have quit," said Nelson, "but we still have several good wrestlers and they are doing well."

The Lancers may have to forfeit three of four weight classes in this week's matches against Lynchburg and VMI.

Juniors Steve Albeck and Chuck Campbell have decided to leave the team.

Case, Foster, Bubnis Named To All-Region Team

Three members of Longwood's 1983 soccer team, senior captain Bill Foster, junior Darryl Case and sophomore Dan Bubnis, have been named to the All-South Atlantic Region Division II Soccer team chosen by the National Soccer Coaches Association of America.

Longwood and Mount St. Mary's had three players named to the team, Randolph-Macon two and Radford, Maryland Baltimore County and Davis & Elkins one each.

Forbes Leads Victories; Named Player Of The Week

Freshman guard Caren Forbes scored 23 and 18 points to help Longwood's women's basketball team notch two wins last week and for her performance, Forbes has been named Longwood College Player of the Week for the period November 25-December 2. Player of the Week is chosen by the Longwood Sports Information Office.

Forbes has averaged 18.3 points per game in Longwood's first three games while helping the Lady Lancers get off to their best start since 1976. Teaming with senior captain Robin Powell, Forbes has given Longwood its most effective outside shooting in recent years.

The 5-6 freshman is shooting 56.5 per cent from the floor and has handed off 16 assists.

A graduate of Middle Township High School in Rio Grande, N.J., Forbes was a prep standout in tennis, basketball and softball. The leading scorer in school history, she accumulated 1,460 points in her career. She also earned All-State honors after averaging 19 points per game her senior season.

It left a smoking crater of my mind,
I like to blown away,
but the Heat came round and busted me for smilin' on a cloudy day.

acknowledges the events of what happened here."

Faculty President Calkins attributes the change of heart "to the time that has passed, a new administration (Michael Schwartz succeeded Golding in 1981), and new people on the board of trustees who don't feel as closely involved with those events."

Lewis attributes it to the unveiling of the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington, D. C. last year. Once the nation has begun to put the war in perspective, the logic goes, it can put the domestic convulsions over it in perspective.

The trustees' willingness to find an appropriate memorial isn't official yet. Last week's meeting technically was of a board committee, not the full board. The full board, however, is expected to approve the proposal to build an appropriate memorial at its next meeting in mid-December.

The ROTUNDA

VOL. LLV LONGWOOD COLLEGE TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1984 NO. 9

Student Newspaper Is Back In Black

Reported by Jacqueline Smith

Rotunda writers and staff members, frantic with despair over seven weeks' absence of Longwood's newspaper, came together today to publish this semester's first issue. Soon after the December 6 issue came out, Rotunda editor Johnel Brown was told by Longwood's Vice-President for Student Affairs, Phyllis Mable, that the newspaper was "banned" until financial difficulties were worked out.

The financial problems were the result of an oversight on the part of the 1982-83 staff. The editors of last year's paper neglected to apply for funding for the current year from the Student Activities Committee, a mistake which led to a forty-five hundred dollar debt at the time of the December 6 issue.

In late January, the current editors applied to the Student Activities Committee for funding to pay the debt and continue publication in the current semester. The committee, headed by Susan Tolliver, then appropriated funds sufficient to cover the debt and to print through early March. The editors then applied for funding from the emergency reserve fund, which resulted in a sufficient amount to continue publication throughout this semester. Thus, The Rotunda will be on a regular publication schedule until May.

Another problem which has concerned Rotunda editors is the small number of staff members who publish the newspaper. The regular staff was limited to four last semester, but Ms. Mable and Mr. I. B. Dent, Director of Student Activities, conferred with the English department to arrange a meeting last week for all students interested in working for The Rotunda. While only five students attended the meeting, a large number of students signed a list in their English classes expressing interest. Four of the five students who came were given assignments, and all five are now reporters for the newspaper.

Also introduced at the meeting was Dr. Jack Haberstroh, the new adviser to the publication. Haberstroh, a professor at Virginia Commonwealth University, has had seventeen years of experience in mass communications and has been the owner of various publications. Dr. Haberstroh observed that Longwood students should have been upset over the printing delay because "even though they don't pay a cover price they have already paid out of their activities fees."

Required: Dickens' Copperfield

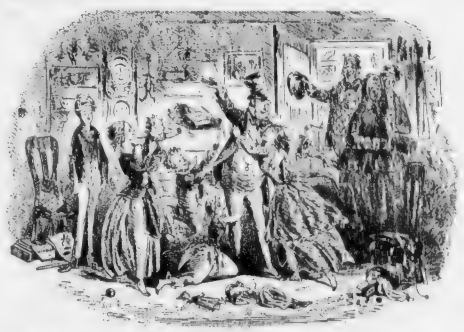
Longwood students enrolled in freshman English courses came to class this semester toting a nine-hundred page Victorian serial novel. Charles Dickens' David Copperfield was chosen by Longwood's English Department because, according to department head Massie Stinson, "We want every student to have the experience of reading and understanding great works of literature from our culture."

Student reactions ranged from frustration to enthusiasm. Longwood junior Drew Decker wasn't worried about the choice. "The impression I got was that it was chosen because a large proportion of the English faculty hadn't read it. I guess they wanted to be as surprised as the students about what happens next. Over the course of a semester, what is 900 pages? It shouldn't be a problem for most students."



Others were anything but complacent. One student who declined to be identified, commented that Copperfield is completely unnecessary and irrelevant to non-English majors. For a freshman English course, it's pointless. They should at least choose an American novelist. What made them choose David Copperfield, why not Moby Dick? It's an interesting idea but I don't see the reasoning behind the choice."

The novel will be read in installments over the course of the semester and up to exams. These assighments are in addition to other reading including plays, poems, and short stories. To deter students from not reading the entire work, owners of the college bookstore have agreed not to sell Cliff Notes on Copperfield.

In an interview with the Richmond Times-Dispatch Dr. Stinson said, "We want our students to get beyond the 28-minute attention span of television situation comedies. In this course they will have to know well a work . . . which took its original Victorian audience a year and a half to read."

Some students feel they shouldn't be required to read any faster than those Victorian readers did. One student commented, the novel "is too detailed, too big to cover in one semester. There are shorter books on the same level that we could read." But another student in the same class retorted, "I don't think it's that bad. I like the characters, and reading by installment helps!"

Whatever the students' judgment may be, the English department is committed to upgrading its requirements and enriching its total program. The move has gotten stories in newspapers around the state, and the English department is pleased. Dr. Stinson saw this as "the beginning of Longwood's emphasis on traditional learning."

GYPSY — A Musical Fantasy At Longwood

By JERRY DAGENHART

Broadway is coming to Longwood in the form of the musical fantasy Gypsy. Gypsy is a "melting pot" of entertainment with something for everyone. Based on the memoirs of the stripper Gypsy Rose Lee, the story line traces the life of Gypsy and her overbearing stage mother Rose form Gypsy's early childhood, in Vaudeville to the peak of her career at Minsky's Burlesque House. The action ranges from boys and girls auditioning for Uncle Jocko's Kiddyshow to Bumps and Grinds from the strippers who dawn the stage of the Burlesque house.

Paula Moore as Gypsy Rose Lee and Diahn Simonini as Madam Rose in rehearsal for GYPSY.

The cast of Gypsy includes many veteran Longwood Players, and some very talented newcomers.

Miss Paula Moore, a senior at Prince Edward Academy, brings to the title role an air of vibrance and beauty that has not been seen on the Longwood stage in quite some time. Paula, who is a native of Prince Edward County, was last seen in The Waterworks Players' production of The Fantasticks.

The role of Gypsy's mother, Rose, is portrayed by Ms. Diahn Simonini, in her 152nd role. Simonini, whose father was the Head of the Longwood Department of English for 13 years, has been a Longwood Player since age 10. She has guest performed at Longwood in Hamlet and Angel Street. Ms. Simonini is currently teaching English and Creative Writing at Buckingham High School, and she is the Artistic Director for the Buckingham Youth Theatre Touring Company. She brings to Gypsy a wealth of experience; she is a union actress, she has toured with the U.S.O., and she was active in summer stock for nine years including work with the Barn Dinner Theatre. She also served as the student liaison officer for the National-Repertory Theatre.

Rose's nervous, ulcer-plagued boyfriend, Herbie, is portrayed by Longwood junior Curt Walker. Curt was last seen as the bumbling Dr. Diaforous in The Imaginary Invalid. Herbie is Walker's first major role and his characterization creates a wonderful balance between the roles of Gypsy and Rose.

The production is being guest-directed by Mr. Thom Williams, a member of the faculty at Longwood's Department of Music. Williams is a very active vocal soloist, and he is also very involved in the theatre. He was last seen in the role of "Quixote" in the Richmond's Department of Recreation and Park's production of Man of La Mancha.

Gypsy is being produced by The Lognwood Players in accordance with the departments of Music and Speech and Dramatic Arts, with a great deal of support from the Farmville community.

This musical fantasy extravaganza will open Thursday, February 23, and run through Saturday, February 25. Curtain time is at 8:00.

Admission is free to Longwood students with I.D.'s, all other students $3.00, faculty and groups of 10, $2.00 and general admission is $5.00.

The cast of Gypsy is expecting a successful run and would appreciate the support of the student body.

Well, boy, I just know they'd never try to put no man named Fritz in the White House. But damn me if them Democrats ain't trying that very thing. They'll keep tryin' and tryin' to find somebody but ever since the country got its head back on straight in 1980 we're gonna keep ole Ron Reagan in the White House; nope, ain't no man name of Fritz gonna be my president.

And look at that — they got so many candidates for president somebody musta got confused and put a black man in there — J--Johnson, — izat his name? No, no, oh yeah Jackson — Reverend Jackson they call him ain't it? Goes round hollerin and screamin like some fool chicken with his head cut off. No sir, them Democrats won't never get things back together. Just too shook up after we got'em out the Senate back in 1980 — yep — 1980 — Revolution — that's what it was.

They'll be fightin it out right up til the summertime or so and then they'll give it to ole Fritz and pretend like they's happy about it or somethin — ha — happy. They'll be 'bout as happy as warts on a frog's tail. I meen — shooo-trying to get ole Jimmy Carter's Vice president 'lected to the highest office in this nation? Shii — ain't no chance. Not as long as there's Ron Reagan up there to lead us into whatever he might choose.

Yep. Ron Reagan, boy. There's one to remember. Now don't you go sayin nothin bout all that south-of-the-border stuff — t'ain't nothin — bunch of hooligans and no-goods any which way. Don't pay it no never mind. I jus read hows the United States govment must be the most truthful govement ever has been. I mean look at them Russians — shoo — their own citizens didn't know if ole Andrapev — izat his name? Whatever, they didn't even know if their own presdent — or is it czar or . . sompin' like that? — they didn't even know if their own presdent had a wife or not? Whaddya thinka that?

Wha?

Shooo — I don't care bout no nuclear testin' goin' on way out west somewheres noway. Where's that? Nevada you say? Shooo — I don't pay no nevermind. Nope I don't call that concealin' — as you say — anyway. If ole Ron thinks it needs to be done — well hell's bells, boy, it's gotta be done! He's our presdent don't ya know? Some things we don't need ta hear 'bout noways.

Yep, that's him, ole Ron Reagan, now don't you fret 'bout how old he's gettin to be. I don't pay no nevermind ta that. Why just tha other day I read where he armwrestled some big ol weightliftin type or somebody, like that — beat him too! Twice in a row, all fair-n-square like. Wha?

No, boy, don't ask me stupid questions like that — how do I know what the Presdents doin' arm wrestlin' in the Oval office — he was probly finished all them portant things presdents gotta do anyway — you know — signed all that stuff 'bout Lebanon and stuff. Lebanon, now there's one exciting exhibition of American might, huh, boy? Old Ron's just cagey as a fox. He just let them ole Syrians chase our boys down to the water ya know — like we couldn'ta took 'em if we wanted to, and then — ha — he fooled them Syrians, our boys jumped on the boats and startin firin' away! Yea, boy, ole Ron Reagan — he's just as cagey as a fox. Wha?

Well that there's just gotta be a joke, boy. George McGovern too? Ha! Ya makin' me laugh, boy. Didn he know not to come back after '72? Shooo — I'd think he'd still be soar he took such a lickin! Ha! Well I don't care anyways; them ole marines 'll be back on foreign soil just as quck as you can say nuclear war anyway! Got ya there, boy, I think ole George's just givin me a laugh or two. Ron'll have em back in there jsut as quick. . Wha?

Hoo, boy, you're bringin' tears to my eyes. That ole earth orbitin' John Glenn still thinkin' he got a chance? Ha! Tell him to go read a book or somethin. Ain't no concern of mine no way — you betcha boy — just as sure as my name's Edward Q. Hollander, ole Ronald Reagan's sittin pretty. Ain't no way, boy, don't get no fool notions in your head. Shoo — from what you're tellin' me Reagan's got it sewed up tight as pigs in a sloppin trough.

Just a quick note in response to the article entitled, "Drinking at Longwood" in the December 6 edition.

It was stated that there was no support program for students having problems with alcohol or dealing with someone else who has problems with alcohol. I know the intent of that article was referring to emergency kinds of support systems and support systems within the residence halls.

I want to emphasize however, that there is a support program specifically geared for students who are being affected by alcohol problems that significant other people are having. The group is run by a young woman who volunteers her time and who comes from a background situation that is somewhat similar. This group meets weekly at 7:30 on Tuesday evenings. You can contact the Counseling Services (392-9235) for further information regarding it.

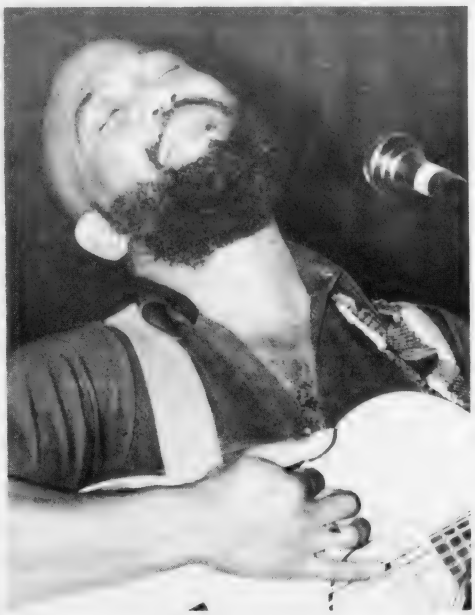
Josh White Jr.



By BRIAN DORSEY, KELLY SICKLER, RONNIE SINFELT

Last Thursday night, the Gold Room was graced by the presence of Josh White, Jr., a veteran folk singer, philosopher, and performer. Although the audience was small, the atmosphere was warm and friendly, and the entertainment was inspiring. As White said, "we've never really had quantity at Longwood; but always quality."

White's songs dealt mainly with the meaning of life and the hardships that it presents. His success is due partly to his ability to make people laugh at their weaknesses. His repertoire includes songs from many contemporary artists who write about "the things we don't like facing."

White grew up in Harlem, which helped give him his realistic outlook on life. He began to play the guitar at the age of four and has been playing ever since. Part of the credit for White's joy of playing goes to his father, also a folk singer, whose song "Old Man" sold over a million copies in the 1940's. He was the first black man in the country to accomplish such a feat.

All-in-all, White related well with the audience, almost on a one-to-one basis, he was personable, warm, and friendly. White's songs were not only entertaining but also enlightening. The audience related to White in the same way that White related to the audience. White was quoted as saying that he "only tunes for people he likes." He left the Gold Room with a standing ovation!

"Corners" — A Review

By JEFF ABERNATHY

"Corners", a one-act play written by Longwood graduate and Longwood Players' member Jacqui Singleton rainbows the spectrum of black history. Leading the audience from the period of American slavery through the dehumanizing effects of segregation, her work concludes in the black cultural advancements seen in recent years.

The play's five actors, Jo Smith, Sylvia Gorham, Barbara Abernathy, Terence Scruggs, and Kevin Hobbs, attempt to show the changes which took Black Americans four hundred years to accomplish. This in itself is the work's major flaw. The actors are constantly changing to adapt to the roles, which progress from a slave whose son has been sold and then moving to three young black girls' comical rendition of the Supremes. The action is too swift for the actors to keep up, and the audience is lost in the attempt. A lengthening of the one-act would improve the work as a whole and would make its performance more enjoyable for the audience.

The performance of the play was weak, as the actors stumbled in their lines, on three occasions requiring cues to continue but the dialogue was, in parts, sincere and fresh. The actors brought the audience from humor, as the girls sang off key Diana Ross, to pathos over the news of Dr. King's death. The playwright's ability to take the script through such opposing emotions is to be commended, and the actors did well in the performance of these particular segments. Terence Scruggs was particularly good in the performance.

The dialogue involved swift changes between the actors, but it was performed slowly, with occasional missed lines which served to slow it down further. Singleton's work is significant, but as the actors lost character in the one-act, its effect was weakened. Jarman's intimate studio theatre demands a good performance, for the actors work practically in the laps of the audience, and any mistakes are multiplied greatly. The message of the play was for black and white members of the audience alike, "cultural differences are the spice of life," but a large part of it quoted sixties' and seventies' black slogans: "The blacker the berry, the sweeter the juice . . . Black is cool, black is good, black is in, black is beautiful."

Singleton, whose full-length play, The Breaking, was recently performed in New York, helps to operate the Calhoun Theatre in Richmond, which gives black playwrights and actors a chance to work. It is one of three such companies in Richmond, where Singleton feels black actors need separate theatres to have a legitimate chance to work.

It was a disappointment that the audience was predominately white because the company was here Sunday in commemoration of Black History Month.

Black History Month

In the past few weeks Longwood has presented a number of films, lectures, and concerts honoring the contributions of black Americans to U. S. heritage. In February of 1909, the NAACP was founded in Niagara Falls and in February of 1965 the Selma to Montgomery march took place under the leadership of Martin Luther King, Jr. The month of February is an important one to blacks across the nation, and Longwood College is honoring Black History Month, which would have been unthinkable twenty-five years ago when Prince Edward County officials refused to integrate their educational institution by closing the doors of all public schools in the county.

Appearances by black singer Josh White, Jr., whose father was the first black man to sell over a million copies of one record, and Jacqui Singleton, a Longwood graduate whose one-act play, "Corners" was performed by Richmond's Calhoun Theatre Company in Jarman have highlighted the month. Upcoming events include a guest speaker in the Prince Edward Room at 5:00 on Wed., Feb. 22 as well as an art department film on dancer Paul Taylor to be shown February 27 at 7:00 p.m. in Bedford.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

Charles Pace As "The Young Mr. Douglas"

By JERRY DAGENHART

On Monday, February 6 at 8:00 p.m., the Series of the Performing Arts offered the Longwood student body Charles Pace's The Young Mr. Douglas, a one man show in two acts.

Mr. Pace, a vibrant black actor, recreated the life of the political genius Frederick Douglas. The performance was well attended and although there were some problems with the basic flow of the production, it was largely successful.

Mr. Pace gave a great deal of vitality and passion to the role of Douglas. This was possible because of his learned scope of the show's basic theme which he developed with an evident balance of both his own feelings and Douglas', on the ascention of the black man, and the struggle for freedom. The show traced Douglas' life from childhood to the underground railroad, where he escaped the tyranny of slavery, and finally to his success as a political spokesman.

The overall message of the performance was enlightening and inspiring. At a reception following the performance, Pace gave students an interesting discussion of the black actor and the acting profession. The Series of the Performing Arts provided another evening of culture which was stimulating and entertaining.

The Kim and Reggie Harris Group performed in the Snack Bar Saturday and Sunday nights to a receptive audience.

Sexual Assault

By JOYCE ROLLANDINI

On Sunday, February 19, Campus Police Chief Eric Shoemaker came to the Cunningham complex and gave a lecture which included a film and discussion on what one should do if confronted by a rapist. Chief Shoemaker is a graduate of William and Mary with a Bachelor's in Government, has a Master's in Administration of Justice from VCU, and is now working on a Doctorate in Public Administration. He is a firearms instructor and a karate student. Having been a Criminal Investigator, Investigative Supervisor snd Director of Police Training School and this having been his tenth rape talk at Longwood, he was knowledgeable, informative, and quite interesting. Chief Shoemaker states that there is never a surefire way to prevent a rape from actually occurring; however, he was positive as to the effects a woman can have on the degree of a rape.

The major part of Sunday night's program was the showing of a movie, which keyed in on the profile of the rapist as well as giving some "tips" on what to do if confronted. Much of the information was perplexing and contrary to what one may think. For example, weapons for the most part were not advised due to the fact that they are inaccurate, not always usable, and they are hard to get to quickly. The same goes for screaming and struggling which works only 50 percent of the time, leaving the other 50 percent to be beaten, raped and sometimes murdered. The movie emphasized martial arts as being the best protection and at the same time noted that every woman's study of the martial arts is unfeasible. Not all women would take the time, others are unable. Tips given which are more realistic ranged from fainting to more violent forms of protection such as poking the eyes and squeezing the groin. Unfortunately, every assault is different and no one solution works every time.

Chief Shoemaker has a great deal of information that yields important insights into the psychological nature of this criminal behavior. The thought of being raped frightens and disturbs us as does no other crime. However, being educated to the facts and possible methods of protection are the first steps to prevention and survival of an attack.

Puppet Therapy Helps Others

Anne Hammond surrounds herself with dummies, puppets and make-believe voices. But what she does is serious.

Hammond, from York, Pa., is a senior majoring in therapeutic recreation at Longwood College. She has created a puppet therapy program that she tried out during an internship last summer, will use in another internship, and plans to use in her career.

"I'm going to make puppet therapy a proven field. I want others to see that I'm innovative, not crazy."

Hammond has accumulated a large collection of puppets and dummies since childhood. She believes that they can be effective therapeutic aids in working with certain special populations, among them psychiatric patients, the mentally handicapped and children.

"It all started when my mother showed me a newspaper article about a ventriloquist who worked with a dummy in a hospital," she recalled. "She used it to help bring out the patients' emotions, which is what I try to do. Puppet therapy, though, is still considered new and experimental."

The 21-year-old collegian first tried her program last summer when she completed an internship in the psychiatric unit of York Hospital. She asked patients to choose puppets and then describe their emotions and careers through the puppets.

"I proved it works. You could tell a lot by which puppets they chose and what they had them do. This isn't for everybody, but it can be used for a lot of different populations."

Usually Hammond works with a group, although she also can work in a one-on-one setting. She will use puppet therapy again in an internship at Seashore Children's Hospital in Atlantic City, N. J. The semester-long internship, which began Jan. 16, involves working with children who have various illnesses and disabilities.

Hammond's pioneering work with puppets was mentioned in the November-December 1983 issue of "Newsy Vents," the newsletter of the North American Association of Ventriloquists. She is a longtime member of that organization.

For Hammond, puppet therapy is the outgrowth of a lifelong hobby.

"When I was nine years old, I got my first dummy and started teaching myself ventriloquism," she said. "My mother is interested in puppet theater, and both she and my father encouraged me a lot. And my grandfather built us kids a puppet theater. I did shows in the neighborhood with my first dummy."

"It's easier to pick up ventriloquism when you're young. Even now, I sometimes walk around singing or talking (as a ventriloquist). People don't know who it is."

She has tried her approach at several Special Olympics on the Longwood campus. "I've been in charge of clowns at the annual Special Olympics here. Last year, I had a life-sized monkey puppet. There was one kid who was really withdrawn and wouldn't talk, but when he saw that monkey he wouldn't shut up. He followed the monkey around all day, talking to it. The kids will come out of themselves."

Skip Castro, along with his band, played to a small but enthusiastic crowd on Thursday, February 9 in the Lower Dining Hall. The band brought the crowd to their feet with favorite tunes such as "Boogie At Midnight", "Shake, Rattle and Roll" and others.

WUTA: Longwood Radio

By RONNIE SINFELT

Graffitti now covers the walls in different colors of spray paint. The broadcasting room is jet black with a red hot stripe bolting across the walls, forming on the back the letters, WUTA. "It's art, art imitates life, and life isn't pretty, so fi you don't like it that's your own fault."

That's what Jamie Mareness says of the new interior decorating job in the old dressing room atop of Jarman where Longwood's radio station is located. Mareness is the new acting president of WUTA. He says the station now has "spirit" with its new paint scheme. Most of the painting was done by Tony Joesiff. They are both disc jockeys for WUTA.

The painting was only part of the improvements needed in the station. They recently received $1,000.00 from student activities fees for this semester's operating costs, which they hope will include a new mixing board. The present one is, as Jamie calls it, "vintage of 1940's". This greatly handicaps them when they need to operate two turntables and switch back and forth from two different channels.

Jamie is always stuck with fixing everything, and he has been known to supply the station with his own needles for the turntables. They have gone through ninety dollars worth of needles in three weeks. He says, "it's probably because we always have new D.J.'s, and they just aren't very competent with the equipment yet." Jamie says he doesn't mind putting so much time into the station but he doesn't get a credit or any kind of salary for it.

Mareness is also a D.J. on WUTA. He plays new wave, techno-pop, and art rock, an "outer fringe of rock-n-roll." WUTA is basically a rock-n-roll station, though Jamie feels they cover most varieties of music. They try to stay on the air from 4-12 o'clock seven days a week with all 21 D.J.'s, but that isn't always accomplished.

Besides being the voice of Longwood, WUTA is an educational system for upcoming broadcasters. Some may rise to be as successful as Billy Duncan, their former program director, who went to WRVQ in Richmond, but most share the feelings of D.J. Chico Alvarez, "We've been here a week and we've been unwinding and enjoying it ever since."

Jamie Mareness takes a quick nap between tunes.

Lady Lancers Set Record

For Most Wins In A Season

Caren Forbes hit the go-ahead shot and Florence Holmes canned two clinching free throws as Longwood beat William & Mary 68-64 Saturday afternoon in women's basketball. The victory gives Longwood a 15-7 record and those 15 wins are the most ever by a Lady Lancer squad.

Longwood's third straight win and its eighth triumph in the last 11 games was very much in doubt after William & Mary ran off 10 straight points to go ahead 62-61 with 3:36 remaining. A bucket by The Tribe's Betsy Becker tied the game at 64-64 with 0:45 left. Forbes, Longwood's top scorer with 23 points, swished a base line jumper with 31 seconds left to put LC up 66-64.

With time running down, Holmes blocked a William & Mary shot and was fouled. The junior forward made both ends of the two-shot foul to put Longwood up 68-64 with 14 seconds left and sew up the win. Holmes finished with 10 points and eight rebounds, while Valerie Tucker had 22 points and 13 rebounds.

"What can you say when it's the game that puts you in the record book," said Longwood coach Shirley Duncan, who took over the team in early October. "It feels super. Each of our wins have been great, but there was a lot of emotion surrounding this one. It was Robin's (senior Robin Powell) last game and she did a good job for us despite being injured."

With two games to go in the regular season, Duncan has led Longwood to its first winning season since 1977-78, and now her squad is the winningest in school history.

The Lady Lancers play at Liberty Baptist Tuesday night at 7:30 and at Delaware State Friday afternoon at 2:30. Longwood will then play in the VAIAW Division II Tournament March 2-3 at Radford.

Valerie Turner gets fouled in recent win over Liberty Baptist.

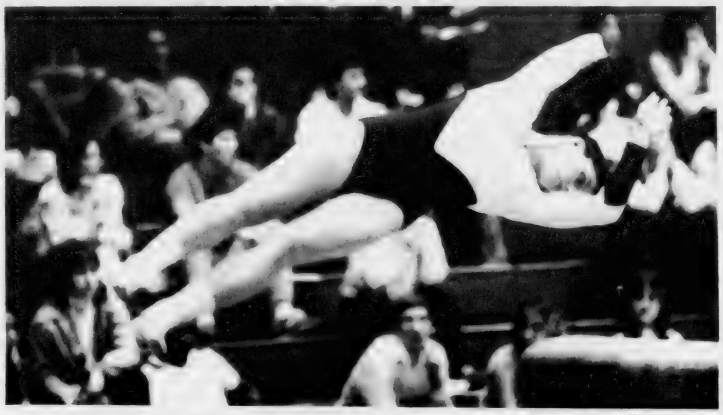
Gymnasts Compete

Three Longwood gymnastics records were set last week as the Lancer gymnasts picked up two victories and a loss, to improve their record to 4-5. The gymnasts will be preparing for the state meet this week, which will be held Saturday at James Madison.

Joining Longwood and JMU in the state meet are Radford and William & Mary, two teams which defeated Longwood earlier in the season. The Tribe only beat the Lancers by two, and Longwood coach Ruth Budd felt the Lancers might have beaten Radford if her gymnasts were - healthy.

Kelly Strayer and Lisa Zuraw set Longwood gymnastics records Saturday at Towson. Strayer scored 9.2 on floor to win the event and set the new mark. Strayer also finished first on beam and in all-around. Zuraw set the new school record on bars scoring 8.7. Zuraw tied Strayer on vault for second, placed third on beam, and placed second in all-around. Kerri Hruby placed third in all-around and second on beam, to help the Lancers defeat Towson 160.95-159.50. The Longwood team score was a shool record.

Gray Stabley also placed against Towson — second on floor (8.8).



Thursday Longwood finished second in its tri-meet edging Western Carolina 155.85-155.30. North Carolina State won the meet with 171.85. Kelly Strayer led the Lancers once again, placing second on beam, fourth in all-around (32.95), and fifth on beam (8.1). She also tied for fourth on floor.

Former All-American Dayna Hankinson missed both meets with an injury, but hopes to make the state meet Saturday. "She should be able to practice this week to prepare for the meet," said coach Budd.

Sonya Knur, Debbe Malin, Kim Owens, Cindy Weinstock, and Shay Woolfolk also competed for Longwood during the meets.

Coach Budd was very pleased with the team's efforts gainst Towson. "Dayna (Hankinson) was out and everyone pulled together," said Budd. "we performed well as a team."

After the Virginia state meet the Lancers close out their regular season at home in a tri-meet with George Washington and Pittsburgh-Johnstown March 3 at 3:00.

Longwood's Gray Stabley performes a vault in Thursday's meet with NC State and Western Carolina in Lancer Hall.

Longwood Grapplers Finish Up At 6-9

Longwood's wrestling team closed out an up and down season last Tuesday with a 40-9 loss at the hands of Division I Campbell University. The grapplers were led by Tim Fitzgerald who won his match 11-1 at 126 pounds and by David Crouse who pinned his opponent at 134 pounds.

Fitzgerald ended up with a fine 18-9-1 record overall at 118 and 126 while Chuck Campbell was 10-6-2 for the year. Crouse was 8-12, Billy Howard 11-9 and Tom Gilbert 8-9.

"I thought we wrestled well," said coach Steve Nelson. "We survived a lot of misfortune this year in terms of injuries and illness," the coach continued. "We had to forfeit three weight classes in most matches, but the wrestlers we had worked hard for the most part. If we can get some depth in the upper weights for next season, we'll be much improved."

Freshmen Play Key

Roles In Lady Lancer Success

The 1983-84 Lady Lancer basketball team is winding up its best season ever with a 15-7 overall record. Playing an important role in this success have been four freshmen on the squad: Karen Boska, Caren Forbes (Rio Grande, N.J.), Melanie Lee, and Reeva Spradlin.

Two of these young athletes have played in all but one of Longwood's games, while Boska has played in all 22.

Boska, at 6-1, is the starting center for the team. She is the top free throw shooter with 77-6 average (59-76). Her best game came in Longwood's 70-64 win over Randolph-Macon. Boska had 13 points and 15 rebounds. She has 178 rebounds for an average of 8.5 per game, ranking second on the team in rebounding. Boska ranks first on the team in blocked shots with 21, and has had 28 steals.

Longwood's coach Shirley Duncan calls Boska "probably the most intense and dedicated player on the team." Boska was also a very dedicated athlete at Fort Hunt High School, averaging 11 points and nine rebounds per game.

Lancer Cagers One Win From Finishing 2nd In Mason-Dixie

When Mount St. Mary's visits Longwood Saturday night in the regular season finale for both teams, second place in the Mason-Dixon Conference regular season race and the resulting first round bye in the league tournament will be one the line.

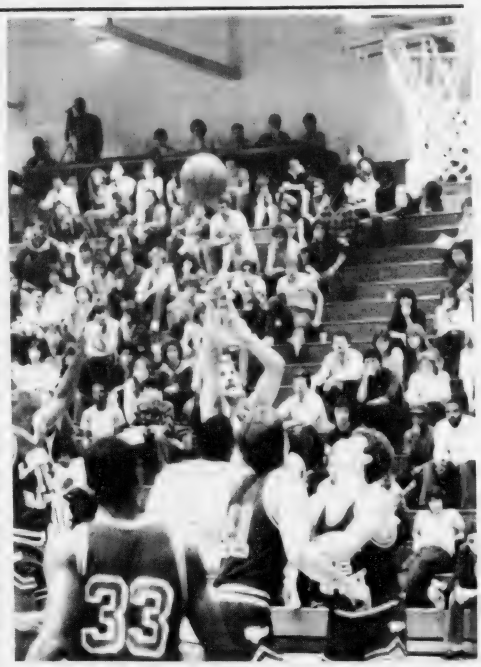
The Lancers' 74-55 win at Pittsburgh-Johnstown Saturday afternoon assured Coach Cal Luther's squad a shot at ending up second in the league standings. Longwood, with its third straight conference win, is now 6-3 behind first place Randolph-Macon (8-1), while the Mount is in third place at 4-3.

Should the Lancers beat Mount St. Mary's Saturday night (tip-off is at 7:30), LC would clinch second place. If Longwood finishes second, it would receive a first round bye in the MDAC tournament along with Randolph-Macon. The tourney is set for March 1-3 at The Mount. The Mounties host UMBC Wednesday and visit Liberty Baptist Friday.

Longwood, 13-11 heading into Monday night's home game against Atlantic Christian, will bid farewell to senior cagers Jerome Kersey and Troy Littles Saturday night. The two players will be making their final appearance in Lancer Hall.

Kersey, the leading scorer and rebounder in the Mason-Dixon Conference, holds eight Longwood career records, including marks for points, rebounds, blocks, steals and dunks. Currently, he has 1,692 points and 1,114 rebounds in four years. He is averaging 19.3 points and 13.9 rebounds this season. Littles, a key reserve on the 1981-82 squad, sat out last season with a knee injury, and just rejoined the team in late January.

Despite the final score (74-55) Saturday's win at Pittsburgh-Johnstown was a tight struggle most of the way.



Trailing 38-33 at the half, Longwood took the lead for the first time with 9:23 to go on a bucket by Kevin Ricks 50-49, and outscored the Mountain Cats 24-6 the rest of the way. The Lancers scored 41 second half points to just 17 up UPJ.

Kersey led the way with 23 points, 17 rebounds, seven assists, eight steals and two blocked shots. Kersey scored 15 points in the second half, and had a key assist to Lonnie Lewis which put the Lancers up 52-49.

The 6-7 senior had plenty of help from Lewis (20 points), David Strothers, 14 points and six rebounds, and several other Lancer cagers. Lewis (4-4) and Strothers (6-6) helped Longwood hit 20 of 26 free throws. The Lancers made 13 of 19 in the second half and also hit 14 of 21 shots from the floor in the second period.

"I was extremely pleased with our play in the second half," said Longwood coach Cal Luther. "It took a great effort to come back from a five-point halftime deficit on the road. Our defense was outstanding. Not only did we hold them to 17 points in the second half, but our defense also helped create several easy buckets.

"This was a satisfying win because it gives us a chance to play at home with second place in the league on the line," he said. "Finishing second is very important because it would give us the first round bye in the tournament."

Junior David Strothers scores in win over Liberty Baptist on February 11.

Freshman Play Key Role

Forbes, a point guard, is another consistent starter. According to Coach Duncan, Forbes has taken well to the point guard position, and her outside shooting is a key factor also. She is scoring an average of 12 points per game, and is the team leader in assists with 89 in 20 games. She ranks ninth in the state in assists among college division players with an average of 4.7 per game. In her first game as a Lady Lancer, Forbes had eleven assists, breaking Longwood's single game record of eight. She was named Longwood Player of the Week earlier in the season. Forbes has made 30 steals.

Lee is a key reserve player on the team, and has played in 20 games. At 5-11, she plays center as well as forward, averaging 3.4 points per game and 4.4 rebounds. She has had 13 steals and blocked 5 opponents' shots. Her most impressive game came against Hampton Institute early in the season, when she had 13 points and eight rebounds. She is fourth on the team in rebounds with 87. She has also been named Player of the Week.

Lee was captain of the Indian River High School basketball team her junior and senior years. She averaged 17.5 points and eight rebounds per game, earning All-City and All-Region honors.

Spradlin, a guard, has seen action in 14 games and is known for her hustling style of play. Coach Duncan noted, "It took competition to show that Reeva has the ability to take on the point guard position, directing the offense and the play. She's an impressive player."

Spradlin averaged 8.3 points per game at Albemarle High School, excelling also in softball and volleyball.

The young athletes have all had impressive careers in high school basketball, but have had to adjust to a faster and more intense game in college. "These freshmen had to adjust a lot this year," said Coach Duncan. "For example, Melanie and Karen (Boska) were probably the tallest players and now their opponents are often taller."

"The game is a lot faster," Lee notes. "In high school, there are a lot of average players and a few good ones. Here most of the players are very good." Boska agrees, "The players are more intense; the pressure is greater."

Faculty Cuts

By JEFF ABERNATHY

In response to notification from the Virginia Council on Higher Education, five Longwood faculty members were sent notices of termination on Thursday. The Council notified Longwood administrators that five faculty and four classified positions would be cut at Longwood by budget voting in the Virginia Senate this week. The budget bill has already passed the House, and if it passes the Senate, will likely be signed into law by Governor Chuck Robb.

The College administration is legally bound to notify faculty members of termination by March 1. In an interview Friday, Longwood President Janet Greenwood said "We have done everything we can do. There is a possibility that we could get some positions back." But Vice-President of Academic Affairs noted that it would be "highly unlikely" that the positions would not be cut.

The decision of which faculty members would be sent termination notices was reviewed by the Committee on Allocation of Academic Resources which made a recommendation to Haltzel. Haltzel then conferred with Dean of Faculty Ned Conway, and sent a recommendation to Dr. Greenwood, who approved the final cuts.

The faculty members sent notices were untenured and their contracts were up for renewal. "It is important, however, to emphasize that in no way is this a negative indication of their performance," said Haltzel. The five cut were: A. Moffett Evans, technical director of Jarman theatre, Camille Tinnel, of the English department, Christian Akponwei of the Business Department, Cindy Peake and Karen Hubbard of the Physical Education Department.

Judy Johnson, Chairman of the Health, Physical Education, and Recreation Department, said "While I can understand the cuts, it really doesn't make it any easier to accept." Two of the seventeen faculty members in her department were cut.

"This is devastating because of the simple facts of numbers," Johnson noted, "We will have to be creative. I really don't know what we will do."

Massie Stinson, head of the English, Foreign Language and Philosophy Departments, expressed similar concern. "We're trying to enhance the quality of the program, but it hurts when we have to add students to our classes. I think it will affect the quality of instruction in English if the cuts go through."

Mrs. Tinnel teaches English grammar classes "which are critical in our department," Stinson continued, "and they're not classes which all of us are prepared to teach."

Hardest hit by the cuts was the Speech and Drama Departments, headed by Patton Lockwood. One of the Department's five full-time faculty members was notified of his termination. Drama major Jerry Dagenhart was outraged by the termination of Evan's position. "Although Haltzel promised me that I would still be able to receive my degree in dramatic arts from Longwood, I seriously doubt it as many of the course requirements which I have not yet received can only be taught by a technical director. Even if I did receive a diploma it would be worthless to me."

Although Haltzel declined to speak specifically on the individual decisions, President Greenwood justified the choice of Evans noting, "There are smaller departments (than the Speech & Drama Dept.) on campus." Greenwood also said that, though the Allocations Committee consists of no members of the student body, its composition "is under review, and I am anticipating changes being made." The Committee is composed of five members of the faculty and Dean Conway. Haltzel pointed out that "For the first time at Longwood the teaching faculty has played an important role in the allocation of faculty positions."

However, some students expressed dismay at the administration's system of allocating positions, Earth Science major Jim Pittman said. "He (Haltzel) has not even thought about the students," to which Drama major David Miller added "They don't have any idea how many students these people come in contact with."

The final decision on the cuts will be made Thursday in Richmond. Faculty and administration members alike are hoping the vote will reverse the termination notices. As Judy Johnson observed, "You always have to hope right up to the last minute that it won't happen."

Student Health Services Broaden Scope

By JOHNEL BROWN

The Student Health Services, archaically called the Infirmary, has gone through some major changes in the past year. Besides being relocated from Tabb to Graham, the Student Health Center is now headed by Barbara Agee, a nurse practitioner. A nurse practitioner differs from a registered nurse in that the position requires additional training, and can prescribe medication under a physician's orders.

Agee anticipates many innovations and improvements in the Student Health Service, and already there are new services offered that were never before available. Throat cultures, mononucleosis tests, urinalysis, tetanus shots and pregnancy tests are now all offered free.

Immunization Clinic

The Student Health Center sent out notices last month to students informing them of the new immunization policy. The college is now requiring students to present proof of rubella and measles vaccinations before they will be allowed to register for fall

Miss Longwood

By JERRY DAVENPORT

On Friday night, March 3, glamour and beauty dawned the stage of the Jarman stage in the form of the Miss Longwood Pageant, "Moving On." The pageant, emceed by Miss America 1979, Mrs. Kylene Barker Brandon, was the result of many hours of hard work on the parts of the contestant and all of those diligent people behind the scenes, namely the Executive Committee.

After the competitions of talent, swimsuit and evening gown were completed, the panel of judges, after much consideration, reached the following conclusions: The third runner up, and the winner of $100 scholarship and an official Miss America trophy was sophomore Kimberly Ann Kenworthy who was sponsored by Kappa Delta sorority and Perini's Pizza. The runner up and winner of a $200 scholarship and an official Miss America trophy was sophomore Gayle Arpe, who was sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha sorority, and Town and Country Furniture Warehouse.

The first runner up and the winner of a $500 scholarship and an official Miss America trophy was Elizabeth Ann Chalmers who was sponsored by Kappa Delta Sorority and Roses. The second titles of Miss Congeniality and Miss Longwood were bestowed upon the lovely Miss Denise Rae Chilton who was sponsored by Alpha Delta Pi and Baldwin's. Denise received a $1000 scholarship, a silver bowl and an official Miss America trophy.

After Miss Chilton was crowned Miss Longwood 1984 by Miss Longwood 1983, Miss Robin Elder, the audience was invited on to the stage to express their congratulations. The evening was one that enabled Longwood and Farmville to become a threshold for the Miss America Pageant.

Just once at Saturday night's Miss Longwood Pageant, I wanted to see a contestant slink up to the microphone and say, "Hello, I'm a twenty year old junior at Longwood majoring in sociology. I plan to dedicate my life to the feminist movement, and my biggest dream is to start a lesbian rights organization in Farmville." Just once I wanted to hear that.

Unfortunately, all ten of the contestants disappointed me. Their comments were pleasant and sweet, mostly about living unselfishly and saving the world; stuff like that. They were wonderful, All-American girls. My hopes were dashed.

The Miss Longwood Pageant is as farcical as the Miss America Pageant. The logic behind the pageant is as ludicrous as that behind the idea that women are supposed to be attractive, unintelligent social beings. Gains made in women's rights in past decades, despite recent setbacks, have been many, and beauty pageants, or perhaps you prefer to call them scholarship programs, serve only to undermine these gains.

If, indeed, Saturday evening's event was a "scholarship program," one must wonder why the judges needed to see the contestants prancing about the stage in high heels and bathing suits. How often do these girls study in beach attire anyway?

And, if it was not merely a beauty pageant, why weren't there blacks, hispanics, cripples, and one-eyed gargoyles on stage? And, why then, weren't there any males? Certainly there are some scholarly males on campus. The contestants for this "scholarship program" were a rather restricted lot at best.

One must wonder why this pageant is so important to the Office of Public Affairs and of Career Planning. These two offices are both deeply concerned with image-that all-mighty springboard to success, fame, and most importantly money.

For the Office of Public Affairs, the Pageant is purely a wonderful event. Ten attractive Longwood females jumping about on Jarman's stage must project a wonderful image of Longwood's students.

If we can get everyone thinking that the majority of Longwood's students are just as fresh, beautiful, and talented as these students are, then maybe the checks will start rolling in. The College will get lots of money and everybody will be overjoyed.

The Office of Career Planning might be more interested in involving itself in programs which affect a larger percentage of Longwood students. Though the lives of these contestants are certainly important, they are no more so than those of the homeliest male or female on this campus, neither of whom, we must admit, has a prayer of becoming a finalist in the Miss Longwood Pageant. The Pageant affects the Careers of an incredibly small percentage of Longwood students, which should in itself steer the Office away from the event, It does not, however, and a great number of students do not benefit from the Offices programs as the Pageant goes rolling happily along.

The Miss Longwood Pageant serves to work against the progress of our college. It is an archaic tradition which lives past its own time, though this is not an uncommon occurrence in Farmville. It is interesting to note that this is an administration, which came to Longwood with promises of progress and change, continues to support a beauty pageant at Longwood.

perspectives

Once again Virginia is the forerunner of conservatism — pioneering for all to follow.

Yes, it's true that a federal law was recently passed that denies federal aid to students who have neglected to register for the "selective service."

And as if this law weren't enough to scare any left-over draft-dodgers into registration, Virginia has come up with its own reinforcement.

A bill went through the State House of Representatives that would deny not only state aid but entry into state colleges to students who've resisted registration.

The House passed the bill on a 67-33 vote. The bill is now in the Senate awaiting final vote and then it will go to the governor's desk for his final signature of approval.

The state has found it necessary to impose its value system on the people and also to impose sanctions to those whose idealogies differ. Obviously, the state doesn't see itself capable of enforcing the law with standard legal sanctions. The threat of being imprisoned or fined is not enough. In addition the equal opportunity for education will depend on compliance with state "morality."

And if a student does not believe in supporting the selective service, the draft or war, he will have to compromise those beliefs to still have rights to a public education.

The government, justified by the realm of legality, is imposing morals through law. 1984 is here and George Orwell is cashing in his tickets.

Your Turn

Dear Editor:

The frequently echoed statement "Man, Longwood is a cultural wasteland, and there is never a damned thing to do on campus," will soon be more true than not. The reason is quite simple. Jarman Auditorium, perhaps the cultural hub of Longwood and the Farmville community, is in grave danger of losing its technical director. In fact, the technical director position has already been cut with little hope of reinstatement. This cut is part of a group of cuts which include four other professors in different departments. Jarman Auditorium cannot function as a working theatre without a technical director.

Jarman's stage, in the course of an average school year, is the host of various forms of entertainment ranging from rock groups like the Robin Thompson Band to world premier plays like Espers Well to events such as Miss Longwood. Aside from the performances and entertainment elements, the building houses class activities, statewide debate tournaments, academic assemblies, Honor Code signing and numerous other academically oriented events. In effect, every performing or congregating organization on campus is directly dependent upon Jarman.

Perhaps the most damaged by this loss is Longwood's Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts. The department is at a point where "Everything is coming up Roses" to quote Stephen Sondheim. However, if the position of technical director

Your Turn

Technical Director; A Dream

is not reinstated in its entirety, this rose garden will be ravaged and its beauty will soon whither and die. Well, as the character of Pozzo states, in Waiting For Godot by Samual Beckett, "That's the way things are in this bitch of a world."

If this "bitch" of a world is to change, certain actions must be taken. We cannot blindly accept decisions that are handed down from the administration as if they are stone tablets from "The Lort Almighty." Every student on this campus has something to lose from this poor judgement, and it is every student's duty to take action against it.

It is evident that the decision to cancel the position of technical director for Jarman Auditorium has come after a great deal of painstaking deliberation, however, that does not mean that the decision is beyond rebuke. If Longwood's campus is to maintain a degree of cultural life, not only for its student body but the surrounding community as well, Jarman must function properly. In order for Jarman to function as a cultural facility it must have a technical director.

The ball is now in the court of the student body. If this ball is not taken and used to achieve the necessary goal, then it will become a goal for those who champion apathy.

Concerned and Infuriated,
Jerry L. Dagenhart

"Parking Place Blues"

Letter to the Editor:

In case you did not know, Longwood College Cashiering and Student Accounts charges $5.00 a week late charge for not paying your parking ticket within 7 days upon receiving it. Of course if you become angry and wait three weeks to pay this ticket then you will have to pay a late fee of $15.00. But, the catch is, if you do not pay in four weeks or possibly longer than that, then you only have to pay a mere $15.00 late fee. This is in addition to the $6.00 parking fee of course. So, some of you lucky soles might not have to pay this extra charge. Why you may ask? Well it just so happens that not everybody in the Cashiering and Student Accounts Office charges this fee. So by all means, go to the lady who doesn't charge — but even I don't know who that is, I was one of the unlucky souls who was charged $21.00 for a parking ticket.

As you have noticed, campus police are really cracking down on the parking situation. Yet, we still do not have enough parking facilities for this campus. By assigning each student a specified area, campus police hoped to help the student parking situation, but if you are like me, you don't like to park at campus school when you come home late at night, so you pick a closer place to your dorm, only to be surprised the next morning with a glorious ticket. I guess campus police could not help you if something happened while you were walking back from campus school, because they would be too busy catching up on sleep so they can give out as many tickets as possible the next morning.

There is some good news however, on light of this subject. If you just so happened to receive a parking ticket FIRST SEMESTER, then you do not have to pay any late fee at all. WHY? THAT IS A GOOD QUESTION. But, of course the answer is written in the wonderful Longwood College Handbook, the book with all the answers. If by chance you received a nice letter from Cashiering and Student Accounts at the beginning of this semester, for the tickets you received last semester, then you do NOT have to pay the additional $15.00 even though you might be paying off a ticket you received over 10 weeks ago. I am sure that all of this makes sense to you, because I understand it perfectly.

Please pay your tickets at once to avoid that late fee, it does not take long for $15.00 to add up, so why pay a $21.00 ticket when you only have to pay $6.00?

Also, if by chance you want to try and appeal that ticket you must do so within seven (7) days. Otherwise, it is too late. Even though your chances of getting out of paying the ticket are slim, if you want to try to fight the board then do so — and good luck to you! After all this way Cashiering and Student Accounts will have to wait longer than 7 days to receive your money. I don't know what they will do without receiving that $5.00. They really need it. So give them a hard time, and make them wait! Can you imagine the gratification you will get by telling them you do not have to pay the extra fee because you tried to appeal the ticket?

Mandatory Vaccinations: A Straight Dose

To The Editors And The Student Body:

With today's start of compulsory vaccination at Longwood, students need to be aware of the medical, legal, and political aspects of measles and rubella vaccination. Much information has been available in the New Smoker on the subject.

Contrary to what one might assume from the information in the new Smoker, complications from measles and rubella vaccines are quite common. the occurence of fever in measles vaccinated adults runs at five percent to 15 percent on the sixth day following vaccinations. The American Society of Hospital Pharmacists reports the fever will be 101 F. to as high as 104. The major complications of rubella are worse. The chances of having temporary arthritis runs 20 percent. Other complications of the vaccine include rashes, malaise, sore throat, headache, general aches, cough, eye pain, inflammation of the lymph nodes and development of a cold.

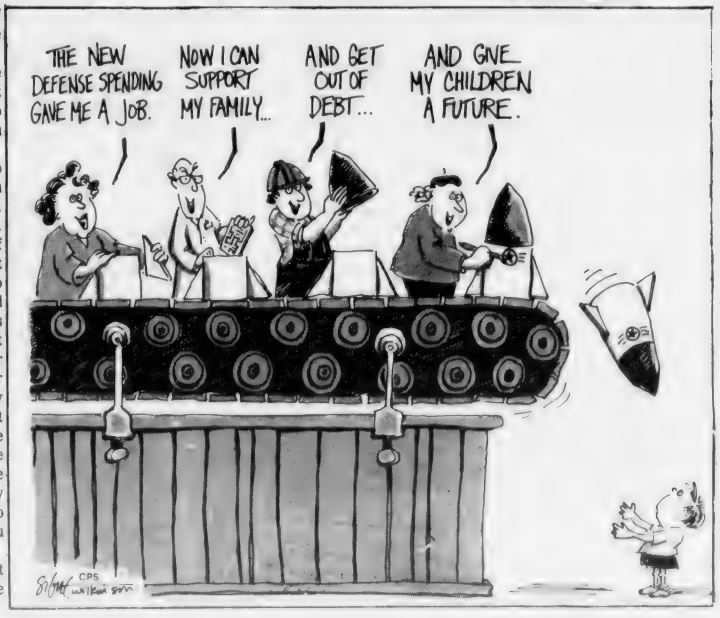
A more serious but less likely complication is the possibility of a form of encephalitis that results in degeneration of the brain for which there is no cure.

In light of the above facts, the compulsory vaccination of school children for measles and rubella was stopped for a number of years. It should be noted that the vaccination laws were for school children and college students were exempt. The matter of colleges making their own vaccination policy was tried in Wallace v. Regents of the University of California. The court held that colleges could pass vaccination rules if 1) there is an emergency that indicates an imminent epidemic and that the policy be subject to judicial review, and 2) the disease is prevalent in the community.

Since there has been a 45 day period that has lapsed from the announcement of the policy to the day of vaccination, and the 8 month period before it becomes compulsory, it is clear how imminent the epidemic really is. What, then, is the rationale for risking the students' safety or for that matter ignoring their personal rights? This question and the above information was taken to the originator of the policy, Phyllis Mable.

On January 27, a meeting was held in the office of the Vice President for Student Affairs. In attendance were Ms. Mable, Barbara Agee, Head of Student Health Services, and myself. Beyond the reaction to an imminent eipidemic, during the talk only one valid reason for the vaccination policy came out. The reason given was that if there is an outbreak of measles or rubella among the faculty, staff, or members of the local community and they could link its cause to the college, then the school would be held liable. The Longwood College Student Health Update reaffirms the college's standpoint of cost first and the rights of individuals, their health, welfare, and possibly their lives comes second.

When I confronted the administrators with the possibilities of complications their response was one of apathy. When I confronted them on the legal and moral aspects, again their response was apathetic.



If you are planning to be vaccinated you should know the following: If you are pregnant, or plan on becoming pregnant in the next 3 months, don't take either vaccine. The effects of the vaccination on the fetuses have been catastrophic.

If you receive the rubella vaccine you may develop joint problems and should take it easy until it passes. Finally, don't sign away your rights. If you are injured by the vaccine and sign away your rights you may not be able to receive damages.

If the administrators continue to place the financial welfare of the college above the rights and the welfare of the students, action will have to be taken. The matter of whether to take a drug or not is a personal one, and giving the power of eminent domain over human body is a last and desperate resort. When administrators can determine what drugs the students must take they have overstepped their bounds. Worse still is that this decision comes from someone whose motives are school finances, not the welfare of those governed. It is for this reason, that I feel Phyllis Mable has mismanaged her position and should be removed from this position. For, in the final analysis, whose body is it?

Artist Of The Month

February

The Longwood Art Department's Artist - of - the Month for February 1984 is Rebecca Silberman, a Sophomore Art Major who is working toward a B.F.A. with a studio concentration in painting. Rebecca is a second - time recipient of this award, which is a monthly competition open to all art students at Longwood College.

Her winning work, entitled "The Youngest of Us, Michael," is an involved collage based on a fragment (the cut-out of her younger brother, Michael) from a watercolor begun as a class assignment. Completed over the Christmas holidays, the painting is heavily laden with symbolism and, to a lesser degree, color expressionism. It is concerned with depicting an emotional and spiritual perception of her brother as representative of the five Silberman siblings' infancy through youth.

In addition to the two first-place- Artist-of-the-Month awards, Rebecca was one of the 1982 recipients of the Visual Arts Performance Scholarship in the Freshman year at Longwood, and one of two winners of the 1983 Virginia Estes Bedford Memorial Scholarship.

Rebecca is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Silberman, of Leesburg, Virginia.

March

The Longwood College Art Department's Artist-of-the-Month for March 1984 is Jennifer Byers, a Sophomore Art Major who is working toward a B.F.A. degree with a concentration in Graphic Design.

Jennifer is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Byers of Aldie, Virginia, and a 1982 graduate of Loudoun County High School where she was a member of the Art Club and on the Crossed Sabres, the literary and art magazine.

At Longwood, Jennifer has been on the Dean's List, and served as the art editor for Gyre, the college's literary and art magazine. She was a member of ALPHA LAMBDA DELTA Freshman Honor Society and received a certificate of recognition from the Honor Society of PHI KAPPA PHI.

Miss Byers' winning watercolor painting, entitled "The Bridge," depicts a friend and his young son fishing. The bridge itself is used as a symbol of the unity and love between father and son. This painting will be on display in Bedford Building through March 30.

The Roommate Game

By RONNIE SINFELT

Nancy Jo Easley, the R.F.C. in the colonnades, faces a panel consisting of some of the most unique 12 freshmen in the colonnades, who supposedly have only known each other for the past 1½ semesters, and answered questions like: "What is your roommate's most favorite sexual fantasy?" "Who is a better lover, you or your roommate?" Pat Shultz said, "I don't know, we haven't done it yet," about his roomy, Spencer Souffer. Pat and Spence came in last place, but did supply a never ending flow of comedy to the game. Pat said they played in the game because "we were on a mission from TABB 3rd floor" and that they came in last because, "we didn't cheat."

The girls were asked more composed questions, like: "What color underwear is your roommate wearing now?" (although none of them had to prove if they were right); "What appliance does your roommate remind you of: a mixed up blender, a frigid freezer, or a hot oven?" most said the blender. "How many times has your roommate broken visitation?" and a few others. David Glovier, the first floor TABB R.A. purposely made the guys' questions a little harder to answer. Nancy Jo says, "we thought we could get more personal with the guys because they are more proud of what they do."
